Greene County District Library (Ohio)
0 53 85 0488317 3

Greene Co. Room 974.8 Indian
1m
Caldwell, J. A.

History of Indiana county,
Penna. 1745-1880 1800

CALDWELL HISTORY INDIANA
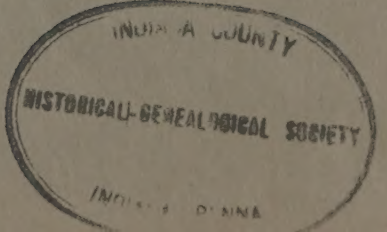
COUNTY 1880 $100

DEACCESSIONED
3 OCT 1933



BIOGRAPHICAL INDEX

of

HISTORY OF INDIANA COUNTY, PENN'A.
1745 - 1880

Published by
J. A. Caldwell, Newark, Ohio.
1880

DEACCESSIONED
3 OCT 1988

INDIANA COUNTY
HISTORICAL-GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY
INDIANA PENNA.

BIOGRAPHICAL INDEX

of

HISTORY OF INDIANA COUNTY, PENN'A.
1745 - 1880

Published by
J. A. Caldwell, Newark, Ohio.
1880

* * * * * * * * * * *

This work is dedicated to the memory of late of Blairsville; a member of the faculty of the Indiana High School who showed keen interest in the work of the Historical and Genealogical Society of Indiana County, Pennsylvania. Mr. Hill died in 1949.

GEORGE M. HILL

* * * * * * * * * * *

This index was compiled and prepared by

Mrs. Florence Stahl Tomb
Mrs. Frances Strong Helman
Mrs. Connie Adornato Stewart
Mrs. Ruth McDowell Roth

KEY TO ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THIS INDEX:

ES----------Early Settler
Ind.----------Indian Wars
Fr. & Ind.-----French & Indian War
R----------Revolutionary War
1812----------War of 1812
Mex.----------Mexican War
C----------Civil War

* *

A

Ackerson, Wesley----------Page 498
Adair, John---------- C ----------515
Adam, David---------- ES ----------476
Adams, Gawin---------- ES ----------516
Adams, George---------- C ----------484
Adams, James..... C 450
Adams, Thomas---------- C ----------484
Agey, Jonathan S.---------- C ----------516
Agey, Mrs. Mary T. Clark----------516
Ake, Jacob---------- 1812 - C ----------487
Alexander, William J.----------390
Allen, Thomas..... 1812 - C 486
Allison, John H.----------400
Allison, T. B.---------- C ----------470
Allisons, The---------- ES - R ----------455
Altimus, Adam----------446
Altimus, David, Sr.---------- ES ----------514
Altimus, David, Jr.....542
Altimus, James----------542
Altimus, Nicholas---------- ES ----------543
Altman, Col. Henry---------- ES - C ----------341
Altman, Henry---------- ES ----------443
Altman, Mrs. Julia---------- ES - C ----------371
Altman, Philip..... ES 531
Amond, John S.----------537
Anderson, Samuel----------500
Anderson, William (M. D.)----------339
Andrews, Dennis---------- C ----------478
Anthony, J. J.---------- ES - C ----------413
Armstrong, James..... ES - C 413
Armstrong, J. Martin----------489
Armstrong, John----------489
Armstrong, William----------489
Arnold, Robert J.----------508
Arthur, Philip J.----------498
Arthur, William.....340
Arthurs, Thomas---------- R - C ----------465
Artley, D. W.---------- Fr. & Ind. ----------377
Ashbaugh, Israel---------- 1812 ----------478
Ashbaugh, John L.----------506
Ashe, Rev. A. J.---------- R ----------514

Askin Family----------Page 537
Askine, Mrs. Sarah A. P.----------444
Atcheson, George----------316
Ayers, James---------- ES ----------463

B

Badger, Ferguson----------Page 444
Bailey, James----------338
Baird, Benjamin----------512
Baird, James---------- 1812 ----------364
Baird, Rev. J. R..... C 540
Baird, Zebulon----------512
Baker, Abraham H.----------367
Baker, Rev. George W.----------393
Baker, P. N.----------511
Balentine, J. M.....451
Barbor, William---------- C ----------489
Barclay, William P.---------- C ----------377
Barkley, John---------- C ----------507
Barkley, Robert M.----------543
Barnes, Henry..... ES - R 530
Barnett, Marion DeKalb---------- Ind. ----------394
Barr, James---------- 1812 - C ----------407
Barr, James---------- ES - C ----------431
Barr, James M.----------534
Barrett, Daniel..... Mex. - C 480
Barrett, George----------510
Barrett, Lysander---------- R - C ----------480
Barron, Peter----------531
Bartholomew, Hartman----------469
Bastik, Jacob.....489
Bastik, Phelix----------489
Bates, A. D.----------406
Beans, Alvin A.----------406
Beard, Mrs. Susan----------481
Beck, Abraham.....408
Beck, George----------341
Beck, Isaac's Children----------479
Beck, J. F.---------- C ----------416
Beck, Samuel S.----------471
Beckett, Robert J.....512
Bell, Rev. A. T.---------- C ----------526
Bell, James H. (M. D.)----------532
Bell, James J.---------- C ----------528
Bell, Samuel---------- ES - C ----------445
Bell, Samuel D..... C 528
Berry, David---------- C ----------531
Bethel, John---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------448
Beyer, Mrs. Esther---------- C ----------481
Bidelman, Thomas L.----------399
Black, Rev. J. 440
Black, Jacob M.---------- C ----------447
Black, James---------- 1812 ----------448
Black, Rev. J. P.----------411

Black, Mrs. Mary---------- C ----------Page 483
Black, William D.---------- C ----------449
Blair, Capt. John---------- R ----------145
Blair, Capt. Thomas---------- R ----------145
Blakley, J. F.....494
Blakleys---------- ES - C ----------502
Blakley, W. C.---------- C ----------374
Bleakney, John C.---------- C ----------394
Blose, William---------- C ----------469
Bolar, Maj. A..... C 374
Bolar, John---------- ES - R ----------422
Bond, William---------- C ----------478
Books, John W.---------- C ----------341
Boring, Reuben S.---------- C ----------500
Borland, Christopher..... ES 520
Bothel, John---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------448
Boucher, William----------538
Bowder, Jonathan F.----------489
Bowers, Valentine----------519
Boyer, Noah.....451
Boyers, William R.----------375
Boyle, Mrs. Maria A.----------366
Boyle, William C.----------342
Bracken, Fletcher----------542
Bracken, Samuel..... ES - C 513
Bracken, William H.---------- C ----------423
Brady, Hugh---------- C ----------143 - 527
Brady, James T.----------474
Brady, Joseph---------- Ind. ----------404
Brady, Capt. Samuel..... Ind. Scout.....260 - 266 - 472
Brady, Samuel T.---------- Ind. - C ----------462
Bradys, The---------- ES ----------143
Bradys, The---------- C ----------472
Brallier, E. (M. D.)---------- C ----------419
Brandon, Edward J. S..... Black Hawk - C 462
Bratton, William ---------- R - C ----------518
Brewer, David----------477
Brink, John----------409
Brown, David O.---------- C ----------396
Brown, John W.....370
Brown, James----------506
Brown, W. C.---------- C ----------470
Bruce, John---------- C ----------363
Bryan, William B.---------- C ----------527
Burns, Thomas..... ES - R - C 453
Burns, William J.---------- C ----------494
Buterbaugh, Joseph L.---------- C ----------482
Buterbaugh, I. N.----------499
Butler, Washington---------- R ----------533
Byers, John M..... R - C 464

Calderwood, Andrew----------Page 492
Caldwell, John----------430
Caldwell, John----------504
Caldwell, John---------- ES - C ----------542
Caldwells, The.....336
Cameron, C. J.----------498
Cameron, Daniel----------499
Cameron, Frederick----------536
Cameron, Hugh, Sr.---------- 1812 - C ----------536
Cameron, John.....538
Camp, E. P.----------418
Campbell, Andrew---------- C ----------543
Campbell, Gen. Charles---------- ES - R ----------140 - 141- 441
Campbell, James M.----------537
Campbell, James S..... C 430
Campbell, John---------- Mex. - C ----------368
Campbell, John----------395
Campbell, John B.---------- 1812 ----------518
Campbell, Hon. Joseph---------- ES ----------452
Campbell, Mrs. Rebecca.....461
Campbell, Robert Y.---------- R - C ----------461
Cannon, Hugh M.---------- C ----------518
Cannon, Mrs. Mary----------518
Carnahan, Adam---------- C ----------448
Carnahan, W. F..... R 390
Carpenter, Ephraim, Esq.----------258 - 344
Carson, John----------517
Carson, Thomas, (M. D.)----------391
Cary, Joseph---------- C ----------492
Chambers, Elisha..... ES 525
Chambers, James N.---------- 1812 - C ----------483
Chapman, Francis----------534
Chapman, J. H.---------- C ----------540
Clagett, L. D., (M. D.)----------378
Clark, A. B..... C 488
Clark, Hail---------- C ----------396
Clark, Jacob---------- R ----------410
Clark, James---------- R ----------338
Clark, John W.----------489
Clark, L. M..... 420
Clark, Virtue----------489
Cline, Philip---------- R ----------437
Clowes, John---------- 1812 - C ----------450
Cochrane, Alexander---------- ES ----------432
Cochrane, Alexander W.....519
Coleman, Henry---------- C ----------523
Coleman, Mrs. Margaret---------- ES ----------359
Coleman, Mrs. Mary---------- C ----------505
Coleman, Nathaniel C.----------496
Coleman, Nicholas..... ES - Ind. Scout - 1812 - C 360
Coleman, Children of Robt. & Eliz.-- C ----------508
Coleman, W. H.---------- ES - R - C ----------535
Collins, Rev. D. W., (D. D.)----------374
Collins, George W.----------506

Compton, E. C.----------Page 499
Compton, John W.---------- C ----------462
Condron, George----------416
Connell, Peter----------379
Conner, Jacob S.....497
Conner, Simon---------- C ----------489
Conrad, Samuel---------- C ----------518
Cook, Richard---------- C ----------498
Cook, Thomas---------- C ----------498
Coon, Thomas N.....494
Cooper, Maj. Samuel (Cowper)-------- R - 1812 - C ----------386
Coy, Abraham S.----------543
Coy, John----------453
Coy, Lewis----------529
Coy, Mrs. Mary.....538
Craig, John---------- C ----------460
Craig, William----------431
Crawford, Allen---------- ES ----------470
Crawford, James L., (M. D.)----------389
Crawford, William.....478
Creps, Capt. Jacob---------- 1812 - C ----------526
Cresswell, Matthew---------- R - 1812 ----------512
Cribbs (Kreps, Creps), Daniel-------- ES - C ----------507
Cribbs, George H.----------444
Cribbs, George W.. ..... C 427
Cribbs, Joseph---------- ES ----------450
Crissman, George F.---------- C ----------486
Crisswell, Mrs. Adaline---------- C ----------539
Crooks, Matthew M.---------- ES ----------445
Crossman, Asa..... C 467
Crossman, John----------488
Crowther, Benjamin----------379
Crowther, Rev. S. F., (B. D.)----------419
Cryders, The---------- ES ----------144
Cummins, James Madison.....441
Cummins. John---------- ES - Ind. Scout----------445
Cummins, Joseph---------- C ----------451
Cunningham, Hon. John---------- C ----------359
Cunningham, John H.----------519
Cunningham, Mrs. Mary..... C 506

D

Darr, George----------Page 512
Darr, Jacob, Esq.----------537
Daugherty, Daniel K.----------390
Daugherty, Dapt. Daniel---------- C ----------392
Daugherty, J. R..... C.....343
Davis, Archibald---------- C ----------369
Davis, Daniel C.---------- C ----------446
Davis, George E.----------416
Davis, Rev. James---------- C ----------367
Davis, John..... ES - C 430
Davis, Johnston---------- C ----------
Davis, J. W.----------

INDIANA COUNTY HISTORICAL-GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY

Davis, Rev. Nelson---------- 1812 - Mex. ----------Page 407
Davis, Samuel L.---------- R - C ----------540
Davis, Stewart---------- C ----------362
Davis, T. M.----------476
Davis, William E.....501
Davison, William S.----------497
Deffenbaugh, David----------522
DeLancey, Jacob O.---------- C ----------476
Dennison, John----------335
Detwiler, Christian.....375
Devers, John H.---------- C ----------401
Devlin, Mrs. Ann---------- ES - C ----------428
Dewey, Enoch----------485
Dibler, Solomon---------- 1812 - C ----------485
Dick, James..... C 399
Dickson, James E.---------- ES - C ----------140 - 451
Dill, Matthew---------- ES - R ----------542
Dilts, Peter, Jr.---------- C ----------466
Diven, Wallace C.----------447
Dixon, Samuel..... ES - Ind. - C .....363 - 452
Dodson, Richard E.----------482
Donahey, James----------531
Donahey, Richard----------409
Donnelly, Felix and Francis---------- ES ----------143
Doty, Gillis M.....442
Doty, Israel----------427
Dougherty, William---------- C ----------519
Douglass, S. A.----------523
Downey, Alexander---------- C ----------468
Downey, Jacob..... ES - C 411
Downey, James----------542
Drips, Samuel W.---------- C ----------399
Drummond, Gawin---------- R - C ----------480
Drummond, John, Jr.---------- C ----------438
Duncan, James..... ES 439
Duncan, James J.---------- C ----------542
Duncan, John---------- 1812 ----------542
Duncan, John W.----------542
Duncan, R. H.----------532
Duncan, William.....542
Dunlap, William----------440

E

Earhart, Anthony---------- C - 1812 ----------Page 390
Earhart, Henry----------463
Earhart, Isaac----------531
Earhart, Mrs. Matilda P.---------- C ----------371
Earhart, Samuel..... C 533
Earl, William----------340
Eason, William---------- 1812 - C ----------418
Elder, John R.---------- R ----------460
Elder, Mrs. Mary---------- C ----------379
Elder, Robert..... ES - 1812 - C 503
Elder, Samuel---------- ES - C ----------422

Elkin, Francis---------- Page 416
Elrick, John E.---------- C ----------438
Elrick, Robert---------- C ----------503
Elwood, James T.----------500
Elwood, John..... ES 437
Elwood, William---------- R ----------491
Emerick, John----------491
Evans, E. M.---------- C ----------374
Evans, Dr. John---------- C ----------400
Evans, John, Pioneer..... C 534
Evans, Dr. J. N.---------- 1812 - C ----------498
Ewing, John---------- ES ----------436
Ewing, Mrs. Letitia---------- R ----------504
Ewing, Rev. T. R..... C 367

F

Fails, Alexander---------- ES - C ---------- Page 509
Fails, Mrs. Mary---------- ES - C ----------376
Fair, D. McClure----------380
Fair, James---------- C ----------442
Fair, Lemuel L..... Ind. Scout - C 442
Fairbank, David W.---------- C ----------465
Farnsworth, John---------- C ----------511
Fee, Col.---------- R ----------144
Fee, Jeannet----------365
Felton, Mrs. Annie.....372
Ferguson, A. D.---------- C ----------410
Ferguson, Elliott---------- C ----------410
Ferguson, John----------443
Fetterhoff, George----------469
Filler, Philip W.....493
Findley, George---------- ES ----------119
Fisher, Jacob----------449
Fisher, Samuel R.---------- C ----------474
Fleck, Benjamin C.----------488
Fleck, Mrs. Elizabeth..... C 480
Fleming, G. C.---------- C ----------447
Fleming, John---------- C ----------429
Fleming, John---------- ES ----------437
Fleming, J. S.---------- C ----------448
Fleming, Thomas H.....447
Fleming, William B.----------448
Flickinger, James S.---------- C ----------401
Ford, John P.----------378
Foust, Levi---------- C ----------423
Fowler, Archie.....535
Frazer, William---------- C ----------456
Frick, Jacob----------449
Frits, William, Sr.----------436
Fry, Jacob---------- C ----------448
Fry, Joseph S..... C 448
Fry, Mrs. Susan----------394
Fulton, A. H.----------506
Fulton, Alexander---------- C ----------504

Fulton, Robert W.---------- 1812 - C ----------Page 406
Fulton, Samuel T.---------- 1812 - C ----------482
Furguson, James---------- C ----------539
Furman, Rev. Samuel----------511

G

Gailey, D. S.----------Page 439
Gall, Jacob J.---------- C ----------471
Gamble, Jacob K.---------- 1812 ----------427
Gardiner, James---------- 1812 - Mex. - C ----------532
Garman, Jacob.....499
Garroway, W. T.----------539
Gaston, Mrs. Sarah----------484
Gaston, James T.----------491
Geer, Washington---------- R - 1812 ----------366
Gemmill, William.....506
George, A. P.---------- C ----------447
Getty, Rev. Andrew----------392
Getty, George C.----------488
Getty, James----------437
Getty, M. C.....487
Gibson, Andrew---------- C ----------448
Gibson, James N.----------460
Gibson, John---------- ES ----------140
Gibson, John---------- ES - C ----------441
Gibson, John T..... ES - 1812 - C 498
Gibson, Rev. W. F.----------471
Gilbert, John----------439
Gilbert, Luman---------- R - 1812 - C ----------402
Gilkerson, Maria Laird----------438
Gilmore, Robert.....371
Gilmour, Mrs. Mary----------502
Gilmour, William----------431
Given, Rev. James----------493
Glenn, Abraham R.---------- C ----------416
Glenn, Daniel..... C 501
Goheen, John---------- C ----------485
Gordon, James---------- ES - R - C ----------441
Gorman, David----------512
Gorman, David G.---------- C ----------512
Goss, Mrs. Catherine..... C 488
Gourley, John---------- C ----------470
Grabenstein, William---------- C ----------389
Graff, John, Esq.----------360
Graham, Alexander----------507
Graham, George.....507
Graham, Rev. H. Q.---------- C ----------401
Graham, Mrs. Harriet N.----------394
Graham, James Benson---------- C ----------541
Graham, Mrs. Margaret J.----------399
Graham, John..... C 541
Graham, Robert----------431
Graham, Samuel----------543
Graw, David----------542

Greaves, George B.----------Page 407
Green, Mrs. Elizabeth----------372
Green, John B., (M. D.)----------498
Griffith, Evan----------529
Griffith, Joseph.....519
Griffith, Nathaniel----------493
Griffith, Mrs. Sarah---------- R - C ----------480
Griffith, Stephen B.----------529
Griffith, Thomas----------501
Griffith, William.....529
Crist, William C----------373
Grover, Jedediah---------- 1812 - C ----------455
Grow, Jacob---------- 1812 - Mex.----------543
Grumbling, Chas. A.----------420
Grumbling, Emanuel H..... R - C 497
Guthrie, J. M.----------340

H

Haddon, William----------Page 522
Haddon, William J.---------- ES ----------537
Haines, Jacob S.---------- C ----------482
Hall, Andrew Craig---------- ES ----------344
Hall, George R.....467
Hall, John L.---------- C ----------528
Hall, Mrs. Mary---------- ES ----------481
Hamilton, John----------461
Hammell, Paul----------529
Hammel, Tobias..... R 377
Hammill, Robert M.----------454
Hammill, William T.----------517
Harbison, Francis---------- ES - R - C ----------504
Harper, Mrs. Margaret----------379
Harlett, James W..... C 489
Harmon, A. J.---------- C ----------450
Harmon, J. S.---------- C ----------448
Harris, W. S.---------- C ----------395
Hart, A. N.---------- C ----------423
Hart, James.....444
Hart, James M.---------- C ----------393
Hart, John----------504
Hart, Thomas---------- C ----------439
Hastings, James B.---------- C ----------463
Hayes, C. H.....473
Hayes, Mrs. Marabay----------471
Hayes, Thompson---------- C ----------477
Harlett, James W.---------- C ----------489
Hazlett, Leslie C.----------507
Hazlett, Peter..... ES 481
Hazlett, Samuel C.---------- ES - C ----------509
Hazlett, W. T.---------- C ----------488
Hedges, Joseph De K.---------- C ----------427
Henderson, David---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------395
Henderson, Isabella..... ES - 1812 383
Henderson, Robert---------- ES - C ----------505

Henderson, Samuel----------Page 430
Henderson, Samuel C.---------- ES - C ----------431
Henry, John---------- C ----------493
Henry, John K.----------376
Henry, Samuel.....505
Hess, George----------491
Hicks, Abram---------- C ----------471
Hicks, Isaac----------373
Hilands, Nathan---------- R ----------516
Hildebrand, E. P. and W. B.....341
Hiles, William----------435
Hill, Mrs. Elizabeth----------368
Hill, E. P.---------- ES ----------455
Hill, Rev. George, (D. D.)---------- 1812 ----------374
Hill, Hon. John..... Mex. - C 368
Hindman, Rev. John----------221
Hoffman, Philip H.----------469
Hollister, L. A.---------- C ----------406
Holsopple, Rev. Joseph---------- 1812 ----------540
Hood, James..... C 518
Hood, J. H.---------- C ----------520
Hoover, Charles C.----------480
Hoover, Mrs. Hannah----------467
Hoover, Samuel---------- C ----------482
Hop, Martin.....468
Hopkins, James---------- C ----------461
Hopkins, A. H.---------- C ----------519
Hopkins, John----------463
Hopkins, Robert J.---------- C ----------475
Hopkins, William W.....494
Horton, Mrs. Eliza Z.----------511
Hosack, John McCrea---------- C ----------369
Hosack, Joseph T.----------431
Hosack, William, (M. D.)---------- C ----------420
Hoskinson, W. B..... C 514
Houck, George----------527
Houk, David R.----------502
Houk, Mrs. Dorcas McElhoes----------540
Howe, William---------- C ----------536
Howearth, James W..... C 540
Hudson, James----------394
Hugus, Nicholas H.---------- R - C ----------512
Hull, John A.----------508
Hunter, James---------- ES - 1812 ----------411
Hunter, William, (M. D.)..... ES - 1812 367

I

Innes, George W.----------Page 377
Irvin, Maj. R. J.---------- R - C ----------394
Irwin, Rev. D. J.---------- Mex. ----------438
Irwin, Samuel---------- 1812 ----------505

J

Jack, Patrick---------- ES - R ----------Page 442
Jamison, Samuel S.---------- 1812 - C ----------387
Jenkins, David R.---------- C ----------531
Jenkins, Maj. William H.---------- C ----------394
Job, Michael..... R - C 454
John, Rev. Crisman----------493
Johns, Isaac---------- R ----------423
Johnson, John A.----------527
Johnson, Joseph M.---------- C ----------450
Johnson, Lewis..... C 378
Johnston, James---------- 1812 - C ----------450
Johnston, J. C.---------- C ----------342
Johnston, Mrs. Martha---------- R ----------401
Johnston, Moses---------- C ----------429
Johnston, William.....366
Johnston, William L.---------- 1812 C ----------451
Jones, G. T.----------478
Jones, John----------464
Jordan, Joseph A.----------469
Jordan, Robert..... R - C 466
Jordan, Robert A.---------- C ----------485

K

Kanarr, Moses---------- C ----------Page 510
Katz, Rev. Oliver----------389
Kaufman, Michael----------517
Keebler, Rev. S.----------410
Keibler, Mrs. Catherine..... R - C 389
Keel, Jacob---------- C ----------476
Keely, Samuel----------440
Keller, David H.---------- C ----------421
Kelley, James---------- ES - R ----------432
Kelley, Samuel..... ES - R 432
Kelly, James---------- ES ----------136
Kelly, James---------- ES - Mex. ----------413
Kelly, James----------500
Kelly, John W.---------- R ----------420
Kelly, John..... C 449
Kelly, Mrs. Margaret---------- 1812 ----------409
Kelly, Mrs. Sarah A.----------391
Kennedy, John P.---------- C ----------539
Kennedy, S. C.---------- 1812 - C ----------508
Kerler, Charles.....376
Kerlin, Samuel L.----------532
Kern, George W.---------- C ----------424
Kerr, James W.---------- C ----------455
Kerr, John----------375
Kerr, John..... C 446
Kerr, John---------- C ----------488
Keslar, Lawrence----------341
Kessler, Peter----------498

Kier, John L.---------- C ----------Page 508
Kier, Samuel---------- C ----------436
Kier, William----------508
Killen, Francis---------- C ----------514
Killen, Samuel..... R - C 423
Kime, Mrs. Louisa----------493
Kimmell, Andrew W.----------340
Kinghorn, Robert----------519
Kinports, Porter----------418
Kinter, Ebert.....474
Kinter, Mrs. Emily A.---------- C ----------526
Kinter, John---------- ES - R - 1812 - C ----------525
Kinter, J. T.---------- C ----------526
Kirkpatrick, Moses---------- 1812 - C ----------474
Kirtland, A. P., (Civil Engineer).....379
Knabb, James---------- C ----------538
Kneedler, John A.----------420
Knott, Maj. Wilson---------- 1812 - C ----------362
Kooser, Josiah---------- C ----------528
Kunkle, John C.....449
Kunkle, Lebbens----------436
Kunkle, Philip B.----------451
Kurtz, Jonathan----------362

L

Laird, Rev. Francis (D. D.)----------Page 388
Lamison, Theodore R.---------- C ----------484
Langdon, William W.---------- R - C ----------420
Lantz, Frederick's Children----------479
Lapsley, Thomas.....538
Larimer, W. T. (M. D.)----------506
Latimer, William---------- ES - C ----------508
Laufman, Philip Harrington---------- Ind. ----------371
Laughlin, James W.---------- ES - R - C ----------453
Laughlin, Mrs. Joseph..... ES - C 441
Laughlin, Randall---------- ES ----------140
Leard, Zachariah---------- ES ----------444
Learn, Andrew----------496
Learn, George---------- C ----------510
Leason, Hannah Sharp..... ES .....156 - 157
Leasure, David C.---------- C ----------493
Leasure, John---------- ES - C ----------459
Leasure, Peter----------499
Lee, Mordecai---------- C ----------394
Lemon, Jonathan..... C 427
Lewis, D. R.----------483
Lewis, Evan---------- C ----------483
Lewis, Evan---------- ES - C ----------506
Lewis, Evan----------502
Lewis, H. ..... C 463
Lewis, James L.---------- ES ----------446
Lewis, James S.----------529
Lewis, Samuel---------- ES - C ----------526
Lewis, William G.----------492

Lightcap, Solomon---------- C ----------Page 528
Ling, William----------424
Linsenbigler, W. S.----------414
Lintner, Mrs. Maria A.----------368
Lintner, C. P.---------- ES - C ----------530
Lochry, Col. Archibald----------149
Lockard, W. P.----------501
Lomison, Jeremiah----------454
Long, Benjamin----------540
Long, Christopher, Sr.----------534
Long, Christopher, Jr.---------- 1812 ----------535
Long, C. R.----------527
Long, Matthew----------448
Loos, Mrs. Anna Barbara---------- C ----------484
Loughry, Alexander---------- C ----------518
Loughry, John W.---------- ES - R ----------462
Love, David----------487
Lovelace, A. R., (M. D.)---------- R ----------498
Lowe, Cornelius----------415
Lowman, Abram Y.---------- C ----------510
Lowman, George S.---------- Ind. - C ----------411
Lowry, Daniel---------- ES ----------502
Lowry, James A.---------- C ----------478
Lowry, Robert---------- C ----------492
Lucas, John.---------- ES ----------429
Luckart, Joseph----------476
Luckart, T. R.---------- C ----------477
Luckhart, Capt. Davis A. (Co. A.)--- C ----------416
Lydick, E. M.----------499
Lydick, Jacob L.----------497
Lydick, James----------533
Lydick, James R.---------- C ----------510
Lydick, Mrs. Mary---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------462
Lydick, Moses----------499
Lydick, Patrick---------- C ----------474
Lyon, Samuel---------- C ----------378
Lyons, Alexander---------- ES ----------440
Lytle, Alexander---------- ES - C ----------438
Lytle, J. R.---------- C ----------449
Lytle, William M. R.---------- C ----------519

M

Mabon, Francis B.----------Page 443
Mabon, John L.---------- C ----------464
Mabon, Robert L.---------- ES - 1812 ----------472
Magee, John----------338
Maguire, Bartholomew.---------- ES ----------143
Maguire, Jane---------- ES ----------143
Mahan, William L.---------- C ----------517
Maher, Patrick----------367
Mahon, James---------- C ----------542
Mardis, Thomas C.---------- C ----------539
Marks, John---------- R ----------513
Marlin, David----------449

Marlin, Capt. John M.---------- C ----------Page 446
Marlin, T. J., (M. D.)----------414
Marshall, Robert----------472
Marshall, Robert J., (M. D.)-------- C ----------378
Marshall, Samuel..... C 437
Marshall, William C.---------- 1812 ----------434
Marshall, William, Sr.---------- ES ----------434
Martin, David---------- C ----------447
Martin, James----------512
Martin, John.....391
Martin, John---------- C ----------535
Martin, John D.----------501
Martin, William---------- C ----------491
Martin, William----------512
Mathews, Mrs. Elizabeth Findley..... ES - 1812 - C 421
Mathews, William---------- 1812 - C ----------462
Matthias, Mrs. Elizabeth----------368
Maul, Nicholas----------468
McAllaster, J. L. B.---------- R - C ----------518
McAnulty, J. A.....522
McAnulty, John, Jr.---------- R - 1812 ----------336
McCabe, Richard B.---------- R - 1812 ----------361
McCall, James---------- C ----------473
McCarroll, James---------- R - C ----------449
McCartney, Joseph..... ES 541
McCartney, J. Y.----------439
McCartney, Samuel---------- ES ----------336
McChesney, Robert, (M. D.)----------414
McClelland, John----------484
McCollam, S. W.....539
McComb, David---------- ES - R - 1812 - C----------505
McComb, Gen. James---------- R - 1812 ----------412
McConnaughey, James---------- C ----------457
McConnaugheys, The---------- R ----------457
McCormick, Capt. R. H..... C 420
McCoy, Church Smith---------- ES - Ind. - C ----------430
McCoy, Daniel----------520
McCoy, S. W.---------- C ----------499
McCoy, Thomas J.----------527
McCracken, James S.....522
McCrea, C. S. (M. D.)---------- C ----------451
McCrea, Thompson---------- ES - C ----------409
McCrea, Thompson C.---------- C ----------444
McCreary, Robert---------- ES - C ----------460
McCreery, Alexander M..... C 449
McCreight, B. F.---------- C ----------450
McCullough, John---------- ES ----------511
McCune, Alexander---------- C ----------533
McCune, Mrs. Charlotte---------- C ----------378
McCune, Mrs. Mary Agnes Jamison.....510
McCune, Thomas---------- C ----------427
McCurdy, John---------- C ----------415
McCurdy, William---------- ES ----------442
McDonald, James---------- ES - C ----------409
McDonald, Mrs. Susan..... ES - 1812 - C.....479
McDowell, John---------- C ----------435

McDowell, Joseph----------Page 454
McElhaney, John---------- 1812 - C ----------409
McElhoes, Isaiah---------- ES - C ----------525
McEwen, Christopher, (M. D.)----------477
McFarland, Capt. Daniel..... C 513
McFarland, Mrs. Elizabeth----------484
McFarland, Maj. Irvin----------340
McFarland, John----------474
McFarland, Dr. John----------389
McGara, John..... C 465
McGara, Samuel----------528
McGaughey, Alexander----------441
McGaughey, John----------474
McGaughey, John---------- C ----------482
McGaughey, Robert.....439
McGaughey, R. C.---------- C ----------447
McGaughey, Thomas---------- C ----------431
McGee, Robert---------- ES - R ----------452
McGinnity, A. S.---------- C ----------460
McGregor, James.....406
McGuire, James---------- 1812 ----------501
McHenry, D. F.----------528
McHenry, Mrs. Isabella---------- 1812 - C ----------405
McHenry, James---------- Ind. ----------479
McHenry, William..... R 528
McIlwain, William----------387
McIntyre, H. B.---------- ES - R ----------411
McIntyre, Rev. J. W.----------487
McIsaac, Robert----------468
McKee, James..... C 412
McKee, James----------524
McKee, Hon. Thomas----------494
McKeevar, Rev. Edward Michael----------378
McKelvey, Josephus C.---------- C ----------378
McKendrick, John.....536
McKesson, Robert---------- ES ----------452
McKesson, William---------- C ----------402
McKissen, James H.---------- ES - R - 1812 - C ----------503
McKnight, James A.---------- ES - C ----------446
McLain, James.....515
McLain, Robert---------- C ----------476
McLaughlin, James----------527
McLaughlin, Mrs. Margaret L.--------- C ----------528
McLaughlin, M. N.---------- C ----------447
McMillen, William.....474
McMullen, James, (M. D.)----------408
McMullen, Thomas, (M. D.)---------- R - 1812 - C ----------539
McNulty, Samuel----------372
McQuilkin, Samuel---------- Ind. ----------525
McQuown, James A..... C 510
McQuown, Lawrence---------- 1812 - C ----------492
McSwiney, Bryan---------- C ----------446
McWilliams, John----------391
McWilliams, William..... C 390
Mears, Joseph----------526
Mears, Mrs. Mary----------401

Mechlin, Rev. George W.----------Page 487
Medsker, Enoch---------- 1812 ----------395
Mehaffey, John B.---------- R ----------419
Mercer, Simon B.---------- 1812 ----------393
Mildren, E. J.....532
Millen, James---------- C ----------451
Miller, Rev. C. W.---------- C ----------402
Miller, H. B.----------450
Miller, Henry S.---------- C ----------450
Miller, James M..... C 447
Miller, James----------338
Miller, J. E.----------497
Miller, Johnston----------476
Miller, Michael----------439
Miller, Robert..... ES 445
Miller, Robert---------- C ----------476
Miller, S. Braddee---------- 1812 ----------511
Miller, Samuel G., Esq.---------- C ----------437
Milliron, Rev. Samuel----------513
Mitchell, James..... ES 452
Mitchell, John---------- ES - R - C ----------429
Mitchell, Robert----------493
Mitchell, Robert, Jr.----------539
Mogle, George---------- 1812 - C ----------463
Moore, Rev. Carle.....402
Moore, Israel---------- ES - C ----------528
Moore, James----------393
Moore, Hon. John----------176
Moore, McConnel----------531
Moore, Samuel R..... C 464
Moorhead, Alexander Thompson--------- ES ----------338
Moorhead, Fergus---------- ES ----------133
Moorhead, Fergus L.----------414
Moorhead, James---------- ES ----------534
Moorhead, Mowry T..... C 513
Moorhead, Samuel---------- ES ----------136
Moorhead, William M.----------534
Moorhouse, Eli----------375
Moorhouse, John----------375
Morford, Mrs. Reuhamah.....377
Morgan, Alexander---------- C ----------513
Moritz, Thomas----------343
Morris, Robert M.---------- C ----------500
Morrow, Andrew----------475
Morrow, J. Wilson, (M. D.).....468
Mottarn, William----------464
Mullen, John----------400
Mummau, John---------- C ----------502
Mundshower, Houston---------- C ----------455
Murphy, William..... Mex. 537
Musick, Samuel---------- C ----------507
Muth, William---------- C ----------469
Myer, Luther----------540
Myers, G. W.----------455
Myers, Joseph.....526
Myers, S.---------- C ----------341

Neal, William H.---------- 1812 - C ----------Page 461
Neff, Rev. Aaron---------- C ----------476
Nesbitt, David---------- C ----------370
Nesbitt, Nathaniel---------- 1812 - ES----------435
Nesbitt, Maj. Nathaniel..... C 436
Nesbitt, Samuel---------- C ----------435
Neville, R. F.----------486
Newingham, Daniel----------376
Nickle, Joseph----------510
Niel, Hugh.....509
Niels, The---------- C ----------457
Nixon, Robert---------- ES ----------344
North, John---------- 1812 ----------466
Notley, Eliza----------488
Notley, John.....489
Nowery, James---------- ES ----------436
Nupp, Cyrus---------- C ----------498

O

Oberlin, Charles---------- C ----------Page 484
O'Brien, Michael----------379
O'Brien, S. S.----------421
Oliver, John---------- Ind. Scout - 1812 ----------509
O'Neal, John..... Ind. Scout - C 535
Orner, Amos D.----------419
Orner, George----------529
Orr, Benjamin----------532
Orr, Capt.---------- Ind. ----------150
Orr, Mrs. Hannah..... Ind. - R - C 401
Orr, Rev. Franklin---------- Ind. - 1812 ----------508

P

Paige, Edmund----------Page 523
Paige, John D., Esq.----------538
Palmer, Addison---------- C ----------426
Park, Jane----------507
Park, John..... C 404
Parry, William---------- C ----------501
Patch, Mrs. Ann Jane---------- C ----------373
Patterson, Rev. T. P.----------513
Pattison, A. S.---------- ES - C ----------444
Pattison, Robert.....518
Patton, Thomas B.---------- R ----------395
Paul, Samuel----------477
Pearce, J. C.---------- R ----------392
Peddicord, Nicholas----------409
Peeler, Jacob..... ES 430
Peffer, John C---------- C ----------469
Pershing, Daniel---------- ES - C ----------423
Peterman, Jeremiah----------527
Peters, Mrs. Isabella----------375
Pettigrew, Mrs. Martha..... ES 431

Phillips, Miss Martha----------Page 402
Phillips, Mrs. Mary---------- C ----------401
Piatt, Dr. W. A.----------418
Pierce, James B.----------526
Piper, George.....491
Piper, Wilson M.----------440
Pollock, Alvah---------- 1812 - C ----------514
Pollock, Mrs. Martha---------- C ----------494
Portch, Rev. John----------340
Porter, John B.....389
Porter, S. H.---------- C ----------485
Portser, H. J. & S. S.---------- C ----------393
Post, Christian Frederick----------83
Postlewait, Joseph (Postlethwait)---- R - C ----------466
Potts, Jacob.....449
Powell, John---------- C ----------488
Powell, J. C.---------- C ----------431
Powell, William----------485
Prescott, Alfred---------- 1812----------471
Price, Thomas..... C 496
Pringle, Abraham---------- C ----------476
Pringle, D. R.---------- C ----------406
Prothero, Henry---------- C ----------511
Prothers, J. P.---------- C ----------526

R

Ralston, David---------- ES ----------Page 516
Ralston, Samuel---------- 1812 ----------536
Ramey, Mrs. Sarah---------- C ----------466
Rank, Samuel---------- C ----------488
Rankin, Hugh R..... ES - R - C 487
Rankin, N. S.---------- ES ----------454
Ranson, William---------- C ----------370
Ray, Alexander---------- 1812 ----------451
Ray, George----------536
Ray, James.....431
Ray, Samuel----------365
Ray, William D.----------536
Reed, George---------- R - C ----------506
Reed, J.----------396
Reed, Thomas C..... C 518
Reed, William---------- R - C ----------420
Reed, W. L., (M. D.)---------- C ----------411
Reid, Thomas S.----------427
Repine, William H.---------- C ----------446
Reynolds, William.....427
Rhea, Joseph----------435
Rhodes, B. B.----------443
Rice, Conrad----------321 - 515
Richards, John H.----------395
Richardson, John..... 1812 - C 375
Richardson, William----------460
Richey, W. C.----------375
Riddle, C. A.----------510

Risinger, Michael---------- 1812 ----------Page 453
Ritchey, Samuel----------482
Roberts, Hugh----------529
Roberts, John R.----------455
Roberts, William J.....501
Robertson, George W.---------- C ----------409
Robinson, Bell McLanahan----------437
Robinson, Elliott---------- 1812 ----------427
Robinson, Mrs. Elizabeth---------- C ----------415
Robinson, Irwin..... R - C 470
Robinson, Mrs. Jane---------- ES - C ----------371
Robinson, Mrs. Jane---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------429
Robinson, John L.---------- ES - C ----------430
Robinson, John R.---------- C ----------392
Robinson, John W..... C 392
Robinson, Johnston S.---------- R ----------388
Robinson, Rebecca Weir---------- C ----------437
Robinson, T. M.---------- 1812 ----------391
Robinson, Robert, Sr.---------- ES - C ----------433
Rochester, John H.....405
Rodger, James----------396
Rodgers, Hannibal----------532
Rodgers, Robert---------- ES - C ----------422
Rodgers, Mrs. Sarah----------422
Rodkey, J. S.....539
Rosborough, Mrs. Mary---------- ES - C ----------505
Rosborough, Rebecca---------- C ----------436
Rose, Allen----------494
Ross, Samuel---------- C ----------464
Roy, Jonathan.....520
Rowland, Rev. M. L.----------499
Rowland, William---------- C ----------477
Ruffner, Henry H.---------- 1812 ----------488
Rugh, Christian---------- C ----------408
Rugh, James C.....535
Rugh, Samuel---------- C ----------535
Runyan, Rev. A. B.---------- C ----------513
Russell, Mrs. Mary---------- ES ----------439
Russell, Mollie---------- R ----------509
Ryckman, Tobias..... C 406

S

Sadler, Jacob---------- C ----------Page 447
Schnetberg, Henry---------- Mex. - C ----------343
Schrecongosts, The (Schreckengosts)-- C ----------475
Scott, Mrs. Margaret---------- Ind. - R ----------369
Seanor (or Zener), North..... C 475
Sebring, Samuel---------- C ----------342
Sexton, Jeremiah----------522
Shaffer, Jacob---------- R - C ----------469
Shaffer, Jacob A.----------478
Shaffer, Michael.....484
Shaffer, Solomon F.---------- 1812 - C ----------469
Shannon, Mrs. Elizabeth---------- Ind. - R - C ----------363

Shannon, John---------- 1812 ----------Page 527
Sharp, Capt. Andrew---------- ES - R - C ----------156- 157 - 428
Sharp, Hugh---------- R ----------468
Sharp, Thomas----------431
Sharretts, Rev. Nicholas G.....343
Shearer, John----------439
Sheesley, Simon---------- R - 1812 - C ----------492
Sheffar, William B.----------490
Sheffler, Philip---------- 1812 - C ----------455
Shellito, George..... R 539
Shepherd, John----------376
Shepherd, Joseph----------518
Shepley, Rev. Samuel Howard----------364
Shields, Clark G.---------- C ----------447
Shields, James L.....377
Shields, Marshall---------- ES - R ----------410
Shields, Ralph---------- C ----------478
Shields, Richard---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------447
Shields, William---------- ES ----------337
Shields, William..... R 467
Shields, William H.---------- C ----------491
Shimp, Rev. W. K.---------- R ----------513
Shirley, Robert---------- ES - R ----------436
Short, Daniel----------365
Shoup, John.....399
Shryock, Henry---------- ES ----------177 - 343
Shurick, Adam----------379
Sickenberger, H. C.----------539
Sickenberger, Michael----------540
Sides, Adam..... ES - C 500
Sides, Adam---------- C ----------531
Simon, Rev. D.----------343
Simpson, David---------- 1812 ----------368
Simpson, David----------380
Simpson, James..... R - Ind. Scout 452
Simpson, James----------537
Simpson, John S.---------- 1812 - C ----------517
Simpson, William E.----------478
Sims, Dr. William N.----------415
Sloan, Rev. B. Shields..... 1812 - C 538
Sloan, Mrs. Margaret Kelly---------- 1812 - Mex. - C ----------522
Sloan, Hon. Hannibal K.---------- 1812 - C ----------523
Smiley, Samuel----------511
Smith, Daniel----------533
Smith, David F..... C 420
Smith, Ellis G.----------499
Smith, George----------491
Smith, Capt. George E.----------519
Smith, James---------- ES - C ----------452
Smith, Marshall W.....406
Smith, Mrs. Martha----------507
Smith, Matthias----------492
Smith, Michael----------440
Smith, Thomas---------- C ----------512
Smith, William..... ES - R 339
Smith, William----------443

Smitten, Archibald----------Page 468
Smouse, Rev. J. Warren----------539
Smyers, William----------510
Smyers, W. R.----------461
Snyder, David..... C 471
Snyder, Mrs. Elizabeth---------- R ----------473
Snyder, George B.----------515
Spalding, George----------535
Spargo, John S.---------- C ----------475
Speedy, Alexander M..... C 451
Speedy, Samuel F.---------- C ----------527
Spence, Robert---------- ES ----------450
Spencer, Levi---------- R ----------464
Spencer, Mrs. Lucinda M.---------- R - C ----------482
Spencer, Capt. P. C..... C 474
Sprankle, Frederick---------- C ----------467
Stanard, Daniel----------257 - 523
States, Adam----------490
St. Clair, Alexander---------- C ----------451
St. Clair, James..... R - C 517
Steer, Jacob (Stear)---------- C ----------481
Steeles (and Carsons)---------- C ----------457
Steetle, John---------- C ----------527
Steffy, Abram----------476
Steffy, Ephraim..... R - C 464
Stephens, Samuel---------- ES - R - 1812 - C ----------511
Stephens, William---------- C ----------535
Sterett, William J.----------390
Sterling, Mrs. Maria----------374
Sterner, William H.....498
Stewart, Alexander K.---------- C ----------447
Stewart, Archibald---------- R ----------536
Stewart, A. M.---------- ES - C ----------341
Stewart Brothers---------- C ----------465
Stewart Family..... R - 1812 514
Stewart, James----------449
Stewart, Maj. James---------- R - Ind. ----------541
Stewart, John A.---------- C ----------463
Stewart, Joseph S.---------- C ----------473
Stewart, M. L..... C 514
Stewart, Mrs. Mary----------473
Stewart, Nathaniel W.---------- C ----------464
Stewart, Mrs. Susan---------- ES - C ----------453
Stewart, Thomas---------- Ind. ----------475
Stewart, William G.....478
Stifler, Jacob---------- C ----------500
Stiffy, David---------- C ----------438
Still, Robert---------- 1812 - C ----------369
Stillinger, Rev. J. A.----------351
Stiteler, David F.....478
Stiteler, George---------- C ----------416
Stiteler, John F.----------416
Stitt, Martin C.---------- 1812 - C ----------373
Stitt, Noah---------- R ----------454
Stitt, Mrs. Sarah..... 1812 - C 464
Stiver, Abraham---------- C ----------492

Stock, Rev. Charles M.---------- R ----------Page 378
Street, Charles B.---------- C ----------370
Strong, George----------543
Strong, Michael----------543
Stuchal, Christopher..... 1812 - C 459
Stuchel, Andrew---------- ES ----------449
Stuchel, John A.----------447
Stuchel, Robert H.---------- C ----------477
Stuchel. Thomas---------- C ----------448
Stuchell, Alexander (Stuchal)..... C 538
Stuchell, Capt. John---------- C ----------477
Stuchell, William A.---------- C ----------451
Stuchell, William D. (Stuchal)-------- C ----------516
Stumpf, John R.---------- C ----------541
Sutter, C. B.....468
Sutton, Peter---------- ES ----------344
Sutton, William---------- ES - C ----------448
Swan, James----------526
Swan, Rev. Lawrence----------379
Sweeny, Michael.....343

T

Taylor, Alexander----------Page 336
Taylor, Alexander---------- R - 1812 ----------523
Taylor, Andrew A.---------- C ----------395
Taylor, David---------- R - 1812 - C ----------372
Taylor, Hugh M., Esq..... 1812 438
Taylor, John----------442
Telford, Rev. J. C.----------506
Templeton, Archibald---------- Ind. - C ----------392
Templeton, A. S.---------- C ----------440
Thomas, Charles W.....390
Thomas, Israel---------- ES ----------410
Thomas, Thomas----------498
Thomas, William J.----------529
Thompson, A. P.---------- 1812 ----------424
Thompson, David K..... ES - R - 1812 - C 525
Thompson Family----------519
Thompson, George C.---------- ES ----------432
Thompson, George W.---------- C ----------486
Thompson, James---------- ES ----------515
Thompson, John G..... ES 337
Thompson, Dr. John K.----------405
Thompson, Hon. Joseph---------- ES ----------337
Thompson, Joseph----------442
Thompson, Robert----------519
Thompson, Robert.....525
Thompson, T. E.----------368
Thompson, William----------411
Tiger, Adam D.---------- R - 1812 ----------490
Tinkcom, Capt. Daniel---------- C ----------399
Tittle, Charles L.....375
Tomb Families---------- ES - C ----------398
Toy, James---------- C ----------494

Travis, William G.----------Page 481
Trees, James L.----------440
Trimble, George---------- C ----------515
Trimble, Mrs. Sarah J.----------394
Trimble, Thomas.....438
Trout, D. L.----------450
Truby, Simeon----------408
Truby, William R.----------373
Trusal, John---------- C ----------475
Tucker, George.....478
Turner, J. McKinnie----------533
Turner, Nathaniel P.---------- ES ----------342

U

Uncapher, Capt. John---------- C ----------Page 442

V

Van Antwerp, Dr. Eugene H.----------Page 395
Van Horn, Benjamin B.---------- C ----------473
Van Horn, George Logan---------- C ----------474
Van Horn, William---------- ES - 1812 - C ----------479
Virtue, Rev. Andrew.....451
Virtue, Samuel W., (M. D.)----------508

W

Wachob, William----------Page 543
Wadding, Thomas---------- C ----------473
Waddle, Samuel----------439
Wagner, George---------- C ----------538
Wakefield, James..... ES 427
Wakefield, William---------- ES ----------422
Walker, Benjamin---------- ES ----------428
Walker, Frederick---------- C ----------469
Walker, Joseph W.---------- C ----------506
Walker, Peter..... C 468
Walkinshaw, Mrs. Margaret B.----------388
Wallace, William---------- R ----------448
Warnock, William---------- R ----------373
Warren, Augustus H.---------- C ----------483
Waterson, William..... C 518
Watson, Annie E.----------441
Watson, Mrs. Elizabeth----------373
Watson, James---------- ES - R - C ----------506
Watt, Mrs. Jane----------342
Watterson, John, Sr.....376
Weamer, Albert----------478
Weamer, Jacob---------- C ----------471
Weaver, Capt. D. J.---------- C ----------420
Weaver, Samuel---------- R - C ----------485
Weaver, Solomon W..... R - 1812 474

Wegley, Frederick----------Page 519
Wehrle, R. W.----------375
Weir, Albert M.---------- ES ----------532
Weir, Archibald----------522
Weir, D. C.---------- ES - I - C ----------456
Weiser, Conrad----------36
Weitzel, George----------494
Wells, Aaron----------472
Wells, John J.----------405
Welch, Lewis A.---------- C ----------476
Welsh, Six Families (from Wales)----------496
Welchonce, Sylvester C.---------- R - 1812 ----------484
Weston, John---------- ES ----------144
Weston, John W.----------461
Wetzel, Henry----------407
White, Charles R.---------- C ----------490
White, Isaac A.----------494
Widdowson, William----------493
Wiester, John---------- R ----------394
Wiggins, Andrew----------535
Wiggins, James & Mary (Ramsey)-------- C ----------431
Wiggins, Robert---------- 1812 ----------516
Wiggins, Samuel L. (M. D.)----------532
Wike, George---------- C ----------538
Wilcox, Samuel----------449
Wiley, James---------- ES - C ----------532
Wilhelm, Jacob----------486
Wilkinson, Mark---------- R - C ----------372
Wilkinson, William----------509
Williams, B. F.---------- 1812 - C ----------497
Williams, Daniel----------342
Williams, John---------- C ----------515
Williams, Owen D.---------- C ----------501
Williams, Richard L.----------498
Williams, Rev. Richard L.----------500
Wilson, Abram----------399
Wilson, Daniel---------- ES ----------440
Wilson, Mrs. Eliza Jane----------371
Wilson, Isabella Barr---------- ES ----------104
Wilson, Col. (or Maj.) James----------103- 123
Wilson, John---------- ES - R ----------522
Wilson, W. A.---------- C ----------474
Wilson, William----------401
Wilson, William---------- C ----------477
Wilson, William D.---------- ES - Ind. - C ----------456
Wilyard, David---------- R ----------492
Wine, J. S. G.---------- R - 1812 ----------340
Winebarg, Francis (Winebach)----------494
Wingard, Samuel----------473
Winsman, David D.---------- C ----------442
Wingrove, John---------- C ----------487
Wining, Henry---------- C ----------467
Winsheimer, Christina----------443
Winslow, Hon. James---------- Fr. & Ind. - 1812 ----------494
Wissel, Conrad----------342
Wissinger, Ellis---------- C ----------448

Wolf, A. H.---------- R - C ----------Page 399
Wolf, James---------- C ----------514
Woodend, Rev. William W. (D. D.)----------388
Work, David B.----------493
Work, John..... C 459
Work, John B.----------485
Work, Mrs. Mary Horn---------- ES - C ----------459
Work, William---------- C ----------458
Wortman, Caspert----------468
Wynekoop, Matthew B..... C 526

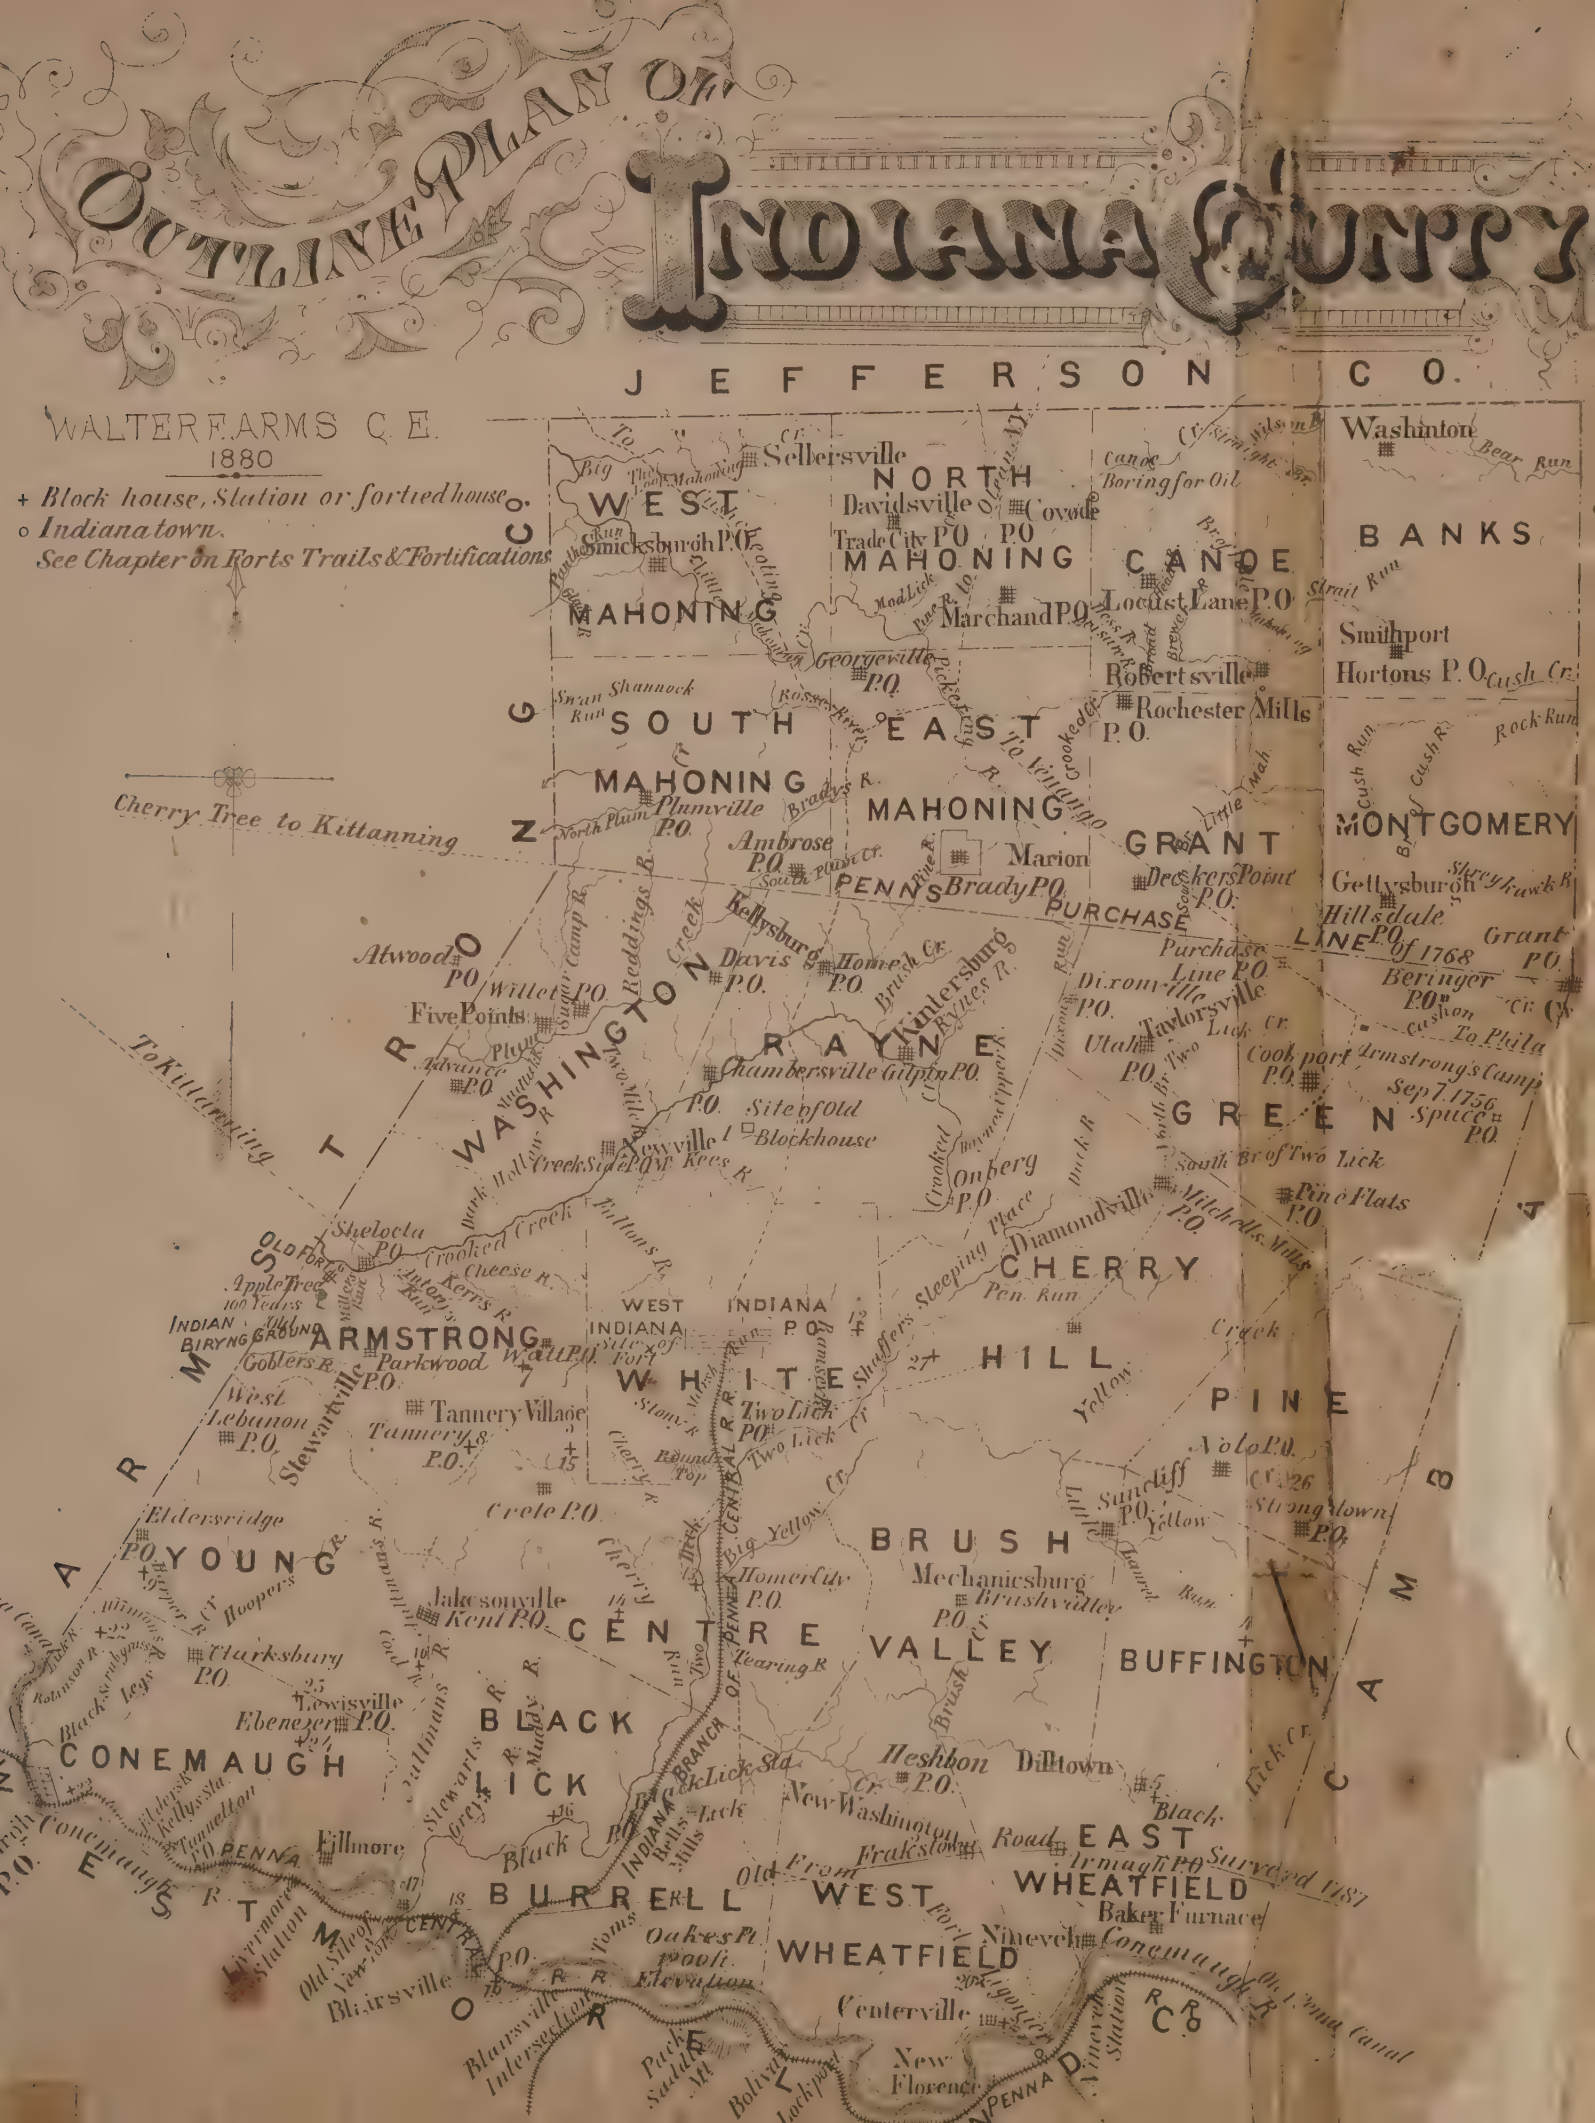
Y

Yaney, Matthias---------- C ----------Page 410
Young, Prof. J. H.----------521
Young, William and Mary----------483

Z

Zener, Conrad---------- C ----------Page 469
Zener, North (or Seanor)---------- C ----------475
Zimmers, Mrs. Elizabeth---------- 1812 - C ----------370

Outline Plan of Indiana County



JEFFERSON CO.
WALTER FARMS C. E.
1880
+ Block house, Station or fortified house.
○ Indiana town.
See Chapter on Forts Trails & Fortifications
NORTH MAHONING
WEST MAHONING
CANOE
BANKS
SOUTH MAHONING
EAST MAHONING
GRANT
MONTGOMERY
WASHINGTON
RAYNE
GREEN
CHERRY HILL
PINE ARMSTRONG
WHITE
BRUSH CREEK
CENTRE VALLEY
BUFFINGTON
YOUNG
BLACK LICK
CONEMAUGH
BURRELL
WEST WHEATFIELD
EAST WHEATFIELD
Cherry Tree to Kittanning
To Kittanning
PENNS PURCHASE LINE of 1768
Selbersville
Davidsville
Trade City P.O.
Smicksburgh P.O.
Marchand P.O.
Locust Lane P.O.
Robertsville
Rochester Mills P.O.
Georgeville P.O.
Plumville P.O.
Ambrose P.O.
Marion
Brady P.O.
Decklers Point P.O.
Hillsdale P.O.
Gettysburgh
Hortons P.O.
Smithport
Washington
Atwood P.O.
Willet P.O.
Five Points
Kellysburg
Davis P.O.
Homer Cr.
Chambersville
Gilpin P.O.
Site of old Blockhouse
Dixonville
Taylorsville
Utah P.O.
Cookport P.O.
Armstrong's Camp
Sept 7. 1756
Spruce P.O.
Pine Flats P.O.
Onberg P.O.
Diamondville
Mitchells Mills P.O.
Shelocta P.O.
Old Fort
Apple Tree 100 Years
Indian Burying Ground
Goblers R.
Parkwood P.O.
West Lebanon P.O.
Tannery Village
Tannery P.O.
Stewartsville
West Indiana P.O.
Site of Fort
Two Lick P.O.
Crete P.O.
Eldersridge P.O.
Jacksonville
Kent P.O.
Homer City P.O.
Mechanicsburg
Brushvalley P.O.
Clarksburg P.O.
Lewisville
Ebenezer P.O.
Heshbon
Dilltown
New Washington
Fraksville
Irwin P.O.
Baker Furnace
Nineveh
Concemaugh
Centerville
New Florence
Fillmore
Livermore Station
Old Sheep Tunnel
Blairsville
Blairsville Intersection
Oakes Pt.
Pool Elevation
Saddle Mt.
Bolivar
Loch port
Sandcliff P.O.
Strongstown P.O.
Aolo P.O.
Yellow Creek
Two Lick Creek
Crooked Creek
Cherry Run
Big Yellow Creek
Tearing R.
Conemaugh R.
Penna Canal
Survey'd 1787
Cush Cr.
Rock Run
Strait Run
Bear Run
Canoe Boring for Oil
Shrey Kawk R.
Grant P.O.
Beringer P.O.
Cushion
To Phila
Cook port
Armstrongs Camp
Sept 7. 1756
Spruce P.O.
Pine Flats P.O.
Diamondville
Mitchells Mills P.O.
Sleeping Place
Pen Run
Yellow Creek
Sandcliff P.O.
Strongstown P.O.
Aolo P.O.
Two Lick Cr.
Brush Cr.
Black Lick Cr.
Conemaugh R.
Penna Canal
Survey'd 1787
Baker Furnace
Nineveh
Concemaugh
Centerville
New Florence
Fillmore
Livermore Station
Old Sheep Tunnel
Blairsville
Blairsville Intersection
Oakes Pt.
Pool Elevation
Saddle Mt.
Bolivar
Loch port
Irwin P.O.
Fraksville
New Washington
Heshbon
Dilltown
Mechanicsburg
Brushvalley P.O.
Homer City P.O.
Jacksonville
Kent P.O.
Clarksburg P.O.
Lewisville
Ebenezer P.O.
Eldersridge P.O.
Crete P.O.
Tannery Village
Tannery P.O.
West Lebanon P.O.
Parkwood P.O.
Goblers R.
Shelocta P.O.
Old Fort
Apple Tree 100 Years
Indian Burying Ground
Five Points
Willet P.O.
Atwood P.O.
Kellysburg
Davis P.O.
Homer Cr.
Chambersville
Gilpin P.O.
Site of old Blockhouse
Dixonville
Taylorsville
Utah P.O.
Cookport P.O.
Armstrong's Camp
Sept 7. 1756
Spruce P.O.
Pine Flats P.O.
Onberg

974.889 H62c
c.1

HISTORY

OF

INDIANA COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

"All history is enhanced in value, not as the coin and painting, from variety and antiquity, but in veracious narrative, instructive comment, simple diction, and chronological use."

INTRODUCTION.

WITH mingled feelings of wonder, admiration and pride, Americans contemplate the vast, varied and important changes wrought by a people whose constitution is based on equality, and whose triune principles are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. He who views the harmonious operations of political machinery need not seek the springs of action in a republic, elsewhere than in counties and in their towns. Power is of the people, and he who traverses America and sees no insignia of rank, no emblems of power, must consult the annals of her counties, the records of town meetings, to find the origin of government.

Ancestral halls and hereditary succession, the ruins of tower and temple, magnificent and impressive in their decay, monumental shafts inscribed with hieroglyphics, and pyramids recalling the material age, are souvenirs of a ruder time when physical force held the mastery.

America is old; her higher order of civilization is new. Origin is recent, and the supremacy of intellect which guided the pioneer to fell the forest, and excite the earth to production is still manifest as a potent, vital principle, developing mental power, utilizing the force of nature, and advancing to the highest reach of human capacity.

Pennsylvania is the Keystone State, and the Allegheny valley has become celebrated for its mineral resources. The Scotch-Irish sought their fortune in Indiana and found it given as the price of industry. With sinewy stroke and lusty blow, the forest fell before them; their descendants stand to-day upon the vantage ground nobly won by their progenitors.

The history of Indiana aims to present the origin, progress, and culmination of that untiring industry which has yet higher aims and nobler purposes. Whence comes the materials for faithful record? Treasuring the memory of others, Indiana is oblivious of self. A press is active to garner in its many columns matters replete with interest, but one toils in vain to discover more than allusions to the events of the day. A McCabe, a Row, a Taylor, and a Robinson have gathered fragments, and these have passed from press to press limited in quantity; valued as these have been, they have become a rarity. The records of Indiana, whose annals comprise little more than a century, are as meagre as the history of a nation in the days of legend and tradition. To augment material from the recollections of the aged, the manuscript; the press, and the volume, and to combine all as a lesson for present entertainment and future reference and instruction, is no easy nor ignoble task.

Herein is essayed the description of farms cleared, villages planted, towns founded, the inception and progress of agriculture, manufacture and commerce, the note of rich soil, healthful climate and striking scenery. Journeys and settlements, reminiscences and records, chronology of pioneer stages of growth, are rising in importance as their value becomes apparent. Regarding the many living monuments of the energies of to-day, the constant and higher progress of our people, and the confidence in our future, few but desire to lift the curtain of oblivion and gaze upon the past. Occupants of farm house or town mansion are interested in those initial efforts which have induced present enterprise, and it is a slight reward to combine the names of actors with their deeds, and rescue honest worth from forgetfulness. Prominent notice is given to the pioneer, both from character and achievement. The industry and perseverance of the Scotch-Irish is proverbial; a toiler upon a soil which gave scant reward for labor, he saw along the "Conemaugh," "Black Lick" and "Two Lick," the broad fringe of woods which barred his occupation. The forest fell, and the reward of labor seemed like a tale of fiction. Thence arose the necessity of mills, the need of a market and means of transportation. The portrayal of early days in Indiana declares the present a proportionate effect. Occupation and location change character, and he who would know of the pioneer must learn from the printed page. We seek to make known the struggles of the first settlers, their endurance, their patience and their reward, and to contrast, as evidences of healthfulness, their works and resources, with the achievements and purposes of the present. In these pages biography is blended with history, and a class is pictured by an individual type. Science presents the lineaments of the pioneer and the distinguished, and art pencils the sketch of rural home, town residence, and beautiful scenery. The eye is pleased and the mind informed by historic and statistic page, views of nature grand and remarkable, and of architecture massive and ornate. Tradition recounts adventures connected with the dominance of the Six Nations; outlines of Indiana in the rebellion exhibit the courage and patriotism of her citizens, while catalogue and minutes make known the standing of educational institutions and the progress of religion. A Russian ukase transports a colony to the frozen fields of Siberia or the distant valley of the Amoor; Scotch-Irish migration presents a voluntary exile for life, to a distant forest, of individuals. The contrast in motive, the results of systems, is a lesson for the patriot. We are to consider the truth of the claim that on no other equal area can be found a greater number of aged persons, when the aggregate population is considered.

The changeable character of American civilization, still in process of transmission, renders the past obscure save through record and illustration, and hence an effort to depict true to life and nature, the history of the early dwellers of the valleys of Indiana.

One hundred and fifteen years ago, the first white man located in all that territory now embraced in Indiana county. Prior to that date only the traders or the Moravian missionaries, or possibly the Army of Armstrong, had visited it or the captives adopted into the Indian families.

The outline of our work embraces sketches of the Aborigines, their character and government, the discovery and landing upon their coasts of Europeans; the consequent claim of ownership by France, England and Holland, and their contest for supremacy; English success, their allies during the Revolution; merciless barbarity in warfare, and stern retribution.

Also are presented the narrative of treaty, the settlements of State claims, the purchase and the commencement of settlements, the professional men, prominent pioneers, and types of border character claim attention. Initial measures touching roadways, surveys, and sales, are followed by evidence of a higher civilization in dwelling, mill and cultivation.

The menacing dominant spirit of England is seen to result in wars which only add increased confidence in the capability of the American pioneer. The close of the war of the revolution begins an active and permanent settlement. Despite privation, sickness and poverty of resources, the settlers are seen to accomplish their work; the county is organized; the seat of justice is located, and Indiana begins its career as a separate constituency of the State.

The Frankston road is succeeded by the pike, and it gives way to the canal in conception, wonderful in execution, which conveys away a wealth of produce, and bears back the multitude of emigration, and the articles of commerce needed by the settlers of our valleys. Railroads are constructed and their rapid movements prove too much for the cumbersome canal. Trade, commerce and manufacture, begun in trifles, end in the transfer of millions' valuation. A community is seen to erect and open public buildings, reformatory, benevolent, educational and religious. The patriotism and valor of the citizens are shown upon the battle-field, and the trades and professions are viewed in healthful activity. To realize these outlines is the object of the following chapters:

CHAPTER I.

EARLY DISCOVERY OF THE WESTERN CONTINENT—CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS—OTHER NOTED DISCOVERERS.

THE history of every American locality, in its various relations and associations, necessarily dates back to the discovery and occupation of the continent by the adventurous and enterprising European.

One of the great endowments which nature has bestowed upon mankind, is the universal tendency to seek, grasp and gradually develop such knowledge as contributes to the advancement, welfare and preservation of his own existence. When any great discovery or revelation is necessary for the well-being of man, the means and opportunities are naturally sought, and ultimately produced and made available for the accomplishment of the grand object. Sometimes the development may be sudden, or accidental, but more generally is promoted and advanced to final consummation by slow and progressive degrees.

The discovery of America may truly be viewed in this light. The time had arrived in which the existing circumstances made apparent the great advantages to the world such a revelation would afford. The age was one of great intellectual restlessness. What commercial intercourse that then existed among mankind, afforded many blessings to the different regions of the known world. The little oriental traffic that percolated through Mohammedan channels materially enriched those countries of Europe that then monopolized it. The Indies, with the fabled land of Cathay, the mines of Golconda, the golden kingdoms of Cipango and Mango, were themes in which imagination ran riot. Of all the channels of enterprise, maritime discovery was the most tempting, and it was making rapid strides of progress. The compass and astrolabe had been recently adapted to navigation. But the pursuit of exploration had not yet reached a basis of scientific probability, and much absurd fiction was mingled with ascertained fact.

The genius who grasped the great problem of maritime discovery, who, by his noble work, opened to civilization a new theatre of action, was a sea-farer of the city of Genoa; one of humble condition, but who, through years of scientific research and a life of patient toil, wrought out the theories which at last he so triumphantly verified. But the first visible development had occurred ages before, when a rude and unlettered sea-ranger had been driven, by adverse winds, across a sea which he had thought to be boundless, to a land whose existence had never entered his imagination.

Before proceeding to allude further to the great discoveries of Columbus and his successors, we will recount, as far as history affords data, the exploits of those adventurous and ignorant seamen of Northern Europe, who, nearly five hundred years previously, had involuntarily found a continent beyond the wild Atlantic, which was then known as the "Sea of Darkness," and regarded by mariners with extreme dread and superstition.

Those hardy people, called Northmen, or Norsemen, were Scandinavians, who then inhabited that portion of Europe embraced in Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland, and being a brave, adventurous race, accustomed to hardships and possessed with nautical skill, made themselves masters of the northern seas, and became a terror to other nations, more honestly engaged in maritime traffic, by whom they were regarded as pirates and freebooters. Their vessels were craft of a few tons burden, rudely equipped, clumsily rigged, always carrying on the prow the image of the head of a dragon or some imaginary monster, and generally commanded by the sons of Jarls, or Earls, who were themselves but retired sea-robbers. The historical chronicles of Iceland, called the Saga, which have been the subject of great research by modern historians, furnish much data and many interesting facts concerning those wild rovers of the sea. Those pirate captains were called Vikings and they were as severe and tyrannical, over their mariners and fighting men, as they were remorseless in the treatment of their victims. Lawless marauders, as were the Vikings and their followers, they were the best and most adventurous navigators of the age, as well as fearless and redoubtable warriors.

As early as the commencement of the ninth century, they had discovered and established colonies, or stations, on the Faroe Islands, whence they made frequent and bloody incursions into Scotland and England, and whence, about that time, a commander named Naddok, on one of his expeditions, penetrated so far north that he sighted the hitherto unknown island of Iceland. He seems to have been more disgusted than otherwise at its bleak barrenness, for he made no attempt at occupation; but after skirting its shores and mountains, called it Snowland, and returned home.

Subsequently, "a certain pyrate, whose name was Flokko," (this is the language of the historical chronicles of Iceland,) having heard Naddok's account, set sail for the new country in 865, and being resolved not only to see, but to colonize it, he took with him, from Norway, some families, implements and cattle for that purpose. This, of course, was not a piratical outfit.

The Vikings having no knowledge of the mariner's compass, Flokko took with him three ravens, which had previously received the rite of consecration from the priests of the pagan god Odin. These birds were depended on to give the navigator information in regard to the proximation of land. When a few days out he liberated the first raven, which at once returned in the direction whence the ship had come, and led him to infer that there was no land nearer than the port from which he had sailed. Farther on, the second bird was released, and, after hovering in a confused manner for some time, returned to the vessel. Two days later, upon being again set free, it rose to a great height, and then sped straight to the northwest. The Viking followed the feathered pilot, and soon reached the land of his search.

The colony proving a failure, Flokko and his people returned to Norway, perhaps as much disgusted with the country as Naddok had been, for they gave discouraging reports of it, and bestowed upon it the name of Iceland.

In the year 874, A. D., the Earl of Ingolf, who had, in some way, incurred the displeasure of his king—Harold the Fair-haired, of Norway—put his family and all his goods on board a ship and fled to Iceland, where he established a colony, which proved a permanent one, and which has now an existence of over one thousand years duration.

Not long after the settlement of Iceland, a sailor named Gunnbiorn, upon one occasion, had the misfortune to be blown off the coast, before an easterly gale, across the narrow sea which separates the island from Greenland, and thrown upon the coast of that inhospitable country. From thence he succeeded in returning to Iceland, bringing glowing accounts of his new discovery. But no colonists went there until 985, when Earl Eric, the Red, himself an outlaw in Norway, as Ingolf had been, fled his country and migrated to Greenland, from whence he spread such favorable reports, (after the custom of founders of new colonies,) that in the year 989, twenty-five vessels loaded with families, goods and cattle, sailed for the new land. Eleven of these ships were unfortunately lost on the passage, but fourteen arrived safely, and by these Greenland was extensively settled, and for many years emigration thence, from Norway and Denmark, was considerable.

In the year A. D. 1000, there was a bold young Danish Viking named Biarn, who, returning from a long voyage, learned that during his absence, his father named Hejulf, had emigrated to Greenland and joined the colony of Red Eric. He immediately set sail thither, without even discharging his cargo, and this hardy Viking ventured upon an unknown and boisterous ocean, in the midst of strong weather, in his rude, tiny vessel, without a compass. A heavy gale blowing from the northeast, amidst a thick fog, he missed his destination, and after being driven for many days before the wind, he came in sight of land which he at once knew was not Greenland, for it was a flat wooded country, with no lofty ice hills, such as he had been told to expect.

It is generally supposed, though not certainly known, that the land first seen by Biarn was the coast of Nova Scotia; but whatever it was, there can be no doubt that he and his crew were the first Europeans who ever saw land belonging to the North American Continent. Little did they comprehend the magnitude or the importance of their discovery.

The crew had great desire to go on shore, but the captain refused, and turning his course more towards the north, keeping well out at sea, sailed for two days and nights, after which he again approached the coast, but still found the same low, level shore, thickly timbered, and having no resemblance to the land he sought. Again he stood away on his course for two days, and then for the third time he made land. This he found to be "high and mountainous, with snowy mountains." By sailing close along the shore, he discovered it to be an island, not the haven he wished for, and once more he stood out, and ran before a brisk southwest wind for three days and nights, when at last he saw the rugged coast of Greenland, and soon had the joy of meeting his father whom he had so long sought.

When Biarn related to Earl Eric, and the other colonists, the story of his involuntary voyage to the unknown country, he was censured by them for having failed to explore or land upon it. But his chief desire was to reach the land where his father had made his home, and after that to make regular voyages between Greenland and Norway, in which traffic he hoped to realize much gain. Now that he had reached the place where his father had settled, called Herjulfness, he was too much overjoyed to indulge in any regret for his neglect to explore the lands he had seen, or to feel any wish to return to them for further observation.

To the sons of old Eric the Red, however, and particularly to Leif, the eldest of them, the desire to visit and explore the new regions which Biarn had seen, became overpowering, and with Eric's sanction he purchased, in the year 1001, Biarn's ship, and fitted her for the cruise. A crew of thirty-five men were employed, and Biarn himself consented to accompany the expedition. The old Earl himself had been prevailed upon by his son to command, but as he was riding to the port from whence the vessel was to depart, the horse on which he rode, stumbled and threw the old Viking to the ground. Profoundly superstitious, he saw an omen, which he declared was a warning to him to attempt no more voyages for the discovery of new countries. His son Lief then sailed in command of the vessel, which left her port most auspiciously, and stretched boldly away southwestwardly over the unknown sea.

It was the intention of Lief to retrace, as nearly as possible, the vessel's former track, thus to make, first the high rugged island which Biarn had last seen, and from thence to skirt the land until he should reach the other points seen by the bold young navigator. The voyage prospered, and in due time they saw before them the lofty hills, which Biarn at once recognized as those of the island whence he had taken his last departure. It was not intended to stop long here, but the new commander went on shore and made some explorations, which showed him that it was a most forbidding place, the entire space from the sea to the base of the mountain being covered with flat stones, which lay so thickly, that no soil or vegetation appeared among them. With a feeling of disappointment he named the discovery Helluland, from the word hella, which in the Norse dialect, signifies a flat stone. Then he re-embarked, and after a further exploration by water, among the deep bays, harbors, and coves, with which the island was greatly indented, he proceeded on his way to seek the lands which had first greeted the eyes of Biarn—that level wooded country which he had described, and which seemed like a paradise to the imaginations of those rough rovers, whose whole lives had been spent upon the stormy seas, and among the glaziers and wild crags of the barren north.

Keeping away to the southwest, he again made land; this time a fair looking region, covered with trees, to which he gave the name of Markland (or Woodland). There is little doubt that this was the island now known as Cape Breton.

Beyond this he made another landing, finding still the same distinguishing natural features. But his love of adventure and thirst for discovery was not yet quenched, and he again stood bravely on towards the southwest before a brisk northerly wind. After three days and nights, steadily on this course, again came the welcome cry of land, and while waiting for good weather a landing was made to examine the region. It has never been satisfactorily settled, precisely where this land was, but beyond doubt, was a part of the New England coast, and it is quite generally believed to have been the island of Martha's Vineyard, south of the State of Massachusetts.

Lief made a short stay here, then coasted along the shore and proceeded, as the Saga records, "up a river which came through a lake." Here he ordered the vessel to be securely moored, and preparations to be made for winter quarters. Autumn had already made its appearance, but rude houses were speedily built and soon all was made secure. Among the crew was a man named Tyrker—not one of their own countrymen, but a Southron, from the land of Vineyards—and he, in one of his rambles on shore, found grapes in profusion, growing wild in the woods. The discovery was hailed with great joy by these Northmen, who had never seen grapes in Greenland, Iceland or Norway. The ripe grapes were freely gathered and eaten by Lief's people, which they found delicious to the taste, and they cured great quantities of them by drying in the sun. Lief was highly elated with the mild climate and the delicious fruit, and in his ecstacy he named the country Vinland—the Home of the Vine. Soon, however, the bright days of Indian Summer were gone, and the snow storms and shrill winds of winter came; but the Viking's crew had seen the deeper snows of Norway, and had felt the sting of the icy gales which roar across the Arctic Circle, and they could laugh at the rigors of a New England winter. During this season they gathered great store of the different kinds of timber and wood, which grew so profusely in "Vinland," but were scarce and highly prized in their own country. On the opening of spring, they loaded their ship with these, and then filling their long boat, and all available space on the vessel with dried grapes, they left their winter home and sailed for Greenland. On the homeward voyage, a day or two before his arrival, Leif rescued and saved a shipwrecked crew, which he brought along to the port of his destination. One of these was a woman, named Gudrid, wife of the captain of the wrecked vessel, who soon died, and then his widow married Thorstein, a brother to Leif, and son of the Earl, Eric the Red.

The place where Leif and his followers had passed the winter, and which they had named Vinland, is generally supposed to have been situated on an arm of Narragansett Bay, below the mouth of the Taunton river, and near to the present town of Tiverton, in Rhode Island. And of this land, the explorers brought back to Greenland the most marvelous accounts. It was, they said, a region of almost unbroken summer (it is not strange that they thought it such, considering how cold and sterile was the land which they called home). And they told how delightful was its location, how great its fertility, and how abundant its rich fruits and rare woods. They indulged to the full, that propensity which is everywhere found in human nature, and which seems to be universal among those who visit remote regions; gross exaggeration of facts relating to the wonders they had seen in their mysterious journeyings. If they did not paint these in colors as glowing as those in which the Spanish explorers depicted the golden El Dorado and the Fountain of Youth, it was probably less on account of their stricter adherence to truth, than because they lacked the vivid and gorgeous imaginations of the Southern adventurers.

So the wonderful tale was told from mouth to mouth. The newly discovered land became known as "Vinland the Good," and its enterprising discoverer received the name of "Leif the Fortunate." Soon the story was carried to Norway and Denmark, from whence, eventually, it was heard of in a dim, vague way, in other parts of Europe.

Soon after Leif's return, he made a journey to Norway, and while there became converted from the Norse paganism to Christianity, and when he again returned to Greenland, he took with him some Christian priests, which act greatly incensed his father—for Red Eric was firm in his pagan faith, and continued unshaken in the worship of the Viking's gods, Odin and Thor, until his death, which occurred soon after.

Having now, by his father's death, become the head of the family, Leif unwillingly abandoned the project which he entertained of another voyage to Vinland the Good; and, indeed, he resolved henceforth to live quietly at home, as his father had done, and so no more was ever heard of the ocean adventures or exploits of Leif the Fortunate.

But his brother Thorvald (who had also embraced the Christian religion through the labors of the Norwegian priests) took up the enterprise, and soon departed, in his brother's ship, for the western land, where he arrived safely after a short and prosperous voyage.

Having without difficulty found the houses erected by his brother, he took possession, and there passed the winter.

The next year, he pushed his explorations far to the westward (probably through Long Island Sound), as far as "another lake through which a river flowed to the sea." The explorers were enchanted with the green grass, the groves of great trees, and abundance of vegetable growth which were all so strange to them. They made many landings upon the Islands, and each time their joy and admiration was increased.

Thorvald and his men also passed the following winter in the cabins built by Leif, and again, in the spring, made voyages and journeyings to the northward and eastward, passing Cape Cod, and, it is supposed, penetrating up Massachusetts Bay as far as the vicinity of Boston.

They had never yet seen any of the natives of the country, until, upon one of their expeditions, they suddenly came upon three boats, made of skins, and set up as tents. Under these were nine savages, asleep. The Viking and his men had the greatest contempt for these beings, and bestowed on them the name of Skrallings, which, in the Norse language, was a term of the bitterest opprobium. In fact, they considered them as no better than wild beasts; and so, when they found these, sleeping so quietly, and unconscious of danger, they followed the instincts of their Northern nature, and falling at once upon the unoffending natives, they slew all but one, who escaped with his life, but greatly terrified.

As they came to a pleasant point of land, covered with the dark evergreen of fir trees, Thorvald said to his followers: "Here, on this cape would I wish to raise my dwelling." He little thought how soon his desire would be realized.

The frightened native, who had escaped slaughter by the Northmen, had aroused great numbers of his people, who were then determined to avenge the cruel murder of their companions, and remained hidden until an opportunity should present itself. So, a little further on, at a time when the party of explorers were resting in fancied security, they were surprised by the sound of the terrible war-hoop, and an attack by a great number of the Skraellings. In dismay they fled to their vessel, and raised the wooden shield, behind which they were wont to fight their enemies. From thence they discharged their arrows, and soon the natives retired, but not until one of the white men had been wounded in the side, by a dart from the Skraellings. The wounded man was none other than Thorvald himself; and when he withdrew the dart from the wound, and knew that his hurt was mortal, he told his followers to bear him to the pleasant promontory, and bury him there among the fir trees. "It may be," said he, "that it was a true word which I spake, that I would dwell there for a time; there shall ye bury me, and set crosses at my feet and head, and call the place Krossaness,* forever, in all time to come." His men obeyed the dying command of the young sea-king, and left him there, with the Christian cross (the first ever erected on the American Continent) marking the spot where he slept in peace beneath the evergreens.

The party was now without a head, and, being entirely disheartened, returned to Greenland.

Then, Thorstein, another son of Eric, victualled a vessel and sailed in search of the body of his brother, resolved to bring it back to the family tomb. This was in the year 1005. His company numbered twenty-five men, and he made a most faithful search, but failed to find the point called Krossaness, and so, after a time, returned unsuccessful, and soon after died of scurvy, contracted on the voyage. Thorstein was the last of the sons of Eric who ever journeyed to America, but the blood of the Red Earl would not be still. His daughter, Freydis, sister of Leif, Thorvald and Thorstein, next planned an expedition to the land of vines. She was the wife of Thorvard, the captain of a trading ship; and he, with one Thorffinn Karlsefne, a rich merchant of Iceland, fitted out three vessels, with which they sailed in the spring of the year 1007.

Krossaness, in the Norse language, signifies Cross Cape, and this place is supposed to be identical with the point now called Point Alderton, in Boston harbor.

The wife of Karlsefne, was none other than Gudrid, the widow of Thorstein, she who had been rescued from shipwreck by Leif, on his return voyage from Vinland. Beside Freydis and Gudrid, many other women were taken; as well as cattle, implements, and abundant stores, for it was intended to found a permanent colony.

The company numbered more than one hundred persons, with Thorffinn in command, though the woman Fredis, was in reality the master spirit of the enterprise.

Their outward voyage was a prosperous one. On arriving at the lands near their destination, they found a huge carcass of a whale which had been stranded high and dry upon the sandy shore, and this was not only a great accession to their commissariat, but was esteemed as most delicious food by those hyperborean epicures.

It is not known whether or not they settled at the place where Leif built his houses; but they found abundance of game and fish, and great trees covered with grapes, while a little way off were "fields of self-sown wheat," (by which is probably meant the Indian maize). Here they expected to pass a pleasant and unmolested life; but soon they were visited by the "Skraellings," who were described as "black and ill-favored, with coarse hair on the head, with large eyes and broad cheeks." They seemed to be entirely ignorant of the uses or capabilities of edged implements, and it is told that one of them playfully handling one of the Norse battle axes, apparently ignorant that it was a more formidable weapon than those of their own rude fashioning, dealt to one of his companions a blow which was instantly fatal.

These natives, however, offered no violence to the whites, but, after satisfying their curiosity, went away for a time; soon, however, returning in great numbers, and wishing to barter valuable skins and furs for red cloth, of which the colonists seem to have had a large quantity, and with which the natives were greatly pleased. Cow's milk was also freely given them by the colonists, and this they appreciated highly.

But of a sudden, when all was progressing pleasantly, a bull, belonging to Thorffinn, burst out from among the trees, and with a roaring, which shook the very earth, rushed full upon the poor Skraellings, who, thereupon, fled to their boats in the greatest terror. For a long time they remained away, but after awhile they returned in a great body, and gave battle to the Northmen, who, being vastly outnumbered, fled to the woods, after many had been killed by those natives whom they so much despised; and it is related that they would all have been slaughtered, but that Freydis, seizing a weapon from the body of one of the slain men, rushed upon the savages with great fury, making loud and piercing cries and wild gestures by which the Saga says: they were as much terrified, as on a former occasion they had been, by the bellowing of the bull. They rushed pell-mell to their boats, fled in dismay and were seen no more.

This attack and its results greatly discouraged the colonists; who at once demanded of their leader, Karlsefne, that they should return home without delay. He, being a merchant of wealth and consideration in Iceland, acceded to their wishes, and returned to that country, where he passed the remainder of his days in ease and splendor.

But Freydis, being a very bold and ambitious woman, was by no means satisfied with the result. She wished to found a permanent colony, in which herself and her husband Thorvard should be chief personages.

Three years later, she had organized another expedition, fitted out in partnership with two brothers—Icelanders—named Helgi and Finnbagi. In 1011, they sailed for the place where Leif had laid his winter quarters ten years before. There they arrived without accident or delay, and found the booths, or houses, still standing, and in tolerable repair. But quietude did not reign there. In fact, peace could nowhere long exist, where lived the fierce and ambitious daughter of the Red Eric.

She quarrelled with the brothers, Helgi and Finnbagi, and plotted to take their lives; inducing Thorvard also to enter into the infernal conspiracy. Inspired by her malignant counsel, Thorvard persuaded his own followers to join the plot, and together they fell upon the brothers and their company, in their separate quarters, and slew them.

Of these unhappy victims, there were five women, whom the male conspirators would gladly have allowed to live, but the tiger spirit of Freydis would not have it so, and finding that her followers refused to do the murder, she killed all with her own hand, disregarding their piteous appeals for mercy.

Nothing but disaster and gloom followed this bloody deed, and the long and dreary winter which ensued was filled with remorse and dread for the guilty colonists. So, when the spring came again, it was unanimously agreed to abandon the settlement and return to Greenland.

When Leif the Fortunate was told of his sister's crimes, he debated whether he should visit a just punisnment upon her; but his brotherly feeling prevailed, and he allowed her to escape with her life, but disowned her, and predicted for her remaining years, only woe and execration, which, the chronicle says, was completely fulfilled.

This was the last Norse expedition to the American coast, of which there is any account, which seems at all authentic. One Saga has it that the place was visited several times afterward—among these visitors being a priest named Eric, who saw the land in 1321, but of this there is great doubt, and we are left to conclude that the entire period during which the Northmen sailed to, and transiently occupied, the place which they called Vinland, covered a space of less than fifteen years. Why such an enticing field should have been so suddenly abandoned by them, must always be a mystery. Certainly it could not have been through dread of the savage natives, for those ocean freebooters hardly knew fear; and it could not have been that they thought the country not worth the occupation, for the land seemed limitless in extent, and far richer and more productive than any which they had ever dwelt in. The most reasonable theory is, that the cause lay in the overwhelming troubles which we know came upon Greenland and Iceland soon after, resulting in the total extinguishment of the colonies in the former country, and in the almost complete abandonment of navigation in the northern waters.

A frightful disease, known as the Black Death, spread over the countries of Northern Europe, and from thence was communicated to Iceland and Greenland, resulting almost in depopulation. In the midst of this visitation, the Esquimaux opened unrelenting war on the Greenland settlements, and to add to these horrors, there occurred two successive winters of such extreme severity, that the adjacent seas were blocked with ice of incredible thickness, and forever cut off the settlers from their fellow-men. That was the last ever heard of the colony founded by Eric the Red. All knowledge of the country called Greenland faded away into a shadowy tradition; and it was not until ages afterward, that its re-discovery brought it again to the remembrance of men. It was but natural, therefore, that in the oblivion which settled down on the parent country (as Greenland might properly be called) the veil of forgetfulness should also fall on the half known land, which her sons had discovered.

The story is shadowy and incomplete, and might, by many, be regarded as mythical, but for the proofs which exist in clearly cut Runic inscriptions, engraved on the face of rocks near the town of Dighton, in southeastern Massachusetts, which remain there now, as they were found by the Puritan settlers who came there in 1620, and give authentic support to the Saga's romantic account of the Northmen's voyages to Vinland.

As we have said, the knowledge of the discoveries of Biarn and Leif, slowly spread from Norway to other portions of Europe.

In seventy-five years, it had reached Germay, being brought there by a historian called Adam, of Bremen, who had visited Sweden at that time.

By most of those who heard these rumors, they were regarded as mere inventions; but the mind of Columbus—nearly five hundred years later—accepted them as possibilities, to say the least; and it is known that he made a journey to Iceland for the purpose of determining how far they were true. We do not know to what extent he received them as substantiating the theories which he had deduced from his scientific investigations —whether they made him more firm in his determination to solve the great problem which was the idea of his life—but whether they did or not, can never bedim the surpassing lustre of his achievements, or cause us to give to any name but that of Christopher Columbus, the honor of First Discoverer of the land we live in. To render a proper appreciation of the magnitude of his great undertaking, and the innumerable obstacles and difficulties with which it would necessarily be associated at that unlettered age of the world, we cannot do better than to give the following

SKETCH OF COLUMBUS.

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy, about the year 1435, and died at Valladolid, Spain, May 20, 1506. He was the eldest son of Domenico Colombo, and after the custom of the time he Latinized his name into Columbus. In one of his letters, he says that his ancestors, like himself, followed the seas. By some means he received a good education, though it was a time when many of the nobles could not write. At this period the Genose were striving with the Venetians for the mastery of the sea, maritime service was the readiest avenue to wealth and power, and his predictions in that direction were encouraged by his father. In 1449, he entered the maritime service of his native country, in which twenty years were passed afloat, but no continuous record of his career was preserved. In the year 1470, he found his way to Lisbon, capital of Portugal, where he remained for fourteen years, supporting himself by drawing charts, and making occasional voyages. Not long after he became a resident of Lisbon, he married the daughter of Bartolommes di Palestrello, a distinguished Italian navigator in the service of the King. The lady's father died a short time after the marriage, Columbus received the deceased navigator's papers and journals, (a valuable legacy for one whose mind was already engrossed with the idea of maritime discovery) and resided for a time on his wife's small estate at Porto Santo, one of the Madeira islands. Here he was informed of a piece of curiously carved wood being washed ashore in a westerly gale; of a carved paddle being picked up 450 leagues west of Portugal; that canes of tropic growth had been washed on the Madeiras, huge pines on the Azores, and that even two drowned men, of appearance unlike Europeans, had been found on the shore of the island of Flores—all of which had evidently came from the west. These all tended to corroborate and establish in his mind any views he had previously entertained. In 1477, he made a voyage to Iceland, and the sea beyond, which he was astonished to find not frozen. But it is not known that his mind had conceived an idea beyond the discovery of a western passage to Asia, that he even expected to discover a new continent, or that he knew he had done so. His expectation was, in sailing west, to reach the Indies. Geographical knowledge was very limited and indefinite at that age of the world. The text book of the time, the Imago Mundi, advanced the Idea that the sea extends between Spain and the Indies—quoe principia Orientis et Occidentis sunt prope, cum mare parvum ea separet ex altera parte terroe. Columbus did not originate the supposition that land lay to the westward, but his matured views were, that the earth is spherical; that Asia extended to a parallel now indicated by about 180° E. from Greenwich, and that a navigable ocean only intervened between Europe and Asia which was not more than one-third of the earth's circumference. History records that he first applied for aid to make his great voyage of discovery, to his native republic of Genoa, and was refused. Thence to the King of Portugal, who remitted the subject to his special committee of maritime affairs, and likewise to his privy council. These, after many delays, reported against the project, and Columbus, wearied and disgusted, having spent nearly ten years in fruitless efforts, in 1484, went to Spain. Here he finally succeeded, after numerous attempts and failures, and long, perplexing delays in getting the attention of Ferdinand and Isabella, and again was his stupendous project referred to a council of learned men, mostly ecclesiastics, under the presidency of the Queen's Confessor. Seven years more of valuable time was uselessly spent; the conference, instead of making prompt investigation on scientific grounds, controverted the project on scriptural texts; and it was not until 1491, after many renewed applications, that the learned commission reported, and then pronounced it "vain and impossible, and not becoming great princes to engage in on such slender grounds as had been adduced." During this long period of hope deferred, Columbus must have been possessed with remarkable perseverance, and no one without the most patient temperament could have sustained himself with such undiminished confidence. The report of the committee in 1491 was a death-blow to his hopes, and he meditated laying his hopes before Charles VIII. of France. But some friends of Palos, a town where dwelt the most experienced and enterprising mariners of Spain, interceded at the opportune moment, proffered assistance, and aided in again getting the attention of the King and Queen. One of those who espoused his cause was an experienced navigator named Alonzo Pinzon, who not only offered to advance money, but to command a ship. At length, through the offer of the Queen herself to render the desired aid, at her own expense, an agreement was entered into with Ferdinand and Isabella. The document was signed April 17, 1492, and in three months thereafter the expedition, consisting of three ships, the Santa Maria, the Pinta and the Nina, with full crews and provisions for one year, was ready to sail. In officers and men there were, in all, 120 souls. On Friday morning, August 3, 1492, the little expedition set sail. It is unnecessary, in this connection to trace the incidents of the voyage. At 2 o'clock A. M. of Friday, October 12, 1492, after a prolonged and uncertain voyage of seventy-one days, the signal gun was fired announcing the discovery of land. Rodring Triana, a sailor of the Pinta, was the first who saw the new world. At sunrise the boats were rowed to the shore, and Columbus, bearing the royal standard of Castle, was the first to step upon the beach of one of the Islands of the West Indies. All knelt down, kissing the ground with tears and thanks to God. Returning to Spain on the 15th day of March, 1493, he was received with great honors, and subsequently made his second, third and fourth voyages. It was on the third voyage that he approached and landed at several places bordering on the Mexican gulf, but he never knew that he had discovered a great continent. His last expeditions were all deprived of complete success by the dissensions, quarrels, and mutinies that occurred among his adventurous followers; he suffered many indignities, and was the victim of malice, misrepresentation and ingratitude. A conspiracy against him on his third voyage resulted in his being sent back to Spain in chains. From his last voyage he returned sick, and being seventy years old, broken in body, he died without having received redress for his wrongs or recognition for the great service he had rendered mankind. He was deprived of the honor of associating his name with that of the new found world, and not until after his death was his valuable life appreciated.

OTHER EARLY DISCOVERIES.

On the 5th day of March, 1496, John Cabot (Giovanni Cabota, a Venetian), and his three sons obtained a patent from Henry VII., king of England, authorizing them to search for islands, provinces, or regions in the eastern, western, or northern seas. Under this charter, in May, 1497, he embarked in a single vessel, accompanied by his son Sebastian, sailed west, as he said, 700 leagues, and on June 24 following, came upon land which he reported to have been a part of a continent. He sailed along the coast for about 300 leagues, landed at several places, and planted the banners of England and Venice. He returned to Bristol in August of the same year, and his discoveries are said to have attracted the admiration of the city and the favor of the English king. But for reasons that can only be conjectured, he did not make another voyage, and the place and time of his death are unknown. He was more of a practical navigator than a scholar, and it is evident that he did not have a proper conception of the nature and importance of his discoveries.

Sebastian Cabot, who had been associated with his father's expedition of the year previous, led forth, in May, 1498, two ships, and a company of English volunteers, on a voyage in search of a short western passage to China and Japan. He sailed so far to the north, that in the early part of July, the light of day was almost continuous. Finding the sea full of icebergs, he turned more to the south, and arrived at land which is generally supposed to have been Newfoundland. Pursuing his search, he reached the main land of North America, landed in many places, and saw natives clad in skins of beasts. He coasted along the shore as far south as Florida; but his object had been to find a passage to the rich continent of Asia, and though he had discovered an immense territory under a temperate sky, his voyage was considered a failure. A navigator named Vasco da Gama had reached India by the way of the Cape of Good Hope, and filled the world with his fame. From this cause, the discoveries of the Cabots were considered of little value. Though spoken of in English annals as "Sebastian Cabote, the great seaman," he does not seem to have possessed sufficient learning and powers of description to impress upon the leading minds of the old world, that the new one, which he had discovered, was of such vast importance to the ultimate welfare of mankind.

Amerigo Vespucci (Americus Vespucious), an Italian navigator, obtained the glory of associating his name with that of the new found world. He came of a noble but not wealthy family, and received a finished education. Later in life he was engaged in commerce at Seville. He was in that city when Columbus returned from his first voyage, and became enamored with a career of nautical adventure by occasionally meeting with the latter and listening to his accounts of his new discoveries. He subsequently entered the service of the king of Portugal, and sailed on his first voyage in the year 1499. The expedition reached the coast of Brazil and other points of the South American continent, and he subsequently made other successful voyages of discovery. Being a man of literary attainments, he was enabled to write descriptions of his discoveries in such a manner as to attract special attention from the learned men of Europe, and in this particular possessed great advantage over his predecessors and cotemporaries. One of his narratives was published at Strasbourg in 1505, under the title of Americus Vesputius de Orbe Antarctico per Regem Portugalliæ pridem inventa. His vivid and glowing accounts were highly interesting, and being the earliest published description of the new world, was called by his name, Amerigo, or America.

Pinzon, a companion of Columbus on his first voyage, discovered the mouth of the Amazon, in the year 1500.

In 1513, Juan Ponce de Leon, a Spanish cavalier, fitted out a little squadron at his own cost, put to sea from Porto Rico, and directed his course to the unexplored west. On the 27th of March, Easter Sunday, called in Spanish, Pasqua Florida, the Feast of Flowers, he came in sight of a region which he named Florida.

The Spaniards boldly pushed their explorations around the entire coast of the Mexican Gulf and the South American Continent, and 1521 sent out the memorable expedition which resulted in the conquest of Mexico.

In 1524, the French nation sent out an expedition under the command of Giovanni Verazzano, a Florentine. After a stormy voyage of fifty days, he reached the main land of North America, in latitude 34°. He traced the coast southward for fifty leagues, and then, returning, sailed northward as far as Nova Scotia. He entered and explored the harbors now known as New York and Newport, gathered knowledge concerning the products and inhabitants of the region, and claimed, for the French King, the whole country along the shores of which he had ranged, under the name of New France. On his return to Europe he prepared a written account of his voyages, which contains the earliest description extant of the eastern border of what is now the United States.

Ten years later, in 1534, the French dispatched Jacques Cartier to explore and colonize the new world, and he made the coast of Newfoundland in twenty days. He sailed up the St. Lawrence, made extensive discoveries, and made persistent attempts at colonization; but sickness, scarcity, and severe weather long defeated all efforts to plant a permanent French colony in America.

In 1539, Hernanda de Soto set sail with his expedition of 600 men for exploration and conquest. He traversed the vast wilderness from the Florida coast to the Mississippi river, and after two years of hardships and misfortune, met his death and was consigned to the bosom of the mighty stream he had discovered.

In 1562 and 1564, the Huguenots, French Protestants, planted their feeble colonies in Florida.

In 1564, the Spaniard, Pedro Menendez, made his expedition to Florida, destroyed the Huguenot colony, and laid the foundation of St. Augustine, the oldest town in the United States.

In 1578, Sir Humphrey Gilbert obtained a patent from Elizabeth, Queen of England, to plant a colony in North America. He led his expedition to Newfoundland, but failed to establish a colony, and on his return voyage he and his crew were lost at sea.

About the year 1580, Sir Francis Drake accomplished his celebrated voyage around the globe. This was an event highly auspicious to mercantile enterprise, and stimulated the English in their plans and attempts at colonization.

In 1584, the famous Sir Walter Raleigh, a step-brother of Gilbert, received an ample patent from Elizabeth, and renewed the effort to establish an English colony in America. He sent out an expedition which sailed with two vessels, made land near Cape Fear, coasted northward along the Carolina shore, and visited the sounds of Pamlico and Albemarle, and the neighboring islands of Wococon and Roanoke. The voyagers were delighted with their discoveries, gave glowing descriptions of them on their return to England, and the Queen named the region Virginia. Raleigh, possessing great wealth and influence, then made vigorous efforts to colonize, and in 1585, a squadron of seven ships, commanded by Sir Richard Grenville, conveyed his first company of emigrants to Virginia. A colony of 110 men was landed on Roanoke Island; but, discouraged and homesick, they all returned to England the next year. A second band of 15 men left on the island, was totally destroyed by the Indians. A third company of 89 persons, men, women and children, organized to found "the city of Raleigh," came to Virginia in 1587; but in 1590, when an expedition landed at their place of settlement with supplies, not a single person could be found, and nothing could be learned of the fate of the colony. In 1602, an expedition sent out by Releigh's assignees, visited the American coast, named Cape Cod and the Elizabeth Islands; and the next year a similar one, sailing in the employ of some merchants of Bristol, entered Penobscot Bay and coasted as far southward as Martha's Vineyard.

CHAPTER II.

THE ORIGINAL PEOPLE—INDIAN NATIONS.

WHEN Columbus first discovered land, on his great experimental voyage westward, he believed that it belonged to India. He therefore called the inhabitans "Indians," and the same name was given to those who were subsequently found upon the continent. When the first Europeans set foot upon the soil of North America, the original people were found throughout all that vast region south of Labrador and between the Atlantic seaboard and the Mississippi river. Though they were divided and sub-divided into many tribes, and speaking a variety of dialects, the traditions of all the nations occupying that portion of the country as far south as the Roanoke and Ohio rivers, traced their origin back to two great primitive branches, known as the Linni Lenape and Mengwe. These two great groups of nations were called by the Europeans, the Delawares and the Iroquois. The Lenni Lenape, or Lenape, received the name of Delawares from the English, and the Mengwe were given the application of Iroquois by the French. Among their derivative nations, the Lenape were also known as the Wapanachki, and this name was variously corrupted by Europeans into Openaki, Openagi, Abenaquis, Apenakis, and Abenakis. The Mengwe were also called Mingoes; this last corruption originating among ignorant white men, was from them adopted by the Delawares, who applied it as a reproach to their Mengwe neighbors, between whom and themselves ill feeling, and sometimes great animosity existed.

By some writers, and particularly Mr. Bancroft, nearly all the nations included under the heads of Mengwe and Lenape, or Iroquois and Delawares, are called the Algonquin nations.

When the whites first became acquainted with these aborigines, they possessed many curious and interesting legends and traditions. In reference to their origin, there was a tradition among the Lenape, that many centuries previous their ancestors dwelt in the wilds of the extreme western part of the continent. That after a long dwelling there, they began moving in the direction of the rising sun, and, in the course of time, arrived on the banks of a great river, to which they gave the name of Namoesi Sipu, or River of Fish (Mississippi). Here they first met the Mengwe, who had also migrated from a country far to the north and west, and had reached the Mississippi at a point farther north. After stopping awhile the spies of the Lenape discovered that the country on the east of the great river was inhabited by a powerful people called "Tallagawe" or "Allegewi," from whom, some writers allege, may have sprung the names of the Allegheny river and mountains. The pre-historic race commonly known as the "Mound Builders," which at one time occupied the greater portion of the Mississippi Valley, are generally supposed to be the people referred to in this tradition. In the transmitted story that mysterious people were represented as living in large cities, situated along the principal streams and surrounded by fortifications. Desiring to proceed farther eastward, the Lenape asked permission of the Allegewi to cross the river and settle in their vicinity. This request was not granted, but the Lenape were eventually told they could cross the river and proceed eastward to a country beyond the Allegewi, when they accepted the proposition and commenced crossing. As soon as the Allegewi saw the great numbers of the Lenape, they became alarmed, and fell upon those who had crossed over, destroying them and warning the others not to attempt a further passage. The Lenape then sought the assistance of the Mengwe, and an alliance was entered into, the two nations agreeing to conquer and divide the country. A long and bloody war followed, lasting through many years, and in which there was great slaughter on both sides. The Allegewi fought valiantly and obstinately for their country, but at length the united nations prevailed—the Allegewi were conquered—and the last remnant of them were driven far to the southward. The conquerors took possession of the lands and divided it between them—the Mengwe taking the country around the great lakes, and the Lenape choosing the region lying to the south and along the Ohio river and its tributaries. They lived here many ages, as peaceful neighbors, but gradually moved along in an eastward direction. The hunters of the Lenape finally crossed the mountains and discovered the waters of the Susquehanna and the Delaware, and the great bays into which they flowed. They explored the country beyond the Delaware (now New Jersey)—called it the Scheyichbi country, and upon reaching the banks of the beautiful Hudson, they named it Mohicannittuck. After extensively exploring all this vast region, and several month's absence, they returned to their country and communicated everything they had seen; describing the new discovery as a land abounding in game, fish, fowl, and fruits, and destitute of inhabitants. Soon they proceeded to occupy this country, and subsequently established themselves upon the four great rivers of the Atlantic slope—the Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna and Potomac. They made the Delaware the center of their possessions, and named it Whittuck (river of the Lenape). They were finally divided into three great bodies, the larger portion settling along the Atlantic and the eastern slopes of the Allegheny mountains, another along the eastern bank of the Mississippi, and a third continued to dwell on the west side of that river. The Atlantic branch became subdivided into three tribes: the Turtle or Unamis; the Turkey or Unalachtgo, and the Wolfe or Minsi. The two former inhabited the coast from the Hudson to the Potomac, and the latter, called by the English Muncey or Muncie, dwelt in the interior more adjacent to the Mengwe. They extended from Minisnk, on the Delaware, where they had their council-seat, to the Hudson on the east, and occupied the valleys of the Delaware and Susquehanna, and were scattered as far west as the valley of the Allegheny.

The Mengwe, like their neighbors, also gradually moved eastward, occupying the shores of the great lakes, and establishing themselves over all that country from Lake Erie to the Hudson, and from the headwaters of the Allegheny, Susquehanna, and Delaware rivers, northward to Lake Ontario, and even across the St. Lawrence; thus really embracing nearly all of the State of New York, a portion of Canada, and northwestern Pennsylvania. This they figuratively styled their "long council house," within which, the place of kindling the grand council fire, was the Onondaga Valley, where delegates from all the tribes met in solemn deliberation. They existed as a confederation of tribes, and were usually known in English annals as the Five Nations. This alliance was composed of the *Mohawks, Senecas†, Cayugas‡, Onondagas§, and Oneidas‖. They called themselves the Ho-de-no-saw-ne, or People of the Long House; implying that they were one family, sheltered by the same roof. In the course of time a bitter enmity had arisen between the Mengwe and the Lenape, and this confederation was formed by mutual protection and defense against their hostile neighbors. They dated the formation of this league only a few years previous to the time when the white man first landed upon their shores. In 1712, the Tuscaroras, having been driven by the white settlers from their hunting grounds in the Carolinas, were received into the Iroquois confederacy, which from that time became what was known as the Six Nations, and are reckoned the most powerful and celebrated of all the Indian nations of North America. Each nation was sub-divided into eight tribes, which bore the names of Wolf, Bear, Beaver, Turtle, Deer, Snipe, Heron and Hawk; and at the formation of the league these names were retained and all their laws and customs made with reference to this division into tribes. They appear to have lived up to the requirements of the confederation, in good faith and mutual accord. The Mohawks occupied the country nearest the Hudson river, and were considered as holding the post of honor, the guarding of the eastern entrance to the "long house." The highest chief of that nation was also the leading war chief of the confederacy. The Senecas, who were the most numerous, and possessed of the highest degree of warlike spirit and military energy, defended the western portion of the "house," while the Cayugas were guardians over the frontier of the Delaware and Susquehanna valleys. The grand council fire was under the watch of the Onondagas, to whom also belonged the office of Chief Sachem (or highest chief magistrate of the league.) The land of the Oneidas lay farther towards the north on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence. At the grand council-house at Onondago, all business relating to the confederation was transacted, and their deliberations were marked with good judgment and ability. The Iroquois council has been compared to the Wittenagamott of the Saxons, and Governor De Witt Clinton, of New York, spoke of them as the "Romans of America."

Different causes are assigned for the final conflict and sanguinary war which ensued between the Iroquois and the Delawares. Jealousy and animosity had long existed, frequent contests had occurred and a constant strife was kept alive between the two great nations. When the disturbing elements finally culminated in that long and bloody struggle, the superior advantages the Iroquois, or Five Nations, possessed over their opposing neighbors is greatly to be attributed to the deliberations of the grand council at the "Long House." The result was the final subjugation of the Delawares, and hence when the Europeans began the settlement of Pennsylvania, this nation was found occupying a subordinate position to that of their abler and more powerful rivals.

By the great Iroquois confederacy, the Eries, living south of the lake, which perpetuates their name, were exterminated, the Hurons were at one time driven to the head-waters of the Mississippi, and the tribes of Hudson's Bay, of the distant Missouri, and the far south, were not removed from their attacks.

The Senecas, as we have observed, were the most numerous, warlike and powerful of the Iroquois nations. They dwelt at the western door, and were expected to defend the territory of the confederacy against the entrance of enemies from the direction of the setting sun. The region they occupied extended over Western New York and Northwestern Pennsylvania. They were spread over the head-waters of the Allegheny, the first white man found them here in considerable numbers among the hills and valleys of Venango county, and their great chiefs, Cornplanter, and Guyasutha are prominently connected with the traditions and early annals of this historic ground. Some villages of the Delawares were found along the river and its tributaries. They were of the Wolf tribe, called by the English, Munceys, and by the French, *Loups. They had a village at Venango (now Franklin) and one on French creek, at what is now known as the Heydrick farm, called by them Custologa's Town, after their famous chief by that name, and where a number of celebrated chiefs are buried. Some tribes of Shawanese, and a remnant of the Wyandotts, also called Hurons, were also found along the Allegheny, and in portions of Northwestern Pennsylvania. Some of these tribes called the Delawares their grandfathers.

CHAPTER III.

INDIAN CHARACTER AND PECULIARITIES—NORMAL ABORIGINES CONTRASTED WITH THE PRESENT HORDES ON THE FRONTIERS.

THE character of the aborigines of the northern portion of America, will be regarded, in future times, as one of the most interesting topics connected with its history. Their appearance, customs and manners were so far distinct from those of other nations known to the civilized world, and their individual character had so little in common with the more restrained and law-abiding Europeans, that they were, in the first stages of their acquaintance with the whites, classed by the latter among those wild and lawless races known as the savages, who, it was supposed, had few, if any, of the affections and higher emotions of humanity, but rather were bound by some mysterious link to the lower and baser passions of the animal creation. This estimate of their character, although very far from being a correct one, was yet not totally wrong, for while later experience shows that, under the advantages of education and culture, the American Indian is capable of high attainments, both mental and moral, yet truth forces the admission that many of the baser traits seemed so deeply rooted in their nature as to be ineradicable; among these were the cruelty and treachery which (notwithstanding all that Heckewelder and other missionaries have written to the contrary), were certainly among their general characteristics, as also, still more notably, was their disposition to drunkenness, which seemed to have been universal.

The red men themselves charged that the vice of intoxication among them was not only originated, but wilfully fostered by the Europeans, in order that they might be able more easily to over-reach them in trade; and it will be found extremely hard to disprove the allegation. William Penn, in a letter to the "Free Society of Traders," when writing of this weakness of the Pennsylvania Indians, says: "Since the Europeans came into these parts, they (the Indians) are grown great lovers of strong liquors—rum especially—and for it exchange the richest of their skins and furs. If they are heated with liquors they are restless till they have enough to sleep; that is their

Mohawks*—"the fire-striking people"—they being the first to procure fire-arms from the Dutch, the term arising from their flint-locks striking sparks of fire.

†Senecas—"Mountaineers"—because they inhabited the hilly or mountainous parts of the Iroquois domain.

‡Cayugas——from the lake Queugue, on the shores of which they lived.

§Onondagas—from Onondago, signifying "the hill-top," their principal town being set on a hill.

‖Oneidas—"the pipe-makers"—a name given them because they were most ingenious in making stone tobacco pipes.

*Loup is the French word for Wolf.

cry, 'some more, and I will go to sleep,' but when drunk, one of the most wretched spectacles in the world."

But the current opinion of Indian character is too apt to be formed from the miserable hordes which at present infest the western frontiers, and hang on the skirts of settlements. These are too commonly composed of degenerate beings, corrupted and enfeebled by the vices of society, without being benefited by its civilization. The proud independence which formed the main pillar of native virtue has been shaken down, and the whole moral fabric lies in ruins. Their spirits are humiliated and debased by a sense of inferiority, and their native courage cowed and daunted by the superior knowledge and power of their enlightened neighbors. Society has advanced upon them like one of those withering airs that will sometimes breed desolation over a whole region of fertility. It has enervated their strength, multiplied their diseases, and superinduced upon their original barbarity the low vices of artificial life. It has given them a thousand superfluous wants, while it has diminished the means of their existence. It has driven before it the animals of the chase, who fly from the sound of the axe, and the smoke of the settlement, and seek refuge in more remote forests and untrodden wilds. Thus the Indians of our frontiers are often found to be mere wrecks and remnants of once powerful tribes, who have lingered in the vicinity of settlements, and sunk into a precarious and vagabond existence. Repining, hopeless poverty, a canker of the mind hitherto unknown to them, corrodes their spirits, and blights every free and noble quality of their natures. They loiter like vagabonds about the settlements, among spacious dwellings replete with elaborate comforts, which only render them sensible of the comparative wretchedness of their own condition. Luxury spreads its ample board before their eyes; but Indian hospitality is not there, and they are excluded from the festival. Plenty revels over the fields that were once their hunting grounds; but they are starving in the midst of its abundance. The whole wilderness has blossomed into a garden; but they feel as reptiles that infest it.

How different was their state while undisputed lords of the soil! Then their wants were few, and the means of gratification within their reach. They saw every one around them sharing the same lot, enduring the same hardships, feeding on the same aliments, and arrayed in the same rude garments. No roof then rose that was not open to the homeless stranger; no smoke curled among the trees, but he was welcome to sit down by its fire and join the hunter in his repast.

Hospitality was one of the Indian's distinguishing virtues, and there was no such thing among them as individual starvation or want. As long as there was a cup of soup, it was divided. If a friend or stranger called, he was welcome to all their wigwams could furnish. To offer him food was not a custom merely—it was a breach of politeness for him to refuse to eat, however full he might be.

The nature of the Indian was in all respects like the nature of people of any other nation, and if placed in the same circumstances, he exhibited the same passions and vices. But in his forest home there was not the same temptation to great crimes, nor what are usually termed the lesser ones, among civilized nations, of slander, scandal and gossip. They knew nothing of the desire of gain, and therefore were not made selfish by the love of hoarding, and there was no temptation to steal where they had all things in common.

It is not just to compare the Indian of the fifteenth century with the European of that age. Compare him with the barbarian of Britain, of Russia, of Lapland, Kamtschatka and Tartary, representing him as truly as these nations have been pictured, and he will not suffer by the comparison. How long were the Saxon and Celt in becoming a civilized and christian people?

In discussing Indian character, writers have been too prone to indulge in prejudice and exaggeration, instead of the candid temper of true philosophy. They have not sufficiently considered the peculiar circumstances in which the Indians have been placed, and the peculiar relations under which they have been educated. No being acts more rigidly from rule than the Indian. His whole conduct is regulated according to some general maxims early implanted in his mind. The moral laws which governed him in his original state were few, but he conformed to them all. The white man abounds in laws of religion, morals and manners, but how many does he violate?

Regarding their liberality and improvidence, the following is quoted from the language of William Penn, employed in a letter addressed by him to the "Free Society of Traders:"

"They excel in liberality. Nothing is too good for their friends. Give them a fine gun, coat, or other thing, it may pass twenty hands before it sticks. Light of heart, strong affections, but soon spent. The most merry creatures that live, feast and dance perpetually. They never have much, nor want much. Wealth circulateth like the blood, all parts partake, and though none shall want what another hath, yet exact observers of property. They care for little because they want but little, and the reason is, a little contents them. In this they are sufficiently revenged on us; if they are ignorant of our pleasure they are also free from our pains. They are not disquieted with bills of lading and exchange, nor perplexed with chancery suits and exchequer reckonings. We sweat and toil to live, their pleasure feeds them—I mean their hunting, fishing and fowling, and this table is spread everywhere. They eat twice a day, morning and evening, their seats and table are the ground."

The Indians were certainly a most open-handed people. Among them there was no short-coming—unless it might be cowardice—which they considered so reprehensible as a neglect of the requirements of hospitality. The observance of these was, with them, not a virtue but a duty. None among them ever thought that such action was, in any degree, worthy of praise, but a failure to practice it would brand the delinquent with indelible disgrace.

They would rather prefer themselves to suffer the pangs of hunger than to be remiss in their duty towards the unfortunate, the needy, or to those who were far away from home and people.

With them it might be said in truth that—

* * * "A stranger is a holy name.
Guidance and rest, and food, and fire,
In vain, he never must require."

But in regard to rights of property, they adopted, in a great degree, the doctrines of the Commune.

It was their belief that the Great Spirit made the earth and ocean, the mountains, valleys, forests, lakes and rivers, and all that in them is, for the common good of mankind; and that whatever lived in the woods and hills, or swam in the rivers and sea, or grew out of the bosom of their mother Earth, was placed there for all men, and that the idea of exclusive ownership in this common property was preposterous and wholly subversive of the benevolent intention of the Creator.

CHAPTER IV.

INDIAN WARFARE, HUNTING AND ORATORY—CORNPLANTER AND RED JACKET.

IT is said by some writers that the American Indians were exterminating each other by aggressive and devastating wars, before the white people came among them. But wars are not proofs of barbarity. The bravest warrior was he whom they most honored; but this has been ever true of Christian nations; and those who call themselves Christians have not ceased yet to look upon him who could plan and execute most successfully the wholesale slaughter of human beings, as the most deserving his country's laurels.

It is also said that the Indian was cruel to the captive, and inflicted unspeakable tortures upon his enemy taken in battle. But, from what we know of them, it is not to be inferred that Indian chiefs were ever guilty of filling dungeons with innocent victims or slaughtering hundreds and thousands of their own people, whose only sin was a quiet dissent from some religious dogma. Towards their foes they were often relentless, and they had good reason to look upon white men as their enemies.

Again, it is said, the Indian mode of warfare is, without exception, the most inhuman and revolting. But those who die even from the barbed and poisoned arrow, do not suffer greater pangs or linger in more unendurable torments, than those who are mangled with powder and balls. The tomahawk makes quick work of the dying, but the scene is scarcely as revolting as the civilized battle field, where thousands of wounded and mangled victims lie in heaps over the ground, filling the air with groans for days, until the slower process of death ends their suffering. As for scalping, it is not exclusively an Indian invention. Prescott says, "it claims high authority, or, at least, antiquity. The father of history, Herodotus, gives an account of it among the Scythians, showing that they performed the operation, and wore the scalps of their enemies taken in battle, as trophies, in the same manner as on North American Indians. Traces of the same custom are also found in the laws of the Visigoths, among the Franks, and even the Anglo-Saxons."

The science of warfare was the highest accomplishment of the Indian, but as is the case with all other people, a spirit of aggression was only indulged by the stronger nations, to whom alone it was of any advantage. Like hunted deer, the poorer and less powerful tribes were often forced to leave their villages as plunder to some marauding band on a foray from a distant locality.

The preparation for the war-path was commonly opened by feasting and dancing, in which the whole tribe took part, and when this was concluded, the war party quickly and silently left the village and entered the forest, with the chief at their head, and the warriors followed singly in "Indian file."

The war-dance, so often alluded to in Indian story, is said to be beyond description the most exciting and inspiring of all theatrical scenes. It is the acting of war. The song, which kindles enthusiasm, is first sung, with the same motive and the same effect as the martial music awakes its echoes on Christian plains, and then follows all the pomp and circumstance of war; arrows fly thick and fast, the tomahawk is wielded, the dead and dying strew the battle field, and by various devices of paint and false scalps, hundreds are bleeding, then follows the shout of victory and the dirge for the slain. Those who have witnessed it represent it as impossible for one who is not an actor to realize that it can be anything less than a real battle. Those who pass through the initiatory process of being trained for warriors at a military school, can imagine and best appreciate the influence of the war-dance upon those to whom war is the only field of glory.

The Senecas, of Pennsylvania, mixed their war paint with petroleum, which they obtained from the oil springs of Venango county. It is said to have given them "a hideous glistening appearance," adding permanency to the paint, and rendering it impervious to water.

Among the Iroquois, revenge for a great injury was usually the cause of the beginnings of strife, and their subjugation for the sake of peace, like the Romans of old, was the principle upon which they waged war. There was something in their proud and dignified bearing, in their national policy, and their warlike exploits, like the people who extend their arms into every civilized and uncivilized land.

To be taken captive by the Indians, was, among the early colonists, considered the most terrible of calamities; and it was indeed a fearful thing to become the victim of their revenge. But those who were enduring the actual sufferings of captives, or suffering still more from uncertain evils, thought little of the provocation given by our own people. The innocent often suffered for the guilty, and the unprincipled marauders of the frontier committed depredations and acts of atrocity which aroused the spirit of revenge, and drove the Indian to retaliation. Thinking pale-faces were all alike, he did not wait until the real offender fell into his hands. We do not desire to paint him so that he will become attractive to civilized people, and there is no need of painting him more hideously than he paints himself.

As regards their possession of qualities, essential to success in war, or the chase, very false ideas have been and still are entertained. It is customary to think and speak of the Indian as immeasurably superior to all other human beings in endurance, skill in the use of weapons, and in woodcraft, and also as possessing bravery and cunning, which were almost supernatural; whereas, it is the fact that the white man has invariably shown his superiority over the savage, whenever the two have been brought together in the same arena.

The Indian was brave so long as he had a shelter, from which he might attack his foe, but that courage offered a very marked diminution, when he was compelled to meet his enemies, as white men do, on the open field, and without cover, and it is an undisputable fact that in all the fights between French and English in America, where Indian allies were engaged on one side or the other (and often on both) these red warriors, who were so ready and apt, in using steel in the form of tomahawk, or scalping-knife, always blenched before the gleam of the bayonet.

There has never been a single instance where any incentive of pride—of which the Indian was supposed to possess so much, or of savage vindictiveness, which we know was their most marked characteristic, was found sufficient to hold them steadfast in the face of an advancing line of glistening steel.

And so it has always been in the science (if it may be so called) of woodcraft. Keen and cunning as they were in following their enemy's trail by the upturning of a leaf, or the bending of a twig or blade of grass, guiding their way in starless night, through the depths of trackless forests, by the sense of touch upon the trunks of trees; detecting the proximity of a foe by a knowledge apparently as keen as a bloodhound's scent, and falling upon that foe with steps as noiseless as the passage of disembodied spirits; in all these the white man, whenever he made these things his study, rivaled and surpassed the savage. All know the story of that subtlest of all Indian haters the Pennsylvanian, Capt. Samuel Brady, and also that of Lewis Wetzel, the scout of the Ohio; how they swore to be avenged for the destruction of their houses and the slaying of their familes by savages, and how, single-handed and alone, for months and years they shadowed the red murderers through the dim woods and along the darkly gliding streams, until their grudge had been glutted a hundred fold; though during that time, whole tribes had bent all their energies and all their cunning to surprise and capture them; but in vain, for the white man was their superior. His eye was keener, his tread lighter, his senses more acute, his rifle more unerring.

Indian legend represents the manner in which the warrior met his death at the stake. No refinement or duration of torture could extort from him a groan. The faith of the Christian martyr supports him in the hour of trial; but the Indian excels him in defying his tormentors, with only his dauntless spirit to sustain him; he will die, too, rather than surrender, though he knows he will fall into the hands of those who, looking upon him as a fallen foe, will be merciful.

In the quality of fortitude alone, the Indian seems to have been the superior of the white man. In enduring pain with stoical indifference, he stood pre-eminent. To die, without betraying weakness or fear, was one of the highest virtues in his eye, and was early inculcated in the minds of the children. Many a savage, whom no sentiment of courage, or pride, or shame, could have induced to face the terror of the bayonet on an open field, has chanted his death song with unquivering voice, while enduring tortures which would have wrung shrieks of agony from the sternest grenadier who preferred death to surrender, upon the field of Waterloo.

In their councils they observed the utmost gravity and decorum. While the Indian orator addressed his audience, there was no interruption on their part, excepting from time to time, a guttural sound, something like "hoogh," expressing satisfaction at points in the speech, and, although antagonistic views might be held on subjects under discussion, yet the most respectful attention was given to the words of the speaker during his oration, and neither his partisans nor opponents showed the least disposition toward that levity which, it is to be regretted, forms a very marked feature of the deliberative assemblies of the white race, even in our own houses of Congress at Washington.

At the deliberation of the "Long House" of the Iroquois league, the oratory and eloquence were of a high order for an untutored and savage people, who had no written language, and no written literature.

Their speakers' gestures were animated, and their speeches delivered in a loud voice. The effect upon an observer of an erect figure, naked arm, and rude, though not ungraceful attire of the orator, is described as very impressive.

By the authority of William Penn himself, we are told that "they speak little, but fervently and with eloquence. I have never seen more natural sagacity, considering them without the help (I was going to say the spoil) of tradition." * * * *

The matter of their discourse is found, in all the speeches which have been transmitted to us, to have been well adapted to the subject, their style varied, appropriate to the effect intended, and we often find passages which embody the soul of eloquence.

In the impassioned utterances of Cornplanter, recorded in the pages of history, we find an impressive and effective style that excites our liveliest admiration, and in the annals of eloquence more fervid oratory is rarely found. The Senecas produced more orators than any other tribe. Cornplanter, Red Jacket and Farmer's Brother were all Senecas, and were all distinguished for their eloquence. It is true, that Red Jacket attained a higher reputation for eloquence than was ever enjoyed by Cornplanter. If one may judge, however, from the specimens of their eloquence that have come down to us, while we have much to admire in both, we rather conclude that Red Jacket's superiority must have been more in manner than in matter. The address delivered to General Washington, in Philadelphia, 1790, though in the names of Great-tree, Half-town, and Cornplanter, was undoubtedly dictated by the latter, and to him is due the credit. It will bear comparison with any Indian speech on record. While not so declamatory as the ordinary Indian style, it is closely logical, and ranks as a rare specimen of impressive and effective oratory. A sketch of the life of Cornplanter will be found in another chapter, but to illustrate, we deem it proper to give a single extract from the speech referred to in this connection:

"FATHER—When you kindled your thirteen fires separately, the wise men assembled at them told us that you were all brothers; the children of one Great Father, who regarded the red people as his children. They called us brothers, and invited us to his protection. They told us he resided beyond the great waters where the sun first rises; and he was a king whose power no people could resist, and that his goodness was as bright as the sun. What they said went to our hearts. We accepted the invitation, and promised to obey him. What the Seneca nation promises they faithfully perform. When you refused obedience to that king, he commanded us to assist his beloved men in making you sober. In obeying him we did no more than yourselves had bid us to promise. We were deceived; but your people, teaching us to confide in that king, had helped to deceive us, and we now appeal to your breast. Is all the blame ours?

"You told us you could crush us to nothing; and you demanded from us a great country, as the price of that peace, which you had offered us, as if our want of strength had destroyed our rights."

Red Jacket, upon one occasion, thus pathetically broke forth in an enumeration of the woes which his tribe had sustained at the hands of the pale faces: "We stand on a small island, in the bosom of the great waters. We are encircled, we are encompassed. The Evil Spirit rides upon the blast, and the waters are disturbed. They rise, they press upon us, and the waters once settled over us, we disappear forever. Who, then, lives to mourn us? None! What marks our extinction? Nothing! We are mingled with the common elements."

Another specimen of Indian eloquence, of a high order, is recorded by the veteran missionary, Heckewelder, as having come under his own personal observation. It was the speech of Pipe, a Delaware chief, addressed to the British Commandant at Detroit. The chief and his men, at the time, were allies of the British, but it is represented that they were tired of the alliance and only continued in it under compulsion. This may or may not have been a mistake on the part of the good missionary whose recorded statements concerning the Indians, and particularly the Delawares, although always conscientiously made and intended to be strictly truthful, are always strongly, and oftentimes ridiculously, biased in favor of the red men. But this is the account which he gives of the speech, and he vouches for the correctness of his rendition. Alluding to the chief, he says: "He was now reluctantly compelled to go out against the Americans with the men under his command. On his return from one of these expeditions, he went to make his report to the British Commandant, at Detroit, by whom he was received in state, at the council-house, in presence of a great number of Indians, British officers and others.

"There were several missionaries present, among which I was. The chief was seated in front of his Indians, facing the commandant. He held in his left hand a human scalp, tied to a short stick. After a pause of some minutes he rose, and, addressing the governor, delivered the following speech:

"'FATHER!' (Here the orator stopped and turning round to the audience with a face full of meaning, and a sarcastic look, which I should in vain attempt to describe, he went on in a lower tone of voice, as addressing himself to them.) 'I have said father, although, indeed, I do not know why I am to call him so, having never known any other father than the French, and consider the English as only brothers. But as this name is also imposed upon us, I shall make use of it and say—(here he fixed his eyes on the commandant)—'FATHER! some time ago, you put a war-hatchet in my hands, saying: Take this weapon and try it upon the heads of my enemies, the long-knives, and let me know afterwards if it was sharp and good.

"'FATHER! at the time when you gave me this weapon, I had neither cause or inclination to go to war against a people who had done me no injury; yet, in obedience to you, who say you are my father, and call me your child, I received the hatchet, well knowing that if I did not obey, you would withhold from me the necessaries of life, without which I could not subsist, and which are not elsewhere to be procured but at the house of my father.

"'Father! many lives have already been lost on your account. Nations have suffered and been weakened. Children have lost parents, brothers, and relatives. Wives have lost husbands. It is not known how many more may perish before your war will be at an end.

"'Father! you say you love your children, the Indians. This you have often told them; and, indeed, it is for your interest to say so to them that you may have them at your service.

"'But, Father! who of us can believe that you can love a people of a different color from your own, better than those who have a white skin like yourselves?

"'Father! pay attention to what I am going to say. While you, Father, are setting me on your enemy, much in the same manner as a hunter sets his dog on the game, while I am in the act of rushing on that enemy of yours with the bloody destructive weapon you gave me, I may perchance happen to look back to the place from whence you started me, and what shall I see? Perhaps I shall see my father shaking hands with the long-knives; yes, with those very people whom he now calls his enemies.

"'I may then see him laugh at my folly for having obeyed his orders, and yet I am now risking my life at his command. Father, keep what I have said in remembrance.

"'Now, Father! this is what has been done with the hatchet you gave me (handing the stick with the scalp); I have done with the hatchet what you ordered me to do, and have found it sharp. Nevertheless, I did not do all that I might have done. No, I did not; my heart failed within me, I felt compassion for your enemy. Innocence had no part in your quarrels, therefore I distinguished—I spared—I took some live flesh,* which, while I was bringing to you, I spied one of your large canoes, on which I put it for you. In a few days you will receive this, and will find that the skin is of the same color as your own. Father! I hope you will not destroy what I have saved. You, Father, have the means of preserving, what with me would perish for want. The warrior is poor and his cabin is always empty, but your house, Father, is always full.'"

The venerable missionary adds: "Here we see boldness, frankness, dignity, and humanity, happily blended together, and most eloquently displayed. * * * I wish I could convey to the reader's mind only a small part of the impression which this speech made on me, and on all present, when it was delivered."

Taciturn and dignified as was the Indian, however, he not unfrequently showed a considerable disposition to be facetious and witty.

It is related of Tadeuskund, the principal chief (and sometimes spoken of as "king") of the Delawares, that being seen one day sitting on the pavement in Market street, Philadelphia, in a state of intoxication (for he dearly loved the fiery rum), he was accosted by a Quaker who knew him. "Ah, chief, how is this; I thought thee was turned a good Moravian?" The fuddled "king" replied, "Ugh, chief no Moravian now, chief turned Quaker yesterday." And upon another occasion, being met by a Scotchman, a worthless fellow, who hailed him with, "well, cousin, how do you do?" the proud red man responded, "cousin, cousin! how do you make that out?" "Oh," said the Scot, "we are all cousins from Adam." "Ah, then," said the chief, "I am very glad it is no nearer."† Concerning this trait, Heckewelder says: "They are ingenious in making satirical observations which, though they create laughter, do not, or but seldom give offence. For instance, seeing a bad hunter going out into the woods with his gun, they will ask him if he is going out for meat? or say to one another, 'now we shall have meat, for such a one has gone a hunting' (not believing any such a thing). Or, if they see a coward joining a war party, they will ask him ironically at what time he intends to come back again (knowing that he will return before he has met the enemy), or, they will say to one another, "will he return this way with his scalps?"

*Women and children prisoners. †Stone's History of Wyoming.

CHAPTER V.

INDIAN RESPECT FOR THE AGED—ADOPTION OF CHILDREN—REVERENCE FOR THE DEAD.

"THEY are remarkable for the particular respect which they pay to old age. In all their meetings, whether public or private, they pay the greatest attention to the observations and advice of the aged. No one will attempt to contradict them, nor interfere, in any manner, or even speak, unless he is especially called upon. 'The aged,' they say, 'have lived through the whole period of our lives, and long before we were born. They have not only all the knowledge which we possess, but a great deal more. We, therefore, must submit our limited views to their experience.'

"In traveling, one of the eldest will always take the lead, unless another is especially appointed for that purpose. If such a one stops to hunt, or in order to stay and encamp at the place for some time, all halt together, all are pleased with the spot, and declare it to be judiciously chosen.

"On every occasion, and in every situation through life, age takes the lead among the Indians. Even little boys, when going on parties of pleasure, were it only to catch butterflies, strictly adhere to this rule, and submit to the direction of the oldest in their company, who is their chief, leader and spokesman. If they are accosted on the way by any person, and asked whither they are going, or any other question, no one will presume to answer but their speaker. The same rule is observed when they are grown up, and in no case whatever will one of a party, club, or meeting, attempt to assume authority over the leader, or even to set him right if he should mistake the road, or take a wrong course, much less will any one contradict what he says, unless his opinion should be particularly asked. In such a case, and in no other, he will give his advice, but with great modesty and diffidence.

"Indeed, I have had sufficient reason to be convinced that this principle, excellent as it is in itself, is sometimes even carried too far by the Indians, and that not a little inconvenience is occasioned by it. A few instances will make this better understood than any explanation I could give.

"In the year 1765, the great body of Christian Indians, after having remained sixteen months at and near Philadelphia, were permitted to return to their own country, peace having been concluded with the Indian nations, who still continued at war, notwithstanding the pacification between the European powers.

"They resolved to open a path through the wilderness, from the frontier settlements beyond the Blue Mountains, directly to Wyoming, on the Susquehanna. This path they laid off and cut, as they proceeded, two, three or four miles at a time, according to the nature of the ground and the convenience of water, bringing up their baggage by making two or more trips, as they had no horses to carry it. Having arrived at the Great Pine Swamp, then supposed to be about fourteen miles wide, it was found very difficult to cut a passage, on account of the thickets and of the great number of fallen trees which encumbered it; they were, besides, unacquainted with that part of the country. Several old men, however, took the lead and undertook to be their guides. After a tedious march of near two weeks, attended with much labor, they brought the party across the swamp to the large creek which borders it upon the opposite side. There they found a very steep mountain, through which no passage could be found, either above or below.

"Discouraged at the prospect before them, they saw now no alternative but to return by the same way they had come, and take the route by Fort Allen to Nescopeck, and so up the Susquehanna to Wyoming, a distance of nearly one hundred miles round. In this difficulty it fortunately struck their missionary, Mr. Zeisberger, that a certain Indian named David, who was one of their party, and had followed them all the way, was acquainted with that part of the country, and might, perhaps, be able to point out to them some better and shorter road. He soon found that he was not mistaken, David was perfectly acquainted with the country and knew a good road through which the party might easily pass; but not having been questioned on the subject, had hitherto kept silence, and followed with the rest, though he knew all the while they were going wrong.

"A dialogue then took place between him and the missionary:

"ZEISBERGER.—'David, you are acquainted with this country, perhaps you know a better road and a shorter one than that which we are going to take?'

"DAVID.—'Yes, I do; there is such a course which we may easily get through, and have a much shorter distance to travel.'

"Z.—'What, David; we are all going wrong, and yet you are with us?'

"D.—'Yes, it is so.'

"Z.—'And yet you said nothing, and followed with the rest, as if all had been right?'

"D.—'Yes, the guides are older than I, they took the lead, and never asked me whether I had any knowledge of the country. If they had inquired, I would have told them.'

"Z.—'Will you now tell them?'

"D.—'No, indeed; unless they ask me. It does not become an Indian to instruct his elders.'"

"At the instigation of Mr. Zeisberger, the question was then asked him, when he immediately told them they must all return to a certain spot, six miles back, and then direct their course more to the northeast, which would bring them to a gap in the mountain, where they could pass through with great ease. They did so, and he followed them, and being now desired to take the lead, he did it, and brought them to the very spot he had described, and from thence led them all the way to Wyoming. This difficult part of the road in the swamp has been since called David's Path, and the State road now passes through it."

This anecdote was told me by Mr. Zeisberger himself, whom I have never known to say anything which was not strictly true. I, therefore, give it full credit, the more so, as I have myself witnessed two similar instances.

"The first happened in the year 1791. I had parted by accident from the company I was with, and lost my way in the woods. I had with me an Indian lad about twelve or thirteen years of age, and wished him to take the lead, to which, however, he would not consent. We were at last found by our party, who had gone in search of us. I complained to them of the boy for not doing what I had bidden him; but they answered that he had done right, and 'that it did not become a boy to walk before a man, and be his leader.'

"The second occurrence of the like kind took place in the year 1798. I was on a journey with two young Indians round the head of Lake Erie. Neither of these Indians having ever been in the country we were going to, they received their instructions of others before their departure. The leader, however, having once mistaken a path, we traveled several miles in a wrong direction, until at last I discovered the mistake by our having Owl Creek on our left, when we ought to have had it to our right. I observed this to Christian, the young Indian in the rear, who coincided with me in opinion, I desired him to run forward to the leader who was far ahead of us, and to bring him back; but the lad answered that he could not do it. I asked him the reason. 'It is,' said he, 'because I am younger than he is.' 'Will you then,' replied I, 'take my message to him, and tell him that I desire him to return to this place, where I will wait for him?' The young man immediately consented, went forward to the leader and brought him back, upon which we took an eastward course through the woods to Owl Creek, and after crossing it fell into our right path."*

The same venerable writer also speaks of filial affection and respect among the Indian tribes (and having particular reference to those of the Lenni Lenape), as follows:

"It is a sacred principle among the Indians, and one of those moral and religious truths which they always have before their eyes, that the Great Spirit, who created them and provided for them so abundantly with the means of subsistence, made it the duty of parents to maintain and take care of their children until they should be able to provide for themselves, and that having while weak and helpless, received the benefits of maintenance and protection, they are bound to repay them by a similar care of those who are laboring under the infirmities of old age and are no longer able to supply their own wants.

"Thus a strong feeling of gratitude towards their elders, inculcated and cherished from their earliest infancy, is the solid foundation on which rests that respect for old age for which Indians are so remarkable, and it is further supported by the well-founded hope of receiving the like succors and attentions, in their turn, when the heavy hand of time shall have reduced them to the same helpless condition which they now commiserate in others, and seek, by every means in their power, to render more tolerable. Hence, they do not confine themselves to acts of absolute necessity; it is not enough for them that the old are not suffered to starve with hunger or perish with cold, but they must be made, as much as possible, to share in the pleasures and comforts of life. It is, indeed, a moving spectacle to see the tender and delicate attentions which, on every occasion, they lavish upon aged and decrepit persons. When going out hunting, they will put them on a horse or in a canoe, and take them into the woods to their hunting ground, in order to revive their spirits by making them enjoy the sights of a sport in which they can no longer participate. They place them in particular situations where they are sure that the game they are in pursuit of will pass by, taking proper measures, at the same time to prevent its escape, so that their aged parents and friends may, at last, as our sportsmen call it, be in at the death. Nor is this all; the hoary veterans must all enjoy the honors of the chase. When the animal thus surrounded is come within reach of their guns, when every possibility of escape is precluded, by the woods all around being set on fire, they all, young and old, fire together, so that it is difficult to say whose ball it was that brought the animal to the ground. But they are never at a loss to decide, and always give it in favor of the oldest men in the party. So, when the young people have discovered a place where the bears have their haunts, or have resorted to for the winter, they frequently take with them, to the spot, such of the old men as are yet able to walk or ride, where they not only have an opportunity of witnessing the sport, but receive their full share of the meat and oil.

"At home the old are as well treated and taken care of as if they were favorite children. They are cherished and even caressed; indulged in health and nursed in sickness; and all their wishes and wants are anticipated. Their company is sought by the young, to whom their conversation is considered an honor. Their advice is asked on all occasions; their words are listened to as oracles, and their occasional garrulity, nay, even the second childhood, often attendant on extreme old age, is never, with Indians, a subject of ridicule or laughter. Respect, gratitude, and love, are too predominant in their minds to permit any degrading idea to mix itself with these truly honorable and generous feelings.

*Extract from "History, Manners and Customs of the Indian Nations."

"And yet there have been travelers who have ventured to assert that old people, among the Indians, are not only neglected and suffered to perish for want, but that they are even, when no longer able to take care of themselves, put out of the way of all trouble. I am free to declare that among all the Indian nations that I have become acquainted with, if any one should kill an old man or woman, for no other cause than that of having become burdensome to society, it would be considered as an unpardonable crime; the general indignation would be excited, and the murderer instantly be put to death. I cannot conceive any act that would produce such an universal horror and detestation. Such is the veneration which is everywhere felt for old age."

Among the customs, or indeed common laws of the Indians, one of the most remarkable and interesting was the adoption of prisoners. The right belonged more particularly to the females than to the warriors of the tribes.

It was common for a mother to claim, from among the captives, one whose life should be spared, and who should, by adoption, fill in her household, the place of her son who had fallen in battle.

It was well for the unfortunate prisoners, that this election depended more on the voice of the mother than on that of the father, as innumerable lives were thus spared, of those whom the warriors, if left to their own desires, would have immolated. When once adopted, if the captives assumed a cheerful aspect, entered into their mode of life, learned their language, and, in brief, acted as if they actually felt themselves adopted, all hardship was removed, except such as was inseparable to the Indian mode of life.

Although the right was most frequently exercised by mothers to fill the places of their sons who had been slain, yet the privilege of adoption was often extended to female prisoners. The following is a case in point, extracted from Mark Bancroft's account of the surprise and capture of the Gilbert family, near the present site of Weissport, in the year 1780. Speaking of this custom of adoption, he says:

"But if this change of relation operated as an amelioration of condition in the life of the prisoner, it rendered ransom extremely difficult in all cases, and in some instances precluded it altogether. These difficulties were exemplified in a striking manner in the person of Elizabeth Gilbert.

"This girl, only twelve years of age when captured, was adopted by an Indian family, but afterwards permitted to reside in a white family of the name of Secord, by whom she was treated as a child indeed, and to whom she became so much attached as to call Mrs. Secord by the endearing title of Mamma. Her residence, however, in a white family, was a favor granted to the Secords by the Indian (adopted) parents of Elizabeth, who regarded and claimed her as their child.

"Mr. Secord, having business at Niagara, took Betsey—as she was called—with him, and there, after long separation, she had the happiness to meet six of her relations, most of whom had been already released and were preparing to set out for Montreal, lingering and yearning for those they seemed destined to leave behind perhaps forever. The sight of their beloved little sister roused every energy to effect her release, which desire was generously seconded by John Secord and Colonel Butler, who, soon after her visit to Niagara, sent for the Indian who claimed Elizabeth, and made overtures for her ransom. At first he declared that 'he would not sell his own flesh and blood;' but, attacked through his interests, or, in other words, his necessities, the negotiation succeeded, and her youngest child was among the treasures first restored to the mother at Montreal."

Referring to the Indian custom, Heckewelder, with his usual lenity of judgment towards the savages, says:

"The prisoners are generally adopted by the families of their conquerors in the place of lost or deceased relations or friends, where they soon become domesticated, and are so kindly treated that they never wish themselves away again. I have seen even white men who, after such adoption, were given up by the Indians in compliance with the stipulations of treaties, take the first opportunity to escape from their own country and return with all possible speed to their Indian homes."

But with all proper deference to the old missionary's statement, we are probably safe in believing that such instances of white men's devotion to the delights of Indian life are, to say the very least, exceedingly rare.

In their intercourse with the Indians, the white people were thoughtlessly trampling upon their religion, and their sacred rights. They were expected to look meekly on while the grave was robbed of its treasures, and the bones of their fathers were left to bleach upon the field. When exasperated by the cruel disrespect of their conquerors, and driven to deeds of vengeance, there was little appreciation of the motives which influenced them.

It was the Indian custom to bury with the dead their best clothing, and the various implements they had been in the habit of using whilst living. If it was a warrior, they placed his tomahawk by his side, and his knife in his shield; with the hunter, his bow and arrow, and implements for cooking his food; with the women, their kettles and cooking apparatus, and also food for all. Tobocco was deposited in every grave, for to smoke was an Indian's idea of felicity in the body and out of it, and in this there was not so much difference as there might be, between them and gentlemen of paler hue.

Among the Iroquois, and many other Indian nations, it was the custom to place the dead upon scaffolds built for this purpose, from tree to tree, or within a temporary enclosure, and underneath a fire was kept burning for several days.

They had probably known instances of persons reviving after they were supposed to be dead; and this led to the conclusion, that the spirit sometimes returned to animate the body, after it had once fled. If there were no signs of life for ten days, the fire was extinguished and the body left unmolested, till decomposition had begun to take place, when the remains were buried.

In later years they allowed ten days for the flight of the spirit. Their period of mourning continued while the spirit was wandering; as soon as they believed it entered heaven, they commenced rejoicing, that it had reached where happiness dwells forever. Sometimes a piteous wailing was kept up for a long time, but it was only their own bereavement that they bewailed, as they had no fear about the fate of those who died. Not until they had heard of Purgatory from the Jesuits or endless woe from the Protestants, did they look upon death with terror, or life as anything but a blessing.

In regard to their burial rites, the words of the poet who has given metrical beauty to their legends, and added his own to their lofty enthusiasm, will suffice:

"Poet and historian have lavished their descriptive skill on the burial rites of Alaric, whose bones repose in the sandy bed of the Busentinus; but not less imposing was the funeral of Blackbird, the Ohama Chief, who was inhumed bestriding his war-horse in a hill sepulchre that overlooks the Missouri."

A tribe has been known to visit the spot which had been, in former times, the burial place of their people, though long deserted, and spend hours in silent meditation; and not till every hope had apparently died in their bosoms, did they leave the sod which covered the dust of any of their kindred to the footsteps of the stranger.

CHAPTER VI.

INDIAN SUPERSTITION.

THE Indians were superstitious in the extreme—believers in dreams and observers of omens.

No enterprise was inaugurated, nor journey commenced by them, without consultation of signs and portents, and in the most ordinary operations of life—the planting of their maize, or erection of their rude wigwams—critical attention was had to weather-sign, and to the position and supposed influence of the moon. In this last named peculiarity, however, they did not materially differ from many of the most substantial farmers in Pennsylvania at the present day.

Of the incredible folly and weakness which, in this direction, were universally exhibited by the otherwise self-reliant aborigines, the gentle Heckewelder thus discourses:

"Great and powerful as the Indian conceives himself to be, firm and undaunted as he really is, braving all seasons and weathers, careless of dangers, patient of hunger, thirst, and cold, and fond of displaying the native energy of his character, even in the midst of tortures, at the very thought of which our own puny nature revolts and shudders; this lord of the creation, whose life is spent in a state of constant warfare against the wild beasts of the forest and the savages of the wilderness, he who, proud of his independent existence, strikes his breast with exultation and exclaims, 'I am a man!'—the American Indian has one weak side which sinks him down to the level of the most fearful and timid being; a childish apprehension of an occult and unknown power which, unless he can summon sufficient fortitude to conquer it, changes at once the hero into a coward.

"It is incredible to what a degree the Indian's superstitious belief in witchcraft operates upon their minds. The moment that their imagination is struck with the idea that they are bewitched, they are no longer themselves; their fancy is constantly at work creating the most horrid and distressing images. They see themselves falling a sacrifice to the wicked arts of a vile unknown hand, of one who would not have dared to face in a fair combat, dying a miserable ignominious death, a death to which they would a thousand times prefer the stake with all its horrors. No tale, no tradition, no memorial of their courage or heroic fortitude, will go down with it to posterity; it will be thought that they were not deserving of a better fate. And (O! dreadful thought to an Indian mind) that death is to remain forever unrevenged; their friends, their relations, the men of their own tribe will seek the murderer in vain, they will seek him while perhaps he is in the midst of them unnoticed and unknown, smiling at their impotent rage, and calmly selecting some new victim to his infernal art.

"Of this extraordinary supposed power of their conjurers, of the causes which produce it, and the manner in which it is acquired, the Indians, as may well be supposed, have not a very definite idea. All they can say is, that the sorcerer makes use of a 'deadening substance,' which he discharges and conveys to the person whom he means to 'strike' through the air by means of the wind, or of his own breath, or throws at him in a manner which they can neither understand nor describe. The person thus stricken is immediately seized with an unaccountable terror, his spirits sink, his appetite fails, he is disturbed in his sleep, he pines and wastes away, or a sickness seizes him, and he dies at last a miserable victim to the workings of his own imagination.

Such are their ideas and the melancholy effects of the dread they feel, of that supernatural power which they vainly fancy to exist among them. That they can destroy one another by means of poisonous roots and plants is certainly true, but in this there is no witchcraft. This prejudice which they labor under can be ascribed to no other than their excessive ignorance and credulity. I was once acquainted with a white man, a shrewd and correct observer, who had lived long among the Indians, and being himself related to an Indian family, had the best opportunities of obtaining accurate information on this subject. He told me that he had found the means of getting into the confidence of one of their most noted sorcerers, who had frankly confessed to him that his secret consisted in exciting fear and suspicion, and creating in the multitude a strong belief in his magical powers. 'For,' said he, 'such is the credulity of many, that if I pick a little wool from my blanket and roll it between my fingers into a small round ball, not larger than a bean, I am by that alone believed to be deeply skilled in the magic art, and it is immediately supposed that I am preparing the deadly substance with which I mean to strike some person or other, although I hardly know myself at the time what my fingers are doing; and if at that moment I happen to cast my eyes on a particular man, or even to cast a side glance at him, it is enough to make him consider himself as the intended victim; he is from that moment effectually struck, and if he is not possessed of great fortitude, so as to be able to repel the thought and divert his mind from it, or to persuade himself that it is nothing but the work of a disturbed imagination, he will sink under the terror thus created, and at last perish a victim, not indeed to witchcraft, but to his own credulity and folly.'"

"But men of such strong minds are not often to be found; so deeply rooted is the belief of the Indians in those fancied supernatural powers. It is vain to endeavor to convince them by argument, that they are entirely founded in delusion and have no real existence. The attempt has been frequently made by sensible white men, but always without success."

More than a hundred years ago, while the Delawares still occupied this portion of the State, there was a Quaker named John Anderson, a traveling merchant among the Indians, known far and wide by them as "the honest Quaker trader." This man, knowing the almost unlimited confidence which the natives reposed in him, endeavored to convince them of the utter fallacy of their foolish superstition; but finding argument vain, at last requested that their most powerful sorcerers might be produced, and in presence of the tribe and the chiefs and the old men, might exercise on him the most potent spells of their magic, and if they should succeed in working harm upon him, never in so slight a degree, then he would not only acknowledge their supernatural power, but would pay a goodly amount of merchandise, of such kinds as Indians most covet, in forfeit for his discomfiture. His only stipulation was that the conjuror should be unarmed, and, to guard against the possibility of poison, that he should not attempt to approach nearer than a specified distance of about twelve feet.

The first magician, to whom this opportunity was offered, utterly refused to injure so good a man; one whom the Indians all loved for his uprightness; No! the Great Spirit forbid that he should turn the terrible glance of the evil eye on the honest Quaker?

This most considerate and conscientious course was greeted with the warmest admiration and applause by the assembled Delawares, and caused them to regard the conjuror with more reverence than ever.

But another was found who was less conscientious, and who boasted that neither the distance of twelve feet, nor yet of twelve miles, could in the least interfere with the certain effect of his deadly spells.

So honest John Anderson brought out the enticing goods which were to forfeit, and then stood firm and serene before the fearful man who claimed such wonderful powers. He was dressed and tricked out in a manner most infernal; covered from head to toe with a bear skin, black as jet, and closed together just as it grew upon the animal. In addition to this were a pair of satanic horns upon the head, all intended to strike the victim dumb by its terrible appearance. But it had no such effect upon the shad-bellied Ajax. The spectators had implored him to desist from his fool-hardiness, as they thought it to be, and when he persisted, they looked upon him with the profoundest pity, and some covered their eyes with their blankets to shut out the fearful sight, for they loved this man of integrity with a surpassing affection, and they would not that he should incur a fate so dreadful. It is barely possible that at this time, with all this commiseration, there may have floated through the red man's mind, some consolatory visions of the delights of an Indian administration upon the personal effects of the upright Quaker, who so persistently courted his own doom, but, however that may have been, John Anderson boldly faced the diabolical antics and gesticulations of the horned wizard, and never blenched through an interminable half-hour of wool-picking and contortions; at the end of which the red trickster suddenly ceased his incantations, announcing that the pale face was impervious to them on account of having been accustomed to living on salted provisions, the salt having a repellant effect on that invisible substance, which was always so fatal in its effects when directed against Indians.

974.887 H62c

But though the chiefs and sachems and warriors saw with their own eyes the discomfiture of their sorcerer, and the triumph of the good Quaker—congratulating him on his miraculous escape, and gazing pensively upon the bright-colored merchandise as it now disappeared from their sight and was returned to the packages; yet their superstitious belief in the power of the conjuror had not diminished one iota.

Even in the administering of medicines to the sick, we are told by an old Moravian chronicler that these preparations were "mixed with superstitious practices, calculated to guard against the powers of witchcraft, in which, unfortunately, they have a strong fixed belief. Indeed, they are too apt to attribute the most natural deaths to the arts and incantations of sorcerers, and their medicine is, in most cases as much directed against those as against the disease itself. * * * * * * There is a superstitious notion, in which all their physicians participate, which is, that when an emetic is to be administered, the water in which the portion is mixed must be drawn up a stream, and if for a cathartic, downward. This is, at least, innocent, and not more whimsical perhaps, nor more calculated to excite a smile than some theories of grave and learned men in civilized countries."

CHAPTER VII.

THE IROQUOIS SUPREMACY OVER THE DELAWARES AND OTHER NATIONS.

At the time when the Mengwe and Lenape first became known to the white men, they respectively held towards each other the positions of conqueror and vassal. The attitude of the Iroquois, however, was not wholly that of tyrants over the Delawares, for they mingled, to some extent, the character of protectors with that of masters. It has been said of them that "The humiliation of tributary nations was to them (the Iroquois) tempered with a paternal regard for their interests in all negotiations with the whites, and care was taken that no trespasses should be committed on their rights, and that they should be justly dealt with,"—which being interpreted, seems to mean that the Mengwe would, so far as laid in their power, see to it that none others than themselves should be permitted to despoil the Lenape. They expected from them an annual tribute, an acknowledgment of their state of vassalage, and, on this condition, they were permitted to occupy their former hunting grounds.

Bands of the Five Nations, however, were interspersed among the Delawares and Shawnees and established their villages there; probably more as a sort of police, and for the purpose of keeping a watchful eye on them, than for any other purpose.

The Shawnees were a people which had been expelled from the far southwest by stronger tribes, and a portion of whom, traveling eastward as far as the country adjoining the Delawares, had been permitted to erect their lodges there, but were, like the Lenape, held in a state of subjection by the Iroquois.

The feelings with which the Delawares regarded their conquerors were those of inextinguishable hatred—held in abeyance by fear—and they also pretended to a feeling of superiority, on account of their more ancient lineage, and their farther removal from original barbarism, which latter claim was, perhaps, well-grounded. They also alleged that the "Mingoes" were addicted to cannibalism, in eating their prisoners; but for this charge there does not seem to have been the slightest shadow of foundation.

On the part of the Iroquois, the feeling towards their vassals was one of haughty superiority. There is no recorded instance where unmeasured insult and stinging contempt, were more wantonly and publicly heaped on a cowed and humiliated people, than on the occasion of a treaty held in Philadelphia, in 1742, where Connossatego, an old Iroquois chief, having been requested, by the Governor, to attend (really for the purpose of forcing the Delawares to yield up the rich lands of the Minisink), arose in council, where whites and Delawares and Iroquois were convened, and in the name of all the deputies of his confederacy, said to the Governor, that the Delawares had been an unruly people, and were altogether in the wrong, and that they should be removed from their lands; and then, turning most superciliously towards the abashed Delawares, he said: "You deserve to be taken by the hair of your heads, and shaken till you recover your senses and become sober. We have seen a deed, signed by nine of your chiefs over fifty years ago, for this very land. But how came you to take it upon yourselves to sell lands at all? We conquered you, we made women of you. You know you are women, and can no more sell lands than women. Nor is it fit that you should have power to sell lands, since you would abuse it. You have had clothes, meat and drink, by the goods paid you for it, and now you want it again, like children as you are. What makes you sell lands in the dark? Did you ever tell us you had sold this land? Did we ever receive any part, even to the value of a pipe-shank, from you for it? This is acting in the dark—very different from the conduct which our Six Nations observe in the sales of land. But we find you are none of our blood; you act a dishonest part in this, as in other matters. Your ears are ever open to slanderous reports about your brethren. For all these reasons we charge you to remove instantly! We don't give you liberty to think about it. You are women! Take the advice of a wise man and remove instantly! You may return to the other side of the river where you came from, but we do not know whether, considering how you have demeaned yourselves, you will be permitted to live there, or whether you have not already swallowed that land down your throats, as well as the land on this side. You may go either to Wyoming or Shamokin, and then we shall have you under our eye, and can see how you behave. Don't deliberate, but go, and take this belt of wampum."

He then forbade them ever again to interfere in any matters between white man and Indian; or ever, under any pretext, to pretend to sell lands, and, as they (the Iroquois), he said, had some business of importance to transact with the Englishmen, he commanded them to immediately leave the council, like women and children as they were.

We do not find that in the then middle colonies, the Five

Nations had ventured so far in their hostile conduct towards the Delawares as they had done to the Mohicans, through the alliance between the Dutch and Five Nations, and afterwards between the English and the latter, was much against both, and, indeed, more against the Delawares than the Mohicans. Yet by turning to treaties and councils held with these nations between the years 1740 and 1760, we find much insolent language which the Iroquois were, we will say, permitted, but which the people concerned say were 'bid or hired to make, against the Delawares, for the purpose of stopping their mouths, preventing them from stating their complaints and grievances, and asking redress from their colonial government.'

The result of such high-toned language as that which was made use of to the Delawares, by the Six Nations, in 1742, and at other times afterwards, might easily have been foretold.

For although now these defenceless people had to submit to such gross insults, instead of seeing their grievances redressed, yet they were not ignorant of the manner in which they might one day take revenge, the door to the French, who were enemies to the English, being always open to them, they had but to go 'on one side' (as they expressed themselves) to be out of the way of the Iroquois, and they could obtain from the possessors of Canada and Louisiana, all that they wanted, fire-arms, hatchets, scalping-knives, ammunition, etc.

They did so, and removed to the Ohio country, whither they were followed by others, from time to time, and by the time the French war broke out they were in perfect readiness, and, joining the enemies of Great Britain, they murdered great numbers of the defenceless inhabitants of Pennsylvania, laid the whole frontier waste, and spread terror and misery far and wide, by the outrages they committed.

Upon the occasion above referred to—the Indian treaty at Philadelphia, in 1742—when the Iroquois chief, Connossatego, commanded the Delawares instantly to leave the council-house, where their presence would no longer be tolerated, the outraged and insulted red men were completely crest-fallen and crushed, but they had no choice except to obey. They at once left the presence of the Iroquois, returned to their homes on the beautiful Lenape Wihittuck—now their homes no longer—and prepared to bid them adieu forever.

We may imagine the agony of hatred—more bitter than gall, and yet wholly impotent—with which they thought of the haughty tyranny of the Iroquois, and the cupidity and double-dealing of the white man, as they took up their sad march towards the land of their banishment, in the valley of the Susquehanna. Those lands were already occupied by the Shawnees, but they, being also under tribute to the Mengwe, dared not protest against the new occupancy, so they "moved along," and made room for the Delawares, some of whom pitched their lodges at Wyoming, while some passed on to the West Branch, and others even crossed the Alleghenies."

A most melancholy removal for an ancient people, who regarded themselves as the very essence of Indian aristocracy!

But the day of humiliation came to the Iroquois too, at last, for the pale faces became tired of their presence, totally destroyed their power, and drove them from the "long council-house" of their fathers, by the rapid and decisive campaign of General Sullivan in 1779. Their prostration was complete, and the Delawares were avenged! Both Mengwe and Lenape looked longingly back toward their old homes, and they humbly asked and procured from the whites a stipulation that the burial places of their fathers should remain undisturbed. And for many years afterwards they came annually; sometimes in small parties, and sometimes singly—dejected pilgrims to those sacred shrines. How agonizing must have been the feelings of the proud and sensitive wanderers! Well might their stern impassiveness give way, and their tears flow without shame, as they bowed their heads above the graves of their fathers, and in utter despair and heart-sickness remembered that they were now but exiles and strangers; that a domineering and hostile race had become masters of those ancient hunting grounds, from which the original people had faded and vanished forever.

"They died not by hunger, or lingering decay—
'Twas the steel of the white man that swept them away."

CHAPTER VIII.

LANGUAGE OF THE IROQUOIS.

IF the Indian should be entirely banished from our borders, the memory of him cannot die, for,—

"Their names are on our waters,
We cannot wash them out."

The dialects of the Six Nations bore a strong resemblance to each other, though there were still differences which marked them as distinct. Those who understood one were able to converse in each of the others, and in council the representatives of each nation had no difficulty in interpreting what was said by all. The Mohawk and Oneida strongly resembled each other, and the Seneca and Cayuga were the same. The Onondaga "was considered by the Iroquois as the most finished and majestic," while to our ears it is the most harsh, and the Oneida the most musical.

They use nineteen letters, having no labials or liquids, except occasionally is heard among the Mohawks the sound of L and among the Tuscaroras the sound of F. The Senecas and Cayugas talk all day without shutting their lips, and there are no oaths in their language. Before an Indian can be profane he must learn French or English, and his language is so constructed too, that evasion is almost impossible. Metaphors are in constant requisition in Indian speeches and conversation. If one comes in when the weather is very cold, he says, "It is a nose cutting morning." If he wishes to reflect upon a proposition before deciding, he says, "I will put the matter under my pillow, and let you know." He says of an emaciated person, "He has dry bones." A steamboat is called "The ship impelled by fire." A horse is a "log carrier," a cow a "cud chewer," and a goat a "scented animal."

In ancient times, when the hunters encamped in the woods, they kept warm by covering themselves with boughs of hemlock, and now if an Indian is about to repair his cabin, he says, "I will surround it with hemlock boughs," meaning, I will make it warm and comfortable.* When a chief has made a speech at the opening of a council, he finishes with saying, "the doors are now open, you can proceed." The messenger of the Six Nations to the Senecas was called "the man who carries the fire or smoke," meaning that he had charge of the council-fire and kept it bright.

The Iroquois called themselves the real people; and in speeches or conversation, if allusion was made to white people, they said "our younger brethren." The President of the United States was called "The City Eater," or "The Town Destroyer," on account of the destruction Washington's armies caused wherever they went. They afterwards called him "Father of the Thirteen Fires."

The Iroquois had the masculine, feminine, and neuter genders. The masculine and feminine were denoted sometimes by giving the same animal different names, and by prefixes. All inanimate objects were placed in the neuter gender. Instead of saying, "Direct He-no to come and give us rain," they said "Direct that He-no come and give us rain."

*History of the Iroquois.

The following are specimens of names, with the Lord's prayer and a hymn in Seneca:

O-hee-yuh,	The beautiful river.
Os-we-go,	Flowing out.
On-yit-hah,	Bird of the strong wing.
Ga-no-so-te,	A house.
O-on-do-te,	A tree.
O-ya,	Fruit.
Je-da-do,	A bird.
O-ya-han,	Apples split open.
Ga-no-geh,	Oil in the water.
Ga-osè-ha,	Baby frame.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Gwä-nee', gă-o-yä'-geh che-de-oh'; sā-sa-no-do'-geh-teek; gä-o' ne-dwa na' sa-nunk-tä; na-huk' ne-yä-weh' na yo-an'-jä-geh ha' ne-sä-ne-go'-dă ha ne-de-o'-dă na' gä-o-yä'geh. Dun-dä-gwä-ē'-wä-să-gwus na' ong-wi-wä-na-ark-seh' na' da-yä-ke'-wä-să-gwä-seh na' onk-ke-wä-na-'-ä-ge. Dä-ge-o'-na-geh'-wen-nis'-heh-da na' ong-wä-quä'. Să-nuk' na-huh' heh'-squä-ä ha' gä-yeh' na' wä-ate-keh'; na-wä' na' dä-gwä-yä-duh'-nuh-onk ha' gä-yeh na' wä-ate-heh'; na' seh-eh' na ese' să-wă na' o-nuk-ta' huh' na' gă-hus-ta-seh' kuk' na' da-gä-ă-sä-uh'. Na huh'-ne-yä-weh.*

*If an attempt should be made to give a literal translation of each word, or phrase, it would render transposition necessary, and change the formation of the words in some respects, as the following will exhibit:

Gwä-nee', che-de-oh' gä-o'-yă-geh, gä-sa-nuh' ese' sä-nuk-tä'
Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom gä-oh ese' sne'-go-eh ne yä-weh' yo an-jä'-geh ha' ne-de-o'-deh come, thy will be done on earth as it is in gă-o'yä-geh. Dun-dä-gwä-e' wä-să-gwus ong-wa-yeh'-his-heh' heaven. Forgive us our debts as we da-yä-ke'-a-wä-să-gwus-seh' ho-yeh'his. Dä ge-oh' ne' na geh' forgive our debtors. Give us this wen-nis'-heh-deh e' na-hä-do-wen-nis'-heh-geh o ä'-qua.
day our daily bread.
Hă-squä'-ah e' să-no' ha wä-ate.keh', na-gwä' dä-gwä-yä-dan'-nake Lead us not into temptation, but deliver from ne' wä-ate-keh', na-seh'-eh nees' o-nuk'-tä na-kuh' na us evil, for thine is the kingdom, and the gä-hus-tes-heh, na-kuh' da-gä-ă-sä-uh'. power and the glory.
Na-huh'-ne-yä-weh.
Amen.

(Specimen of the Indian Hymn.)

GAA NAH 8. L. M.

O gwe nyoo' goh', a ga deăh'seek
Heh syah dua deh, lis' ne Je sus;
Tăh'ăh; tah ah deh, o gwe nyooh',
Neh huh' noo'wak ni gooh'da aak.

Iis, săh ăh, ji sa'yah daa gwăh',
Na gat hwa is hăh; aa'gă noh,
Gih shăh', deh sa'yah da geh hăh,
A yó dăs'theth oh, nach, ne neh.

Deh oi'wa yăs doh no'ga deăh,
Iis ne găh sa dyă nohk'dah oh
He yoan jakeh, kuh, he goh heh;
Iis, kuh, des găh'nya doh dyot gont.

Deī oi wah'gĕh na ga deăh seek;
Tăh ăh, waeh, Nais, heh sa deăh oh,
Oi wa ne neă'gwat ni ya'wah oh,
Sgie'yah seeh heh, de ga yah sont.

Da gyah'da geh'ha aak', dih' sho,
Ne' dyòt gont neh ă ges' nyet haak',
He ni sah'sanno'nä ă gwat,
Kuh' he ni sa daä oh.

CHAPTER IX.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS AND EXPLORATIONS BY THE FRENCH—FATHER HENNEPIN, THE FIRST WHITE MAN THAT TROD THE ALLEGHENY VALLEY.

THE French were the first Europeans to make settlements on the St. Lawrence river and along the Great Lakes. Quebec was founded by Sir Samuel Champlain in 1608, and in 1609, when Sir Henry Hudson was exploring the noble river which bears his name, Champlain ascended the Sorelle river, and discovered, embosomed between the Green Mountains, or "Verdmont," as the chivalrous and poetic Frenchmen called them, and the Adirondacks, the beautiful sheet of water to which his name is indissolubly attached. In 1613 he founded Montreal.

During the period elapsing between the years 1607 and 1664, the English, Dutch and Swedes alternately held possession of portions of the Atlantic coast, jealously watching one another, and often involved in bitter controversy, and not seldom in open battle, until, in the latter year, the English became the sole rulers, and maintained their rights until the era of the Revolution, when they in turn were compelled to yield to the growing power of their colonies and retire from the field.

The French movements, from the first settlement at Quebec and thence westward, were led by the Catholic missionaries. Le Caron, a Franciscan friar, who had been the companion and friend of Champlain, was the first to penetrate the western wilds, which he did in 1616, in a birch canoe, exploring Lake Huron and its tributaries.

Under the patronage of Louis XIII, the Jesuits took the advance, and began vigorously the work of Christianizing the savages in 1632. Inspired with a lofty and intense zeal for their religion, they boldly took their lives in their hands, and pushed into the unknown wilderness, bearing aloft the Cross, even to the western extremity of Lake Superior.

In 1634, three Jesuit missionaries, Brebeuf, Daniel and Lallemand planted a mission on the shores of the lake of the Iroquois (probably the modern lake Simcoe), and also established others along the eastern border of Lake Huron.

From a map published in 1660, it would appear that the French had, at that date, become quite familiar with the region from Niagara to the head of Lake Superior, including considerable portions of Lake Michigan.

In 1641, Fathers Jogues and Raymbault embarked on the Penetanguishine Bay for the Sault St. Marie, where they arrived after a passage of seventeen days. A crowd of two thousand natives met them, and a great council was held. At this meeting the French first heard of many nations dwelling beyond the great lakes.

Father Raymbault died in the wilderness in 1642, while enthusiastically pursuing his discoveries. The same year, Jogues and Bressani were captured by the Indians and tortured, and in 1648 the mission which had been founded in St. Joseph was taken and destroyed, and Father Daniel slain. In 1649, the missions St. Louis and St. Ignatius were also destroyed, and Fathers Brebeuf and Lallemand barbarously tortured by the same terrible and unrelenting enemy. Literally did those zealous missionaries of the Romish Church "take their lives in their hands," and lay them a willing sacrifice on the altar of their faith.

It is stated by some writer that, in 1654, two fur-traders accompanied a band of Ottawas on a journey of five hundred leagues to the west. They were absent two years, and on their return brought with them fifty canoes and two hundred and fifty Indians to the French trading posts.

They related wonderful tales of the countries they had seen, and the various red nations they had visited, and described the lofty mountains and mighty rivers in glowing terms. A new impulse was given to the sprit of adventure, and scouts and traders swarmed the frontiers and explored the great lakes and adjacent country, and a party wintered in 1659-60 on the south shore of Lake Superior.

In 1660, Father Mesnard was sent out by the Bishop of Quebec, and visited Lake Superior in October of that year. While crossing the Keeweenaw Point he was lost in the wilderness and never afterwards heard from, though his cassock and breviary were found long afterwards among the Sioux.

A change was made in the government of New France in 1665. The Company of the Hundred Associates, who had ruled it since 1632, resigned its charter. Tracy was made Viceroy, Courcelles, Governor, and Talon, Intendent.* This was called the Government of the West Indies.

The Jesuit missions were taken under the care of the new government, and thenceforward became the leaders in the movement to Christianize the savages.

In the same year (1665), Pierre Claude Allouez was sent out by way of the Ottawa river to the far west, via the Sault St. Marie and the south shore of Lake Superior, where he landed at the bay of Chegoimegon. Here he found the chief village of the Chippewas, and established a mission. He also made an alliance with them and the Sacs, Foxes, and Illinois, against the formidable Iroquois. Allouez, the next year (1666), visited the western end of the great lake, where he met the Sioux, and from them first learned of the Mississippi river, which they called "Messipi." From thence he returned to Quebec.

In 1668, Claude Dablon and Jacques Marquette established the Mission at the Sault called St. Marie, and during the next five years Allouez, Dablon, and Marquette explored the region of Lake Superior on the south shore, and extending to Lake Michigan. They also established the missions of Chegoimegon, St. Marie, Mackinaw, and Green Bay.

The plan of exploring the Mississippi probably originated with Marquette. It was at once sanctioned by the Intendent, Talon, who was ambitious to extend the dominion of France over the whole West.

In 1670, Nicholas Perot was sent to the west to propose a congress of all the nations and tribes living in the vicinity of the lakes; and, in 1671, a great council was held at Sault St. Marie, at which the Cross was set up, and the nations of the great Northwest were taken into an alliance with much pomp and ceremony.

Various opinions were used regarding the course of the Mississippi. One was that it ran to the southeast into the Atlantic below Virginia, another that it flowed into the Gulf of Mexico, and the third that it discharged its mighty waters into the Gulf of California.

On the 13th of May, 1673, Marquette, Joliet, and five voyageurs embarked in two birch canoes at Mackinaw and entered Lake Michigan. The first nation they visited was the "Folles-Avoines," or nation of Wild Oats, since known as the Menomonies, living around the "Baie des Puans," or Green Bay. These people, with whom Marquette was somewhat acquainted, endeavored to persuade the adventurers from visiting the Mississippi. They represented the Indians on the great river as being blood-thirsty and savage in the extreme, and the river itself as being inhabited by monsters which would devour them and their canoes together.†

Marquette thanked them for their advice, but declined to be guided by it. Passing through Green Bay, they ascended Fox river, dragging their canoes over the strong rapids, and visited the village, where they found living in harmony together tribes of the Miamis, Mascoutens,* and Kikabeux, or Kickapoos. Leaving this point on the 10th of June, they made the portage to the "Ouisconsin," and descended that stream to the Mississippi, which they entered on the 17th with a joy, as Marquette says, "which he could not express."†

Sailing down the Mississippi, the party reached the Des Moines river, and, according to some, visited an Indian village some two leagues up the stream. Here the people again tried to persuade them from prosecuting their voyage down the river. After a great feast and a dance, and a night passed with this hospitable people, they proceeded on their way, escorted by six hundred persons to their canoes. These people called themselves Illinois, or Illini. The name of their tribe was Peruaca, and their language a dialect of the Algonquin.

Leaving these savages, they proceeded down the river. Passing the wonderful rocks, which still excite the admiration of the traveler, they arrived at the mouth of another great river, the Pekitanoni, or Missouri of the present day. They noted the condition of its waters, which they described as "muddy, rushing, and noisy."

Passing a great rock,‡ they came to the Ouabouskigon, or Ohio. Marquette shows this river to be very small as compared with the Illinois. From the Ohio they passed as far down as the Akamsca, or Arkansas, where they came very near being destroyed by the natives; but they finally pacified them, and, on the 17th of July, they commenced their return voyage.

The party reached Green Bay in September without loss or injury, and reported their discoveries, which were among the most important of that age. Marquette afterwards returned to Illinois, and preached to the natives until 1675.

On the 18th of May of that year, while cruising up the eastern coast of Lake Michigan with a party of boatmen, he landed at the mouth of a stream putting into the lake from the east, since known as the river Marquette. He performed mass, and went a little apart to pray, and being gone longer than his companions deemed necessary, they went in search of him, and found him dead where he had knelt. They buried him in the sand.

While this distinguished adventurer was pursuing his labors, two other men, of a different stamp, were preparing to follow in his footsteps and make still further explorations, and, if possible, more important discoveries. These were the Chevalier Robert de la Salle and Louis Hennepin.

La Salle was a native of Rouen, in Normandy, where he was born about the year 1635. He renounced his inheritance by entering a seminary of the Jesuits, and was educated for the ministry. Obtaining his discharge, he embarked for Canada in 1667, to seek wealth by commerce, or fame by new discoveries in America. Like many intelligent men of his day, he became intensely interested in further discoveries in the new world, cherished a project of seeking, by way of Canada, a passage to China, and conceived the idea of exploring the passage to the great South Sea, which by many was then believed to exist. He communicated his ideas to the Governor-General, Count Fontenac, and desired his co-operation. The Governor at once fell in with his views, which were immensely strengthened by the reports brought back by Marquette and Joliet, and advised La Salle to apply to the King of France in person, and gave him letters of introduction to the great Colbert, then Minister of Finance and Marine. Accordingly, in 1675, he returned to France, where he was warmly received by the king and nobility, and his ideas were at once listened to and every possible favor shown him.

He was made a Chevalier, and invested with the seigniory of Fort Catarocouy, or Fontenac (now known as Kingston), upon condition that he would rebuild it, as he proposed, of stone.

*The duties of the Intendent included a supervision of the policy, justice, and finance of the province.

†See legend of the great bird, the terrible "Piasa," that devoured men and was only overcome by the sacrifice of a brave young chief. The rocks above Alton, Illinois, have some rude representations of this monster.

*Prarie Indians. †Marquette's journal. ‡The grand tower.

Returning to Canada, he wrought diligently upon the fort until 1677, when he again visited France to report progress. He was received, as before, with favor, and, at the instance of Colbert and his son, the king granted him new letters patent and new privileges. On the 14th of July, 1678, he sailed from Rochelle, accompanied by thirty men, and with Tonti, an Italian, for his lieutenant. They arrived at Quebec on the 13th of September, and after a few days' delay, proceeded to Fort Fontenac.

Father Louis Hennepin, a Franciscan friar, of the Recollect variety, was quietly working in Canada on La Salle's arrival. This remarkable man was born at Ath, Belgium, about the year 1640. After his entrance into the Franciscan order, his roving disposition was gratified by several tours through Europe, and in 1675 was sent to Canada. He preached for a while at Quebec, but his love of adventure seems to have greatly exceeded his taste for the ministry. In 1676 he went to the Indian mission at Fort Frontenac, whence he started on a tour among the Five Nations. During this visit among the Iroquois he traveled extensively among the different tribes, both to obtain their favor and gain information of the unknown country. He traveled over portions of the headwaters of the "la Belle Riviere," as the French called the Allegheny and Ohio, and stopped at several Indian villages in this valley. He is, without doubt, the first white man who ever penetrated into these wilds and set foot upon the soil of the Allegheny valley. His solitary presence in this valley was about the year 1677, a little over two hundred years ago. He returned to Quebec early in 1678, and being a man of great ambition, much interested in the discoveries of the day, he was appointed by his religious superiors to accompany the expedition fitting out for La Salle.

Sending agents forward to prepare the Indians for his coming, and to open trade with them, La Salle himself embarked on the 18th of November, in a little brigantine of ten tons, to cross Lake Ontario. This was the first ship of European build that ever sailed upon this fresh-water sea. Contrary winds made the voyage long and troublesome, and a month was consumed in beating up the lake to the Niagara river. Near the mouth of the river the Iroquois had a village, and here La Salle constructed the first fortification, which afterwards grew into the famous Fort Niagara. On the 26th of January, 1679, the keel of the first vessel built on Lake Erie was laid at the mouth of Cayuga creek, on the American side, about six miles above the falls.

In the meantime La Salle had returned to Fort Frontenac, to forward supplies for his forthcoming vessel. The little barque on Lake Ontario was wrecked by carelessness, and a large amount of the supplies she carried was lost. On the 7th of August the new vessel was launched amid great rejoicings, and made ready to sail. She was of about seventy tons burden.

La Salle christened his vessel the "Griffin," in honor of the arms of Count Frontenac. Passing across Lake Erie, and into the small lake, which they named St. Clair, they entered the broad waters of Lake Huron. Here they encountered heavy storms, as dreadful as those upon the ocean, and after a most tempestuous passage they took refuge in the roadstead of Michilimackinac (Mackinaw), on the 27th of August. La Salle remained at this point until the middle of September, busy in founding a fort and constructing a trading-house, when he went forward upon the deep waters of Lake Michigan, and soon after cast anchor in Green Bay. Finding here a large quantity of furs and peltries, he determined to load his vessel and send her back to Niagara. On the 18th of September she was sent under charge of a pilot, while La Salle himself, with fourteen men, proceeded up Lake Michigan, leisurely examining its shores, and noting everything of interest. Tonti, who had been sent to look after stragglers, was to join him at the head of the lake. From the 19th of September to the 1st of November, the time was occupied in the voyage up this inland sea. On this last named day, La Salle arrived at the mouth of the river Miamis, now St. Joseph. Here he constructed a fort, and remained nearly a month waiting for tidings of his vessel; but, hearing nothing he determined to push on before the winter should prevent him. On the 3d of December, leaving ten men to garrison the fort, he started overland towards the head-waters of the Illinois, accompanied by three monks and twenty men. Ascending the St. Joseph river, he crossed a short portage and reached the The-a-ki-ki, since corrupted into Kankakee. Embarking on this sluggish stream, they came shortly to the Illinois, and soon after found a village of the Illinois Indians, probably in the vicinity of the rocky bluffs, a few miles above the present city of La Salle, Illinois. They found it deserted, but the Indians had quite a quantity of maize stored here, and La Salle, being short of provisions, helped himself to what he required. Passing down the stream, the party on the 4th of January came to a lake, probably the Lake Peoria, as there is no other upon this stream. Here they found a great number of natives, who were gentle and kind, and La Salle determined to construct a fort. It stood on a rise of ground near the river, and was named *Creve-Cœur (broken heart), most probably on account of the low spirits of the commander, from anxiety for his vessel and the uncertainty of the future. Possibly he had heard of the loss of the "Griffin," which had occurred on her downward trip from Green Bay; most probably on Lake Huron. He remained at the Lake Peoria through the winter, but no good tidings came, and no supplies. His men were discontented, but the brave adventurer never gave up hope. He resolved to send a party on a voyage of exploration up the Mississippi, under the lead of Father Hennepin, and he himself would proceed on foot to Niagara and Frontenac to raise more means and enlist new men; while Tonti, his lieutenant, should stay at the fort, which they were to strengthen in the mean time, and extend their intercourse with the Indians.

Hennepin started on his voyage on the last day of February, 1680, and La Salle soon after, with a few attendants, started on his perilous journey of twelve hundred miles by the way of the Illinois river, the Miami, and Lakes Erie and Ontario, to Frontenac, which he finally reached in safely. He found his worst fears realized. The "Griffin" was lost, his agents had taken advantage of his absence, and his creditors had seized his goods. But he knew no such word as fail, and by the middle of summer he was again on his way with men and supplies for his band in Illinois. A sad disappointment awaited him. He found his fort deserted, and no tidings of Tonti and his men. During La Salle's absence the Indians had become jealous of the French, and they had been attacked and harrassed even by the Iroquois, who came the long distance between the shores of Lake Ontario and the Illinois river to make war upon the more peaceable tribes dwelling on the prairies. Uncertain of any assistance from La Salle, and apprehensive of a general war with the savages, Tonti, in September, 1680, abandoned his position, and returned to the shores of the lakes. La Salle reached the post on the Illinois in December, 1680, or January, 1681. Again and bitterly disappointed, La Salle did not succumb, but resolved to return to Canada and start anew. This he did, and in June met his lieutenant, Tonti, at Mackinaw.

Hennepin, in the meanwhile, had met with strange adventures. After leaving Creve-Cœur, he reached the Mississippi in seven days; but his way was so obstructed by ice that he was until the 11th of April reaching the Wisconsin line. Here he was taken prisoner by some northern Indians, who, however, treated him kindly and took him and his companions to the falls of St. Anthony, which they reached on the first of

*The site of the work is at present unknown.

May. These falls Hennepin named in honor of his patron saint. Taking to the land, they traveled to the northwest, an estimated distance of two hundred miles, to the villages of the Sioux. Hennepin and his companions remained here for three months, treated very kindly by their captors. At the end of this time they met with a band of French, led by one Sieur de Luth,* who, in pursuit of game and trade, had penetrated to this country by way of Lake Superior. With his band Hennepin and his companions returned to the borders of civilized life in November, 1680, just after La Salle had gone back to the wilderness. Hennepin returned to France, where, in 1684, he published a narrative of his wonderful adventures.

In August, 1681, La Salle was again on his way up the lakes, and on the 3d of November we find him at the mouth of the St. Joseph, as confident as ever. Here he remained until the middle of December, getting ready for the trip down the Illinois. Instead of following his former route by way of the Kankakee, he took a new route by way of the Chicago river. The party consisted of twenty-three Frenchmen, eighteen Eastern Indians, ten Indian women, and three children, and traveled on foot, conveying their baggage on sleds. They left the present site of the great city of Chicago about the 5th of January, 1682, and on the 6th of February reached the Mississsippi. On the 13th they proceeded on their voyage, and after various adventures, reached the mouth of the Mississippi upon the 6th of April, 1682. They examined the three great channels by which the river reaches the sea, and on the 9th of April erected a column, surmounted by a cross, and affixed the arms of France, with this inscription:

"LOUIS THE GREAT, KING OF FRANCE AND NAVARRE, REIGNING APRIL 9, 1682.

At this ceremony formal possession was taken of the great river and all the countries bordering upon it or its tributaries in the name of the King; the whole concluding with salutes and cries of Vive le Roy.

La Salle and his party now retraced their steps towards the north. They met with no serious trouble until the reached the Chickasaw Bluffs, where they had erected a fort on their downward voyage, and named it the Prudhomme. Here La Salle was taken violently sick. Unable to proceed, he sent forward Tonti to communicate with Count Frontenac. La Salle himself reached the mouth of the St. Joseph the latter part of September. From that point he sent Father Zenobe with his dispatches to represent him at court, while he turned his attention to the fur trade and to the project of completing a fort which he named St. Louis, upon the Illinois river. The precise location of this work is not known. It was said to be upon a rocky bluff, two hundred and fifty feet high, and only accessible upon one side. There are no bluffs of such a height on the Illinois river answering the description. It may have been on the rocky bluff above La Salle, where the rocks are perhaps one hundred feet in height.

Upon the completion of this work La Salle again sailed for France, which he reached on the 13th of December, 1683. A new man, La Barre, had now succeeded Frontenac as Governor of Canada. This man was unfriendly toward La Salle, and this, with other untoward circumstances, no doubt led him to attempt the colonization of the Mississippi country by way of the mouth of the river. Notwithstanding many obstacles were in his path, he succeeded in obtaining the grant of a fleet from the king, and on the 24th of July, 1684, a fleet of twenty-four vessels sailed from Rochelle to America, four of which were designed for Louisiana, and carried a body of two hundred and eighty people, including the crews. Discord soon broke out between M. de Beaujeu and La Salle, and grew from bad to worse. On the 20th of December they reached the island of St. Domingo. During their stay here the fearful Southern fever broke out, and La Salle himself was at the brink of death. When he recovered he learned that the ship containing his supplies had been taken by the Spaniards. But the Chevalier bestirred himself and procured new supplies, and on the 20th of November the first of the fleet set sail for Louisiana, bearing La Salle and Joutel, the historian of the voyage. For a month they were knocking about in the Gulf, and when they finally approached the main land they found they had missed the river altogether. Getting out of patience, La Salle determined to land some of his men and search along the shore for the river.

Joutel was sent out with this party, which left on the 4th of February, and traveled eastward three days, when they came to a great stream which they could not cross. Here they made signals by building great fires, and on the 13th two of the vessels came in sight. The stream was sounded and the vessels were anchored under shelter. But again misfortune overtook La Salle, and the vessel which carried his provisions was wrecked by negligence, or purposely, and the bulk of the supplies were lost. At this juncture, M. de Beaujeu, his second in command, set sail and returned to France. La Salle now constructed a rude shelter from the timbers of his wrecked vessel, placed his people inside of it, and set out to explore the surrounding country in hope of finding the Mississippi. He was, of course, disappointed; but found on a stream, which he named the Vaches, a good site for a fort. He at once removed his camp, and, after incredible exertions, constructed a fortification sufficient to protect them from the Indians. This fort was situated at Matagorda Bay, within the present limits of Texas, and was called by La Salle, Fort St. Louis.

Leaving Joutel to complete the work, with one hundred men, La Salle took the remainder of the company and embarked on the river, with the intention of proceeding as far up as he could. The savages soon became troublesome, and on the 14th of July, La Salle ordered Joutel to join him with his whole force. They had already lost several of their best men, and dangers threatened them on every side. It would seem from the historian's account of the expedition that La Salle began to erect another fort, and also that he became morose and severe in his discipline, so much so as to get the ill will of many of his people. He finally resolved to advance into the country, but whether with the view of returning to Canada by way of Illinois, or only for the purpose of making further discoveries, Joutel leaves in doubt. Giving his last instructions, he left the fort on the 12th day of January, 1687, with a company of about a dozen men, including his brother, two nephews, Father Anastasius, a Franciscan friar, Joutel, and others, and moved northeastward, as is supposed, until the 17th of March, when some of his men, who had been cherishing revengeful feelings for some time, waylaid the Chevalier and shot him dead. They also slew one of his nephews and two of his servants.

This terrible deed occurred on the 20th of March, 1687, on a stream called the Cenis. The murderers quarreled among themselves and several of them were killed, and the whole expedition was eventually cut to pieces and dispersed by the savages, a few being taken prisoners and returned to their friends through the Spaniards, and by other means, in the course of several years afterwards.

In 1687 France was involved in a long and bloody war. The league of Augsburg was formed by the princess of the Empire against Louis XIV., and England, Spain, Holland, Denmark Sweden and Savoy took up arms, and Louis found himself battling with nearly the whole of Europe, and only Turkey for an ally. This war ended with the peace of Ryswick in 1697.

No material change took place in America, but the colonists were harassed and many of their people killed or carried captives to the Canadas. In 1688, the French possessions in North America included nearly the whole of the continent north of the St. Lawrence, and the entire valley of the Mississippi; and they had begun to establish a line of fortifications extending from Quebec to the mouth of the Mississippi, between which points they had three great lines of communication, to-wit: by way of Mackinaw, Green Bay, and the Wisconsin river; by way of Lake Michigan, the Kankakee and Illinois rivers; and by way of Lake Erie, the Maumee and Wabash rivers, and were preparing to explore the Ohio as a fourth route.

*From this man undoubtedly comes the name Duluth.

At this time a census of New France showed a total population of eleven thousand two hundred and forty-nine Europeans. War again broke out in 1701, and extended over a period of twelve years, ending with the treaty of Utrecht in 1713. This also extended to the American colonies, and its close left everything as before, with the exception that Nova Scotia was captured in 1710. The boundaries between the French possessions and the English colonies were left as unsettled as ever, and no definite or settled condition of affairs was arrived at until another generation had passed over the stage.

CHAPTER X.

EARLY SETTLEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA—WILLIAM PENN—THE FIRST PROPRIETARY.

INTERESTING and instructive as is the story, it is one which needs no repetition to the ears of Pennsylvanians—the story of the beloved and peaceful founder of their noble State—William Penn, he who was not only the promoter of permanent white settlements within its boundaries, but sole proprietor of its vast territory.

Accounts of the earliest settlements in Pennsylvania are somewhat vague and uncertain, but it appears that the Dutch and Swedes made numerous voyages and attempted settlements at various points along the Delaware nearly simultaneously.

In 1623 the Dutch West India Company sent out Cornelius Jacobse Mey, who visited the Delaware and erected a fortification, which he called Fort Nassau, at a point near the mouth of Timber creek, on the east side of the river, a few miles below the city of Philadelphia, and very near the site of Red Bank.

In 1630–31 De Vries found this work abandoned. He also founded a settlement at Lewis creek (Kærne Kill). In 1632, De Vries again visited the Delaware, and found his settlement destroyed. The Swedes are said to have made settlements on the Delaware in 1633, but they were probably abandoned or destroyed by the natives; and in 1633–34 there appears to have been no European remaining in this region. From the latter date to 1638 no further attempt was made to colonize the shores of the Delaware.

In 1637–38, Minuit, with a ship-of-war and a transport named the "Griphen," under the patronage of the court of Sweden, visited the Delaware. He made the acquaintance of the Indians, cultivated their good will, and eventually made a treaty with them, at which he purchased a strip of country extending from Cape Hinloop or "Inlopen," along the west bank of the Delaware river to the Sandikans Falls, opposite the present city of Trenton.

In 1638 he made a settlement and built a fort, which he called Christina, at a place called by the natives Hopohaccan, situated on the north side of a stream called Minquas or "Suspecough," near its mouth Minuit died in his colony about 1641. John Printz made a settlement and built a fort on Tinicum Island, in 1642–43. He erected a fine dwelling for himself and built a church. An English settlement was made at Oijitsessing, Asamocking, or "Hog Creek," now Salem, in New Jersey, in 1640 or 1641. At about the same time another colony of English settled on the Schuylkill; but they were soon after compelled to remove by the Dutch.

In 1652, John Pappegoia succeeded Printz as Governor of the Swedish colony, and in 1654 he was succeeded by John Risingh. The Dutch and Swedes held the Delaware in common for some years. The Dutch built Fort Kasimer in 1641 on the present site of New Castle, Delaware. War broke out between the two nations, and in 1654 the Dutch Governor of New Amsterdam, the renowned Peter Stuyvesant, marched a force against the Swedish settlements on the Delaware, and compelled their surrender; thus bringing the whole region along the two great rivers, Delaware and Hudson, with the country lying between, under the dominion of the Netherlands. Their rule was of only short duration, for, in 1664, they were conquered in turn by the English.

About the year 1648 a grant was made by James the First, of England, to Sir Edward Ploeyden of the greater part of the country lying between New England and Maryland, which he erected into a province and county palatinate.

The bounds of this grant were given as follows: "One thousand miles compass of this most temperate, rich province,—for our south bound is Maryland's north bound,—and beginning at Aquato, or the southernmost or first cape of Delaware Bay, in thirty-eight degrees and forty minutes, and so runneth, by or through or including Kent Isle, through Chesapeake Bay to Piscataway, including the Falls of Potomac river, to the head or northernmost branch of that river, being above three hundred miles due west, and thence northward to the head of the Hudson river to the ocean sixty leagues, and thence to the ocean and isles, across Delaware Bay to the South Cape, fifty leagues; in all, seven hundred and eighty miles. Then all Hudson river isles, Long Isle or Pamunke, and all isles within ten leagues of the said province being."

These limits, it will be readily perceived, while ambiguous in the extreme, covered a vast region, including the whole of the Dutch and Swedish settlements on the Hudson and Delaware rivers. A company had been formed by Sir Edward* Ployeden for the purpose of colonizing this grant, which was to be called New Albion.

Agents were sent out, some of whom established themselves; and it is supposed that the Palatine himself, with several of his friends, retired from England during the civil war, and sought an asylum in America.

Forts were said to have been erected at various points and settlements made, but they were probably broken up by the Swedes and Dutch

It is also stated in "Trumbull's History of Connecticut," that, in 1640, a company of persons sent out one Captain Nathaniel Turner, who purchased for thirty pounds sterling a large tract of land on both banks of the Delaware, and erected trading-houses, and planted a colony of fifty families upon it. These accounts are, however, received with much doubt.†

Jealousies had long existed between the Dutch and the New Englanders, and the latter had formed a plan in 1653 for driving the former from the continent. They applied to Cromwell for assistance, which, for some reason, was not given; but, under Charles the Second, the plan was carried into execution.

On the 29th of March, 1664, the King granted to James, Duke of York, the territory occupied by the Dutch; and soon after Colonel Richard Nichols, and others, with three ships, carrying one hundred and thirty guns, and a force of six hundred men, who were joined on their arrival by reinforcements from New England, appeared in the Bay of Manhattan (New York), and summoned the doughty Dutch Governor to surrender.

To this formidable armament Stuyvesant could offer no effectual resistance, and, after several days of negotiation, in which he obtained tolerable terms, the Governor surrendered, and with Manhattan fell all the Dutch possessions. It was accomplished without bloodshed, and gradually the civil administration of affairs was transferred to the English.

*Written also Edmund. †Gordon's Early History of Pennsylvania.

War between England and Holland followed, and in July, 1673, a Dutch squadron recaptured New York without opposition; but at the treaty of Westminster, in 1674, the Dutch gave it up to the English. Sir Edmund Andross was appointed Governor of the British territories in America, which position he held until 1681–82.

In June, 1664, the Duke of York granted to John, Lord Berkeley, and Sir George Carteret, the province of New Jersey. Liberal laws were enacted, granting entire religious toleration, and immigration was invited. The province began to be settled rapidly, and numerous towns to spring up. Lord Berkeley, in 1675, sold his interests in the province to John Fenwick, in trust for Edward Byllinge. Both these men were members of the society founded by George Fox, and familiarly known as Quakers.

Fenwick settled with his family, in the beginning of 1676, at a point called Oijitsessing or Hog Creek, now Salem.

Troubles arose between Governor Andross and Fenwick, concerning the latter's proprietary rights. Byllinge became involved pecuniarily, and conveyed his interests to William Penn, Gawen Lawrie, and Nicholas Lucas, in trust for his creditors.

In June, 1677, a colony of about two hundred and fifty Quakers, formed a settlement at a place which they called Beverly, afterwards Buellington, and which is now known as Burlington.

WILLIAM PENN.

Just here we deem it appropriate to give a brief narrative of some of the leading events in the earlier life of William Penn, which will prove most interesting in this connection. They are taken from Lempriere's Biographical Dictionary:

"William Penn, the celebrated Quaker, was born in London, 1644. From a private school at Chigwell, Essex, he entered, in 1660, a gentleman commoner, at Christ Church, Oxford; but as he withdrew from the national forms of worship with other students, who, like himself, had listened to the preaching of Thomas Loe, a Quaker of eminence, he was fined for non-conformity, and the next year, as he pertinaciously adhered to his opinions, he was expelled from the college. This disgrace did not promote his comfort. His father considered his singularly sober and serious conduct as tending to impede his elevation to the favors of the licentious court, and, therefore, after being, as he says, whipped and beaten, he was turned out of doors, in 1662.

"His father, however, sent him to France, and on his return he entered at Lincoln's Inn as a law student.

"In 1666, he was sent to manage an estate in Ireland, and during his residence there, he renewed his acquaintance with Loe, and showed such partiality to the Quakers, that he was, in those days of persecution, taken up at a meeting at Cork, and imprisoned by the Mayor, who at last restored him to liberty at the request of Lord Orrery.

"His return to England produced a violent altercation with his father, who wished him to abandon those singular habits so offensive to decorum and established forms; and when he refused to appear uncovered before him, and before the king, he a second time dismissed him from his protection and favor.

"In 1668, he first appeared as a preacher and as an author among the Quakers, and in consequence of some controversial dispute, he was sent to the Tower, where he remained in confinement for seven months.

"The passing of the Conventical Act, soon after, again sent him to prison in Newgate—from which he was released by the interest of his father, who, about this time, was reconciled to him, and left him, on his decease, some time after, a valuable estate of about fifteen hundred pounds per annum."

The obloquy and persecution under which the Quakers suffered, continually increased, and finally became intensified to such a degree that they were even subjected to the torture and ignominy of the branding iron, and this, too, almost under the shadow of Plymouth Rock, and at the hands of those same Puritans who had so recently escaped the fangs of proscriptive intolerance in lands across the sea.

Penn, however, although he had cast his lot with the despised sect, had no longer any need to fear personal persecution, for he had become a favorite with his sovereign, mainly, perhaps, on account of the brilliant naval service which his father, the Admiral Penn, had rendered to the 'merry monarch,' in the great sea fight against the Dutch, June 3d, 1664. But his personal immunity from persecution did not cause him to forget others, whose hearts were aching for some peaceful place—among the islands of the sea, or in the wilderness of America—where they might worship the Almighty Ruler as their consciences should move them, without dictation or hindrance from the hand of power.

He resolved that, if practicable, he would found such an asylum, and as he cast about him in the prosecution of his benevolent design, what was more natural than that his eyes should turn towards that new country across the ocean, whose lands were known to be virgin fertility, and almost boundless in extent?

He had recently acted in the capacity of trustee for Edward Byllinge, a Quaker who had met heavy pecuniary disaster in an attempt to establish settlements in New Jersey, upon lands which he had purchased there from Lord Berkeley, and while so acting as trustee, Penn had become acquainted with the existence and eligibility of the great expanse of country lying west of the Delaware and north of the grant made to Lord Baltimore, these lands being still in the possession of the crown. He remembered, too, that the government was yet indebted to the estate of his father, in the sum of sixteen thousand pounds, for services as admiral, an amount which in those days of kingly extravagance and slender revenue, we suppose it was not entirely convenient for the royal treasury to pay. So, in the year 1681, he made an humble petition to King Charles the Second, praying that, instead of the large sum due his father, he might receive a grant of lands upon the river Delaware in America.

His request was acceded to. The king granted him lands, which were described and bounded, in the Royal Charter (dated March 4th, 1681), as follows:

"On the east by the Delaware river, from twelve miles distance northwards of Newcastle Town, unto the three-and-fortieth degree of northern latitude, if the said river doth extend so far northward, but if the said river shall not extend so far northward, then by the said river so far as it doth extend, and from the head of the said river the eastern bounds are to be determined by a meridian line drawn from the head of the said river unto the said forty-third degree. The said land to extend westward five degrees of longitude to be computed from the eastern bounds, and the said lands to be bounded on the north by the three-and-fortieth degree of northern latitude, and on the south by a circle drawn at twelve miles distance from Newcastle, northward and westward unto the fortieth degree of north latitude, and then by a straight line westward to the limits of the longitude above mentioned."

The reasons moving the king to grant the charter were declared in that instrument to be the merits of Admiral Penn, the extension of the British Empire and the conversion of the savage nations to civilized life and the Christian religion.

This vast territory the king named Pennsylvania (Penn's forest land), in opposition to the wishes of the great Quaker, who did not desire that complimentary name, but preferred rather that the province should be called New Wales.

So broad and comprehensive was his spirit of philanthropy, that he designed this as an asylum, not only for his own people, the English Quakers, but as one to which all Christians, of whatever country, might flee from religious oppression. And so firmly was he resolved that no injustice should stain his enterprise, that when he himself came over to the new land, it was one of his first and chief acts to call together the red men—they who had owned the soil long before Charles Stuart laid claim to it—and to repurchase from them the same lands which he had already bought (and paid for) of the Crown of England.

Nineteen nations of Indians thus met,* and extended to him the hand of friendship. Always after, they spoke of him as their Miquon, their elder brother, their good and just friend; and so long as he lived they never broke their faith with him.

It seemed incredible how rapidly and how widely the knowledge of Penn's benevolent project was spread abroad, for in less than two years, more than fifty ships entered the Delaware freighted with eager emigrants; not only Quakers from different points in England and Wales, but from Holland, and from many other places on the Continent; among them a large number of Germans—some of them Quakers—from Cresheim, in the Palatinate. So rapid was the influx that, says Proud (page 220, voll. ii, History of Pennsylvania), "the banks of the Delaware were one bustling scene—some lodged in the woods, in hollow trees, some in caves, which were easily dug on the high banks of the Wissahickon and the Delaware, and others, in haste, erected huts."

During the very first year there were eighty dwellings erected in the town of Philadelphia. It seems as if those swarming refugees from oppression were endued with the spirit of prophecy, and that they foresaw the worldly advantages which did afterwards accrue to them and their children, as a result of the humane, just, and pacific policy pursued by Penn, towards the Indian proprietors of the land. Very many of those immigrants who came then, in too deep poverty to provide their families so much as a shelter, lived to find themselves in positions of comfort and competence; and of many more, it may be truly said, that their descendants are to-day among the most cultured, wealthy and influential people in the State.

The grant to Penn was declared to the inhabitants within its borders by the King's proclamation, April 2, 1681, in which he commanded them to pay due obedience to the proprietary, his heirs, assigns, and agents.

Penn soon after published an account of his province, with the charter and other documents, and invited purchasers at the rate of forty shillings the hundred acres, subject to a quit rent of one shilling per annum forever.

Two ships from London and one from Bristol, with emigrants, soon after sailed for America. One of the London ships, the "Amity," was driven by adverse winds to the West Indies, and did not reach the Delaware until the following spring. The others arrived safely, and landed their passengers towards the close of the year.

At this time, December, 1681, the population was about two thousand, principally Quakers and Swedes, each of whom had three houses of public worship.

This magnificent domain comprised the present State of Pennsylvania, containing about forty-six thousand square miles, and having, by the United States census of 1870, a population of 3,521,791.

Penn left England, in company with many friends, in September, and landed at Newcastle on the 24th of October, 1682, where he was received with every demonstration of pleasure and respect.

He convened the Assembly on the 4th of December, during whose session three important laws were passed, to-wit: 1. An act for a union of the province and territories; 2. A naturalization act; 3. A general system of jurisprudence. Religious toleration was secured to all who believed in a deity, but a belief in Christianity was made a prerequisite to holding office. The people were commanded to observe the first day of the week as Lord's day. Swearing and blasphemy were punished by fine and imprisonment. Personal liberty was respected.

The judiciary power was vested in a supreme court, sitting quarterly, a court of common pleas, held monthly, and a court of quarter sessions and jail delivery.

The mischievous English law of promogeniture was rejected. Property was made devisible by will with two witnesses, and in case of intestacy was distributed among the children. In case of issue, only one-half the property was subject to execution. A property qualification was required for the exercise of the rights of franchise. Crimes were severely punished. Assault of parents and disrespect of persons in authority were punished by fine and imprisonment. Marriage was made a civil contract. Plays and games were prohibited, and made punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The laws were to be printed and published, and taught in the schools.

The celebrated council with the Indians was held under the spreading branches of a great elm, in what is now Kensington, a northeastern suburb of Philadelphia, on the 14th of December, 1682. The treaty which the contracting parties entered into was a just and equitable one, remarkable for the spirit of conciliation which it taught, and equality of all men which it acknowledged.

The celebrated Voltaire said, "This was the only treaty entered into between these people and the Christians which was not ratified by an oath, and which was never broken."

The Indian name for the location where the city of Philadelphia stands was Coaquannock, or Coaquenaki.

Penn remained in the colony until June 12, 1684, when he sailed for England. At the time of his departure the province and territories contained a population of seven thousand, two thousand five hundred of whom resided in Philadelphia.

Charles the Second, of England, died February 6, 1684, and was succeeded by the Duke of York, under the title of James the Second. In 1688, a revolution drove him from the throne. This change in the government destroyed all Penn's influence at court. He fell under suspicion, and was brought before the Privy Council at three different times to answer a charge of conspiring to restore James to the throne, but was finally discharged.

Heartily tired of these difficulties, he resolved to return to America. He was granted a convoy by the government, and, at the head of about five hundred emigrants, was preparing to sail, when new troubles overtook him.

One George Keith, a native of Scotland, and for many years a zealous member of the Society of Friends, had rendered himself obnoxious to them, and had been expelled from their body. A schism followed, and Keith's adherents became quite numerous and stirred up dissensions and discord. Keith eventually abandoned the Friends, took orders in the Established Church, and came to America as a missionary, where he died some years afterwards.

Out of this sedition grew many difficulties, which, in the end, had nearly cost Penn his province. In fact, William and Mary,

*It was at this famous treaty that we first hear of the great Tamanend; the most renowned of all Indian sachems. At that council he, with another chief, Metamequan, on the 23d of April, 1683, affixed their marks to an instrument by which they conveyed to the Proprietary a tract of land on Neshaminy Creek, in the county of Bucks.

His correct name, Tamanend, came, in the course of time, to be written Tammany, and a society was founded in his honor, during the Revolution, by which society he was recognized as the Patron Saint of America. At the present day he is still regarded as holding the same relation to a powerful political party in this country.

The name Tamanend is said to signify, in the Indian tongue, "The Urbane."

who had succeeded James, stripped him of his authority, and placed Benjamin Fletcher, Governor-General of New York, over Pennsylvania on the 19th of April, 1693. War was then raging between England and France, and had extended to the Colonies. Schenectady, in New York, Salmon Falls, in New Hampshire, and the settlements at Casco Bay, were taken by bodies of French and Indians, in 1690, and their inhabitants killed or carried into captivity. Desolation and ruin stared the Colonies in the face from the St. Lawrence to the Carolinas.

At this juncture a strong effort was made to unite the Colonies in a general system of defense, and Governor Fletcher called upon Pennsylvania for her proportion of subsidy which was being raised to propitiate the Six Nations, and thereby attach them to the English interest.

A long discussion, producing serious complication, ensued between the Assembly and Governor Fletcher, ending in a dissolution of that body. Penn was finally restored to all his rights by letters patent issued in August, 1694. The war ended by the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697.

Penn having finally surmounted all difficulties, sailed from England with his wife and family, in August, 1699, and arrived in the Delaware on the last day of November following, with the intention of spending the remainder of his years in America. But in the midst of his labors he received intelligence which compelled his return to England.

He again departed on the 1st of November, 1701, arriving at Portsmouth in December. An attempt had been made to influence the King and Parliament to purchase the proprietary rights in America, but the presence of Penn was sufficient to arrest the movement, and he and his successors remained in peaceable possession until the occurance of the American Revolution, when all their rights and property were confiscated, excepting in cases of manors granted or sold and occupied by other parties.

William Penn died at Rushcomb, in Buckinghamshire, England, on the 30th of July, 1718, aged seventy-four years.

The city of Philadelphia was laid out by Penn late in 1682. The original plat was one mile wide on the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers, and two miles long from river to river. During the first year about eighty buildings were erected, various mechanical arts established, and a profitable trade opened with the Indians. Penn chose for his residence or manor a spot about twenty-five miles above the city, on the Delaware, where he built a large brick mansion, having an extensive hall for holding conferences with his Indian friends. This place he named Pennsbury.

When Penn finally left his colony it was in a highly prosperous condition. Philadelphia contained three hundred houses, and had a population of two thousand five hundred. Quite an extensive trade had been opened with the West Indies, with South America, and even with the nations along the Mediterranean Sea, but the profits of this trade were largely monopolized in England.

The first sub-division of the province of Pennsylvania was made by Penn in 1682, forming the three counties of Philadelphia, Chester and Bucks. From these have been formed all the counties of the great commonwealth.

CHAPTER XI.

MOVEMENTS OF THE FRENCH ON THE LAKES, AND THE ALLEGHENY AND OHIO RIVERS.

THE French began to visit the head-waters of the Ohio probably as early as 1739. Detroit was founded by them in 1700–1, and a great military road was constructed from that point to the Ohio in 1739. They called the river "La Belle Riviere," and it was known among some of the Indian tribes as Oua-bous-ki-gou. French voyageurs and explorers had undoubtedly been familiar with Lake Erie since the early discoveries of La Salle, and probably had established trading-houses and erected fortifications at various points, from Niagara to their settlements on Lake St. Clair and the Detroit river. As early as 1690 they had a trading-post at the head of Lake Erie, on the Maumee, called by them "River a la Roche."

The "Post Vincennes," on the Wabash, about forty miles above its mouth, was founded very early,—1711–12,—and minor stations were located at various points on those streams. Fort Niagara was permanently built in 1726, and it is claimed by some writers that La Salle erected a stockade at the foot of the big island in the Maumee about 1680.

As early as 1719, the French began actively to erect a line of forts for the purpose of connecting Canada with the Valley of the Mississippi, at both extremities of which they had extensive settlements, and continued their efforts until they succeeded in erecting forts at the most important points. Fully to effect their purposes, and previous to thoroughly exploring the country along the Allegheny and Ohio, they sent out missionaries or agents to conciliate the Shawnese, Delaware, and other Indians. Their design was to secure, as far as possible, an Indian alliance against the English. Most of the tribes were pretty easily won over. The Senecas, and others of the Iroquois which were more friendly to the English, were not so easily secured, but were finally induced to occupy a somewhat neutral position. Some of the Shawnese chiefs had been taken to the French Governor, at Montreal, with whom, at their return they seemed highly pleased, and various methods were adopted to secure their friendship.

According to colonial records, the French had established trading houses on the Ohio, against the remonstrances of some of the Indians, as early as 1730–32. This statement was also attested by the Six Nations at a conference with the English at Philadelphia, in 1732.

In 1743, Pierre Chartierre (generally written Peter Chartier), a half-breed trader, and French spy, who had made Philadelphia his chief residence, endeavored to engage the Shawnese in a war with the Six Nations. Being suspected, he fled to the Shawnese, persuaded them to declare for the French, was recompensed with a French commission, and committed numerous depredations. At the head of four hundred warriors, he waylaid and seized two provincial traders on the Allegheny river, with goods valued at sixteen hundred pounds.

The war which began in 1744 between France and England was severely felt throughout the colonies.

Under a proclamation of Governor Thomas, aided very much by the efforts of Dr. Franklin, the militia of Pennsylvania, to the number of twelve thousand, was organized, armed, equipped, and drilled, and the colony put in a good state of defense.

Considerable difficulty was experienced in maintaining amicable relations with the Indians, owing to French influences. Minor skirmishes and petty collisions frequently occurred on the border. The French were extremely busy in their designs, actively working for their own interests, and a war with the savages was imminent. By careful handling, however, and friendly assistance from the Six Nations, they were persuaded to attend a general council at Lancaster, held in 1745. This conference with the Indians was attended by agents of the colonies of Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland, and all matters of dispute were, for a time, settled. A sum amounting to six hundred pounds was raised and presented to them by these colonies.

But the same year, the Shawnese, on the Ohio, began to show symptoms of disaffection to the English, subserviency to the French, and soon after openly assumed a hostile character.

In 1747, the Indians on the banks of the Ohio connected with the Six Nations, visited Philadelphia, to tender their homage, and to invite the province to send commissioners to a council fire, at which the neighboring nations were present. Impressed with the importance of such a conference, the council invited the governments of Maryland and Virginia to send their agents, and to unite in preparing a suitable present. On the part of Pennsylvania, goods were provided to the value of one thousand pounds, and Conrad Weiser was selected as envoy. The instructions given to him by this council display pretty fully the provincial policy at that time.

Strong efforts were made by both contending parties to enlist the services of the Six Nations, but, while they listened respectfully and accepted presents, they politely declined all overtures.

The treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, signed October 1, 1748, between Great Britain and France, terminated the war, which had given no substantial advantage to the former power. The boundaries between the French and English colonies were not established by this treaty, and this fact alone very soon plunged the two nations in another costly and bloody war.

The celebrated Ohio Company was chartered in the year 1748, about the close of the war. This charter covered a grant of five hundred thousand acres of land on the Ohio, between the Monongahela and the Great Kanawha, and lying principally on the south side of the river, but giving the privilege of taking a considerable tract on the north side.

The company sent out as agent Conrad Weiser, who had been the envoy of the council the year previous, to visit the Indians, in order to prevent the French from occupying the Ohio.

Preparations were now made to survey and colonize their lands, and a cargo of goods for the use of the settlers and for traffic with the Indians was purchased in London, to arrive the next year (1749).

Other companies were also formed for similar purposes. In June, 1749, a grant of eight hundred thousand acres, from the Canada line on the northwest, was made to the Loyal Company, and upon the 29th of October, 1751, another grant of one hundred thousand acres was made to the Greenbriar Company.

In the meantime the French were neither idle nor blind. Foreseeing at once the result of the occupation of this region by Great Britain, they prepared for prompt and vigorous action, and entered upon actual explorations of the regions about the Allegheny and Ohio. They ascertained the geography of the country, and the proximity of English settlements on the south side of the Allegheny mountains. They took active measures to extend their trade among the Indians, well aware that in case of a rupture, the savages would prove useful auxiliaries, or dangerous enemies.* They did all they could to counteract the influence of the Ohio company among the Indians, by trading with them.

The Marquis de la Gallissonière, was now Governor-General of New France (as they called all the country on the western continent claimed by them), having succeeded Admiral de la Jonquiere early in the year 1749. He was an able man, possessing great sagacity, and well calculated to advance the designs of France in laying claim to this new territory. During the summer of that year he organized and fitted out an extensive expedition under the command of Captain Louis Cèloron de Bienville, and numbering about three hundred men, French soldiers, Canadians and friendly Indians. The expedition started from Canada in July, 1749, and proceeded from the south shore of Lake Erie to the head-waters of the Allegheny. They were provided with a number of leaden plates, which they buried at different points along the Allegheny and Ohio, and which was a part of the method or ceremony, in claiming the territory in the name of the King of France. These leaden plates contained inscriptions, and are fully described in a succeeding chapter, giving a full account of Cèloron's expedition. It was written for the Magazine of American History by O. H. Marshall, Esq., an eminent historian of Buffalo, N. Y., and fully explains itself.

*One of the first symptoms of an approaching war between France and England, was a dispute about boundaries, as early as 1747. The English extended their claims to the river St. Lawrence, while the French on their part contended for all the country to the westward of the Apalachian mountains. It was not believed at that time, that either intended to insist on the extent of its claims; but it will appear in the sequel that France was extravagant in her pretensions. Perhaps the proximity of settlement, and the reciprocal attempts to corrupt the Indians, and to precipitate them into hostilities with the times, served to inflame the gathering storm, and to hasten its approach.

After the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748, the French ministry more attentively examined the strength and resources of Canada and Louisiana. The position of these colonies, stretching from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to that of the Mississippi, with an almost uninterrupted inland water communication between the extremities of both seemed to unfold the means of subduing the English power in America.

CHAPTER XII.

1748.

THE FIRST WHITE VISITOR TO INDIANA COUNTY—WEISER'S MISSION—HIS JOURNAL—DISTANCES WESTWARD ACCORDING TO JOHN HARRIS—HART'S SLEEPING PLACE.

THE first notice we obtain of the territory now embraced in the county of Indiana is seen in the journal of Conrad Weiser, whose mission to Logstown, in 1748, and the journal of that trip are presented below. He was undoubtedly among the first, if not the first, white man to pass down the Conemaugh,* and his simple journal, limited as it is, will give the reader some idea of the nature of the country through which he traveled, and the sparsely settled countries even as far east as Old Berks.

The result of his mission is seen in the treaty and purchase of the following year, which are detailed at length in the article upon "Land Titles."

Conrad Weiser was no common man. Under a plain and unassuming exterior there was concealed a mind to plan and a will to execute schemes which embraced much good for the settlers, as well as the Indians, but no self aggrandizement for himself.

While his counsels prevailed there was peace on the frontier, and there seemed to be an era of good feeling between the aborigines and the government.

WEISER'S MISSION TO LOGSTOWN, 1748.

The Delawares and Shawanese Indians had settled on the Ohio prior to 1730, among whom were French emissaries, and persons disaffected with English rule, who had been for several years endeavoring to detach them from the English interest. Among them was Peter Chartier. He owned at one time a large tract of land, the present site of New Cumberland, Cumberland county, Pa. At this place the Shawanese Indians had a town about 1700–20. It was for many years the landing place of Peter, an Indian agent, and an individual of some notoriety. He owned at one time six hundred acres of land, bounded by the Yellow Breeches creek and Susquehanna river.

In the spring of 1744, April 18, at the head of four hundred Shawanese, well armed with guns, pistols and cutlasses, he surprised and took prisoners two Indian traders, James Dinnen and Peter Tostee, on the Allegheny river, and robbed them of all their effects, to the amount of £1,600.

Sometime afterwards a few of the seduced Shawanese returned again to the English, and acknowledged they had been *"In the fall of 1744, Governor Thomas employed Peter Shaver, a trader among the Indians, to carry letters to the Shawanese Indians on the Ohio, inviting them to come to Philadelphia." Votes of Assembly, Vol IV. We know nothing of his route, but Shaver's creek is frequently mentioned in our articles. Shaver's Sleeping Place was near or at the "Two Licks," in what is now Indiana county.

misled, and had carried on a private correspondence with the French. [Notes, Assem. iv. 13, Prov. Rec. K. 347, L. 362, 420, 437.]

Governor George Thomas, in his message to the Assembly, April 25th, 1745, says: "I have just received information that Peter Chartier, after disposing of his effects in this government, is gone to the enemy (French). His conduct for some years past has rendered him generally suspected; and it seems my reprimanding him for some very exceptionable parts of it is made use of, amongst other things, to excuse his infidelity. Had he been punished as he deserved for the villainous report he spread two years ago, among the back inhabitants, in order to spirit them up against such of the Six Nations as should happen to travel through those parts of the country, he would not have been at this time with the enemy; but an apprehension that the Shawanese, whose perfidious blood partly runs in Chartier's veins, might resent upon our traders any severities to him, restrained me from making use of such, and induced me to use the gentle method of reproof which his brutish disposition had construed into an affront.

"I am likewise informed that he has persuaded a considerable number of the Shawanese to remove from their old town to a greater distance upon another river, and it is not to be doubted but that a savage person of his temper will do us all the mischief he can. If you think it worth while, I will send a special messenger to persuade those Shawanese to return to their former place of abode, or I will take any other method you shall advise; though it is my opinion, the advantages of trade excepted, the further these people remove from our borders the better it will be for us.

"I have written letters from time to time to the Shawanese chiefs, inviting them down to Philadelphia, and particularly a very kind one last fall, which Peter Shaver tells me he delivered; but that I have of late received no answer, may be imputed to Chartier's influence over them; and it is, too, probable that he will make use of it to defeat any future attempts we shall make to revive their friendship with us." [Notes, Ass. iv. 2.]

The Delawares and Shawanese were connected with the Six Nations. In 1747, some of them, on the banks of the Ohio, visited Philadelphia, "to tender their homage to the English, and to invite the province to send commissioners to a council fire," at Logstown, in the present county of Beaver, at which the neighboring nations were to be present.

Impressed with the importance of such a conference, the council at Philadelphia invited the governments of Maryland and Virginia to send their agents, and to unite in preparing a suitable present. On the part of Pennsylvania, goods were provided to the amount of one thousand pounds, and Conrad Weiser, the Provincial Interpreter and Indian Agent, was sent with instructions from the Governor. Weiser, in obedience to his instructions, proceeded to Logstown, and executed with his wonted fidelity the object of his mission.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CONRAD WEISER.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CONRAD WEISER, ESQ.,* INTERPRETER FOR THE PROVINCE OF PENNSYLVANIA, FROM ANTHONY PALMER, PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

SIR:—This government having promised the Indians, who came here from Ohio in November last (1747), to send you to them early in the spring, and having provided a present of considerable value, you are to proceed thither with all possible dispatch. Mr. George Croghan, the Indian trader, who is well acquainted in the Indian country, and the best roads to Ohio, has undertaken this convoy of you and the goods with his own men and horses at the public expense; and as it cannot be foreseen how long the journey will take him, nor what trouble may attend it, so as to enter into contracts before hand with him, all affairs relating thereto are entirely left to you, wherein we recommend all the frugality that can consistently with the nature of your business, the treasury being low and a large sum expended in the purchase of the present, be practiced.

As soon as you come to the place of general rendezvous, you are to notify your arrival in a speech to all the tribes, wherein you are to deal in generals, reserving all particular matters to your closing speech.

You are to use the utmost diligence to acquire a perfect knowledge of the number, situation, disposition and strength of all the Indians in or near those parts, whether they be friends, neutrals or enemies, and be very particular in knowing the temper and influence of the tribes of Indians who send deputies to receive you; for by the knowledge of these matters you are to regulate the distribution of the goods which are to be divided amongst them in as equal and just a manner as possible, that all may go away satisfied, and none receive the least cause of disgust at any undue preference given to others.

You cannot be at a loss for matter from whence to form your speeches. The ancient enmity of the French to the Indian nations, their perfidy upon all occasions, of which, if any reliance can be had on the articles of news in the public papers, you may give some late instances in the death of Taghananty, the Black Prince, who perished in a jail at Montreal, and in the cruel treatment of the Indians in general at Canada, who are confined to loathsome prisons without proper or wholesome sustenance.

The inability of the French to protect the Indians, or to supply them with such necessaries as they stand in need of for their subsistence are well known. These observations are what cannot but occur to you. You may further enlarge on the constant and ancient friendship of the English, and their readiness at all times to assist them against the attempts of the French who have ever been for destroying or enslaving them.

And an ample field will be furnished to you in doing justice to this province, which has ever shown the greatest readiness to supply the Indians in the most pressing necessities, mentioning the several valuable presents made them from time to time, particularly since the commencement of the present war, instancing the Government's presents at Philadelphia, over and above the price of their lands in the year 1742; the large presents at Lancaster and at Albany; and then the present occasion will bear a particular enlargement: this Government having no sooner heard of the distresses of the Indians, and that abundance of families and young warriors had for the convenience of hunting removed to the waters of Ohio and Lake Erie, than they determined to send them a supply of goods and powder, which, in this time of scarcity, they could have from no other place. This tenderness for those who, out of every nation, had come and fixed their habitations in these parts, must needs make deep impressions on their affections, and especially on the minds of their young people, to the advantage of the kindness of this province for all the Indians.

*Conrad Weiser, whose name is intimately associated with the early history of Pennsylvania, and from whom descended some of the most useful men of the country (the Muhlenburgs), was a native of Herenberg, Germany. He was born November 2d, 1696. His father, John Conrad Weiser, with ten of his children, immigrated to America, arrived at New York in June, 1710, and shortly afterwards settled in Schoharie, where he was repeatedly visited by Quagnant, a chief of the Mohawk Nation. At the earnest solicitation of Quagnant, Conrad, the subject of this notice, went with the chief to his country, to acquire a knowledge of the Mohawk language. During his stay he endured many hardships, and suffered great privations. Having mastered the language, he returned to his father's house, and was occasionally employed as interpreter. In 1729, then married, he came with his wife and five children to Pennsylvania, settled in the Tulpehocken Valley, located half a mile east of the present site of Womelsdorf, Berks county. Conrad Weiser, as occasion demanded, acted in various capacities, both private and public. Determined, on his arrival in Pennsylvania, to spend the remaining days of his eventful life on his farm; his talents, however, soon attracted attention Governor Gordon, as early as 1731, required his services in the capacity of an interpreter. Soon afterwards Governor Thomas appointed him a justice of the peace; and when the French war commenced, Governor Morris commissioned him as colonel of a regiment of volunteers of Berks county. He spent more than a quarter of a century in the service of his country. He closed his eventful life July 13, 1760. For a detailed account of this truly great man see History of Berks County, pages 195–222.

By the treaties exsisting between his Majesty's subjects and the Indian nations, they are laid under the strongest obligations to give each other, the earliest intelligence of whatever may affect their persons or their properties. In discharge of our duty, you are to inform the Indians that the management of the war being committed to the Governors of New York and Boston, the operations of this year are concerted by them; that they have received orders from his Majesty exceedingly favorable to the Indians, and in pursuance thereof, they will prosecute the war against the French and their adherents with the utmost vigor; that his Majesty, in token of his regard to the Indian nations, has sent a large present to the Governor of New York, to be distributed at Albany; but, that as by their distance from this place, the Indians in Ohio and Lake Erie may be supposed not to receive much benefit from the Albany present. This is an additional consideration why this government chooses to be kind to those Indians, and assist them the readier when they are in distress, because they cannot, without extreme difficulty, get supplies from other places.

On the other hand, you are to use all means in your power to get from them all kinds of intelligence as to what the French are doing, or design to do, in these parts, and indeed, in every other place. You are not to satisfy yourself with generals, but to inform yourself truly and fully of the real disposition of these Indians, and what dependence can be had on them for the security of this province, and for the total prevention of all hostilities within our limits. You are to make particular inquiry into the number and situation of the Indian Nation, between these people's settlements on the Ohio and the river Mississippi, and to the west of Lake Erie, since it is said there are several Indian Nations within these limits, and on the Lakes Huron and Illinois, who are disobliged with the French, and might easily be brought into the amity of the English.

You will see by the Assembly's answer to the council's message, a copy whereof will be given you herewith, what sentiments they entertain about war; and, as they have the disposal of the public money, it would be wrong to urge the Indians to war, since no dependence could be had on the Assembly to support them in such an undertaking; and, consequently, any encouragement of this kind would be to bring them into a snare, and in the end might prove extremely hurtful. This considered, nothing of the kind must be urged by you; and if the Indians mention it themselves, you need not be explicit. You are to tell them that this point is not in your instructions, that your business was to make them a visit, and to be truly informed of their situation, and to bring them a valuable present, the most substantial mark that can be given of the great affection which this province bears to their friends, the Indians; and if they insist any further, you are to tell them that at their instance you will make a faithful relation of everything given you, by them, in charge to the government, and transmit to the Indians their resolves. But whatever you do on this head, as a good deal must be left to your discretion and judgment, on such information as shall be given you, you are to take special care not to disoblige the Indians, or in any way diminish their heartiness for his Majesty's cause against the French.

You are to make particular inquiry into the behavior of the Shawanese, since the commencement of the war, and in relation to the countenance they gave to Peter Chartier. It is proper to tell you that they relented, made acknowedgment of their error, in being seduced by Peter Chartier, and prayed they might be permitted to return to their old town and be taken again as sincere penitents into the favor of the government; and though the Governor gave them assurances that all past misbehavior should be pardoned on their sending deputies to Philadelphia to acknowledge their fault, yet they contented themselves with loose letters by Indian traders, some of which have been delivered, and some not; but had they all been delivered, this was not a becoming manner of addressing the government, nor could they expect anything from it.

You will, therefore, speak to them by themselves, and give them such a quantity of goods, as upon their present temper, and the frankness of their submission, you shall think they deserve.

Given in council, under my hand and the lesser seal of the said province, at Philadelphia, the 23d day of June, Anno Domini, 1748.*

Anthony Palmer.

Weiser's Journal, 1748.

The Journal of Conrad Weiser, Esq., Indian Interpreter:

August 11th, 1748.—Set out from my house (Heidelberg township, Berks county, Pa.,) and came to James Galbreath's that day, 30 miles.

August 12th.—Came to George Croghan's, 15 miles.

August 13th.—To Robert Dunning's, 20 miles.

August 14th.—To Tuscarora Path, 30 miles.

August 15th and 16th.—Lay by, on account of the men coming back sick, and some other affairs hindering us.

August 17th.—Crossed the Tuscarora Hill, and came to the sleeping place, called The Black Log, 20 miles.

August 18th.—Had a great rain in the afternoon; came within two miles of the Standing Stone, (Huntingdon county), 24 miles.

August 19th.—We traveled but twelve miles; were obliged to dry our things in the afternoon, 12 miles.

August 20th.—Came to Frank's Town, but saw no houses or cabin. Here we overtook the goods, because four of George Croghan's hands fell sick, 26 miles.

August 21st.—Lay by, it raining all day.

August 22d.—Crossed the Allegheny hills, and came to the Clear Fields, 16 miles.

August 23d.—Came to the Shawanese Cabins, 34 miles.

August 24th.—Found a dead man on the road, who had killed himself by drinking too much whisky. The place being very stony, we could not dig a grave. He smelling very strong, we covered him with stones and wood, and went on with our journey. Came to the Ten Mile Lick, 32 miles.

August 25th.—Crossed Kiskeminetoes Creek, and came to Ohio† that day, 26 miles.

August 26th.—Hired a canoe—paid 1,000 black wampum for the loan of it to Log's Town. Our horses being all tired, we went by water, and came that night to a Delaware Town; the Indians used us very kindly.

August 27th.—Set off again in the morning early; rainy weather. We dined in a Seneca Town, where an old Seneca woman reigns with great authority. We dined at her house, and they all used us very well at this and the last mentioned Delaware Town. They received us by firing a great many guns, especially at this place. We saluted the town by firing off four pairs of pistols. Arrived that evening at Log's Town, and saluted the town as before. The Indians returned about one hundred guns. Great joy appeared in their countenances. From the place where we took water, i. e. from the Old Shawanese Town, commonly called Chartiers Old Town, to this place is above sixty miles by water, and but thirty-five or forty by land. The Indian council met this evening to shake hands with me, and to show their satisfaction at my safe arrival. I desired of them to send a couple of canoes to fetch down the goods from Chartiers Old Town, where we had been obliged to leave them on account of our horses being all tired. I gave them a string of wampum, to enforce my request.

August 28th.—Lay still.

*Prov. Rec. I. P. 329-334. †Allegheny river, this river being then called "Ohio."

August 29th.—The Indians set off in their canoes to fetch the goods. I expected the goods would be all at Chartiers Old Town, by the time the canoes would get there, as we met about twenty horses of George Croghan's at the Shawanese cabins, in order to fetch the goods that were then at Frank's Town.

This day news came to town, that the Six Nations were on the point of declaring war against the French, for the reason that the French had imprisoned some of the Indian deputies. A council was held, and all the Indians made acquainted with the news; and, it was said, the Indian messenger was, by the way, to give all the Indians notice to make ready to fight the French.*

This day my companions went to Cascasky,† a large Indian town, about thirty miles off.

August 30th.—I went to Beaver Creek, an Indian town, eight miles off—chiefly Delawares, the rest Mohawks—to have some belts of wampum made. This afternoon rainy weather set in, which lasted about a week. - Andrew Montour came back from Cascasky, with a message from the Indians there, to desire of me, that the ensuing council might be held at their town. We both lodged at this town, at George Croghan's trading house.

August 31st.—Sent Andrew Montour back to Cascasky with a string of wampum, to let the Indians there know that it was an act of their own; that the ensuing council must be held at the Logstown; they had ordered it so, last spring, when George Croghan was up, and at the last treaty at Lancaster, the Shawanese and Twightwees had been told so, and they staid accordingly for the purpose; and both would be offended if the council was to be held at Cascasky; besides my instructions bind me to Logstown, and could not further go without giving offense.

September 1st.—The Indians in Logstown having heard of the message from Cascasky, sent for me to know what I was resolved to do, and told me that the Indians at Cascasky were no more chiefs than themselves, that last spring they had nothing to eat, and expecting that they should have nothing to eat at our arrival, ordered that the council should be held here. Now their corn is ripe, they want to remove the council; but they ought to stand by their word; we have kept the Twightwees here from below on that account. As I told them about the message that I had sent by Andrew Montour, they were content.

September 2d.—The rain continued. The Indians brought in a good deal of venison.

September 3d.—Set up the union flag on a long-pole; treated all the company with a dram of rum. The king's health was drunk by the Indians and white men. Towards night a great many Indians arrived to attend the council. There was a great firing on both sides. The strangers first saluted the town at a quarter of a mile distance, and at their entry the town's people returned the fire, also the English traders, of whom there were about twenty. At night, being very sick of the cholic, I got bled.

September 4th.—Was obliged to keep my bed all day, being very weak.

September 5th.—Found myself better. Scaishady came to see me. I had some discourse with him about the ensuing council.

September 6th.—Had a council with the Wandats, otherwise called Inontady—Hagas; they made a fine speech to me, to make me welcome, and appeared on the whole very friendly. Rainy weather continued.

September 7th.—Being informed that the Wandats had a mind to go back again to the French, and had endeavored to take the Delawares with them to recommend them to the French, I sent Andrew Montour to Beaver creek, with a string of wampum to inform himself of the truth of the matter. They sent a string in answer to let me know they had no correspondence that way with the Wandats, and that the aforesaid report was false.

September 8th.—Had a council with the chiefs of the Wandats; inquired into their number, and what occasioned them to come away from the French; what correspondence they had with the Six Nations, and whether or not they had ever any correspondence with the government of New York. They informed me their coming away from the French was because of the hard usage they received from them; that they would always get their young people to go to war against the enemies, and would use them as their own people, that is, like slaves; and their goods were so dear that they, the Indians, could not buy them. That there were one hundred fighting men that came over to join the English, seventy were left behind at another town, a good distance off, and they hoped they would follow them; that they had a very good correspondence with the Six Nations for many years, and were one people with them; that they could wish the Six Nations would act more briskly against the French. That about fifty years ago they made a Treaty of Friendship with the Governor of New York at Albany; and they showed me a large belt of wampum they received there from the said Governor, as from the King of Great Britian. The belt was twenty-five grains wide and two hundred and sixty-five long, very curiously wrought. There were séven images of men holding one another by the hand.

The first signifying the Governor of New York; or rather, as they said, the King of Great Britain.

The second, the Mohawks.

The third, the Oneidas.

The fourth, the Cajugas.

The fifth, the Onondagers.

The sixth, the Senecas.

The seventh, the Owandats; and two rows of black wampum under their feet, through the whole length of the belt, to signify the road from Albany through the Five Nations to the Owandats. That six years ago they had sent deputies with the same belt to Albany, to renew the friendship.

I treated them with a quart of whisky and a roll of tobacco. They expressed their good wishes to King George and all his people, and were mightily pleased that I looked upon them as brethren of the English.

This day I desired the deputies of all the Nations of Indians settled on the waters of the Ohio, to give me a list of the fighting men, which they promised to do. A great many of the Indians went away this day because the goods did not come, and the people in town could not find provisions enough, the number was so great.

The following is the number of every Nation given to me by their several deputies in council, in so many little sticks tied up in a bundle:

The Senecas, one hundred and sixty-three.

The Shawanese, one hundred and sixty-two.

The Tisagechroann, forty.

The Mohawks, seventy-four.

The Mohickons, fifteen.

The Onondagers, thirty-five.

The Cajugas, twenty.

The Oneidas, fifteen.

The Delawares, one hundred and sixty-five—in all seven hundred and eighty-nine.

September 9th.—I held a council with the Senecas and gave them a large string of wampum, black and white, to acquaint them. I had it in charge from the President and council in Philadelphia to inquire who it is that lately took the people prisoners in Carolina, one thereof being a great man, and that by what discovery I had already made, I found it was some of the Senecas did it. I desired them to give me the reasons for doing so; and as they had struck their hatchet into their brethren's body, they could not expect that I could deliver them my message with a good heart, before they gave me satisfaction in that respect; for they must consider the English, though living in several provinces, are all one people; and doing mischief to the one, is doing to the other. Let me have a plain and direct answer.

*Provincial Record Book, L. p. 420.

†This town is placed in Hutchen's map, on the west side of Big Beaver, about one mile below where the Shenango and Mahoning unite.

September 10th.—A great many of the Indians got drunk. One Henry Noland had brought nearly thirty gallons of whisky to town this day. I made a present to the old Shawanese chief, Cackawatcheky, of a strand, a blanket, a match coat, a shirt, a pair of stockings and a large twist of tobacco; and told him that the president and council of Philadelphia remembered their love to him, as to their old and true friend, and would clothe his body once more, and wished he might wear them out so as to give them an opportunity to clothe him again. There was a great many Indians present, two of which were the Big Hominy and the Pride; those that went off with Chartier, but protested against his proceedings against our Indian traders.

Cackawatcheky returned thanks, and some of the Six Nations did the same, and expressed their satisfaction to see a true man taken notice of, although he was now grown childish.

September 11th.—George Croghan and myself staved an eight gallon keg of liquor belonging to the aforesaid Henry Noland, who could not be prevailed on to hide it in the woods, but would sell it, and get drunk himself.

I desired some of the Indians in council to send some of their young men to meet our people with the goods and not to come back before they heard of or saw them. I began to be afraid they had fallen into the hands of the enemy; so did the Indians.

Ten warriors came to town, by water, from Niagara. We suspected them very much, and feared that some of their parties went out to meet our people by hearing of them.

September 12th.—Two Indians and a white man went out to meet our people, and had orders not to come back before they saw them, or to go to Frankstown where we left the goods. The same day the Indians made answer to my requests concerning the prisoners taken in Carolina. Thanagieson, a speaker of the Senecas, spoke to the following purpose, in the presence of all the deputies of the other Nations:

"We went out doors; brethren, you came a great way to visit us, and many sorts of evils might have befallen you by the way, which have been hurtful to your eyes and your inward parts; for the woods are full of evil spirits. We give you this string of wampum to clear up your eyes and minds, and to remove all bitterness of your spirit, that you may hear us speak a good cheer."

Then the speaker took his belt in his hand, and said:

"Brethren—When we and you first saw one another at your first arrival at Albany, we shook hands together, and became brethren, and we tied your ships to the bushes; and after we had more acquaintance with you, we loved you more and more, and perceiving that a bush would not hold your vessel, we then tied her to a large tree, and ever after good friendship continued between us; afterwards, you, our brethren told us, that a tree might happen to fall down, and the rope rot wherewith the ship was tied; you then proposed to make a silver chain, and tie your ship to the great mountain in the Five Nations' country; and that chain was called the chain of friendship; we were all tied by our arms together with it, and we, the Indians of the Five Nations, heartily agreed to it, and ever since a very good correspondence has been kept up between us; but, we are very sorry that at your coming here, we are obliged to talk of the accident that lately befel you in Carolina, where some of our warriors, by the instigation of the evil spirit, struck their hatchets into our own body like: for our brethren, the English, and we are of one body; and what was done, we utterly abhor as a thing done by the evil spirit himself; we never expected any of our people would ever do so to our brethren. We therefore remove our hatchet, which, by the influence of the evil spirit, was struck into your body, and we desire that our brother, the Governor of New York and Onas,* may use their utmost endeavors that the thing may be buried in the bottomless pit; that the chain of friendship, which is of so long standing may be preserved bright and unhurt." Gave a belt.

The speaker then took up a string of wampum, mostly black, and said:

"Brethren—As we have removed our hatchet out of your body, or properly speaking out of our own, we now desire that the air may be cleared up again, and the wound given may be healed, and everything put in good understanding, as it was before; and we desire you will assist us to make up everything with the Governor of Carolina; the man that has been brought to us prisoner, we now deliver up to you; he is yours."

Then laid down the string and took the prisoner by the hand, and delivered him to me. By way of discourse, the speaker said:

"The Six Nation warriors often met Englishmen trading to the Catawbas, and often found that the English betrayed them to their enemies, and some of the English traders had been spoken to by the Indian speaker last year in the Cherokees country, and were told not to do so; that the speaker, and many others of the Six Nations, had been afraid a long time, that such a thing would be done by some of their warriors, at one time or other."

September 13th.—Had a council with the Senecas and Onondagas about the Wandots to receive them into our union. I gave a large belt of wampum, and the Indians gave two, and everything was agreed upon about what should be said to the Wandots. The same day a full council was appointed, and met accordingly, and a speech was made to the Wandots by Asserhaztuz, a Seneca, as follows:

Brethren—The Ionontady-Hagas: Last spring you sent this belt of wampum to us (having the belt then in his hand) to desire us and our brethren, the Shawanese, and our cousins, the Delawares, to come to meet you in your retreat from the French; we accordingly came to your assistance, and brought you here, and received you as our own flesh. We desire, you will think, you now join us and our brethren, the English; and you to become our people with us."

Then he laid that belt by, and gave them a very long string of wampum.

The speaker took up the belt I gave, and said:

"Brethren—The English, our brothers, bid you welcome, and are glad you escaped, as it were, out of captivity. You have been kept as slaves by Onontio,† notwithstanding he called you all along his children; but now you have broken the rope wherewith you have been tied, and become freemen; and we, the united Six Nations, receive you to our council fire, and make you members thereof; and we will secure your dwelling place to you against all manner of danger." Gave the belt.

"Brethren—We, the Six United Nations, and all our Indian allies, with our brethren, the English, look upon you as our children, though you are our brethren; we desire you will give no ear to the evil spirit that spreads lies and wickedness; let your mind be easy and clear, and be of the same mind with us. Whatever you may hear, nothing shall befall you but what of necessity must befall us at the same time.

"Brethren—We are extremely pleased to see you here, as it happened just at the time when our brother Onas is with us.‡ We jointly, by this belt of wampum, embrace you about your middle, and desire you to be strong in your minds and hearts; let nothing alter your minds, but live and die with us."

*Onas—Penn.
†The French.
‡That is a representative of Penn.

Gave a belt of wampum. The council broke up.

September 14th.—A full council was summoned, and everything repeated by me to all the Indians, what passed in Lancaster at the last treaty with the Twightwees.

The news was confirmed by a belt of wampum from the Six Nations, that the French had imprisoned some of the Six Nations deputies, and thirty of the Wandots including women and children.

The Indians that were sent to meet our people with the goods came back, and had not seen anything of them, but they had been no further than the old Shawanese Town.

September 15th.—I let the Indians know that I would deliver my message to-morrow, and the goods; and that they must send deputies with me on my return home; and whenever we should meet the rest of the goods I would send them to them, if they were not taken by the enemy, to which they agreed.

The same day the Delawares made a speech to me, and presented a Beaver coat and a string of wampum, and said:

"BRETHREN—We let the president and council of Philadelphia know that after the death of our chief man, Olompees, our grand-children, the Shawanese, came to our town to condole with us over the loss of our good king, your brother, and they wiped off our tears, and comforted our minds; and as the Delawares are the same people with the Pennsylvanians, and born in one and the same country, we gave some of the present to our grand-children given us by the president and council in Philadelphia, because the death of their good friend and brother, must have affected them as well as us."

Gave the beaver coat and a string of wampum.

The same day the Wandots sent for me and Andrew Montour, and presented us with seven beaver skins, about ten pounds weight, and said they gave us that to buy some refreshments for us after our arrival in Pennsylvania, and wished we might get home safe, and lifted up their hands and said they would pray God to protect us and guide us the way home. I desired to know their names—they behaved like people of good sense and sincerity. The most of them were gray headed. Their names are as follows:

Totoznihiades, Taganayesy, Ionachquad, Wandupy, Tazuchionzas, their speaker.

The chiefs of the Delawares, that made the above speech, are Shawanassan and Achamanatainn.

September 16th.—I made answer to the Delawares, and said:

"BRETHREN—The Delawares: It is true what you said that the people of Pennsylvania are your brethren and countrymen; we are very well pleased with what your children, the Shawanese, did to you. This is the first time we had public notice given us of the death of our good friend and brother Olomipees. I take this opportunity to remove the remainder of your troubles from your hearts to enable you to attend the ensuing treaty, and I assure you the president and council of Pennsylvania will condole with you over the loss of your king, our good friend and brother." Gave them five strands.

The two aforesaid chiefs gave a string of wampum, and desired me to let their brethren, the president and council know that they intended a journey next spring to Philadelphia to consult with the brethren on some affairs of moment; since they are now like orphan children, they hoped their brethren would let them have their good advice and assistance, as the people of Pennsylvania and the Delawares were like one family.

The same day the rest of the goods arrived; the men said they had nine days rain, and the creeks had risen, and that they had been obliged to send a sick man back from Frankstown to the inhabitants, with another to attend him.

The neighboring Indians being sent for again, the council was appointed to meet to-morrow. It rained again.

September 17th.—It rained very hard; but in the afternoon it held up for about three hours. The deputies of the several nations met in council, and I delivered there what I had to say from the president and council of Pennsylvania, by Andrew Montour.

"BRETHREN—You that live in Ohio, I am sent to you by the president and council of Pennsylvania, and am now going to speak to you on their behalf. I desire you will take notice and hear what I say." Gave string of wampum.

"BRETHREN—Some of you had been in Philadelphia last fall and acquainted us that you had taken up the English hatchet, and that you had already made use of it against the French; and that the French had very hard heads, and your country afforded nothing but sticks and hickory, which were not sufficient to break them. You desired your brethren would assist you with some weapons sufficient to do it. Your brethren, the president and council, promised you then to send something next spring by Thazachiawagon, but as some other affairs prevented his journey to Ohio, you received a supply by George Croghan, sent you by your said brethren, but before George Croghan came back from Ohio, news came from over the great lake that the King of Great Britain and the French King had agreed upon a cessation of arms for six months, and that a peace was very likely to follow.* Your brethren, the president and council, were then, in a manner, at a loss what to do. It did become them to act contrary to the command of the king; and it was out of their power to encourage you in the war against the French; but as your brethren never missed fulfilling their promises, they have, upon second consideration, thought proper to turn the intended supply into a civil and brotherly present, and have, accordingly, sent me with it; and here are the goods before your eyes, which I have, by your brethrens order, divided into five shares, and in five different heaps; one heap whereof your brother Assaraquoa sent to you to remember his friendship and unity with you; and as you are all of the same nations with whom we, the English, have been in league of friendship, nothing need be said more than this, that the president and council, and Assaraquoa, have sent you this present to serve to strengthen the chain of friendship between us, the English, and the several nations of Indians to which you belong.

"A French peace is a very uncertain one; they keep it no longer than their interest permits; then they break it without provocation given them. The French King's people have been almost starved in old France for want of provision, which made them wish and seek for peace; but our wise people are of the opinion that after their bellies are full they will quarrel again and raise a war. All nations in Europe know that their friendship is mixed with poison, and many that trusted too much on their friendship have been ruined.

"I now conclude and say that we, the English, are your true brethren at all events. In token whereof, receive this present."

The goods being then uncovered, I proceeded:

"BRETHREN—You have of late settled on the river of Ohio for the sake of hunting, and our traders followed you for the sake of hunting also. You have invited them yourself. Your brethren, the president and council, desire you will look upon them as your brethren, and see that they have justice done them. Some of your young men have robbed our traders, but you will be so honest as to compel them to make satisfaction. You are now become a people of note, and are grown very numerous of late years; and there are, no doubt, some wise men among you; it therefore becomes you to act the part of wise men, and for the future be more regular than you have been for some years past, when only a few young hunters lived here." Gave a belt.

*On the 7th of October, 1748, a definite treaty of peace was conclu ded at Aix La Chapelle, France.

"Brethren—You have of late made frequent complaints against the traders bringing so much rum to your towns, and desire it might be stopped; and your brethren, the president and council, made an act accordingly, and put a stop to it, and no trader was to bring any rum or strong liquor to your towns. I have the act here with me, and shall explain it to you before I leave you. But it seems it is out of your brethren's power to stop it entirely. You send down your own skins by the traders to buy rum for you. You go yourselves, and fetch horse loads of strong liquors. Only the other day, an Indian came to this town, out of Maryland, with three horse loads of liquor; so that it appears you love it so well that you cannot be without it. You know very well that the country near the endless mountains afford strong liquor, and the moment traders buy it, they are gone out of the inhabited parts, and are traveling to this place without being discovered; besides this, you never agree about it; one will have it, the other won't (though very few), a third says, he will have it cheaper; this last, we believe, is spoken from your hearts. (Here they laughed.) Your brethren, therefore, have ordered that every —— of whisky shall be sold to you for five bricks in your town, and if a trader offers to sell whisky to you, and will not let you have it at that price, you may take it from him, and drink it for nothing." Gave a belt.

"Brethren—Here is one of the traders, who you know to be a very sober and honest man. He has been robbed of the value of three hundred bricks, and you all know by whom. Let, therefore, satisfaction be made to the trader." Gave a string of wampum.

"Brethren—I have no more to say."

I delivered the goods to them, having first divided them into five shares. A share to the Senecas; another to the Cajukas, Oneidas, the Onontagers and Mohawks; another to the Delawares, another to the Ouandots, Zisagechroann and Mohickans, and the other to the Shawanese."

The Indians signified great satisfaction, and were well pleased with the cessation of arms. The rainy weather hastened them away with the goods into the house.

September 18th—The speech was delivered to the Delawares in their own language, and also to the Shawanese in theirs, by Andrew Montour, in the presence of the gentleman that accompanied me. I acquainted the Indians that I was determined to leave them to-morrow, and return homeward.

September 19th—Scaiohdy, Yanughrisson and Oniadazarehra, with a few more, came to my lodging and spoke as follows:

"Brother Onas—We desire you will hear what we are going to say to you, in behalf of all the Indians on Ohio; their deputies have sent us to you.

"We have heard what you have said to us, and we return you many thanks for your kindness in informing us of what passed between the king of Great Britain and the French king; and in particular, we return to you many thanks for the large presents; we do the same to our brother Assaraquoa, who joined our brother Onas in making us a present. Our brethren have indeed tied our hearts to theirs. We at present can but return thanks with an empty hand till another opportunity serves to do it sufficiently. We must call a great council, and do everything regularly, in the mean time, look upon us as your true brothers.

"Brother—You said the other day, in council, if anything befel us from the French, we must let you know it. We will let you know if we hear anything from the French, be it against us or yourself. You will have peace; but it is most certain that the Six Nations and their allies are upon the point of declaring war against the French. Let us keep up the correspondence, and always hear of one another." They gave a belt.

Scaiohady and the Half-king, with two others, had informed me that they often must send messengers to Indian towns and nations, and had nothing in their council bag, as they were new beginners, either to recompense a messenger or to get wampum to do the business, and begged I would assist them with something. I had saved a piece of strand, and half a barrel of powder, 100 pounds of lead, ten shirts, six knives and one pound of vermillion, and gave it to them for the aforesaid use. They returned many thanks and were mightily pleased.

The same day I set out for Pennsylvania, in rainy weather, and arrived at George Croghan's on the 28th instant.

Conrad Weiser.

Pennsburg,[1] Sept. 29th, 1748.[2]

Distances on the paths westward, according to John Harris.

There were several paths westward from the eastern portion of the province. John Harris, who had been westward prior to 1754, notices the following points, with the intermediate distances:

"From my Ferry* to George Croghad's (Croghan's), 5 miles; to Kittatinny mountain, 9; Thos. Mitchell's sleeping place, 3; Tuscarora, 14; Cove Spring, 10; Shadow of Death, 8; Black Log, 3—66 miles to this point. The road forks to Raystown† and Frankstown; we continued to Raystown.

To the Three Springs, 10; Sidling Hill Gap, 8; Juniata Hill, 8; Crossings at Juniata, 8; Snake's Spring, 8, Raystown, 4; Shawana cabins, 8; Allegheny hill, 6; Edmund's swamp, 8; Stony creek, 6; Kicheney Paulin's house‡ (Indian), 6; Clearfield's,§ 7; to the other side of Laurel hill, 5; Loyal Hanning, 6; Big Bottom, 8; Chestnut ridge, 8; to the parting of the roads, 4; thence one road leads to Shanoppintown,‖ the other to Kiscomenettas Old Town¶—to Big Lick, 3; Beaver dams, 6; James Dunning's sleeping place, 8; Cockeye's cabin, 8; Four Mile run, 11; Shanoppintown, on Allegheny river, 4; to Logstown down the river, 18; distance down the old road, 246 miles."

"Now beginning at the Black Log—Frankstown road to Aughwick, 6; Jack Armstrong's Narrows (so called from his being murdered there), 8; Standing Stone (about 14 feet high and 6 inches square), 10; at each of the last places we crossed Juniata—the next and last crossing of Juniata, 8; Branch of Juniata, 10; Big Lick, 10; Frank's (Stephen's) town, 5; Beaver dams, 10; Allegheny hill, 4; Clearfield's, 6; John Hart's sleeping place, 12; Shawanese cabins, 24; Shaver's sleeping place at two large licks,†† 12; Eighteen Mile run, 12; Ten Mile Lick, 6; to Kiscomenettas‡‡ town on the creek which runs into the Allegheny river six miles down, almost as large as Schuylkill, 10; Chartier's landing on the Allegheny, 8;" &c.§§

Hart's sleeping place.‖‖

"The man Hart, whose name is perpetuated, in connection with his log, by the valley we have spoken of, was an old German, who followed the occupation of trading among the Indians. He was probably the first permanent white settler along the 1 Cumberland county, seven or eight miles east of Carlisle.

2 Provincial Record Book L. P. 420–437.
* Near the present site of Harrisburg.
† Bedford.
‡ Site of Johnstown.
§ The Wheatfields, now East Wheatfield township and vicinity.
‖ At or near the site of Pittsburgh.
¶ Not far from Leechburg.
 Near Cherrytree or Canoe Place, Indiana county.
†† Two Licks, Green township, Indiana county, at or near the forks of Two Lick.
‡‡ At or near the site of Leechburg, Armstrong.
§§ J. D. Ropp in History of Cumberland and other counties.
‖‖ Jones' History of the Juniata Valley.

Juniata west of the Standing Stone; and long before he settled, he crossed and recrossed the Allegheny mountains by the old warpath, with his pack horses.

"'John Hart's Sleeping Place' is mentioned in 1756, by John Harris, in making an estimate of the distance between the rivers Susquehanna and Allegheny. Hart's Sleeping Place is about twelve miles from the junction of the Burgoon and Kitanning runs, and still retains its name. When he took up his residence along the river he hewed down an immense tree, and turned it into a trough, out of which he fed his horses and cattle; hence the name, 'Hart's Log.'

"It is stated that upon one occasion, when Hart was an old man, some savages came into his settlement on a pillaging expedition. They knew Hart, and went to his cabin, but he happened to be from home. On his log they left a tomahawk, painted red, and a small piece of plate upon which rude hieroglyphics were drawn—one resembling an Indian with a bundle upon his back, over whose head were seven strokes, and whose belt was filled with scalps. In front of this drawing was the sun rising, and behind them a picture of the moon.

"On Hart's return, he soon found that the Indians had been about. The meaning of the articles left, he could readily decipher. The red hatchet upon the log signified that Indians were about, but to him they laid down the hatchet. The picture of the rising sun signified that they were going to the east. The strokes indicated the number of warriors, and the bundle of scalps intimated that they would both plunder and murder. The moon signified that they would return at night.

"Hart, although he felt safe under such an assurance, had no desire to encounter the red skins, so he scratched upon the reverse of the slate the outline of a heart, and laid by the side of it a pipe, which, interpreted, meant, 'Hart smokes with you the pipe of peace,' and left.

"On his return next day, he found the Indians had returned, and passed the night at his log, where they had left a quantity of pewter platters, mugs, &c. It afterward appeared that they had been at several houses, but the inmates had fled. From one they stole a quantity of silver money, and at the house of a Dunkard, they stole the pewter ware. At the log they attempted to run the metal into bullets, but finding it a failure, they left the heavy load in disgust."

CHAPTER XIII.

DE CELORON'S EXPEDITION TO THE OHIO IN 1749—BURIAL OF THE LEADEN PLATES—THE INSCRIPTION—ONE OF THE PLATES DEPOSITED AT THE INDIAN GOD ROCK IN VENANGO COUNTY.

THE extensive territory lying between the Ohio river and Lake Erie has been the theatre of many remarkable historical changes. Its earliest inhabitants left no record of their origin or history, save in the numerous tumuli which are scattered over its surface, bearing trees of the largest growth, not distinguishable from the adjacent forest. Measured by the extent and character of those vast structures, the race that built them must have been intelligent and populous. When and how they disappeared, we know not. Whether they were directly succeeded by the present race of Indians, or by an intermediate people, are questions to which history gives no answer. When La Salle discovered the Ohio he found it in the occupation of the red man, who claimed possession and ownership over the territory comprised within the limits of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, until the close of the last century. His villages were on every stream, and his hunting grounds embraced every hill and valley.

The attractions of the fur trade stimulated Eastern adventurers to penetrate, from time to time, the forest recesses of the West, and glowing descriptions were reported of the fertile soil, mineral wealth, and the abundance of fur-bearing animals. It was not until England and France, the two great rival Powers of Europe, became impressed with the prospective growth and value of the territory, and each prepared to grasp the coveted prize, that the native owners of the soil began to take serious alarm. On the one side, England claimed to the northern lakes, while France asserted ownership not only as far south as the Ohio, but over all the lands drained by its extensive tributaries.

The treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, to which both of those powers were parties, while it terminated a long and sanguinary war in Europe, left many subjects of controversy still unsettled. Among them were the boundaries between the French and English in America. At the conclusion of that treaty England lost no time in initiating measures for the occupation and colonization of the disputed territory, and encouraged the formation of the Ohio Company as one of the efficient means for accomplishing that purpose. Half a million of acres were granted by the Crown to that association, to be selected mainly on the south side of the Ohio, between the Monongahela and the Kanawha rivers. This was coupled with the condition that settlements, protected by suitable forts, should be established on the grant. The French were equally alive on the subject, and the demonstrations of the English aroused the attention of the Marquis de la Galissoniere, a man of eminent ability and forethought, who was then Governor of Canada. In order to counteract the designs of the English he dispatched Captain Bienville de Celoron,* a chevalier of the order of St. Louis in command of a detachment, composed of eight subaltern officers, six cadets, an armorer, twenty soldiers, one hundred and eighty Canadians, thirty Iroquois and twenty-five Abenakis, with orders to descend the Ohio, and take possession of the country in the name of the King. The principal officers under him were de Contrecoeur, who had been in command of Fort Niagara, and Coulon de Villiers, one of seven brothers, six of whom lost their lives in the Canadian wars. Contrecoeur was subsequently in command of Fort du Quesne, at or immediately after the defeat of Braddock.

The present article is to give an account of that expedition, to trace its route and to identify as far as possible the geographical points which it visited. Only brief notices of the undertaking have heretofore been given to the public. The discovery of some of the leaden plates, buried by its officers on the banks of the Ohio, have from time to time awakened public interest and curiosity, which the meagre accounts already published have failed to satisfy. While recently examining the archieves of the Department de la Marine in Paris the writer met with the original manuscript journal kept by de Celoron during his entire voyage. He also found in the Grandes Archives of the Depot de la Marine, No. 17 rue de l'Universite a manuscript diary of Father Bonnecamps, who styles himself "Jesuitte Mathematicien," and who seems to have been the chaplain, as well as a kind of sailing master of the expedition, keeping a daily record of the courses and distances they traveled, the latitudes and longitudes of the principal geographical points, with occasional brief notes of the most important occurrences. In another department, called the Bibliotheque du depot de la Marine, there was found a large Ms. map, 31½ by 34½ inches square, representing the country through which the expedition passed, including the St. Lawrence westward of Montreal, Lakes Erie and Ontario, the territory south of those lakes as far as the Ohio, and the whole course of that river from the source of the Allegheny to the mouth of the Great Miami. This map forms an important illustration of the expedition. On it are delineated by appropriate characters the points where leaden plates were deposited, where the latitudes and longitudes were observed, and the localities of the Indian villages visited on the route.

*This name is usually spelled Celeron, but incorrectly. M. Freland, in his Cours d'Histoire du Canada, vol. ii. p. 493, calls him Celoron de Blainville.

The journals of de Celoron and Father Bonnecamps, and the map of the latter, have furnished the ground-work of the narrative. Explanatory and historical notes, drawn from other surces, have occasionally been added.

The first of the leaden plates was brought to the attention of the public in a letter addressed by Governor George Clinton to the Lords of Trade in London, dated New York, December 19th, 1750, in which he states that he "would send to their Lordships in two or three weeks, a plate of lead, full of writing, which some of the upper nations of Indians stole from Jean Coeur,* the French interpreter at Niagara, on his way to the river Ohio, which river, and all the lands thereabouts, the French claim, as will appear by said writing." He further states "that the lead plate gave the Indians so much uneasiness that they immediatly dispatched some of the Cayuga chiefs to him with it, saying that their only reliance was on him, and earnestly begged he would communicate the contents thereof to them, which he had done, much to their satisfaction and the interests of the English." The Governor concludes by saying that the "contents may be of great importance in clearing up the encroachments which the French have made on the British Empire in America."† The plate was delivered to Colonel, afterwards Sir William Johnson, on the 4th of December, 1750, at his residence on the Mohawk, by a Cayuga Sachem, who accompanied it by the following speech:

"Brother Corlear and War-ragh-i-ya-ghey:‡ I am sent here by the Five Nations with a piece of writing, which the Senecas, our brethren, got by some artifice from Jean Coeur, earnestly beseeching you will let us know what it means, and as we put all our confidence in you, our brother, we hope you will explain it ingeniously to us." Colonel Johnson replied to the Sachem, and through him to the Five Nations, returning a belt of wampum, and explaining the inscription on the plate. He told them that "it was a matter of the greatest consequence, involving the possession of their lands and hunting grounds, and that Jean Coeur and the French ought immediately to be expelled from the Ohio and Niagara." In reply, the Sachem said that "he had heard with great attention and surprise the substance of the 'Devilish writing' he had brought," and that Colonel Johnson's remarks "were fully approved." He promised that belts from each of the Five Nations should be sent from the Senecas' castle to the Indians at the Ohio, to warn and strengthen them against the French encroachments in that direction.

The following is a literal copy of the inscription in question. It was sent by Governor Clinton to the Lords of Trade on the 17th of January, 1751:

"L'AN 1749 DV REGNE DE LOVIS XV ROY DE FRANCE, NOVS CELORON, COMMANDANT D'VN DETACHMENT ENVOIE PAR MONSIEVR LE MIS. DE LA GALLISSONIERE, COMMANDANT GENERAL DE LA NOUVELLE FRANCE POVR RETABLIR LA TRANQUILLITE DANS QUELQUES VILLAGES SAUVAGES DE CES CANTONS, AVONS ENTERRE CETTE PLAQUE AU CONFLUENT DE L'OHIO ET DE TCHADAKION CE 29 JVILLET, PRES DE LA RIVIERE OYO AUTREMENT BELLE RIVIERE POUR MONUMENT DU RENOUNELLEMENT DE POSSESSION QUE NOUS AVONS PRIS DE LA DITTE RIVIERE OYO, ET DE TOUTES CELLES QUI Y TOMBENT, ET DE TOUTES LES TERRES DES DEUX COTES JVSQVE AVX SOURCES DES DITEES RIVERES AINSI QV'EN ONT JOVI OU DV JOVIR LES PRECEDENTS ROIS DE FRANCE, ET QU'ILS S'Y SONT MAINTENVS PAR LES ARMES ET PAR LES TRAITTES, SPECIALEMENT PAR CEVX DE RISWICK, D'VTRECHT ET D'AIX LA CHAPELLE."

The above is certified to be "a true copy" by "Peter De Joncourt, interpreter."

TRANSLATION.

"In the year 1749, of the reign of Louis the 15th, King of France, we, Cèloron, commander of a detachment sent by Monsieur the Marquis de la Galissoniére, Governor General of New France, to reëstablish tranquility in some Indian villages of these cantons, have buried this Plate of Lead at the confluence of the Ohio and the Chatauqua, this 29th day of July, near the river Ohio, otherwise Belle Riviere, as a monument of the renewal of the possession we have taken of the said river Ohio, and of all those which empty into it, and of all the lands on both sides as far as the sources of the said rivers, as enjoyed, or ought to have been enjoyed by the kings of France preceding, as they have there maintained themselves by arms and by treaties, especially those of Ryswick, Utrecht, and Aix la Chapelle."

On the 29th of January, 1751, Governor Clinton sent a copy of the above inscription to Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania, informing him that it was "taken from a plate stolen, from Joncaire some months since in the Seneca country as he was going to the river Ohio."*

The expedition was provided with a number of leaden plates about eleven inches long, seven and a half inches wide, and one-eighth of an inch thick, on each of which an inscription in French, similar to the one above given, was engraved or stamped in capital letters, with blanks left for the insertion of the names of rivers, at the confluence of which with the Ohio they should be deposited, and the dates of their deposit. The name of the artist, Paul de Brosse, was engraved on the reverse of each. Thus provided, the expedition left La Chine on the 15th of June, 1749, and ascended the St. Lawrence to Fort Frontenac. From thence, coasting along the eastern and southern shore of Lake Ontario, they arrived at Fort Niagara on the 6th of July. They reached the portage at Lewiston on the 7th and ascended the Niagara into Lake Erie. On the 14th, after advancing a few miles up the lake, they were compelled by a strong wind to encamp on the south shore. They embarked early on the morning of the 15th, hoping to reach the portage of "Chatakouin" the same day, but an adverse wind again forced them to land.

The southern shore of the lake at this point is described as "extremely shallow, with no shelter from the force of winds, involving great risk of shipwreck in landing, which is increased by large rocks, extending more than three-fourths of a mile from the shore." Celoron's canoe struck on one, and he would inevitably have been drowned, with all on board, had not prompt assistance been rendered. On the 16th, at noon, they arrived at Chatakouin portage. This was an open road-stead, where the United States Government, many years ago, attempted unsuccessfully to construct a safe harbor. It is now known as Barcelona or Portland. As soon as all preparations were made for the overland passage, and the canoes all loaded, Mm. de Villiers and le Borgne were dispatched with fifty men to clear the way, while Celoron examined the situation of the place, in order to ascertain its fitness for the establishment of a Post. He says: "I found it ill-adapted for such a purpose, as well from its position as from its relation to the navigation of the lake. The water is so shallow that barks standing in cannot approach within a league of the portage. There being

*Joncaire.
†N. Y. Col. Doc. vi. p. 604.
‡The Indian name of Sir William Johnson. It signifies "Superintendent of Affairs."

*V Penn. Col. Records, p. 508.

no island or harbor to which they could resort for shelter, they would be under the necessity of riding at anchor and discharging their loading by batteaux. The frequency of squalls would render it a place of danger. Besides, there are no Indian villages in the vicinity. In fact, they are quite distant, none being nearer than Ganaougon and Paille Coupee. In the evening Mm. de Villiers and le Borgue returned to lodge at the camp, having cleared the way for about three-quarters of a league." Up to this time, the usual route of the French to the Mississippi had been by the way of Detroit, Green Bay, the Wisconsin, Lake Michigan and the Illinois river. They had five villages on the Mississippi, near the mouth of the Illinois, as early as 1749.

"On the 17th," continues the Journal, "at break of day, we began the portage, the prosecution of which was vigorously maintained. All the canoes, provisions, munitions of war, and merchandise intended as presents to the Indians bordering on the Ohio, were carried over the three-quarters of a league which had been rendered passable the day previous. The route was exceedingly difficult, owing to the numerous hills and mountains which we encountered. All my men were very much fatigued. We established a strong guard, which was continued during the entire campaign, not only for the purpose of security, but for teaching the Canadians a discipline which they greatly needed. We continued our advance on the 14th, but bad weather prevented our making as much progress as on the preceding day. I consoled myself for the delay, as it was caused by a rain which I greatly desired, as it would raise the water in the river sufficient to float our loaded canoes. On the 19th, the rain having ceased, we accomplished half a league. On the 20th and 21st we continued our route with great diligence, and arrived at the end of the portage on the banks of Lake Chatacoin on the 22d. The whole distance may be estimated at four leagues. Here I repaired my canoes and recruited my men."

It is a little over eight miles, in a direct line, from the mouth of Chautauqua Creek, on Lake Erie, to the head of Chautauqua Lake. The route taken by the expedition would of course be more, and probably equal to the four leagues, or ten miles, stated by Celoron. The difficulties they encountered must have been exceedingly formidable. Chautauqua lake is 726 feet above Lake Erie, and in order to reach the water-shed between the two lakes, an ascent of at least one thousand feet had to be overcome. Although at that early day, when the forests were yet undisturbed, the Chautauqua creek flowed with fuller banks than now, yet even then but little use could be made of it by loaded canoes, except near its mouth. The portage could only be accomplished for the greater part of the way by carrying the canoes, baggage, provisions, and supplies on the shoulders of the men up the steep mountain sides to the summit, from which the waters flowed southward into Chautauqua Lake. Looking back from this elevation, a magnificent panorama must have presented itself to Celoron and his companions. Lake Erie lay at their feet, with the Canada shore, forty miles distant, in plain sight, while the extremities of that great inland sea, extending east and west, were lost below the horizon.

The expedition did not loiter long on the banks of Chautauqua Lake. On the 23d they launched their bark flotilla on its clear, cool waters, and paddling southeastward through the lake, passed the narrows at what are now known as Long and Bemus Points. The shape of the lake is quite peculiar. Its northwestern and southeastern extremities, which are nearly equal, and comprise the greater part of the lake, are connected by two short, irregular straits, between which nestles a small, beautiful bay. The singular configuration of the whole gives plausibility to the interpretation of the Indian name, Chautauqua, which is said to signify, "a sack tied in the middle."

On the evening of the 23d of July the expedition encamped on shore within three miles of the outlet. The lake is stated by Celron to be "nine leagues," or about twenty-two miles long. The actual length is less than sixteen. Distances are almost always overstated by the early French voyageurs in America. In the evening a party of Indians, who had been engaged during the day in fishing in the lake, reported they had seen the enemy watching them from the adjacent forest. They had fled as soon as discovered. Early on the morning of the 24th the expedition entered the outlet, a narrow stream, winding through a deep morass, bordered by a tall forest, which over-arching the way, almost shut out the light of day. The water being found quite low, in order to lighten the canoes, they sent the greater part of their loading about three-quarters of a league by land, over a path pointed out by the Sieur de Saussaye, who was acquainted with the country.* The distance they accomplished this day by water did not exceed half a league. It probably carried them through the swamp as far as the highland in the neighborhood of the present village of Jamestown. The next day, before resuming their march, Celoron deemed it expedient to convene a council to consider what should be done in view of the evident signs of an enemy in the vicinity, who, on being discovered, had abandoned their canoes and effects and fled, carrying the alarm to the adjacent village of Paille Coupee. The council decided to dispatch Lieutenant Joncaire, some Abenakis, and three Iroquois, with three belts, to assure the fugitives of the friendly object of the expedition. After the departure of the embassy the march was resumed over the rapids, with which the outlet abounded.

"We proceeded," says the Journal, "about a league with great difficulty. In many places I was obliged to assign forty men to each canoe to facilitate their passage. On the 26th and 27th we continued our voyage, not without many obstacles; notwithstanding all our precautions to guard our canoes, they often sustained great injury by reason of the shallow water. On the 29th, at noon, I entered the 'La Belle Riviere.' I buried a plate of lead at the foot of a red oak on the south bank of the river Oyo (Ohio) and of the Chanougon, not far from the village of Kanaouagon, in latitude 42° 5' 23"."† It is unnecessary to give a copy of the inscription on the above plate, as it is similar to the one which was sent to Governor Clinton, as before related, except slight variations in the spelling, accents, and arrangement of lines. The three plates which thus far have been discovered present the same differences. The places and dates of deposit are coarsely engraved, evidently with a knife. In the one just described the blanks were filled with the words: "Au confluent de l'Ohio et Kanaaiagon, le 29 Juillet."

"At the confluence of the Ohio and Kanaaiagon, the 29th of July."

The river, spelled "Kanaaiagon" on the plate, "Chanougon" by Celoron in his Journal, and "Kananouangon," on Bonnecamps' map, is a considerable stream that rises in western New York, and after receiving the Chautauqua outlet as a tributary, empties into the Allegheny just above the village of Warren. It is now known as the Conewango. On the site of Warren, at the northwesterly angle of the two rivers, there was, at the time of Céleron's visit, an Indian village, composed principally of Senecas, with a few Loups, bearing the name of Kanaouagon. It was opposite the mouth of the Conewango, on the south bank of the Allegheny, that the leaden plate was buried. The following is Father Bonnecamps' entry in his diary:

*N. Y. Col. Doc. ix, p. 1097.

†This observation, like most of those taken by Father Bonnecamps, is incorrect. Either his instruments were imperfect or his methods of compution erroneous. The true latitude of the mouth of the Conewango is less than 41° 50', as it is about twelve miles south of the boundary line between New York and Pennsylvania.

"L'on a enterre une lame de plomp, avec une inscription, sur la rive meridonale de cette riviere, et vis-a-vis le confluent des deux rivieres." "We buried a leaden plate, bearing an inscription, on the south bank of this river, and opposite the confluence of the two rivers."

The place of deposit is a little differently described in the Procés Verbal drawn up on the occasion. "Au pied d'un chene rouge, sur la rive meridionale de la riviere Ohio, et vis-a-vis la pointe d'une ilette, ou se joignet les deux rivieres Ohio et Kanaaugon." "At the foot of a red oak, on the south bank of the Ohio river, and opposite the point of a small island, at the confluence of the two rivers Ohio and Kanaougon." It will be noticed that the inscription on the plate recites that it was buried on the south side of the Ohio, opposite the mouth of the "Chanougon" (Conewango).

This presents a discrepancy between the inscriptions as given in the journals of Céleron and Bonnecamps, and the one on the plate forwarded by Colonel Johnson to Governor Clinton in 1751, as above described. The latter states it to have been buried "at the confluence of the Ohio and Tchadakoin." The solution of the difficulty seems to be that the latter plate was never buried or used, but was abstracted by the Iroquois friendly to the English, and another plate, having a correct inscription, was substituted by the French. The inscription on the one sent to Governor Clinton, was undoubtedly prepared on the supposition that the Chautauqua outlet emptied into the Ohio. But when that outlet was found to be a tributary of the Conewango, and that the latter emptied into the Ohio, a corrected plate, containing the name of the Conewango instead of the Chautauqua, was substituted and buried, as stated in Celoron's journal.* The latter plate has never been found. This solution is strengthened by the fact that none of the accounts of the plate sent to Governor Clinton state that it had been buried, or had been dug up. The Cayuga Sachem, in his speech quoted in Colonel Johnson's letter of December 4th, 1750, states that "the Senecas got it by some artifice from Jean Coeur."

Governor Clinton, in his letter to the Lords of Trade, states that some of the upper nations, which include the Senecas, "stole it from Jean Coeur, the French interpreter at Niagara, on his way to the river Ohio." The Governor states the same in substance in his letter to Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania. The theft must therefore have occurred while the expedition was on its way to the Ohio, and before any of the plates were buried. The original plate was probably soon after carried to England by Governor Clinton. The names "Chatacoin" and "Chatakouin," as spelled by Céleron in his journal, and "Tchadakoin," as inscribed on the plate, and "Tjadakoin," as spelled by Bonnecamps on his map, are all variations of the modern name Chautauqua. It will be found differently written by several early authors. Pouchot writes it "Shatacoin;" Lewis Evans, 1758, "Jadachque;" Sir William Johnson, "Jadaghque;" Mitchell, 1755, "Chadocoin;" Alden, as pronounced by Cornplanter, "Chaud-dauk-wa." It is a Seneca name, and the orthography of that nation, according to the system of the late Reverend Asher Wright, long a missionary among them, and a fluent speaker of their language, it would be written "Jah-dah-gwah," the first two vowels being long and the last short. Different significations have been ascribed to the word. It is said to mean "the place where a child was swept away by the waves." The late Dr. Peter Wilson, an educated Seneca, and a graduate of Geneva Medical College, told the writer that it signified literally, "where the fish was taken out."

He related an Indian tradition connected with its origin. A party of Senecas were returning from the Ohio to Lake Erie. While paddling through Chautauqua Lake, one of them caught a strange fish and tossed it into his canoe. After passing the portage into lake Erie, they found the fish still alive, and threw it in the water. From that time the species became abundant in Lake Erie, where one was never known before. Hence, they called the place where it was caught, "Jah-dah-gwah, the elements of which are "Ga-joh," fish, and "Ga-dah-gwah," "taken out." By dropping the prefixes, according to Seneca custom, the compound name "Jah-dah-gwah" was formed. Among other significations which have been assigned to the word, but without any authority, may be mentioned "the elevated place," and "the foggy place," in allusion, probably, to the situation of the lake, and the mists which prevail on its surface at certain seasons.

It will be noticed the Allegheny is called by Celeron the Ohio, or "La Belle Riviere." This is in accordance with the usage of all early French writers since the discovery of the river by La Salle. The same custom prevailed among the Senecas. They have always considered the Allegheny as the Ohio proper. If you ask a Seneca his name for that river, he will answer O-hee-yuh. If you ask him its meaning, he will give it as "Beautiful river."

Mr. Heckewelder, the Moravian missionary, supposing the word to be of Delaware origin, endeavors to trace its etymology from several words, signifying in that language, the white foaming river." The late Judge Hall, of Cincinnati, adopted the same derivation. Neither of them seem to have been aware that it is a genuine Seneca word, derived from that nation by the French, and by the latter written "Ohio." Its pronunciation by a Frenchman would exactly represent the word as spoken by a Seneca, the letter "i" being sounded like e. The name "Ohio" was, therefore, correctly inserted on the plates buried on the banks of the Allegheny, above its junction with the Monongahela at Pittsburgh.

At the time the plate was interred opposite the mouth of the Conewango, as already narrated, all the officers and men of the expedition being drawn up in battle array, the chief in command proclaimed in a loud voice "Vive le Roi" and that possession was now taken of the country in the name of the King. The royal arms were affixed to a neighboring tree, and a Proces Verbal was drawn up and signed as a memorial of the ceremony. The same formality was adopted at the burial of each succeeding plate. This process verbal was in the following form, and in each instance was signed and witnessed by the officers present: "L'an, 1749, nous Celoron, Chevalier de l' ordre Royal et militaire de St. Louis, Capitaine Cammandant un detachement envoye par les ordres de M. le Marquis de Gallissonniere, Cammandant General en Canada, dans la Belle Riviere accompagne des principaux officers de notre detachment, avons enterre (here was inserted the place of deposit) une plaque de plomb, et fait attacher dans le meme lieu, a un arbre, les Armes du Roi. En foy de quoi, nous avons dresse et signe, avec M. M. les officiers, le present Proces verbal a notre camp, le (day of the month) 1749." "In the year 1749, we, Celoron, Chevalier of the Royal and military order of St. Louis, commander of a detachment sent by order of the Marquis of Galissoniere, Governor General of Canada, to the Ohio, in presence of the principal officers of our detachment, have buried (here was inserted the place of deposit) a leaden plate, and in the same place have affixed to a tree the Arms of the King. In testimony whereof we have drawn up and signed, with the officers, the present Proces verbal, at our camp, the (day of the month) 1749." This method of asserting sovereignty over new territory is peculiar to the French, and was often adopted by them. La Salle, at the mouth of the Mississippi in 1682, thus proclaimed the dominion of Louis de Grann, and more recently the same formality was observed when a French squadron took possession of some islands in the Pacific Ocean.

A few miles from Kanaouagon, on the right bank of the

*On Crevecoeur's Map of 1758, Depots des Cartes, Ministerie de la Guerre, Paris, the Conewango is called the "Chatacouin" as far down as its junction with the Allegheny.

Allegheny, just below its junction with the Brokenstraw creek, was the Indian village of "Paille Coupee," or Cut Straw, the name being given by Celoron as Kachuiodagon, occupied principally by Senecas. The English name "Broken Straw," and the French name, Coupee, were both probably derived from the Seneca name, which is De-ga-syo-noh-dyah-goh, which signifies literally broken straw. Kachuiodagon, as given by Celoron, and Koshenunteagunk, as given on the Historical Map of Pennsylvania, and the Seneca name, are all three the same word in different orthography, the variation in the first two being occasioned by the difference between the French and English mode of spelling the same Indian word. Father Bonnecamps states the village to be in latitude 41° 54′ 5″ and longitude 79° 13′ west of Paris.

While the expedition was resting in the vicinity of these two Indian villages, a council was held with the inhabitants, conducted by Joncaire, whom Celoron states had been adopted by the Seneas, and possessed great influence and power over them. They addressed him in the council as "our child Joncaire." He was probably the person of that name met by Washington at Venango four years afterwards,* and a son of the Joncaire mentioned by Charlevoix as living at Lewiston on the Niagara in 1721, "who possessed the wit of a Frenchman and the sublime eloquence of an Iroquois." The father, who was a captive, died in 1740, leaving two half-breed sons, who seem to have inherited his influence and distinction. Their names were Chabert Joncaire, Junior, and Philip Clauzone de Joncaire. Both were in the French service, and brought reinforcements from the west to Fort Niagara at the time it was besieged by Sir William Johnson in 1759. Their names are affixed to the capitulation which took place a few days later. The former was in command of Fort Schlosser, his brother, who was a captain in the marine, being with him. They were both in the expedition of Celoron.

The result of the council held by Joncaire was not satisfactory to the French. It was very evident there was a strong feeling among the Indians on the Allegheny in favor of the English. It did not, however, prevent the French from descending the river. After pledging the Senecas in a cup of "Onontios milk" (brandy), the expedition left the villages of Kannouagon and Paille Coupee on the first day of August, and after proceeding about four leagues below the latter, reached a village of Loups and Renards, composed of ten cabins. The Loups† were a branch of the Delawares, called by the English, Munceys. Four or five leagues further down they passed another small village, consisting of six cabins, and on the third of August another of ten cabins. The next was a village on the "Riviere aux Boeufs." According to Father Bonnecamps, they passed between Paille Coupee and Riviere aux Boeufs one village on the left and four on the right, the lititude of the third on the right being 41° 30′ 30″, and the longitude 79° 21′ west of Paris. The Riviere aux Boeufs is now known as French creek, it having been so called by Washington on his visit there in 1753. The English named it Venango. A fort was built by the French in 1753–4, on its western bank, sixty rods below its junction with the Allegheny, called Fort Machault. In 1760, when the English took possession, they built another, forty rods higher up, and nearer the mouth of French creek, which they called Fort Venango. In 1787 the United States Government sent a force to protect the settlers, and built a fort on the south side of the creek, half a mile above its mouth, which was called Fort Franklin. From all of which it appears that this was at an early day an important point on the river.‡ It is now the site of the flourishing village of Franklin. At the time of Celeron's visit, the Indian village numbered about ten cabins.

After passing the Riviere aux Boeufs and another on the left, the expedition reached on the same day a bend in the river about nine miles below, on the left or eastern bank of which lay a large boulder, nearly twenty-two feet in length by fourteen in breadth, on the inclined face of which were rude inscriptions, evidently of Indian workmanship, representing by various symbols the triumphs of the race in war and in the chase. It was regarded by the natives attached to the expedition as an "Indian God," and held in superstitious reverence. It was a well known landmark, and did not fail to arrest the attention of the French. Celoron deemed it a favorable point at which to bury his second plate. This was done with due form and ceremony, the plate bearing an inscription similar to that on the first, differing only in the date and designation of the place of deposit. Celoron's record is as follows: "Aout 3me, 1749. Enterre une plaque de plomp sur la rive meridionale de la riviere Oyo, a 4 lieues, au dessous de la riviere aux boeufs, vis-a-vis une montagne pelle, et aupres d'une grosse pierre, sur laquelle on voit plusieurs figures assez grossierement gravees." "Buried a leaden plate on the south bank of the Ohio river, four leagues below the river Aux Boeufs, opposite a bald mountain, and near a large stone, on which are many figures rudely engraved."

Father Bonnecamps states the deposit to have been made under a large rock. An excellent view of the rock in question, with a fac-simile of the hieroglyphics on its face, may be found in Schoolcraft's work on the "Indian Tribes in the United States," Vol. VI, p. 172. It was drawn by Captain Eastman of the U. S. Army while standing waist deep in the river, its banks being then nearly full. At the time of the spring and fall freshets the rock is entirely submerged. The abrasion of its exposed surface by ice and flood-wood in winter has almost obliterated the rude carvings. At the time of Celoron's visit it was entirely uncovered. It is called "Hart's rock" on Hutchings' Topographical Map of Virginia. The distance of "four leagues" from the mouth of the river Aux Boeufs, or French Creek, to the rock, as given by Celoron, is, as usual, a little exaggerated. The actual distance by the windings of the river is about nine miles. The league as used by Celoron may be estimated as containing about two miles and a half. The leaden plate deposited at this point has never been found, and some zealous antiquarian living in the vicinity might, from the record now given, be able to restore it to light, after a repose of more than a century and a quarter.

From this station Celoron sent Joncaire forward to Attaigue the next day to announce the approach of the expedition, it being an Indian settlement of some importance on the left bank of the river, between eight and nine leagues further down, containing twenty-two cabins. Before reaching Attiguè they passed a river three or four leagues from the Aux Boeufs, the confluence of which with the Allegheny is described as "very beautiful," and a league further down another, having on its upper waters some villages of Loups and Iroquois.

Attiguè was probably on or near the Kiskiminitas river, which falls into the south side of the Allegheny about twenty-five miles above Pittsburgh. It is called the river d'Attigue by Montcalm, in a letter dated in 1758.* There were several Indian villages on its banks at that date. They reached Attigue on the 6th, where they found Joncaire waiting Embarking together they passed on the right an old "Chaouanons" (Shawnees) village. It had not been occupied by the Indians since the removal of Chartier and his band to the river Vermillion in the Wabash country in 1745, by order of the Marquis de Beauharnois. Leaving Antigue the next day, they passed

*Governor Clinton, in his address before the New York Historical Society in 1811, inquires if the Joncaire met by Charlevoix and Washington were the same. They could not have been, for the one mentioned by Charlevoix died in 1740.

†Pronounced Loos.

‡These facts were obtained by Mr. Marshall from Dr. Eaton, of Franklin.

*N. Y. Col. Doc., IX, 1025; X, ib, 901.

a village of Loups, all the inhabitants of which, except three Iroquois, and an old woman who was regarded as Queen, and devoted to the English, had fled in alarm to Chiningué. This village of the Loups, Celoron declares to be the finest he saw on the river. It must have been situated at or near the present site of Pittsburgh. The description of the place, like many given by Celoron, is so vague that it is impossible to identify it with any certainty. The clear, bright current of the Allegheny, and the sluggish, turbid stream of the Monongahela, flowed together to form the broad Ohio, their banks clothed in luxuriant summer foliage, must have presented to the voyagers a scene strikingly picturesque, one which would hardly have escaped the notice of the chief of the expedition. If, therefore, the allusion to "the finest place on the river" has no reference to the site of Pittsburgh, then no mention is made of it whatever. On landing three leagues farther down, they were told by some of their Indians that they had passed a rock on which were some inscriptions. Father Bonnecamps and Joncaire, who were sent to examine it, reported nothing but some English names written in charcoal. This was near the second entrepot of the English.

Their camp being only two leagues above Chiningue, they were enabled to reach the latter the next day. They found the village one of the largest on the river, consisting of fifty cabins of Iroquois, Shawnese and Loups; also Iroquois from the Sault St. Louis and Lake of the Two Mountains, with some Nippissingues, Abenakis and Ottawas. Bonnecamp estimated the number of cabins at eighty, and says, "we called it Chiningue, from its vicinity to a river of that name. He records its latitude as 40° 35′ 10″ which is nearly correct, and longitude as 80° 19′. The place was subsequently known as "Logstown," a large and flourishing village which figures prominently in Indian history for many years after this period. Colonel Croghan, who was sent to the Ohio Indians by Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania, in August, 1749, mentions in his journal that "Monsieur Calaroon with two hundred French soldiers, had passed through Logstown just before his arrival."* Croghan inquired of the inhabitants the object of the expedition, and was told by them that "it was to drive the English away, and by burying iron plates, with inscriptions on them at the mouth of each remarkable creek, to steal away their country."

On reaching Chiningue Celoron found several English traders established there, whom he compelled to leave. He wrote by them to Governor Hamilton, under date of August 6th, 1749, that he was surprised to find English traders on French territory, it being in controvention of solemn treaties, and hoped the Governor would forbid their trespassing in future. De Celoron also made a speech, in which he informed the Indians that "he was on his way down the Ohio to whip home the Twightwees and Wyandots for trading with the English." They treated his speech with contempt, insisting that "to separate them from the English would be like cutting a man into halves, and expecting him to live."† The Indians were found so unfriendly to the French, and suspicious of the objects of the expedition, as to embarrass the movements of de Celoron. His Iroquois and Abenaki allies refused to accompany him farther than Chiningue. They destroyed the plates which, bearing the arms of the French King, had been affixed to trees as memorials of his sovereignty.

After leaving Chiningue, they passed two rivers, one on either side, and crossing the present boundry line between Pennsylvania and Ohio, reached the river Kanououara early on the 13th. Here they interred the third leaden plate, with the usual inscription and customary ceremonies. The blank in the plate was filled as follows: "Enterre a l'entre de la riviere, et sur la rive Septentrionale de Kanououara, qui se decharge a l'est de la riviere Oyo." "Buried at the mouth and on the north bank of the river Kanououara, which empties into the easterly side of the Ohio river." Neither Celoron nor Bonnecamps gives such a description of the locality as to warrant a positive identification of the site. The plate was probably buried on the northerly bank of Wheeling creek, at its junction with the Ohio, in the present State of West Virginia, and near where Fort Henry was subsequently built in 1774. No vestige of the plate has been discovered so far as known.

The expedition resumed its voyage on the 14th, passing the mouths of three streams, two on the left and one on the right. Deer abounded along the banks. Two of the rivers are stated to be strikingly beautiful at their junction with the Ohio. On the 15th they arrived at the mouth of the Muskingum, called by Father Bonnecamps, Yenanguakonnan, and encamped on the shore. Here the fourth leaden plate was buried on the right bank of that river, at its junction with the Ohio. Celoron describes the place of deposit as follows: "Enterre au pied d'un erable, qui forme trepied avec une chene rouge et un orme, a l'entree de la riviere Yenanguakonan, sur la rive occidentale de cette riviere." "Buried at the foot of a maple, which forms a triangle with a red oak and elm, at the mouth of the river Yenanguakonan, and on its western bank."

In 1798, half a century later, some boys, who were bathing at the mouth of the Muskingum, discovered something projecting from the perpendicular face of the river bank, three or four feet below the surface. With the aid of a pole they loosened it from its bed, and found it to be a leaden plate, stamped with letters in an unknown language. Unaware of its historic value, and being in want of lead, then a scarce article in the new country, they carried it home and cast a part of it into bullets. News of the discovery of so curious a relic having reached the ears of a resident of Marietta, he obtained possession of it, and found the inscription to be in French. The boys had cut off quite a large part of the inscription, but enough remained to indicate its character. It subsequently passed into the hands of Caleb Atwater, the historian, who sent it to Governor De Witt Clinton. The latter presented it to the Antiquarian Society of Massachusetts, in the library of which it is now deposited. A poor fac-simile of the fragment is given in Hildreth's Pioneer History of the Ohio Valley, on page 20. It appears to have been substantially the same as the other plates which have been discovered, with the exception of a different arrangement of the lines. The place of deposit is given as "riviere Yenangue" on the part of the plate which was rescued from the boys. Mr. Atwater, Gov. Clinton, and several historians, misled by the similarity between the names "Yenangue" and "Venango," supposed that it had originally been deposited at Venango, an old Indian town at the mouth of French Creek in Pennsylvania, one hundred and thirty miles above the mouth of the Muskingum, and had been carried down by a freshet, or removed by some party to the place where it was discovered. The journal of de Celoron removes all doubt on the subject, and conclusively establishes the fact that the plate was originally deposited where it was found, on the site where old Fort Harmer was subsequently built, and opposite the point where the village of Marietta is now situated.

After the deposit of the fourth plate was completed, the expedition broke up their forest camp, embarked in their canoes, and resumed the descent of the river. About three-fourths of a mile below the Muskingum, Father Bonnecamps took some observations, and found the latitude to be 39° 36′. and the longitude 81° 20′ west of Paris. They accomplished twelve leagues on the 16th, and on the 17th, embarking early, they passed two fine rivers, one on each side, the names of which are not given. On the 18th, after an early start, they were arrested by the rain at the mouth of the Great Kanawha, which is called by Father Bonnecamps "Chinodaichta." The bank of this large stream, flowing from the southeast, and draining an extensive territory, was chosen for the deposit of the fifth plate. Only a brief record of the ceremony is given. A copy of the inscription is omitted by Celoron, but his record of the interment of the plate is as follows: "Enterree au pied d'un orme, sur la rive meridionale de l'Oyo, et la rive orientale de Chinondaista, le 18 Aout, 1749." "Buried at the foot of an elm, on the south bank of the Ohio, and on the east bank of the Chinondaista, the 18th day of August, 1749.

*N. Y. Col. Doc., VII, p. 267.

†N. Y. Col. Doc., VI, pp. 532-3.

Fortunately the discovery of the plate in March, 1846, leaves no doubt of the inscription. It was found by a boy while playing on the margin of the Kanawha river. Like that at the mouth of the Muskingum, it was projecting from the river bank, a few feet below the surface. Since the time it was buried, an accumulation of soil had been deposited above it by the annual river freshets for nearly one hundred years. The day of the deposit, as recorded on the plate, corresponds precisely with the one stated by de Celoron. The spelling of the Indian name of the river differs slightly from the journal, that on the plate being "Chinodahichetha." Kanawha, the Indian name of the river in another dialect, is said to signify "the river of the woods." The place selected by Celoron for the interment of the plate must have been one of surpassing beauty. The native forest, untouched by the pioneer, and crowned with the luxuriant foliage of Northern Kentucky, covered the banks of both rivers, and the picturesque scenery justified the name of "Point Pleasant," which was afterward bestowed by the early settlers. On the 16th day of October, 1774, it became the scene of a bloody battle between an army of Virginians, commanded by Colonel Lewis, and a large force of western Indians, under the leadership of the celebrated Cornstalk, Logan and others, in which the latter were defeated."

The expedition was detained at this point by the rain. It re-embarked on the 20th, and when they had proceeded about three leagues, Father Bonnecamps took the latitude and longitude, which he records at 38° 39′ 57″ for the former, and 82° 01′ for the latter. Joncaire was sent forward the next day with two chiefs from the Sault St. Louis, and two Abenakis, to propitiate the inhabitants of "St. Yotoc," a village they were now approaching. They embarked early on the morning of the 22d, and reached St. Yotoc the same day. This village was composed of Shawnees, Iroquois, Loups, and Miamis, and Indians from the Sault St. Louis, Lake of the Two Mountains, as well as representatives from nearly all the nations of the "upper country." The name "St. Yotoc" seems to be neither French nor Indian. It is probably a corruption of Scioto. Father Bonnecamps calls it "Sinhioto" on his map. He records the latitude of the south bank of the Ohio, opposite its mouth, at 38° 50′ 24″, and the longitude 82° 22′. Pouchot, in his Memoires sur la derniere guerre," French edition, vol. III., page 182, calls the river "Sonhioto." This village of St. Yotoc, or Scioto, was probably on the north bank of the Ohio, a little below the mouth of the Scioto, now the site of Alexandria. Its principal inhabitants were Shawnees.

The expedition remained here until the 26th of August. On the 27th they proceeded as far as the riviere La Blanche, or White river, which they reached at ten at night. On the bank of the Ohio, opposite the mouth of this river, Bonnecamps found the latitude to be 39° 12′ 01″, and the longitude 83° 31′. Embarking on the 30th, they passed the great north bend of the Ohio, and reached the riviere a la Roche, now known as the Great Miami. Here their voyage on the Ohio ended, and they turned their little fleet of bark gondolas northward into the channel of its great tributary.

The sixth and last of the leaden plates was buried at this place. The text of Celoron's journal reads as follows: "Enterree sur la pointe formee par la rive droite de l'Ohio, et la rive gauche de la riviere a la Roche, Aout 31, 1749." "Buried on the point formed by the intersection of the right bank of the Ohio, with the left bank of the Rock river, August 31, 1749." So far as known this plate has never been discovered. Celoron calls the Great Miami the riviere a la Roche, and Pouchot, quoted above, and other French writers give it the same name.

The expedition left its encampment at the mouth of this river on the first day of September, and began the toilsome ascent of the stream, now greatly diminished by the summer drought. On the 13th they arrived at "Demoiselles," which Father Bonnecamps, with his constant companion, the Astrolabe, found to be in latitude 40° 23′ 12″, and longitude 83° 29′. This was the residence of LaDemoiselle, a chief of a portion of the Miamis who were allies of the English.* The fort and village of LaDemoiselle were mentioned by M. de Longueil in 1752. It was probably situated on what was afterwards known as Loramies creek, the earliest point of English settlement in Ohio. It became quite noted in the subsequent history of the Indian wars, and was destroyed by General Clark in his expedition of 1782. A fort was built on the site several years afterwards by General Wayne, which he named Fort Laramie. Here the French remained a week to recruit, and prepare for the portage to the Maumee. Having burned their canoes, and obtained some ponies, they set out on their overland journey. In arranging for the march, M. de Celoron took command of the right, and M. de Contrecoeur of the left. The distance was estimated by Celoron as fifty leagues, and five and a half days were alotted for its accomplishment.†

They completed the portage on the 25th, and arrived at Kiskakon. This appears to be the Indian name for the site of Fort Wayne, which was built there in 1794. Celoron found it a French post, under the command of M. de Raymond. It undoubtedly took the name Kiskakon, from a branch of Ottawas that removed to this place from Missillimackinac, where they had resided as late as 1682. It was here that de Celoron provided pirogues and provisions for the descent of the Maumee to Lake Erie. The Miami Chief "Pied Froid," or Coldfoot resided in that village. He appears not to have been very constant in his allegiance either to the French or the English.

Leaving Kiskakon on the 27th of September, a part of the expedition went overland to Detroit, and the remainder descended the river by canoe. The latter landed near Detroit on the 6th of October. Having renewed his supplies and canoes for the transportation of his detachment, Celoron prepared for the return to Montreal by way of Lake Erie. His Indian allies, as usual, occasioned some delay. They had stopped at the mouth of the Maumee, and were overcome by a drunken debauch on the white man's fire water. It was not until the 8th of October that the party finally launched their canoes, and descended the river into Lake Erie. Their first night was spent on its northern shore at Point Pellee. Nothing worthy of note occurred during their traverse of the lake. They reached Fort Niagara on the 19th, where they remained three days. Leaving there on the 22d, they coasted the south shore of Lake Ontario, and arrived at Fort Frontenac on the 6th of November, their canoes badly shattered by the autumal gales, and their men greatly fatigued with the hardships of the voyage. They pushed on, however, with as little delay as possible, to Montreal, which they reached on the 10th of October, having, according to the estimate of both de Celoron and Father Bonnecamps, traveled at least twelve hundred leagues.

Allusion has been made to the changes which took place in the Ohio Valley prior to the expedition of de Celoron. Those which have since occurred are no less remarkable. Both the

*N. Y. Col. Doc., X, pp. 139, 142, 245 and 247.

†Major Long, of the United States Army, in his second expedition to the St. Peter's River, in 1823, traveled over the same route.

COURT HOUSE – INDIANA, PA.

French and the English continued equally determined to possess the country north of the Ohio. The former stretched a chain of posts from Niagara to the Mississippi, as a barrier against English encroachments, and to exclude the Indians from their influence and control. To counteract these demonstrations, Gist was sent by the Ohio Company, in 1750, to survey its lands preliminary to their occupation and settlement. In 1753 Washington was dispatched, by Governor Dinwiddie, to Venango and Le Boeuf on what proved to be a fruitless mission. A post was established the same year by the English at Pittsburgh, which was captured the next by the French, and called after the Marquis du Quesne. It was occupied by the latter until retaken by General Forbes in 1756.

This was followed, the next year, by an expedition under Washington, who, at the age of twenty-two, drew his maiden sword at the Great Meadows in an encounter with a detachment of French under Jumonville, which resulted in the death of the latter. Washington pushed on further west, but the advance of the enemy with strong reinforcements compelled him to fall back to the Great Meadows, which he strengthened and fortified, under the significant name of Fort Necessity. Here he was attacked by the French under Coulon de Villiers, a brother of Jumonville, with a vigor inspired by the desire of avenging his brother's death. Washington was compelled to capitulate. The French were thus enabled to acquire complete control for the time being over the disputed territory. Thus was the opening scene in the great drama of the "Old French War" enacted. The disastrous defeat of Braddock followed the next year, and exposed the whole frontier to the hostile incursions of the French and Indians.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE NEW THEORY OF THE LEADEN PLATE—EFFORTS OF THE FRENCH TO ESTABLISH THEIR CLAIM—DEPOSITION OF STEPHEN COFFEN.

IT will be observed by the preceding chapter that a different account is given of the burial of the leaden plate in Venango than that which had been the previously understood version. The belief had been entertained that the plate was buried at or near the mouth of French creek, and had been taken up and conveyed to the Governor of New York by the Seneca Indians, who were more friendly to the English than to the French. Rev. Dr. Eaton, of Franklin, in his history of Venango county, published in 1876, gives the account as it had been understood from tradition and such other sources from which information on the subject could be obtained. On the first page of the pamphlet, he says:

"The French based their claims on the original discoveries of Marquette and La Salle, together with their construction of the treaties of Ryswick, Utrecht, and Aix la Chapelle. As early as the beginning of the eighteenth century, Bancroft tells us that, 'Not a fountain bubbled on the west of the Allegheny, but was claimed as belonging to the French Empire.' Later they seem to have claimed all west of the Allegheny Mountains. In pursuance of this claim, in the year 1749, Gallisoniere, Governor of Canada, sent Celoron to bury leaden plates at different points, along the line from Lake Erie to the Mississippi, as evidence of this claim. One of these plates was buried at this place, near the mouth of French creek. It bore an inscription in the French language, stating that they had 'buried this plate at the confluence of the To-ra-da-koin, this 20th July, near the river Ohio, otherwise Beautiful River, as a monument of renewal of possession.'

"This plate was not permitted to remain long in its little bed, as it was stolen by the Indians and taken to the State of New York, that 'the devilish writing,' as they called it, might be interpreted to them."

The statement is made in Western Annals, that "one of these plates was found at the mouth of the Muskingum; another at Venango."

All the accounts upon the subject conveyed the information that the plates were deposited along the river "at all important places, such as the mouths of the most considerable streams." This, in connection with the event that a fort was erected at the mouth of French creek, may have served to convey the original impression, that one of the plates was buried at this point. In Sherman Day's "Historical Collections of Pennsylvania" published in 1843, and other works, the opinion is advanced that To-ra-da-koin was an Indian name for French creek, but Mr. Marshall, in his able paper on Celoron's expedition, makes it plain that the word, more properly copied Tcha-da-koin, in an ancient Indian form of the modern name Chatauqua.

While Celoron was engaged in this expedition he sent the following letter to the Governor of Pennsylvania:

TRANSLATION.

"From our camp on the Beautiful River (Ohio), at an ancient village of the Chouanons, 6th of August, 1749.

"Sir:—Having been sent with a detachment into these quarters by M. the Marquis de la Gallissoniere, Commandant-General of New France, to reconcile among themselves certain savage nations, who are ever at variance on account of the war just terminated, I have been much surprised to find some traders of your government in a country to which England never had any pretentions. It even appears that the same opinion is entertained in New England, since in many of the villages which I have passed through, the English who were trading there, have mostly taken flight.

"Those I have fallen in with, and by whom I wrote you, were treated with all the mildness possible, although I would have been justified in treating them as interlopers, and men without design, their enterprise being contrary to the preliminaries of peace, signed five months ago.

"I hope, sir, you will carefully prohibit for the future this trade, which is contrary to treaties; and I give notice to your traders that they will expose themselves to great risks in returning to these countries, and they must impute only to themselves the misfortunes they may meet with.

"I know that our Commandant-General would be very sorry to resort to violence; but he has orders not to permit foreign traders in this government.

"I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your humble servant.

"Celoron."

From these letters and documents, it appears that the French claimed all the countries situated on the Mississippi and all its tributaries, by virtue of original discoveries, and supplemented these reasons with the conditions made at various treaties. The English claimed the same region, or portions of it, by virture of the grant of King James the First to sundry of his subjects, which covered all the territory between the thirty-fourth and forty-eighth parallels of latitude, and thence to the Great South Sea. They also claimed the country on the head-waters of the Ohio, by virtue of the treaty of Lancaster with the Six Nations, though the latter denied having sold any lands west of the mountains.

In the spring or summer of 1749, the Assembly of Pennsylvania received intelligence that a force of one thousand French was preparing to leave Canada for the Ohio.

Startled by these rumors, they sent an agent, Mr. George Croghan, to the Ohio, for the purpose of gaining all possible intelligince of the movements of the French. On his arrival at Logstown, an Indian village on the right bank of the Ohio, about twenty-two miles below the forks, he learned that a French officer, named Jean Cœur, or Joncaire, was on the Allegheny, about one hundred and fifty miles above, with a strong party, for the purpose of erecting trading posts and fortifications.

This party was either Celoron's expedition or a part of it, as Joncaire, with a portion of the force, was frequently sent in advance to make overtures to the Indians along the river.

To make good their title to the lands which they had claimed in this manner, the French not only made vigorous efforts to occupy the territory, but proceeded to fortify themselves along a line from the lakes to the Allegheny and Ohio valleys. The nature and extent of these efforts are so well set forth in a deposition of one Stephen Coffen, who was for a time a prisoner among them, made on the 10th of January, 1754, to Colonel, afterwards Sir William Johnson at New York, that we append it entire. The document is an interesting specimen of the style of the olden time, aside from the information it contains:

DEPOSITION OF STEPHEN COFFEN.

"Stephen Coffen of full age being duly sworn deposeth and saith: that he was taken Prisoner by the French and Indians of Canada at Menis, in the Year 1747, under the Command of Major Noble, from whence he was brought to an Indian Village called Actagouche about Fifteen Leagues to the Westward of Chebucta, where he was kept three Weeks Prisoner; from thence was carried to a French Settlement called Beaubasin, where the French had a Wooden Fort then Garrisoned with Twenty-Five Men; remained there Two Months; from thence they took him to Gaspey, a considerable Fishing place in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, near to the Entrance of the River; there are about Three Hundred Families settled there; they kept him there working near Four Years; then he was brought to a place called Ramouski, inhabited by about Twenty-Five French Families, from which Place he sailed two years to and from Quebec in a Sloop carrying Beaver and Furrs, Salmon, &ca, to Quebec, and in return brought back Brandy, Dry Goods, &ca.; during the Time of the Deponent's residing at Quebec he said it was commonly talked or reported that they the French intended to settle as many Families as they could to the Westward, to make up for the Loss of Two of their Towns sunk in the West Indies by an Earthquake. The Deponent further saith that the Navigation up the River Saint Lawrence is very dangerous, particularly so at the Isle aux Coudres and the Isle Orleans; the North Side of the former is the best Navigation, the South Side being very rapid and rocky, and the Channel not above Two Hundred Yards wide, about six Fathom Water, whereas in the North Channel there is Fifteen Fathom; at the North East End of the latter begin two Sand Banks, which extend a League down the said River; the Channel is between both Banks, and pretty near the Middle of the river, from thence to the Town of Quebec good Navigation, being Fifteen Fathom all the way. The Deponent says there is no possibility of going up said River without the Tide serves or a strong North East Wind, especially at the Two aforementioned Islands. In September, 1752, the Deponent was in Quebec and endeavoring to agree with some Indians to convey him to his own country, New England, which the Indians acquainted the Governor of, who immediately ordered him to Gaol, where he lay three Months. At the Time of his Releasment the French were preparing for a March to Belle Riviere, or Ohio, when he offered his services, but was rejected by the Governor General Le Cain. He the said General setting out for Mount Real about the Third of January, 1753, to view and forward the Forces; the Deponent applied to Major Ramsay for Liberty to go with the Army to the Ohio, who told him he would ask Lieutenant De Rouy, who agreed to it, upon which he was equipped as a Soldier and sent with a Detachment of three Hundred Men to Montreal, under the Commandor Monsieur Babeer, who set off immediately with said Command by Land and Ice for Lake Erie; they in their Way stopped a couple of Days to refresh themselves at Cadarahqui Fort, also at Taranto, on the North side of Lake Ontario, then at Niagara Fort Fifteen Days; from thence set off by Water, being April, and arrived at Chadakoin, on Lake Erie, where they were ordered to fell Timber, and prepare it for building a Fort there according to the Governor's Instructions; but Mr. Morang, coming up with Five Hundred Men and Twenty Indians put a Stop to the erecting a Fort at that Place by reason of his not liking the Situation, and the River of Chadakoins being too shallow to carry any Craft with Provisions, &ca., to Belle Riviere. The Deponent says there arose a warm Debate between Messieurs Baber and Morang thereon, the first insisting on building a Fort there agreeable to his Instructions, otherwise on Morang's giving him an Instrument in Writing to satisfy the Governor in that Point, which Morang did, and then ordered Messieur Mercie, who was both Commissary and Engineer, to go along said Lake and look for a good Situation, which he found and returned in three days, it being Fifteen Leagues to the South-West of Chadakoin; they were then all ordered to repair thither; when they arrived there were about Twenty Indians fishing in the Lake, who immediately quit it on seeing the French; they fell to Work and built a square Fort of Chestnut Logs, squared and lapped over each other to the Height of Fifteen Feet, it is about one hundred and twenty square—a Log House in each square—a Gate to the Southward and another to the Northward, not one Port Hole cut in any part of it when finished—they called it Fort La Presque Isle.

"The Indians who came from Canada with them returned very much out of Temper, owing as it was said among the Army to Morang's dogged Behavior and Ill Usage of them (but they the Indians said at Oswego it was owing to the French's misleading them by telling them Falsehoods, which they said they had now found out) and left them. As soon as the Fort was finished they marched Southward, cutting a Waggon Road through a fine level Country twenty-one Miles to the River Aux Boeufs (leaving Captain Derponteney with an hundred Men to garrison the Fort La Briske Isle); they fell to work cutting Timber, Boards, &ca., for another Fort, while Mr. Morang ordered Monsieur Bite with Fifty Men to a Place called by the Indians Ganagarahhare,* or the Banks of Belle Riviere, where the River Aux Boeufs empties into it; in the meantime Morang had Ninety large Boats or Battoes made to carry down the Baggage and Provisions, &ca., to said Place. Monsieur Bite on coming to said Indian Place was asked what he wanted or intended. He, upon answering it was their Father the Governor of Canada's Intention to build a Trading House for their and all their Brethren's Convenience, was told by the Indians that the Lands were their's, and that they would not have them build upon it. The said Monsieur Bite returning, met two Englishmen, Traders, with their Horses and Goods, whom they Bound and brought Prisoners to Morang, who ordered them to Canada in Irons.† The said Bite reported to Morang the Situation was good, but the Water in the River aux Boeuf too low at that time to carry down any Craft with Provisions, &ca.; a few Days after the deponent says that about one hundred Indians called by the French the Loos,‡ came to the Fort

*This is the original name of the ancient Indian village of Venango, now Franklin See Chapter on History of Franklin.

†These are the two men spoken of in Washington's journal, given in a subsequent chapter, named by him John Trotter and James McClocklan ‡Spelled by the French, Loups. See Chapter XII.

La Riviere aux Boeuf to see what the French were doing; that Monsieur Morang treated them very kindly, and then asked them to carry down some Stores, &ca., to the Belle Riviere on Horseback for Payment, which he immediately advanced them on their undertaking to do it. They set off with full Loads, but never delivered them to the French which incensed them very much, being not only a Loss but a great Disappointment. Morang, a man of a very peevish, choleric Disposition, meeting with those and other Crosses, and finding the Season of the Year too far advanced to build the Third Fort, called all his Officers together and told them that as he had engaged and firmly promised the Governor to finish the Three Forts that Season, and not being able to fulfill the same was both Afraid and Ashamed to return to Canada, being sensible he had now forfeited the Governor's Favour forever; wherefore rather than live in Disgrace he begged they would take him (as he then sat in a Carriage made for him, being very Sick some time) and seat him in the middle of the Fort and then set Fire to it and let him perish in the Flames, which was rejected by the Officers, who, (the Deponent says) had not the least regard for him, as he had behaved very ill to them all in general. The Deponent further Saith that about eight Days before he left the Fort La Briske Isle, Chevalier La Crake arrived Express from Canada in a birch Canoe worked by Ten Men, with orders (as the Deponent afterwards heard) from the Governor Le Cain to Morang to make all the Preparation possible against the Spring of the year to build them two Forts at Chadokoin one of them by Lake Erie and the other at the End of the Carrying Place at Lake Chadokoin, which Carrying Place is Fifteen Miles from one Lake to the Other. The said Chevalier brought for Monsieur Morang a Cross of St. Louis which the Rest of the Officers would not allow him to take until the Governor was acquainted of his Conduct and Behavior. The Chevalier returned immediately to Canada. After which, the Deponent saith, when the Fort La Riviere aux Boeufs was finished, (which is built of Wood Stockaded Triangularwise and has Two Log Houses in the inside), Monsieur Morang ordered all the Party to return to Canada for the Winter Season except Three Hundred Men which he kept to Garrison both Forts and prepare Materials against the Spring for the building other Forts. He also sent Jean Coeur, an Officer and Interpretor, to stay the Winter among the Indians on Ohio, in order to prevail with them not only to allow the Building Forts on their Lands, but also to persuade them if possible to join the French Interest against the English. The Deponent further saith that on the twenty-eighth of October last, he set off for Canada under the command of Captain Deman, who had the command of twenty-two Battoes with Twenty Men in each Battoe, the Remainder being Seven Hundred and Sixty Men followed in a few Days, the thirtieth arrived at Chadokoin, where they staid four Days, during which time Monsieur Peon with Two Hundred Men, cut a Waggon Road over the Carrying Place from Lake Erie to Lake Chadakoin being Fifteen Miles, viewed the Situation, which proved to their liking, so set off November the Third for Niagara where We arrived the Sixth. It is a very poor rotten old Wooden Fort with Twenty-Five Men in it, they talked of rebuilding it next Summer. We left Fifty Men there to build Battoes for the Army against the Spring, also a Store House for Provisions, Stores, &ca.; staid here two Days, then set off for Canada. All Hands being fatigued with rowing all night, they were ordered to put ashore to Breakfast within a Mile of Oswego Garrison. At which time the Deponent saith that He with a Frenchman slipped off and got to the Fort where they were both concealed until the Army passed; from thence he came here.

"The Deponent further saith that besides the Three Hundred Men with which he went up first under the command of Monsieur Babeer, and the Five Hundred Men Morang brought up aftewards, there came at different Times with Stores, &ca., Seven Hundred more, which made in all Fifteen Hundred Men, Three Hundred of which remained to Garrison the Two Forts, Fifty at Niagara, the Rest all returned to Canada, and talked of going up again this winter, so as to be there the beginning of April. They had Two Six Pounders and Seven Four Pounders which they intended to have planted in the Fort at Ganagarahhare, which was to have been called the Governor's Fort, but as that was not built they left the Guns in the Fort La Riviere aux Boeufs, where Morang commands; further the Deponent saith not.

CHAPTER XV.

SITUATION OF AFFAIRS BETWEEN THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH—OVERTURES OF BOTH TO THE INDIANS—JONCAIRE—FRAZER, THE FIRST WHITE MAN LOCATED IN THE ALLEGHENY VALLEY—FRAZER'S LETTER—SHIPPEN'S LETTER TO GOV. HAMILTON—DEPOSITION OF JOHN TROTTER.

THE situation of the issue between the French and English plainly indicated that no compromise was possible. An appeal to arms was imminent—both sought rather to fortify their interests and conciliate and secure the aid of the Indians. The French resolved to erect a line of fortifications, or forts, extending from Lake Erie to the lower Ohio.

In the fall of 1750, the Ohio Company employed Christopher Gist, a surveyor and experienced woodsman, to proceed to the Ohio, for the purpose of examining their lands, to select suitable locations for settlements and fortifications, and to conciliate the friendship of the Indians.

He visited Logstown, where he was received by the Indians with jealousy, and passed over to the Muskingum, where he found a village of the Ottawas friendly to the French, and a village of the Wyandots divided in sentiment.

There he met Croghan, who had been sent out by Pennsylvania, and the two held a council with the chiefs. They then visited the Shawnese, on the Scioto river, and went as far as the Miami Valley. Crossing the Great Miami on a raft of logs, they visited Piqua, the chief town of the Pickawilliames, where they made a treaty with the last named tribe.

From this place Croghan returned, but Gist followed the Miami to its mouth, and went down the Ohio to within fifteen miles of the great falls at Louisville, returning by way of the Kentucky river, and thence over the Cumberland Mountains to Virginia, in May, 1751; having, during his journeyings, visited the Iroquois, Delaware, Wyandots, Shawnese, and Miamis, and appointed a general council, to be held at Logstown, for the purpose of forming an alliance between the Indians and the colony of Virginia.

In the mean time some traders from Pennsylvania had opened a trading-house at some point, not certainly known, but within the limits of the State of Ohio, and certainly within the region claimed by the French.

The latter, accompanied by a band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians, demanded the traders of the Miamis who refused to surrender them; whereupon a battle ensued in which fourteen of the Miamis were slain, and the traders taken to Canada, where some accounts say they were burned.

The English now determined to purchase the disputed territory from the Indians, and accordingly Messrs. Fry, Lomax, and Patton, were dispatched by Virginia to meet them in council, which was held at Logstown on the 9th of June, 1752.

Gist attended this council as agent of the Ohio Company.

The Lancaster treaty of 1744 was produced, but the Indians insisted that "they had not heard of any sale of lands west of the "Warrior's Road," which ran at the foot of the mountains (Allegheny Ridge).

The commissioner endeavored to get the assent of the Indians to the treaty of Lancaster by offer of goods, and mentioned the proposed settlement by the Ohio Company at the forks. The Indians recognized the treaty, and the authority of the Six Nations for making it, but insisted that no western lands were conveyed by it, and declined having anything to do with it. They were willing, however, to have the company construct a fort at the forks of the Ohio.

This did not satisfy the commissioners, and they persuaded the Indians, through Montour, the interpreter, to recognize the Lancaster treaty in its broadest sense, which they finally did, and the tribes united in signing a deed confirming it, on the 13th of June.

At the date of these negotiations, the country adjacent to the forks of the Ohio was occupied by various tribes, or nations. The Shawnese, who may scarcely be said to have had a permanent abiding place, were settled along the Allegheny and Ohio rivers. The Delawares were intermingled with the Shawnese, having removed westward from their former homes on the Delaware and Susquehanna rivers. Their king, Shingiss, was found by Washington, in 1753, located at the mouth of Chartier's creek, about two miles below the forks, and their queen, Aliquippa (variously spelled), at the mouth of the Youghiogheny. The Delawares also had a town called Shanopin's Town, on the left bank of the Allegheny, two miles above the forks.

The Senecas of the Six Nations were also dwelling on both the Allegheny and Ohio; and these distinct nations then appear to have been living peaceably together, at the same time preserving their manners, customs, and dress.

The English flattered themselves that by their politic conduct they had outwitted the Indians and secured their friendship. But the French proved that they knew best how to manage the natives; and, though they had to contend with the former enmity that existed against them by the Six Nations, and committed some acts against the remonstrances of those tribes, they finally succeeded, to a greater degree than the English ever did, in attaching the Indians to their cause.

The determination with which the French prepared to make good their claims is shown by the following letter from Joncaire to Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania:

"DECHINIQUE, June 6th, 1751.

"SIR:—Monsieur the Marquis de la Gallissoniere, Governor of the whole of New France, having honored me with his orders to watch that the English should make no treaty in the country of the Ohio, I have directed the traders of your government to withdraw.

"You cannot be ignorant, sir, that all the lands of this region have always belonged to the king of France, and that the English have no right to come there to trade. My superior has commanded me to apprise you of what I have done, in order that you may not affect ignorance of the reasons of it; and he has given me this order with so much the greater reason, because it is now two years since Monsieur Celoron, by order of Monsieur de la Gallissoniere, then Commandant-General, warned many English, who were trading with the Indians along the Ohio, against so doing, and they promised him not to return to trade on the lands, as Monsieur Celoron wrote you.

"I have the honor to be, with great respect,

"Sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

"JONCAIRE,

"Lieutenant of a detachment of the Navy."

As Captain Joncaire was quite a noted personage, a short sketch of him will no doubt be interesting. In Smith's "History of New York" is the following notice of his father: "Canada was very much indebted to the incessant intrigues of this man. He had been adopted by the Senecas, and was well esteemed by the Onondagas. He spoke the Indian language, as Charlevoix affirms, 'avec la plus sublime eloquence Iroquois,' and had lived amongst them, after their manner, from the beginning of Queen Anne's reign. All these advantages he improved for the benefit of his country. He facilitated the missionaries in their progress through the cantons, and more than any other man contributed to render their dependence upon the English weak and precarious. Convinced of this, Colonel Schuyler urged the Indians, at his treaty with them in 1719, to drive Joncaire out of the country, but his endeavors were fruitless." His son, the author of the letter to Governor Hamilton, seems, from all accounts, to have followed the course his father pursued, and to have given the English a great amount of trouble. He is the Jean Coeur from whom the leaden plate was stolen by the Seneca Indians and sent to the Governor of New York. Joncaire is a contraction from Jean Coeur, that may have occurred from the Indian pronunciation, or by the peculiar French accent in speaking two nouns together, and resembling one word in English dialect. At any rate the contracted form seems to have been adopted by both father and son. Joncaire, the younger, was stationed at the fort at Venango, and was met here by George Washington, during his journey to the French posts, in 1753. That his influence with the Indians, and especially the Senecas, enabled him to render great service to the French, is clearly shown in the account of Celoron's expedition, given in the preceding chapter, in which he took a conspicuous and important part. He evidently possessed shrewdness and ability. At a council with the Indians at Logstown, in May, 1751, he made the following speech:

"Children, I now desire you may give me an answer from your hearts to the speech Monsieur Celoron made to you. His speech was that your Father, the Governor of Canada, desired his children on the Ohio to drive away the English traders from amongst them, and discharge them from ever coming to trade amongst them again, or on any of the branches, on pain of incurring his displeasure, and to enforce that speech he gave them a very large belt of wampum."

One of the methods he adopted to win the confidence of the Indians, and get their consent to build the fort at Venango, was that it would be a trading post for their convenience.

The first white man who located within the limits of Venango county, was undoubtedly a Scotchman named John Frazer. We extract the following from the History of Western Pennsylvania, in relation to him and other early adventurers to these wilds:

"Western Pennsylvania was untrodden by the foot of the white man before the year 1700. As early as 1715 and 1720, occasionally a trader would venture west of the Allegheny Mountain; and of these the first was James Le Tort, who resided, in 1700, east of the Susquehanna, but took up his residence west of it, Le Tort Spring, Carlisle, in 1720; Peter Cheaver, John Evans, Henry Devoy, Owen Nicholson, Alex. Magenty, Patrick Burns, George Hutchison, all of Cumberland county; Barnaby Currin, John McQuire, a Mr. Frazer, the latter of whom had, at an early day, a trading house at Venango; but afterwards, at the Monongahela, at the mouth of Turtle creek—were all traders among the Indians."

Frazer was a gunsmith, and this facilitated his success in trading with the Indians.

In the year 1753, Edward Shippen, of Lancaster, in writing to Governor James Hamilton, says of him and this place: "Weningo is the name of an Indian town on the Ohio, where Mr. Frazer has had a gunsmith shop for many years. It is situated about eighty miles up the said river beyond Logstown."

At the time Joncaire came to commence the erection of the French fort at this point, he drove Frazer away from his house and took possession. Washington speaks of him as having been driven from Venango by the French, and that he went from here to the mouth of Turtle creek, where he is subsequently mentioned in history. It was in his house at Venango that Washington met Joncaire and had the famous interview with the wiley Frenchman, and over which floated the French flag. The location of this house can now only be approximated. From the best information upon the subject we have been enabled to obtain, we are led to infer that it stood somewhere within the two blocks embraced between Liberty, Eighth and Ninth streets and the river. But authenticated tradition is silent upon the subject, the site has never been ascertained by antiquarians, and must remain forever a mystery.

While on his mission to the French posts, Washington met Frazer at the mouth of Turtle creek. He appears frequently on the scene in the stirring events about the forks of the Ohio, up to the time of Braddock's defeat, when, no doubt, he was broken up in his trading business, and changed his location. Nothing seems to be known of his subsequent career.

Letter from Edward Shippen, Prothonotary of Lancaster county, to Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania, with another enclosed in it to one Young, an Indian Trader, from John Frazer, his partner, who had lived at "Wenango" (Venango), but then living at the Forks of the "Mohongialo," about fourteen miles from where it enters the Ohio, where he had a store and carried on a trade with the Indians. Frazer's letter contains an account of the French proceedings, and Mr. Shippen's letter explains several matters in it.

FRAZER'S LETTER:

Forks, August 27th, 1753.

Mr. Young:

I have sent the Bearer in all haste to acquaint you what a narrow Escape William made from the French at Weningo. I have sent him off there the same time that You ordered him, and from that time until he ran away, he only sold eight Buck's worth of Goods, which Custologa* took from him, and all his Corn, when he was making his Escape in the night. He is made a Captain by the French, and next morning after William's Escape he delivered John Trotter and his Man to the French, who tied them fast and carried them away to their new Fort that they made a little from Weningo, at a Place called Caseoago† up French creek. The night that William ran away, that Afternoon Two French Men came to Weningo, who told William that there was no Danger, but William being a little afraid got all ready that night and came as far as Licking creek and there staid until Break of Day, and then came by way of land to the top of the Hill against my House, where he saw about one hundred of the French Dogs, all under Arms, and had Trotter and his Man then tied. Fourteen of them followed William, and it being a foggy Morning he outrun them, so there is nothing lost yet only those eight Bucks and all the Corn. I would have sent William down only I do not know every moment what Time I will be obliged to move my Goods from here back in the Woods.

I have thrown a Parcel of my own Goods against another Parcel of yours, and sell them now since William came here. I have not got any Skins here this Summer, for there has not been an Indian between Weningo at the Pict Country hunting this Summer, by reason of the French.

There is hardly any Indians now here at all, for yesterday there set off along with Capt. Trent and French Andrew the Heads of the Five Nations, the Picts, the Shawonese, the Owendats, and the Delawares, for Virginia; and the Half King set off to the French Fort, with a strong Party along with him, to warn the French off their Land entirely, which if they did not comply to, then directly the Six Nations, the Picts, Shawonese, Owendats and the Delawares were to strike them without Loss of Time. The Half King was to be back in twenty Days from the time he went away, so were the Indians from Virginia.

Capt. Trent was here the night before last, and viewed the Ground the Fort is to be built upon, which they will begin in less than a month's time. The Money has been laid out for it already, and the great Guns are lying at Williamsburg, ready to bring up.

The French are daily deserting from the new Fort—one of them came here the other Day whom I sent to Capt. Trent; he has been along with him to Virginia; he has given the true Account of the Number of French and all their Designs; there are exactly Twenty-Four Hundred of them in all; here is enclosed a Draught of the Fort the French built a little the other side of Sugar Creek, not far from Weningo, where they have eight Cannon. Which is all from your friend

John Frazer.

P. S.—The Captain of the French that took John Trotter from Weningo was the White French Man that lived last Winter at Log's Town.

SHIPPEN'S LETTER:

Lancaster, 9th September, 1753.

Honored Sir:

"The enclosed was just now brought me by Mr. Callender in order to be forwarded to your Honor.

"Custologa is a Delaware Indian, and a very leading man.

"Weningo is the name of an Indian Town on Ohio where Mr. Trotter has had a Gunsmith's Shop for many years; it is situated eighty miles up the said River beyond the Log's Town, and Casewago is Twenty Miles above Weningo.

"The Half King is one of the Six Nations, and of very great Note and Esteem amongst them.

"Mr. Croghan has been gone two Weeks since to Winchester in Virginia to an Indian Treaty. I am with due Respect,

"Your Honour's most obedient humble Servant,

"Edward Shippen."

DEPOSITION OF JOHN TROTTER. 1754.

Pennsylvania, to wit:

John Trotter, of the township of Paxtang, in the County of Lancaster, and Province of Pennsylvania, Indian Trader, aged Thirty Years, being sworn on the Holy Evangelists, deposeth and saith, that He served an Apprenticeship to Robert Young, a Planter in said County, and afterwards followed the Indian Trade; that some time in the Summer, 1752, he being in Partnership with Timothy Reerdon, bought of Thomas McKee, of the said County of Lancaster, Indian Trader, an Assortment of Indian goods, for which they contracted to give him four hundred Pounds, Current Money of this Province, with which Cargo he this Doponent went to Allegheny, to an Indian Delaware Town, called Attiga, an ancient Town Inhabited by Delawares, as he has frequently heard from their own Mouths for fifty years past, situate on the Ohio River, pretty near half way between Log's Town and Weningo, according to the Course of the River, but as the said River has here a very large Bent, it is not on Straight line at a greater distance as this Deponent believed from Weningo than Log's Town, and for the Reason of his belief, he says that he has Walked on foot from Log's Town to Weningo in two Days, and from Attiga to Weningo in the same space of time; this Deponent further says, that he stayed in Attiga trading with the Indians till the fourteenth day of last August, when he left it with two Horse Loads of Indian Goods, and the next day as he was about to pass the river opposite to Weningo in Company with Jas. McLaughlin, an hired Servant of his, a party of French men, in Number one hundred and ten, came and Seized them and their Horses, took away the Goods and Bound this Deponent and the said McLaughlin with Indian Hopples, made of Wild Hemp, in their Arms and Legs; the next day they tied them both together, and drove them before them, but the Woods, being too thick to Admit of Traveling in this manner, they loosed them after some time, and on the third day after they left Weningo, they came to a New Fort built on the side of one of the Lakes of Canada, where this Deponent saw that the French had cut a Road, and where they were hawling great Guns along the Road to a place where they were going to erect another Fort. This Deponent further says, that they were put into Irons, and Confined in an out house, and a Guard was Set over them; here they stayed four days, and then were put on board a batteau, and carried along the Lake to a small Wooden Fort situate at the head thereof, and from thence they were the next day put into a Cart, and set out about noon, and came to a large Stone Fort at night, where they stayed two or three Hours, and then were put on Board another Batteau, furnished with Sails and Oars, and Sailing along another of the large Lakes, they arrived at Fort Cateraqui, and from thence were carried by Water to Montreal, having remained in Irons during the whole Voyage. At Montreal, the said Deponent and the said McLaughlin were put into Jayl, and staid there four Days, when they were put on Board a Sloop, being there in Irons, and carried to Quebec, when they were again put into Jayl for thirty days, after which they were together with Jacob Evans, another English Trader of the Province of Pennsylvania, who was likewise taken prisoner, put on Board a Man of War of thirty-six Guns, and arrived at Rockel, and there put into Jayl for thirty days, having only Bread and Water for their Sustenance; and then the Commanding Officer, one McNemarrow, set them at Liberty and gave them a Pass, with which they Begged their way to Bourdeaux, and this Deponent, together with Jacob Evans, embarqued on Board the Betty and Sally, Captain Snead, bound for this City, where they arrived on Saturday, the sixteenth Instant. That James McLaughlin was left behind at Bourdeaux for want of Conveniences in the Vessel.

*Custologa, the Indian chief, after whom Custologa's Town was named.

†This is undoubtedly Custologa's Town, but no fort is known to have been built there.

his
JOHN ⋈ TROTTER.
mark.

Sworn, before William Allen, Esq., Chief Justice of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the Twenty-second Day of March, One thousand seven hundred and fifty-four,

WILL. ALLEN.

Endorsed.—22d March, 1754. Copy Deposition of John Trotter.

CHAPTER XVI.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND FACE TO FACE IN WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA—WASHINGTON SENT BY THE GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA ON A MISSION TO THE FRENCH POSTS—HIS COMMISSION AND INSTRUCTIONS—HE VISITS VENANGO AND WINS HIS FIRST GREAT TRIUMPH.

THUS we find, in the spring of 1753, the two great powers of Europe standing face to face, both equally determined to occupy and possess this valley of the Allegheny, with no solution possible but the arbitrament of the sword; England powerfully intrenched behind her hardy colonies, and France advancing to the encounter with all the heriditary chivalry of "La Grande Nation," well officered, and backed by the great bulk of the most powerful Indian tribes. The first blood shed in this great contest, drawn by the hand of Washington himself, shook the monarchies of Europe to their foundations, and changed the destinies of Christendom.

The year 1753 begins the most interesting chapter of the history of the region of Western Pennsylvania.

Here, among the rugged hills of Western Pennsylvania, on the waters of the Allegheny, began the conflict, apparently for the control of the territory which now yields up one of the greatest staples of modern commerce—embracing one of the most important industrial and commercial centers of the globe—but which eventually enveloped America, Europe and Asia in the sulphury clouds of war, precipitated the American Revolution and, finally, broke up the ancient feudalism of Europe. The grandest character in this great drama, as the curtain arose upon the opening scene, was far in the background of the glittering throng of crowned and jeweled monarchs, and princes, and famous commanders who crowded to the front: a plain, unpretending lieutenant-colonel of colonial militia.

The trumpet-blast of battle sounded. The scarlet ranks of England, the bonny Highland plume and tartan plaid, the shamrock and the green, and the veteran legions of the Gaul and the hard-won Fontenoy and many another bloody field came pouring o'er the restless sea, "and swiftly forming in the ranks of war," prepared, each man, to do his best devoir for king and fatherland. And, side by side with Europe's veterans, hardy and unflinching as a Spartan band, came the gallant sons of noble sires from all the hills and valleys of the land. And that nothing might be wanting to give effect to all this grand array of war, the dusky sons of the forest, in eagle plumes and gaudy paint, swarmed by thousands through the dim old forest aisles, eager for the fray.

When, after years of strife, the vapors lifted from the "rent and trodden field," lo, and behold! a nation had been born, baptized in blood, and taken its place among the peoples of the world! And at its head, honored and beloved like none before him, the plain Virginia colonel of the border fray!

Robert Dinwiddie, a native of Scotland, had been appointed Lieutenant Governor of the Virginia colony in 1752. Upon a careful investigation of the situation, he recommended to the Board of Trade in England that a series of fortifications be constructed in the West, for the better protection of the settlers and traders. Captain William Trent was sent, early in the season of 1753, on a mission to the French and Indians; but he seems not to have been the proper person for the position, and, after proceeding as far west as the Piqua towns, he became discouraged at the aspect of affairs and returned without accomplishing anything.

The Governor having learned that the French intended to extend their fortified posts south of Venango and French Creek, resolved to send a messenger immediately to learn their movements, and remonstrate against their designs. He experienced considerable difficulty to find a proper man who was willing to undertake the enterprise, but after careful consideration, and upon learning that Major George Washington would probably accept the position, the Governor concluded to appoint him. Washington was then just past twenty-one, and the bluff Scotchman, to whom he was not unknown, said to him, "Faith, you are a brave lad, and if you play your cards well you shall have no cause to repent of your bargain."

This appointment was certainly a high compliment to a young man who had just attained his majority, and could only have resulted from great confidence in his judgment and ability.

WASHINGTON'S COMMISSION.

"To George Washington, Esq., one of the Adjutant Generals of the troops and forces in the Colony of Virginia:

"I, reposing especial trust and confidence in the ability, conduct and fidelity of you, the said George Washington, have appointed you my express messenger; and you are hereby authorized and empowered to proceed hence, with all convenient and possible dispatch, to the post or place, on the river Ohio, where the French have lately erected a fort or forts, or where the commandant of the French forces resides, in order to deliver my letter and message to him; and after waiting not exceeding one week for an answer, you are to take your leave and return immediately back.

"To this commission I have set my hand, and caused the great seal of this Dominion to be affixed, at the city of Williamsburg, the seat of my government, this thirteenth day of October, in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of his Majesty George the Second, King of Great Britain, etc., etc.

"Annoque Domini, 1753.

"Robert Dinwiddie."

"To all to whom these presents may come or concern, greeting:

"Whereas, I have appointed George Washington, Esquire, by commission under the great seal, my express messenger to the commandant of the French forces on the river Ohio; and as he is charged with business of great importance to his Majesty and this Dominion, I do hereby command all his Majesty's subjects, and particularly require all in alliance and amity with the Crown of Great Britain, and all others to whom this passport may come, agreeably to the law of nations, to be aiding and assisting as a safeguard to the said George Washington and his attendants in his present passage to and from the river Ohio as aforesaid.

"Robert Dinwiddie."

INSTRUCTIONS FOR GEORGE WASHINGTON.

"Whereas, I have received information of a body of French forces being assembled in a hostile manner on the river Ohio, intending by force of arms to erect certain forts on the said river within this territory, and contrary to the dignity and peace of our sovereign, the King of Great Britain: These are, therefore, to require and direct you, the said George Washington, forthwith to repair to Logstown, on the said river Ohio, and, having there informed yourself where the said French forces have posted themselves, thereupon to proceed to such place; and, being there arrived, to present your credentials, together with my letter to the chief commanding officer, and in the name of his Brittannic Majesty to demand an answer thereto.

"On your arrival at Logstown you are to address yourself to the Half-King, to Monacatoocha, and the other Sachems of the Six Nations, acquainting them with your orders to visit and deliver my letter to the French commanding officer, and desiring the said chiefs to appoint you a sufficient number of their warriors to be your safeguard, as near the French as you may desire, and to wait your further direction.

"You are diligently to inquire into the numbers and force of the French on the Ohio and in the west; how they are likely to be assisted from Canada, and what are the difficulties and conveniences of that communication, and the time required for it.

"You are to take care to be truly informed what forts the French have erected and where; how they are garrisoned and appointed, and what is their distance from each other and from Logstown; and, from the best intelligence you can procure, you are to learn what gave occasion to this expedition of the French, how they are likely to be supported, and what their pretensions are.

"When the French Commandant has given you the required and necessary dispatches, you are to desire of him a proper guard to protect you as far on your return as you may judge for your safety against any straggling Indians or hunters that may be ignorant of your character and molest you.

"Wishing you good success in your negotiations, and safe and speedy return,

"I am, etc.,

"Robert Dinwiddie.

"Williamsburg, 30th Oct., 1753."

Preceding the date of Washington's mission, the Half-King, Tanacharison,* hearing of the movements of the French, made a journey to their posts on Lake Erie to expostulate in person against their contemplated encroachments on the Ohio. His mission was fruitless, the French treating him with extreme hauteur; and the chief returned, disappointed, to Logstown.

About this time, according to one author, a trading-house, said to have been erected by the Ohio Company at Logstown, was surprised by a detachment of French, the traders killed, and their goods, to the value of twenty thousand pounds, seized and carried away.† This account is evidently a great exaggeration, and most probably entirely fictitious.

As Washington followed the route (marked or proposed) of the Ohio Company, a few words regarding it may not be amiss. Before the Company adopted this route it was well known by the name of Nemacolin's Path, from the fact that the Company employed Colonel Thomas Cresap, of Old Town, Maryland, to mark the road, and the Colonel hired a well-known Delaware Indian, named Nemacolin, who resided at the mouth of what is now Dunlap's creek, to select the best route. It was known to the Indians many years before, and used by the Indian traders as early, probably, as 1740. It led from the mouth of Will's creek (Cumberland, Maryland), to the "forks of the Ohio" (Pittsburgh). The Ohio Company first marked this road in 1750, by blazing the trees and cutting away the underbrush and removing the old dead and fallen timber. In 1753 they improved and enlarged it at considerable expense. Washington took the same route in his campaign of 1754, improving and extending the road; and Braddock, also, in the following year completed it in good condition as far as the mouth of Turtle creek, within ten miles of Fort Duquesne. Since that unfortunate campaign of 1755 it has been known as "Braddock's road."

Washington had engaged as his principal assistants Christopher Gist, who had been sent out on a previous occasion by the Ohio Company; Jacob Vanbraam, a French interpreter; and John Davidson, an Indian interpreter. He also engaged four others, named Henry Steward, William Jenkins, Barnaby Currien, and John McQuire—the two latter being Indian traders. After arriving at the "forks of the Ohio," he met the Indian chiefs at Logstown, and remained a few days to conciliate their friendship, gather information, and gain their assistance in proceeding upon his journey. The party set out for Venango, accompanied by Tanacharison, "the Half King of the Six Nations," two other chiefs and an Indian hunter.

Neville B. Craig, who edited the "Olden Time" Monthly, in speaking in the January number, 1846, of the Indian treaty with Bradstreet, in 1764, mentions "Keyashuta, a Seneca chief (one of the Indians, by the way, who accompanied Washington from Logstown to Le Boeuf, in 1753, whom the editor well recollects)." He afterwards adopts Guyasutha as the correct orthography.

Washington mentions the names of two chiefs in his journal as Jaskakakee and White Thunder, and a hunter. This Indian hunter may afterwars have been the chief Guyasutha.

*This name is spelled in a variety of ways.

†Patterson, history of the backwoods.

The party carried their baggage and provision on pack horses, and arrived at Venango on December 4th, 1753. The French fort had not yet been completed, and Joncaire, who was the commandant stationed here, had his headquarters at the house of John Frazer, the Indian trader, whom he had driven off as we have already shown. Washington met the commandant and two other French officers at Frazer's house, and was received with courtesy and affability.

Washington's journal affords the best information that can be obtained in reference to the character and events of that interview, and the efforts of the shrewd French commandant and his officers to effect influences upon the Indians of the party against the English interests. For the purpose of ascertaining the designs of their English rivals and obtaining such information as they desired, whisky was produced by the Frenchmen in abundance. In their efforts to get the Indians of the party intoxicated, they easily succeeded; but in so doing, became very much under the influence of the beverage themselves. Washington, though only an inexperienced youth, was ever mindful of the trust reposed in him; too conservative, resolute and firm to be swerved from his purpose by their seductive cunning, he remained perfectly sober. The result was quite the opposite from the object intended—the Frenchmen became extremely communicative themselves, the young Virginian obtained all the secrets of their intentions and designs, possessed himself of all their plans, and, at this very place, achieved the first great success of his eventful life. This ground is sacred to the foot-steps of George Washington.

CHAPTER XVII.

WASHINGTON'S JOURNAL OF HIS TOUR TO THE FRENCH POSTS ON THE ALLEGHENY.

"I WAS commissioned by the Hon. Robert Dinwiddie, Esq., Governor, etc., of Virginia, to visit and deliver a letter to the Commandant of the French forces at the Ohio, and set out on the intended journey on the next day. The next, I arrived at Fredericksburg, and engaged Mr. Jacob Van Braam to be my French interpreter, and proceeded with him to Alexandria, where we provided necessaries. From thence we went to Winchester, and got baggage-horses, etc., and from thence we pursued the new road to Will's creek, where we arrived on the 14th of November.

"Here I engaged Mr. Gist to pilot us out, and also hired four others as servitors—Barnaby Currin and John McQuire, Indian traders, Henry Steward and William Jenkins, and in company with these persons left the inhabitants the next day.

"The excessive rains and vast quantities of snow which had fallen prevented our reaching Mr. Frazier's, an Indian trader, at the mouth of Turtle creek, on Monongahela river, till Thursday, the 22d. We were informed here that expresses had been sent a few days before to the traders down the river to acquaint them with the French general's death,* and the return of the major part of the French army into winter quarters.

"The waters were quite impassable without swimming our horses, which obliged us to get the loan of a canoe from Frazier, and to send Barnaby Currin and Henry Steward down the Monongahela with our baggage, to meet us at the forks of the Ohio, about ten miles below, there to cross the Allegheny.

"As I got down before the canoe, I spent some time in viewing the rivers and the land at the forks, which I think extremely well situated for a fort, as it has the absolute command of both rivers. The land at the point is twenty-five feet above the common surface of the water, and a considerable bottom of flat, well-timbered land all around it, very convenient for building. The rivers are each a quarter of a mile or more across, and run here very nearly at right angles. Allegheny bearing northeast, and Monongahela southeast. The former of these two is a very rapid and swift-running water; the other deep and still, without any perceptible fall. About two miles from this, on the southeast* side of the river, at the place where the Ohio Company intended to erect a fort, lives Shingiss,† King of the Delawares. We called upon him to invite him to a council at Logstown.

"As I had taken a good deal of notice yesterday of the situation at the fork, my curiosity led me to examine this more particularly, and I think it greatly inferior, either for defense or advantages, especially the latter. For a fort at the fork would be equally well situated on the Ohio, and have the entire command of the Monongahela, which runs up our settlement, and is extremely well designed for water carrige, as it is of a deep, still nature. Besides, a fort at the fork might be built at much less expense than at the other place.

"Nature has well contrived this lower place for water defense, but the hill on which it must stand, being about a quarter of a mile in length, and descending gradually on the land side, will render it very difficult and very expensive to make a sufficient fortification there. The whole flat upon the hill must be taken in, the side next the descent made extremely high, or else the hill itself cut away; otherwise, the enemy may raise batteries within that distance without being exposed to a single shot from the fort.

"Shingiss attended us to Logstown,‡ where we arrived between sunsetting and dusk, the twenty-fifth day after I left Williamsburg. As soon as I came into town I went to Monacatoocha§ (as the Half-King was out at his hunting cabin on Little Beaver Creek, about fifteen miles off), and informed him by John Davidson, my Indian Interpreter, that I was sent a messenger to the French general, and was ordered to call upon the sachems of the Six Nations, to acquaint them with it. I gave him a string of wampum and a twist of tobacco, and desired him to send for the Half-King—which he promised to do by a runner in the morning—and for other sachems. I invited him and the other great men present, to my tent, where they staid about an hour, and returned.

"According to the best observations I could make, Mr. Gist's new settlement (which we passed) bears about west northwest sventy miles from Will's creek; Shanopin's, or the forks, north by west, or north northwest about fifty miles from that; and from thence to the Logstown the course is nearly west about eighteen or twenty miles; so that the whole distance, as we went and computed it, is at least one hundred and thirty-five or one hundred and forty miles from our back inhabitants.

25th.—Came to town four of ten Frenchmen who had deserted from a company at the Kuskuskas,‖ which lies at the mouth of this river. I got the following account from them: They were sent from New Orleans, with one hundred men and eight canoe-loads of provisions, to this place, where they expected to have met the same number of men from the forts on this side of Lake Erie, to convey them and the stores up, who were not arrived when they ran off.

"I inquired into the situation of the French on the Mississippi, their numbers, and what forts they had built. They informed me that there were four small forts between New Orleans and the Black Islands, garrisoned with about thirty or

*This probably refers to the Marquis de la Jonquiere.

*Southwest side (?).

†Variously spelled.

‡Logstown is variously located by different writers; some affirming it to be on the right and some on the left bank. Hon. James Veech says there were two, one each side the river.

§Variously spelled.

‖Kaskaskia, at the mouth of the Kaskaskia river, in Illinois (?).

forty men and a few small pieces each. That at New Orleans, which is near the mouth of the Mississippi, there are thirty-five companies of forty men each, with a pretty strong fort mounting eight carriage-guns; and at the Black Islands there are several companies and a fort with six guns. The Black Islands are about a hundred and thirty leagues above the mouth of the Ohio, which is about three hundred and fifty above New Orleans. They also acquainted me that there was a small palisaded fort on the Ohio, at the mouth of the *Obaish, about sixty leagues from the Mississippi. The Obaish heads near the west end of Lake Erie, and affords the communication between the French on the Mississippi and those on the lakes. These deserters came up from the lower Shannoah† town with one Brown, an Indian trader, and were going to Philadelphia.

"About three o'clock this evening the Half-King‡ came to town. I went up and invited him with Davidson privately to my tent; and desired him to relate some of the particulars of his journey to the French Commandant, and of his reception there; also to give me an account of the ways and distance. He told me that the nearest and levelest way was now impassable, by reason of many large, miry savannahs; that we must be obliged to go by way of Venango, and should not get to the near fort in less than five or six night's sleep, good traveling. When he went to the fort, he said, he was received in a very stern manner by the late commander, who asked him, very abruptly, what he had come about, and to declare his business; which he said he did in the following speech:

"'Fathers, I am come to tell you your own speeches, what your own mouths have declared. Fathers you, in former days, set a silver basin before us, wherein there was the leg of a beaver, and desired all the nations to come and eat of it—to eat in peace and plenty, and not to be churlish to one another; and, that if any person should be found to be a disturber, I here lay down by the edge of the dish a rod, which you must scourge them with; and if your father should get foolish, in my old days, I desire you may use it upon me as well as the others.

"'Now, fathers, it is you who are the disturbers in this land, by coming and building your towns, and taking it away unknown to us, and by force.

"'Fathers, we kindled a fire a long time ago, at a place called Montreal, where we desired you to stay, and not to come and intrude upon our land. I now desire you may dispatch to that place; for be it known to you, fathers, that this is our land and not yours.

"'Fathers, I desire you may hear me in civilness; if not, we must handle that rod which was laid down for the use of the obstreperous. If you had come in a peaceful manner, like our brothers, the English, we would not have been against your trading with us as they do; but to come, fathers, and build houses on our land, and to take it by force, is what we cannot submit to.

"'Fathers, both you and the English are white; we live in a country between; therefore the land belongs neither to one nor the other. But the great Being above allowed it to be a place of residence for us; so, fathers, I desire you to withdraw, as I have done our brothers, the English; for I will keep you at arm's length. I lay this down as a trial for both to see which will have the greatest regard to it, and that side we will stand by, and make equal shares with us. Our brothers, the English, have heard this, and I come now to tell it to you; for I am not afraid to discharge you off this land.'

"This, he said, was the substance of what he spoke to the General, who made this reply:

"'Now, my child, I have heard your speech; you spoke first, and it is my time to speak now. Where is my wampum that you took away with the marks of towns on it? This wampum I do not know which you have discharged me off the land with; but you need not put yourself to the trouble of speaking, for I will not hear you. I am not afraid of flies or mosquitoes, for Indians are such as those. I tell you that down that river I will go, and build upon it, according to my command.

"'If the river was blocked up, I have forces sufficient to burst it open, and tread under my feet all that stand in opposition, together with their alliances; for my force is as the sand upon the sea shore; therefore, here is your wampum; I sling it at you! Child, you talk foolish; you say this land belongs to you, but there is not the black of my nail yours.

"'I saw the land sooner than you did, before the *Shannoahs and you were at war. Lead† was the man who went down and took possession of that river. It is my land, and I will have it, let who will stand up for or against it. I will buy and sell with the English (mockingly). If people will be ruled by me they may expect kindness, but not else.'

"The Half-King told me he had enquired of the general after two Englishmen who were made prisoners, and received this answer:

"'Child, you think it is a very great hardship that I made prisoners of those two people at Venango.‡ Don't concern yourself with it; we took and carried them to Canada, to get intelligence of what the English were doing in Virginia.'

"He informed me that they had built two forts, one on Lake Erie§ and another on French creek, near a small lake, about fifteen miles asunder, and a large wagon road between. They are both built after the same model, but different in size—that on the lake largest. He gave me a plan of them of his own drawing.

"The Indians inquired very particularly after their brothers in Carolina gaol.

They also asked what sort of a boy it was who was taken from the South Branch, for they were told by some Indians that a party of French Indians had carried a white boy to Kuskuska‖ town, towards the lakes.

"26th.—We met in council at the long-house, about nine o'clock, where I spoke to them as follows:

"'Brothers, I have called you together in council by order of your brother, the Governor of Virginia, to acquaint you that I am sent, with all possible dispatch, to visit and deliver a letter to the French Commandant, of very great importance to your brothers, the English, and, I dare say, to you, their friends and allies.

"'I was desired, brothers, by your brother, the Governor, to call upon you, the sachems of the nations, to inform you of it, and to ask your advice and assistance to proceed by the nearest and best road to the French. You see, brothers, I have gotten thus far on my journey.

"'His Honor likewise desired me to apply for some of your young men to conduct and provide provisions for us on our way, and be a safeguard against those French Indians who have taken up the hatchet against us. I have spoken thus particularly to you, brothers, because his Honor, our Governor, treats you as good friends and allies, and holds you in great esteem. To confirm what I have said, I give you this string of wampum.'

"After they had considered for some time on the above discourse, the Half-King got up and spoke:

"'Now, my brother, in regard to what my brother, the Governor, has desired of me, I return you this answer:

*This probably refers to "Poste Vincinnes," located on the Wabash, about forty miles from the mouth. The location of the Black Islands, as given by Washington, is near Rock Island.

†Spelled by the French "Coonanons"—a Shawnese village.

‡The "Half-King," or Tanicharison, was a good friend of the English, but he died at Harrisburg, in October, 1754. His advice would doubtless have been of great value to the British in the subsequent campaign, and his death was a serious loss to them.

Shawanese, also spelled Shawanos.

†Having reference, no doubt, to the leaden plates of Celoron.

‡John Trotter and James McLaughlin.

§One of these forts was at Presq' Isle, and the other at Le Boeuf, now Waterford.

‖This place is located, on an old map, on the west side of Beaver creek, one mile below where the Shenango and Mahoning unite.

"'I rely upon you, as a brother ought to do, as you say we are brothers and one people. We shall put our heart in hand, and speak to our fathers, the French, concerning the speech they made to me; and you may depend that we will endeavor to be your guard.

"'Brother, as you have asked my advice, I hope you will be ruled by it, and stay until I can provide a company to go with you. The French speech-belt is not here; I have to go for it to my hunting-cabin. Likewise, the people whom I have ordered have not yet come, and cannot until the third night from this; until which time, brother, I must beg you to stay.

"I intend to send the guard of Mingoes,* Shannoahs, and Delawares, that our brothers may see the love and loyalty we bear them."

"As I had orders to make all possible dispatch, and waiting here was very contrary to my inclination, I thanked him in the most suitable manner I could, and told him that my business required the greatest expedition, and would not admit of that delay. He was not well pleased that I should offer to go before the time he had appointed, and told me that he could not consent to our going without a guard, for fear some accident should befall us and draw a reflection on him. 'Besides,' said he, this is a matter of no small moment, and must not be entered into without due consideration; for I intend to deliver up the French speech-belt, and make the Shannoahs and Delawares do the same.'

"And accordingly he gave orders to King Shingiss, who was present, to attend on Wednesday night with the wampum, and two men of their nation to be in readiness to set out with us the next morning.

"As I found it was impossible to get off without affronting them in the most egregious manner, I consented to stay.

"I gave them back a string of wampum which I met with at Mr. Frazier's, and which they sent, with a speech, to his Honor the Governor, to inform him that three nations of French Indians, namely, Chippewas, Ottoways and Orundaks, had taken up the hatchet against the English, and desired them to repeat it over again. But this they postponed doing until they met in full council with the Shannoah and Delaware chiefs.

"27th.—Runners were dispatched very early for the Shannoah chiefs. The Half-King set out himself to fetch the French speech-belt from his hunting-cabin.

"28th.—He returned this evening, and came with Monakatoocha and two other sachems to my tent, and begged (as they had complied with his Honor the Governor's request in providing men, etc.), to know on what business we were going to the French. This was a question I had all along expected, and provided as satisfactory answers to as I could, which allayed their curiosity a little.

"Monakatoocha informed me that an Indian from Venango brought news, a few days ago, that the French had called all the Mingoes, Delawares, etc., together at that place, and told them that they intended to have been down the river this fall, but the waters were growing cold and the winter advancing which obliged them to go into quarters, but that they might assuredly expect them in the spring with far greater numbers: and desired that they might be quite passive, and not intermeddle unless they had a mind to draw all their forces upon them: for that they expected to fight the English three years (as they supposed there would be some attempts made to stop them), in which time they should conquer; but that if they should prove equally strong, they and the English would join to cut them all off, and divide the land between them; that though they had lost their general and some few of their soldiers, yet there were men enough to re-enforce them and to make them masters of the Ohio.

"'This speech,' he said 'was delivered to them by one Captain Joncaire, their interpreter-in-chief, living at Venango, and a man of note in the army.'

"29th.—The Half-King and Monakatoocha came very early and begged me to stay one day more; for, notwithstanding they had used all the diligence in their power, the Shannoah chiefs had not brought the wampum they ordered, but would certainly be in to-night; if not, they would delay me no longer, but would send it after us as soon as they arrived. When I found them so pressing in their request, and knew that the returning of wampum was the abolishing of agreements, and giving this up was shaking off all dependence upon the French, I consented to stay, as I believe an offense offered at this crisis might be attended with greater ill consequences than another day's delay. They also informed me that Shingiss could not get in his men, and was prevented from coming himself by his wife's sickness (I believe by fear of the French), but that the wampum of that nation was lodged with Kustalogo, one of their chiefs, at Venango.

"In the evening, late, they came again, and acquainted me that the Shannoahs were not yet arrived, but that it should not retard the prosecution of our journey. He delivered, in my hearing, the speech that was to be made to the French by Jeskakake, one of their old chiefs, which was giving up the belt the late Commandant had asked for, and repeating nearly the same speech he himself had done before.

"He also delivered a string of wampum to this chief, which was sent by King Shingiss, to be given to Kustalogo, with orders to repair to the French and deliver up the wampum.

"He likewise gave a very large string of black and white wampum, which was to be sent up immediately to the Six Nations if the French refused to quit the land at this warning, which was the third and last time, and was the right of this Jeskakake to deliver.

"30th.—Last night the great men assembled at their council-house, to consult further about this journey, and who were to go; the result of which was, that only three of their chiefs, with one of their best hunters, should be our convoy.

"The reason they gave for not sending more, after what had been proposed at council the 26th was, that a greater number might give the French suspicions of some bad design, and cause them to be treated rudely; but I rather think they could not get their hunters in.

"We set out about nine o'clock with the Half-King, Jeskakake, White Thunder, and the Hunter, and traveled on the road to Venango, where we arrived the 4th of December, without anything remarkable happening but a continued series of bad weather.

"This is an old Indian town, situated at the mouth of French creek, on the Ohio,* and lies near north about sixty miles from the Logstown, but more than seventy the way we were obliged to go.

"We found the French colors hoisted at a house from which they had driven Mr. John Frazier, an English subject. I immediately repaired to it to know where the commander resided. There were three officers, one of whom, Captain Joncaire, said that he had the command of the Ohio, but there was a general officer at the near fort, where he advised me to apply for an answer. He invited us to sup with them, and treated us with the greatest complaisance.

"The men, as they dosed themselves pretty plentifully with it, soon banished the restraint which at first appeared in their conversation, and gave a license to their tongues to reveal their sentiments more freely.

"They told us that it was their absolute design to take possession of the Ohio, and by G—d they would do it; for that although they were sensible the English could raise two men for their one, yet they knew their motions were too slow and dilatory to prevent any undertaking of theirs. They pretend to have an undoubted right to the river from a discovery made by one La Salle sixty years ago; and the rise of this expedition is to prevent our settling on it, or the waters of it, as they heard of some families moving out in order thereto. From the best intelligence I could get, there have been fifteen hundred men on this side Ontario Lake.

*Iroquois or Six Nations.

*From this it would seem that the Allegheny was known as the Ohio.

"But, upon the death of the general, all were recalled but about six or seven hundred, who were left to garrison four forts, one hundred and fifty or thereabout in each.

"The first of them is on French creek, near a small lake, about sixty miles from Venango, near southwest; the next lies on Lake Erie, where the greater part of their stores are kept, about fifteen miles from the other; from this it is one hundred and twenty miles from the carrying place at the falls of Lake Erie, where there is a small fort, at which they should lodge their goods in bringing them from Montreal, the place from whence all their stores are brought. Their next fort lies about twenty miles from this, on Ontario Lake. Between this fort and Montreal there are three others, the first of which is nearly opposite to the English Fort Oswego. From the fort on Lake Erie to Montreal is about six hundred miles, which, they say, requires no more (if good weather) than four week's voyage, if they go in barks or large vessels, so that they may cross the lake; but if they come in canoes, it will require five or six weeks, for they are obliged to keep under the shore.

"December 5th.—Rained excessively all day, which prevented our traveling. Captain Joncaire sent for the Half-King, as he had but just heard that he came with me. He affected to be much concerned that I did not make free to bring him before. I excused it in the best manner of which I was capable, and told him I did not think their company was agreeable, as I had heard him say a good deal in dispraise of Indians in general; but another motive prevented me from bringing them into his company. I knew that he was an interpreter, and a person of great influence among the Indians, and had lately used all possible means to draw them over to his interest; therefore I was desirous of giving him no opportunity that could be avoided.

"When they came in there was great pleasure expressed at seeing them. He wondered how they could come so near without coming to visit him; made several trifling presents, and applied liquor so fast that they were soon rendered incapable of the business they came about, notwithstanding the caution which was given.

"6th.—The Half-King came to my tent quite sober, and insisted very much that I should hear what he had to say to the French. I fain would have prevented him from speaking anything until he came to the Commandant, but could not prevail. He told me that at this place a council-fire was kindled, where all their business with these people was to be transacted, and that the management of the Indian affairs was left solely to Monsieur Joncaire. As I was desirous of knowing the issue of this, I agreed to stay, but sent our horses a little way up French creek to raft over and encamp; which I knew would make it near night.

"About ten o'clock they met in council. The king spoke much the same as he had done before to the general, and offered the French speech-belt, which had before been demanded, with marks of four towns on it, which Monsieur Joncaire refused to receive, but desired him to carry it to the fort to the commander.

"7th.—Monsieur La Force, commissary of the French stores, and three other soldiers came over to accompany us up. We found it extremely difficult to get the Indians off to-day, as every stratagem had been used to prevent their going up with me. I had last night left John Davidson (the Indian interpreter), whom I brought with me from town, and strictly charged him not to be out of their company, as I could not get them over to my tent; for they had some business with Kustalogo, chiefly to know why he did not deliver up the French speech-belt, which he had in keeping; but I was obliged to send Mr. Gist over to-day to fetch them, which he did with great persuasion.

"At twelve o'clock we set out for the fort, and were prevented arriving there until the 11th by excessive rains, snows, and bad traveling through many mires and swamps. These we were obliged to pass to avoid crossing the creek, which was impassable, either by fording or rafting, the water was so high and rapid.

"We passed over much good land since we left Venango and through several very extensive and rich meadows, one of which, I believe, was nearly four miles in length, and considerably wider in some places.

"12th.—I prepared early to wait upon the commander, and was received and conducted to him by the second officer in command. I acquainted him with my business, and offered him my commission and letter, both of which he requested me to keep until the arrival of Monsieur Reparti, captain at the next fort, who was sent for and expected every hour.

"The commander is knight of the military order at St. Louis, and named Legardeur de St. Pierre. He is an elderly gentleman, and has much the air of a soldier. He was sent over to take the command immediately upon the death of the late general, and arrived here about seven days before me.

"At two o'clock the gentleman who was sent for arrived, when I offered the letter, etc., again, which they received, and adjourned into a private apartment for the captain to translate, who understood a little English. After he had done it, the commander desired I would walk in and bring in my interpreter to peruse and correct it; which I did.

"13th.—The chief officers retired to hold a council of war, which gave me an opportunity to take the dimensions of the fort, and make what observations I could.

"It is situated on the south or west fork of French creek, near the water, and is almost surrounded by the creek, and a small branch of it, which form a kind of an island. Four houses compose the sides. The bastions are made of piles driven into the ground, standing more than twelve feet above it, and sharp at the top, with port-holes cut for cannon, and loop-holes for the small guns to fire through. There are eight six-pound pieces mounted in each bastion, and one piece of four pounds below the gate. In the bastions are a guard-house, chapel, doctor's lodging, and the commander's private store, round which are laid platforms for the cannon and men to stand on. There are several barracks without the fort, for the soldiers' dwellings, covered, some with bark and some with boards, made chiefly of logs. There are also several houses, such as stables, smith's shop, etc.

"I could get no certain account of the number of men here; but according to the best judgment I could form, there are a hundred, exclusive of officers, of whom there are many. I also gave orders to the people who were with me, to take an exact account of the canoes, which were hauled up to convey their forces down in the spring. This they did, and told fifty of birch bark and a hundred and seventy of pine, besides many others which were blocked out, in readiness for being made.

"14th.—As the snow increased very fast and our horses daily became weaker, I sent them off unloaded under the care of Barnaby Currin and two others, to make all convenient dispatch to Venango, and there to wait our arrival, if there was a prospect of the river's freezing; if not, then to continue down to Shanapin's town, at the forks of the Ohio, and there to wait until we came to cross the Allegheny; intending myself to go down by water, as I had the offer of a canoe or two.

"As I found many plots concerted to retard the Indians' business and prevent their returning with me, I endeavored all that lay in my power to frustrate their schemes, and hurried them on to execute their intended design. They accordingly pressed for admittance this evening, which at length was granted them privately, to the commander and one or two other officers. The Half-King told me that he offered the wampum to the commander, who evaded taking it, and made many fair promises of love and friendship; said he wanted to live in peace and trade amicably with them, as a proof of which he would send some goods immediately down to the Logstown for them. But I rather think the design of that is to bring away all our straggling traders they meet with, as I privately understood they intended to carry an officer, etc., with them. And what rather confirms this opinion, I was inquiring of the commander by what authority he had made prisoners of several of our English subjects. He told me that the country belonged to them; that no Englishman had a right to trade upon those waters; and that he had orders to make every person prisoner who attempted it on the Ohio or the waters of it.

"I inquired of Captain Reparti about the boy that was carried by this place, as it was done while the command devolved on him, between the death of the late general and the arrival of the present. He acknowledged that a boy had been carried past, and that the Indians had two or three white men's scalps (I was told by some of the Indians at Venango eight), but pretended to have forgotten the name of the place where the boy came from, and all the particular facts, though he had questioned him for some hours, as they were carrying him past. I likewise inquired what they had done with John Trotter and James McClocklan, two Pennsylvania traders, whom they had taken with all their goods. They told me they had been sent to Canada, but were now returned home.

"This evening I received an answer to his Honor the Governor's letter from the Commandant.*

"15th.—The Commandant ordered a plentiful store of liquor, provisions, etc., to be put on board our canoes, and appeared to be extremely complaisant, though he was exerting every artifice which he could invent to set our Indians at variance with us, to prevent their going until after our departure; presents, rewards, and everything which could be suggested by him or his officers. I cannot say that ever in my life I suffered so much anxiety as I did in this affair. I saw that every stratagem which the most fruitful brain could invent was practiced to join the Half-King to their interest, and that leaving him there was giving them the opportunity they aimed at. I went to the Half-King and pressed him in the strongest terms to go; he told me that the Commandant would not discharge him until the morning. I then went to the Commandant and desired him to do their business, and complained of ill-treatment; for keeping them, as they were part of my company, was detaining me. This he promised not to do, but to forward my journey as much as he could. He protested he did not keep them, but was ignorant of the cause of their stay, though I soon found it out. He had promised them a present of guns, etc., if they would wait until the morning. As I was very much pressed by the Indians to wait this day for them, I consented, on a promise that nothing should hinder them in the morning.

"16th.—The French were not slack in their inventions to keep the Indians this day also. But as they were obliged, according to promise, to give the present, they then endeavored to try the power of liquor, which I doubt not would have prevailed at any other time than this; but I urged and insisted with the King so closely upon his word that he refrained, and set off with us as he had engaged.

"We had a tedious and very fatigueing passage down the creek. Several times we had like to have been staved against rocks, and many times were obliged all hands to get out and remain in the water half an hour or more, getting over the shoals. At one place the ice had lodged and made it impassable by water; we were, therefore, obliged to carry our canoe across the neck of land, a quarter of a mile over. We did not reach Venango until the 22d, where we met with our horses.

"This creek is extremely crooked. I dare say the distance between the fort and Venango cannot be less than one hundred and thirty miles, to follow the meanders.

"23d.—When I got things ready to set off I sent for the Half-King, to know whether he intended to go with us or by water. He told me that White Thunder had hurt himself much, and was sick and unable to walk, therefore he was obliged to carry him down in a canoe.

"As I found he intended to stay here a day or two, and knew that Monsieur Joncaire would employ every scheme to set him against the English, as he had before done, I told him I hoped he would guard against his flattery and let no fine speeches influence him in their favor. He desired I might not be concerned, for he knew the French too well for anything to engage him in their favor, and that though he could not go down with us, he yet would endeavor to meet at the forks with Joseph Campbell, to deliver a speech for me to carry to his Honor the Governor. He told me he would order the Young Hunter to attend us, and get provisions, etc., if wanted.

"Our horses were now so weak and feeble, and the baggage so heavy (as we were obliged to provide all the necessaries which the journey would require), that we doubted much their performing it. Therefore myself and others, except the drivers, who were obliged to ride, gave up our horses for packs, to assist along with the baggage. I put myself in an Indian walking dress, and continued with them three days, until I found there was no probability of their getting home in reasonable time.

"The horses became less able to travel every day, the cold increased very fast, and the roads were becoming much worse by a deep snow, continually freezing; therefore, as I was uneasy to get back, to make report of my proceedings to his Honor the Governor, I determined to prosecute my journey the nearest way through the woods on foot. Accordingly, I left Mr. Vanbraam in charge of our baggage, with money and directions to provide necessaries from place to place for themselves and horses, and to make the most convenient dispatch in traveling.

"I took my necessary papers, pulled off my clothes, and tied myself up in a watch coat. Then, with a gun in hand and pack on my back, in which were my papers and provisions, I set out with Mr. Gist, fitted in the same manner, on Wednesday, the 26th. The day following, just after we had passed a place called Murderingtown (where we intended to quit the path and steer across the country for *Shanapin's Town), we fell in with a party of French Indians, who had laid in wait for us. One of them fired at Mr. Gist or me, not fifteen steps off, but, fortunately missed. We took this fellow into custody, and kept him until about nine o'clock at night, then let him go, and walked all the remaining part of the night without making any stop, that we might get the start so far as to be out of the reach of their pursuit the next day, since we were well assured they would follow our track as soon as it was light. The next day we continued traveling until quite dark, and got to the river about two miles above Shanapin's. We expected to have found the river frozen, but it was not, only about fifty yards from each shore. The ice, I suppose, had broken up above, for it was driving in vast quantities.

"There was no way for getting over but on a raft; which we set about making, with but one poor hatchet, and finished just after sunsetting. This was a whole day's work. We next got it launched, then went on board of it and set off; but before we were half-way over we were jammed in the ice in such a manner that we expected every moment our raft to sink and ourselves to perish. I put out my setting pole to try to stop the raft, that the ice might pass by, when the rapidity of the stream threw it with so much violence against the pole that it jerked me out into ten feet water; but I fortunately saved myself by catching hold of one of the raft logs. Notwithstanding all our efforts, we could not get to either shore, but were obliged, as we were near an island, to quit our raft and make to it.

*Washington used this and commander indiscriminately.

*This name is variously spelled: Shanopin, Shanapin, Shannapin, etc.

"The cold was so extremely severe that Mr. Gist had all his fingers and some of his toes frozen, and the water was shut up so hard that we found no difficulty in getting off the island* on the ice in the morning, and went to Mr. Frazier's. We met here with twenty warriors who were going to the southward to war, but coming to a place at the head of the Great Kenawha, where they found seven people killed and scalped (all but one woman with very light hair), they turned about and ran back, for fear the inhabitants should rise and take them as the authors of the murder. They report that the bodies were lying about the house, and some of them much torn and eaten by the hogs. By the marks which were left they say they were French Indians of the Ottoway nation who did it.

"As we intended to take horses here, and it required some time to find them, I went up about three miles to the mouth of the Youghiogany, to visit Queen Aliquippa,† who had expressed great concern that we passed her in going to the fort. I made her a present of a watch-coat and a bottle of rum, which latter was thought much the better present of the two.

"Tuesday, the 1st of January, we left Mr. Frazier's house, and arrived at Mr. Gist's, at Monongahela, the 2d, where I bought a horse and saddle. The 6th we met seventeen horses loaded with materials and stores for a fort at the fork of the Ohio, and the day after, some families going out to settle. This day we arrived at Will's creek, after as fatigueing a journey as it is possible to conceive, rendered so by excessive bad weather. From the 1st day of December to the 15th, there was but one day in which it did not rain or snow incessantly, and throughout the whole journey we met with nothing but one continued series of cold, wet weather, which occasioned very uncomfortable lodgings, especially after we had quitted our tent, which was some screen from the inclemency of it.

"On the 11th I got to Belvoir, where I stopped one day to take the necessary rest; and then set out and arrived in Williamsburg the 16th, when I waited on his Honor the Governor, with the letter I had brought from the French Commandant and to give an account of the success of my proceedings.

"This I beg leave to do by offering the foregoing narrative, as it contains the most remarkable occurrences which happened in my journey.

"I hope what has been said will be sufficient to make your Honor satisfied with my conduct; for that was my aim in undertaking the journey, and chief study throughout the prosecution of it."

GIST'S JOURNAL.

Christopher Gist, the companion and guide of Washington, kept a journal, from which we make the following extract, as it throws additional light upon the character of Washington, and also narrates more particularly an incident of the journey which the latter mentions only casually:

"We rose early in the morning and set out about two o'clock, and got to the Murderingtown, on the southeast fork of Beaver creek. Here we met an Indian whom I thought I had seen at Joncaire's at Venango, when on our journey up to the French fort. This fellow called me by my Indian name, and pretended to be glad to see me.

"I thought very ill of the fellow, but did not care to let the Major know I mistrusted him. But he soon mistrusted him as much as I did. The Indian said he could hear a gun from his cabin, and steered us more northerly. We grew uneasy, and then he said two whoops might be heard from his cabin. We went two miles farther. Then the Major said he would stay at the next water. We came to water; we came to a clear meadow. It was very light and snow was on the ground. The Indian made a stop and turned about. The Major saw him point his gun at us, and he fired. Said the Major, 'Are you shot?' 'No,' said I; upon which the Indian ran forward to a big standing white oak, and began loading his gun; but we were soon with him. I would have killed him, but the Major would not suffer me. We let him charge his gun; we found he put in a ball; then we took care of him. Either the Major or I always stood by the guns. We made him make a fire for us by a little run, as if we intended to sleep there. I said to the Major, 'As you will not have him killed, we must get him away, and then we must travel all night;' upon which I said to the Indian, 'I suppose you were lost and fired your gun?' He said he knew the way to his cabin, and it was but a little way. 'Well,' said I, 'do you go home, and, as we are tired, we will follow your track in the morning; and here is a cake of bread for you, and you must give us meat for it in the morning.' He was glad to get away. I followed him, and listened until he was fairly out of the way, and then we went about half a mile, when we made a fire, set our compass, fixed our course, and traveled all night. In the morning we were at the head of Piny creek."

Christopher Gist, was one of the most noted pioneers and woodsmen that appeared on the stage during the troublous times from 1750 to 1783. He was a native of England, and there is some evidence that he had been educated for priest's orders in the English Episcopal Church. He was certainly a woodsman of the highest order, hardy and fearless, a good judge of land, a good surveyor, and well versed in Indian management and diplomacy.

*According to Mr. Neville B. Craig, this was undoubtedly Wainright's Island.
†Queen Aliquippa was a Delaware.

CHAPTER XVIII.

PUBLICATION OF WASHINGTON'S JOURNAL AND ITS EFFECT UPON THE COLONIES—THEIR SUBSEQUENT ACTION—THE CAPTURE OF THE FORKS OF THE OHIO BY THE FRENCH AS SHOWN IN THE LETTERS OF WASHINGTON TO THE GOVERNORS OF PENNSYLVANIA AND VIRGINIA—THE SUMMONS OF CONTRECOEUR—THE ERECTION OF FORT NECESSITY—THE BATTLE OF GREAT MEADOWS—THE OPERATION OF 1754—THE KING'S INSTRUCTIONS TO GENERAL BRADDOCK—BRADDOCK'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH GOVERNOR MORRIS.

NO doubt longer remained of the intention of the French in their movements. , Washington's Journal was ordered to be published, to arouse the people and excite their indignation. It was reprinted in nearly all the newspapers of the colonies, republished in London, and extensively read.*

Immediate arrangements were made in Virginia, to arrest the progress of the French. The Governor and Council resolved to enlist two companies, of one hundred men each, and send them to the Ohio, with orders to construct a fort on that river. The command of the two companies was given to Washington, who was appointed Major, without a dissenting voice. One company was to be raised by himself, and the other by Captain Trent, who was to collect his men among the traders and back settlers, and proceed immediately to the place of destination. Major Washington, in the meantime, was stationed at Alexandria, till the other company should be completed, and the proper military supplies forwarded to this place.*

*Spark's Washington, Vol. II, p. 432.

"To facilitate the enlistment of the number of troops wanted, Governor Dinwiddie issued a proclamation, granting five thousand acres of land on the Ohio river, to be divided among those who should be engaged in the expedition. One thousand acres were to be laid off contiguous to the fort, at the junction of the Monongahela and the Allegheny, for the use of the soldiers doing duty there, to be called the garrison lands."†

"The reasons assigned by the Governor to the ministers for making this grant were, that he hoped the soldiers would become permanent settlers, and that it was better to secure the lands by such a bounty, than to allow the French to take quiet possession of as many millions of acres as he had granted thousands. His proclamation was sanctioned by the King, but it was not well received in another quarter. The Assembly of Pennsylvania took alarm at the freedom with which lands, situated as they said in that province, were given away. Governor Hamilton wrote an expostulatory letter. It was a perplexing case; but Governor Dinwiddie escaped from the difficulty by replying, that the claims of Pennsylvania were at least doubtful, the boundary line not having been run; that the object in view equally concerned both provinces; that his grant did not necessarily imply future jurisdiction, and that, if the Pennsylvania jurisdiction should be established, the quit-rents might eventually be paid to the proprietary instead of the crown."

When Capt. Trent had raised a party of men, he set out for the junction of the Monongahela and Allegheny, for the purpose of speedily erecting the fort. Major Washington remained behind, actively engaged in raising the requisite number of men which were to follow, and ably garrison the fort when erected.‡

The Virginia Assembly then voted ten thousand pounds towards supporting the expedition, and the Governor was induced to increase the military force to three hundred men, divided into six companies and Col. Joshua Fry was appointed to command the whole. Major Washington was in consequence raised to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. The cannon and other military equipments which had recently arrived from England, were sent to Alexandria, for the use of the expedition.

Col. Washington marched from Alexandria on the 2d day of April, with two companies of troops, arrived at Will's creek, where the town of Cumberland now stands, on the 17th of April, having been joined on his route by a detachment under Capt. Stephen.

The detachment under Capt. Trent, arrived at the junction of the Monongahela and Allegheny, on the 17th day of February,§ and on the 16th of April, 1754, were engaged in the erection of the fort, when Contrecœur, at the head of a large French force, suddenly appeared before the fort.‖ Very little progress had been made in the work. Capt. Trent was absent at Will's creek, and Lieut Frazier, was absent at his residence, ten miles up the Monongahela. Ensign Ward, therefore, was left in command, and the whole number of his men amounted to only forty-one.¶

Contrecœur approached within a short distance of the fort, and sent an officer with a summons to surrender, the particulars of which will be found in the following letters from Col. Washington to the Governors of Virginia and Pennsylvania.

WILL'S CREEK, 25th April, 1754.

SIR:—Capt. Trent's ensign, Mr. Ward, has this day arrived from the fork of the Monongahela, and brings the disagreeable account, that the fort, on the 18th instant, was surrendered at the summons of Monsieur Contrecœur to a body of French, consisting of upwards of one thousand men, who came from Venango with eighteen pieces of cannon, sixty batteaux, and three canoes. They gave him liberty to bring off all his men and working tools, which he accordingly did the same day.

Immediately upon this information I called a council of war, to advise on proper measures to be taken in this exigency. A copy of their resolves, with the proceedings, I herewith inclose by the bearer, whom I have continued express to your Honor for more minute intelligence.

Mr. Ward has the summons with him, and a speech from Half-King, which I also enclose, with the wampum. He is accompanied by one of the Indians mentioned therein, who were sent to see where we were, what was our strength, and to know the time to expect us out. The other young men I have prevailed upon to return to the Half-King with the following speech:

"Sachems, Warriors of the Six United Nations, Shannoahs, and Delawares, our friends and brothers: I received your speech by the Buck's brother (Mr. Ward), who came to us with the two young men five sleeps after leaving you. We return you thanks from hearts glowing with affection for your steadfast adherence to us, for your kind speech, and for your wise councils and directions to the Buck's brother.

"The young man will inform you where he met a small part of our army advancing towards you, clearing the road for a great number of our warriors, who are immediately to follow with our great guns, our ammunition and provisions.

"I could not delay to let you know our hearts, and have sent back one of the young men with this speech to acquaint you with them. I have sent the other, according to your desire, to the Governor of Virginia, with the Buck's brother, to deliver your speech and wampum, and to be an eye-witness of the preparations we are making to come in haste to support you, whose interest is dear to us as our lives. We resent the usage of the treacherous French, and our conduct will henceforth plainly show you how we have it at heart.

"I cannot be easy without seeing you before our forces meet at the fork of the road, and therefore I have the greatest desire that you and Escuniate, or one of you, should meet me on the road as soon as possible, to assist us in council.

"To assure you of the good will we bear you, and to confirm the truth of what has been said, I herewith present to you a string of wampum, that you may thereby remember how much I am your brother and friend."

I hope my proceedings in these affairs will be satisfactory to your honor, as I have, to the utmost of my knowledge, consulted the interest of the expedition and good of my country; whose rights, while they are asserted in so just a cause, I will defend to the last remains of life.

Hitherto the difficulties I have met with in marching have been greater than I expect to encounter on the Ohio, when possibly I may be surrounded by the enemy; and these difficulties have been occasioned by those, who, had they acted as becomes every good subject, would have exerted their utmost abilities to forward our just designs. Out of seventy-four wagons impressed at Winchester, we got but ten, after waiting a week, and some of those so badly provided with teams, that the soldiers were obliged to assist them up the hills, although it

*Spark's Washington, Vol. II, p. 1.

†History of the Backwoods, pp. 64-65.

‡History of the Backwoods, p. 64.

§Maryland Gazette, March 14, 1755.

‖After taking possession of the fort, the French commenced an immediate enlargement and completion of it. See Stoba's plan, and his and M'Kinney's description of it, in the early history of Pittsburgh.

¶Spark's Washington, Vol. II, pp. 4, 6, 7.

was known they had better teams at home. I doubt not that in some points I may have strained the law; but hope, as my sole motive was to expedite the march, I shall be supported in it, should my authority be questioned, which at present I don't apprehend, unless some busy-body intermeddles.

Your Honor will see by the resolves in council, that I am destined to the Monongahela with all the diligent dispatch in my power. We will endeavor to make the road sufficiently good for the heaviest artillery to pass; and, when we arrive at Redstone creek, fortify ourselves as strongly as the short time will allow. I doubt not that we can maintain a possession there, till we are reinforced, unless the rising of the waters shall admit the enemy's cannon to be conveyed up in canoes, and then I flatter myself we shall not be so destitute of intelligence, as not to get timely notice of it, and make a good retreat.

I hope you will see the absolute necessity for our having, as soon as our forces are collected, a number of cannon, some of heavy metal, with mortars and grenades to attack the French, and put us on an equal footing with them.

Perhaps it may be thought advisable to invite the Cherokees, Catawbas and Chickasaws to march to our assistance, as we are informed that six hundred Chippewas and Ottawas are marching down Sciota creek to join the French, who are coming up the Ohio. In that case, I would beg leave to recommend their being ordered to this place first, that a peace may be concluded between them and the Six Nations; for I am informed by several persons, that, as no good harmony subsists between them, their coming first to the Ohio may create great disorder, and turn out much to our disadvantage.

As I had opportunities I wrote to the Governors of Maryland and Pennsylvania, acquainting them with these advices, and enclosed the summons and Indian speech, which I hope you will not think me too forward in doing. I considered that the Assembly of Maryland was to sit in a few days, that the Pennsylvania Assembly is now sitting, and that, by giving timely notice, something might be done in favor of this expedition, which now requires all the force we can muster.

By the best information I can get, I much doubt whether any of the Indians will be in to treat in May. Are the Indian women and children, if they settle amongst us, to be maintained at our expense? They will expect it. I have the honor to be, &c.,

George Washington.

To Governor Dinwiddie.

Will's Creek, 27th April, 1754.

Honorable Sir:—It is with greatest concern I acquaint you, that Mr. Ward, Ensign in Captain Trent's company, was compelled to surrender his small fort in the Forks of Monongialo to the French, on the seventeenth instant (April), who fell down from Weningo (Venango), with a fleet of three hundred and sixty batteaux and canoes, with upwards of one thousand men and eighteen pieces of artillery, which they planted against the fort, drew up their men and sent the enclosed summons to Mr. Ward, who having but an inconsiderable number of men, and no cannon to make a proper defence, was obliged to surrender; they suffered him to draw off his men, arms and working tools, and gave leave that he might retreat to the inhabitants.

I have heard of your Honor's great zeal for his Majesty's service, and for all our interests on the present occasion. You will see by the enclosed speech of the Half-King, that the Indians expect some assistance from you; and I am persuaded you will take proper notice of their moving speech, and of their unshaken fidelity.

I thought it more advisable to acquaint your Honor with it immediately, than to wait till you could get intelligence by way of Williamsburg and the young man, as the Half-King proposes.

I have arrived thus far with a detachment of one hundred and fifty men; Col. Fry, with the remainder of the regiment and artillery, is daily expected. In the meantime, we advance slowly across the mountains, making roads as we march, fit for the carriages of our great guns, and are designed to proceed as far as the mouth of Redstone creek, which enters Monongalia about thirty-seven miles above the fort taken by the French, from whence we have a water-carriage down the river; and there is a stone house, built by the Ohio company, which may serve as a receptacle for our ammunition and provisions.

Besides these French that came from Weningo, we have credible accounts that another party are coming up Ohio. We also have intelligence that six hundred Chippeways and Ottoways are marching down Scioto creek to join them.

I hope your Honor will excuse the freedom I have assumed in acquainting you with these advices. It was the warm zeal I owe my country that influenced me to it, and occasioned this express.

I am, with all due respect and regard,
Your Honor's most obedient and very humble servant,

Geo. Washington.

To Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania:

A Summon, by order of Contrecoeur, Captain of one of the companies of the detachment of the French Marine, Commander-in-chief of his most Christian Majesty's troops, now on the Beautiful River, to the Commander of those of the King of Great Britain, at the mouth of the River Monongialo:

Sir:—Nothing can surprise me more than to see you attempt a settlement upon the lands of the King, my Master; which obliges me now sir, to send you this gentleman, Chevalier Le Mercier, Captain of the Bombardiers, Commander of the Artillery of Canada, to know of you, sir, by virtue of what authority you are to come to fortify yourself within the dominions of the King, my Master. This action seems so contrary to the last treaty of peace concluded at Aix La Chapelle, between his most Christian Majesty and the King of Great Britain, that I do not know to whom to impute such a usurpation, as it is incontestible that the lands situated along the Beautiful River belong to his Christian Majesty.

I am informed, sir, that your undertaking has been concerted by none else than by a company who have more in view the advantage of the trade than to endeavor to keep the union of harmony which subsists between the crowns of France and Great Britain, although it is as much the interest, sir, of your nation as ours to preserve it.

Let it be as it will, sir, if you come into this place charged with orders, I summon you in the name of the King, my Master, by virtue of orders which I got from my General, to retreat peaceably with your troops from off the lands of the King (and not to return; or else I find myself obliged to fulfill my duty, and compel you to it. I hope, sir, you will not defer an instant, and that you will not force me to the last extremity). In that case, sir, you may be persuaded that I will give orders that there shall be no damage done by the detachment.

I prevent you, sir, from the trouble of asking me one hour of delay, nor to wait for my consent to receive orders from your Governor. He can give none within the dominions of the King, my master. Those I have received of my General, are my laws, so that I cannot depart from them.

If, on the contrary, sir, you have not got orders, and only come to trade, I am sorry to tell you, that I cannot avoid seizing you, and to confiscate your effects to the use of the Indians, our children, allies, and friends; as you are not allowed to carry on a contraband trade. It is for this reason, sir, that we stopped two Englishmen, last year, who were trading upon our lands; moreover, the King, my master, asks nothing but his right; he has not the least intention to trouble the good harmony and friendship which reigns between his Majesty and the King of Great Britain.

The Governor of Canada can give proof of having done his utmost endeavors to maintain the perfect union which reigns between the two friendly princes; as he had learned that the Iroquois and Nepissingues of the Lake of the two mountains, had struck and destroyed an English family towards Carolina, he has barred up that road and forced them to give him a little boy belonging to that family, which was the only one alive, and which Mr. Welrich, a merchant of Montreal, has carried to Boston; and what is more, he has forbid his savages from exercising their accustomed cruelty upon the English and friends.

I could complain bitterly, sir, of the means taken all last winter to instigate the Indians to accept the hatchet, and to strike us, while we were striving to maintain the peace.

I am well persuaded, sir, of the polite manner you will receive Monsieur Le Mercier, as well out of regard to his business as his distinction and personal merit. I expect you will send him back with one of your officers, who will give me a precise answer. As you have got some Indians with you, sir, I join with Monsieur Le Mercier, an interpreter, that he may inform them of my intentions upon that subject.

I am with great regard, sir,

Your most humble and obedient,

CONTRECOEUR.

Done at our Camp, April 16, 1754.

Col. Washington immediately commenced enlarging the entrenchment and erecting pallisades, anticipating an attack from the French. He gave the place, thus fortified, the name of Fort Necessity.

Captain Mackay of the royal army, with an independent company of one hundred men from South Carolina, arrived at Fort Necessity, and the army now numbered about four hundred men. Leaving one company, under Captain Mackay, to guard the fort. Col. Washington leaving him in command, pushed over the Laurel Hill, cutting the road with extreme labor, through the wilderness, to Gist's plantation, near where the town of Connelsville now stands. It occupied two weeks, although the distance is only thirteen miles.*

The preparations by Washington, the arrival of the French and the battle at the Great Meadows, are so well related by Sparks, that we copy it entire:

"When the council of war was held at Gist's† plantation, on the intelligence received that the French at Fort Du Quesne were reinforced, and would speedily march against the English, it was resolved to send an express to Captain Mackay, then at the Great Meadows, desiring him to join Colonel Washington with his independent company of South Carolinians, and also call in Captain Lewis and Captain Polson, who were out with separate detachments, the next morning, when another council of war was convened, and it was unanimously resolved to retreat. A good deal of labor had been expended at Gist's in throwing up entrenchments, with the intention of waiting the approach of the French at that place, but the news of their increased numbers rendered this an inexpedient measure.

"Preparations for a retreat commenced immediately. The horses were few, and Colonel Washington set a noble example to the officers by lading his own horse with ammunition and other public stores, leaving his baggage behind, and giving the soldiers four pistols to carry it forward. The other officers followed this example. There were nine swivels, which were drawn by the soldiers of the Virginia regiment over a very broken road, unassisted by the men belonging to the Independent Company, who refused to perform any service of the kind. Nor would they act as pioneers, nor aid in transporting the public stores, considering that a duty not incumbent on them as King's soldiers. This conduct had a discouraging effect upon the soldiers of the Virginia regiment, by dampening their ardor, and making them more dissatisfied with their extreme fatigue; but the whole party reached the Great Meadows on the 1st of July.

"It was not the intention of Colonel Washington at first to halt at this place, but his men had become so much fatigued from great labor, and a deficiency of provisions, that they could draw the swivels no further, nor carry the baggage on their backs. They had been eight days without bread, and at the Great Meadows they found only a few bags of flour. It was thought advisable to wait here, therefore, and fortify themselves in the best manner they could, till they should receive supplies and reinforcements. They had heard of the arrival at Alexandria of the two Independent Companies from New York, twenty days before, and it was presumed they must by this time have reached Will's creek. An express was sent to hasten them on, with as much dispatch as possible.

"Meantime Colonel Washington set his men to felling trees, and carrying logs to the fort, with a view to raise a breastwork, and enlarge and strengthen the fortification in the best manner that circumstances would permit. The space of the ground, called the Great Meadows, is a level bottom, through which passes a small creek, and is surrounded by hills of a moderate and gradual ascent. This bottom or glade, is entirely level, covered with long grass and small bushes, and varies in width. At the point where the fort stood, it is about two hundred and fifty yards wide, from the base of one hill to that of the opposite. The position of the fort was well chosen, being about one hundred yards from the upland, or wooded ground, on the one side, and one hundred and fifty on the other, and so situated on the margin of the creek as to afford easy access to water. At one point the high ground comes within sixty yards of the fort, and this was the nearest distance to which an enemy could approach under the shelter of trees. The outlines of the fort were still visible, when the spot was visited by the writer in 1830, occupying an irregular square, the dimensions of which were about one hundred feet on each side. One of the angles was prolonged further than the others, for the purpose of reaching the water in the creek. On the west side, next to the nearest wood, were three entrances, protected by short breast-works or bastions. The remains of a ditch, stretching round the south and west sides, were also distinctly seen. The site of this fort, named Fort Necessity, from the circumstances attending its erection and original use, is three or four hundred yards south of what is called the National Road, four miles from the foot of Laurel Hill, and fifty miles from Cumberland at Will's creek.

On the 2d of July, early in the morning, an alarm was received from a sentinel, who had been wounded by the enemy; and at nine o'clock, intelligence came that the whole body of the enemy, amounting, as was reported, to nine hundred men, was only four miles off. At eleven o'clock they approached the fort, and began to fire, at the distance of six hundred yards, but without effect. Col. Washington had drawn up his men on the open ground outside of the trenches, waiting for the attack, which he presumed would be made as soon as the enemy's forces emerged from the woods; and he ordered his men to reserve their fire till they should be near enough to do execution. The distant firing was supposed to be a stratagem to draw Washington's men into the woods, and thus to take them at a disadvantage. He suspected the design, and maintained his post till he found the French did not incline to leave the woods, and attack the fort by an assault, as he supposed they would, considering their superiority of numbers. He then drew his men back into the trenches, and gave them orders to fire according to their discretion, as suitable opportunities might present themselves. The French and Indians remained on the side of the rising ground, which was nearest to the fort, and, sheltered by the trees, kept up a brisk fire of musketry, but never appeared in the open plain below. The rain fell heavily through the day, the trenches were filled with water, and many of the arms of Col. Washington's men were out of order, and used with difficulty.

*Day's Historical Collections, p. 334.

†Gist's house was thirteen miles from the Great Meadows, not far from Stewart's crossing of the Youghiogheny river; five or six miles from Dunbar's camp. The council of war was held the 28th of June.

In this way the battle continued from eleven o'clock in the morning till eight at night, when the French called and requested a parley. Suspecting this to be a feint to procure the admission of an officer into the fort, that he might discover their condition, Col. Washington at first declined listening to the proposal, but when the call was repeated, with the additional request that an officer might be sent to them, engaging at the same time their parole for his safety, he sent out Capt. Vanbraam, the only person under his command, that could speak French, except the Chevalier de Peyrouny, an Ensign in the Virginia regiment, who was dangerously wounded, and disabled from rendering any service on this occasion. Vanbraam returned and brought with him from M. de Villiers, the French commander, proposed articles of capitulation. These he read and pretended to interpret, and, some charges having been made by mutual agreement, both parties signed them about midnight.

By the terms of the capitulation, the whole garrison was to retire, and to return without molestation to the inhabited parts of the country, and the French commander promised, that no embarrassment should be interposed, either by his own men or the savages. The English were to take away everything in their possession, except their artillery, and to march out of the fort the next morning with the honors of war, their drums beating and colors flying. As the French had killed all the horses and cattle, Col. Washington had no means of transporting his heavy baggage and stores; and it was conceded to him, that his men might conceal their effects, and that a guard might be left to protect them, till horses could be sent up to take them away. Col. Washington agreed to restore the prisoners, who had been taken at the skirmish with Jumonville; and as a surety for this article two hostages, Capt. Vanbraam and Capt. Stobo, were delivered up to the French, and were to be retained till the prisoners should return. It was moreover agreed, that the party capitulating should not attempt to build any more establishments at that place, or beyond the mountains, for the space of a year.

"Early next morning, Col. Washington began to march from the fort in good order, but he had proceeded only a short distance, when a body of one hundred Indians, being a reinforcement to the French, came upon him, and could hardly be restrained from attacking his men. They pilfered the baggage and did other mischief. He marched forward, however, with as much speed as possible, in the weakened and encumbered condition of his army, there being no other mode of conveying the wounded men and the baggage, than on the soldier's backs. As the prisoners were nearly exhausted, no time was to be lost; and, leaving much of the baggage behind, he hastened to Will's creek, where all the necessary supplies were in store. Thence Col. Washington and Capt. Mackay proceeded to Williamsburg and communicated in person to the Governor of the campaign.

"A good deal of dissatisfaction was expressed with some of the articles of capitulation, when they came to be made public. The truth is, Col. Washington had been grossly deceived by the interpreter, either through ignorance or design. An officer of his regiment, who was present at the reading and signing of the articles, wrote as follows on this point, five weeks afterwards, in a letter to a friend:

"When Mr. Vanbraam returned with the French proposals, we were obliged to take the sense of them from his mouth; it rained so hard, that he could not give us a written translation of them; we could scarcely keep the candle lighted to read them by; and every officer there is ready to declare, that there was no such word as assassination mentioned. The terms expressed were the death of Jumonville. If it had been mentioned, we would by all means have had it altered, as the French, during the course of the interview, seemed very condescending, and desirous to bring things to a conclusion; and, upon our insisting, altered the articles relating to the stores and ammunition, which they wanted to detain; and that of the cannon, which they agreed to have destroyed, instead of reserved for their use.

"Another article, which appears to our disadvantage, is that whereby we oblige ourselves not to attempt an establishment beyond the mountains. This was translated to us, not to attempt buildings or improvements on the lands of his most Christian Majesty. This we never intended, as we denied he had any there, and therefore thought it needless to dispute this point.

"The last article, which relates to the hostages, is quite different from the translation of it given to us. It is mentioned for the security of the performance of this treaty, as well as for the return of the prisoners. There was never such an intention on our side, or mention of it made on theirs, by our interpreter. Thus, the evil intention or negligence of Vanbraam, our conduct is scrutinized by a busy world, fond of scrutinizing the proceedings of others, without considering circumstances, or giving just attention to reasons, which might be offered to obviate their censures."

"Vanbraam was a Dutchman, and had but an imperfect knowledge of either the French or English languages. How far his ignorance should be taken as an apology for his blunders is uncertain. Although he had proved himself a good officer, yet there were other circumstances, which brought his fidelity in question. Governor Dinwiddie, in giving an account of this affair to Lord Albemarle says, 'In the capitulation* they made

*Capitulation accordee par Monsieur De Villier captaine d'Infanterie commandant des Troupes de sa Majesti tres Chretienne, a celuy des Troupes Angloises actuellement dans le Fort Necessite, qui avoir ete construit sur les Terres du Domain du Roi, ce 3 Juillet, a huit Heures dur soir scavoir, 1754.

Comme notre intention na jamais ete de troubler la paix et la bonne harmonoie qui regnoit entre les deux Princes amis, mais seulement de vanger l'assassin qui a ete fait sur un de nos officiers, porteurs d'une somation, et sur son escart, comme aussi d'empecher ancun etablissement sur les terres du domain Roi mon maitre a ces considerations, nous voulons bien accorder grace a tous les Anglois qui sont dans le dit fort aux conditions apres.

1. Nous accordons au commandant Anglois de se retirer avec toute sa garrison, pour sen retourner paisiblement dans son pays; et lui promettons d'empecher qu'il luy soit fait aucune insulte par nos Francois et de maintenir, autant qu'il sera en notre pouvoir, tous les sauvages qui sont avec nos.

2. Il lui sera permis de sortir, et d'emporter tout ce qui leur appartiendra a l'exception de l'artillerie, que nois reservons.

3. Que nous leurs accordons les honneurs de la guerre, qu'ils sortoront tembour batant, avec une piece de petit canon, voulant bien par-la leur prouver que nous les traitors en armis.

4. Que sitot les articles signez de part et d' autre, ils ameneront le pavillon Anglois.

5. Que demain a' la pointe du jour, un detachment Francois ira pour faire defiler la garrison, et prendre possession du dit fort.

6. Que comme les Anglois n'ont presque plus de chevaux ni boeufs, ils seront libres de mettre leurs effects en cache, pour venir les chercher, quand ils auront rejoints des chevaux ils pourrons a' cette fin y lassier des gardiens en tel nombre qu'ils voudront. aux conditions qu'ils deneont parole d'honneur de ne plus travailler a' aucun establishment dans ce lieu ni en de ca la hautuer des terres pendant une annoe a' compter de ce jour.

7. Que comme les Anglois n'ont en leur pouvoir un officier, deux cadets, et generalement les prisoniers qu'ils nous ont fait dans l' assassinat du Sr de Jumonville, et qu'ils promettent de les renoyer avec sauve garde jusqu au fort Du Quesne, situe sur La Belle riviere et que pour suretie de cet article, ainsi que de ce traite Mr. Jacob Vanbraam, et Robert Stobo tous deux captaines, nous seront remis en otage jusqua l' arrivee de nos Canadiens et Francois cy dessus montioner, nous obligeons de notre cote a donner escorte pour ramener en surete ces denx officiers; qui nous promettent nos Francois dans deux mois et demi pour le plustard.

Tait double sur un pes postes de notre Blocus ce jour et an que dessus.

COULON VILLIER.

Note.—The words in article 2d—a l'exception de l'artillerie, que nous, nous reservons.

Article 6—aux condltions qu'ils donneront parole d'honneur de ne plus travailler a aucun establishment dans ce lieuci, ni deca de la hauteur des terres, pendant une annee a compter de ce jour.

Article 7—dans l'assassinat du sieur de Jumonville * * ainsi que de ce taaite—were, says Sparks, misrepresented by the interpreter, or at least the meaning of them so imperfectly and obscurely expressed by him, as to be misunderstood by Colonel Washington and his officers. The words pendant une annee a comptre de ce jour, i. e. during a year to be accounted from this pay, are not found in a copy of the articles printed by the French government.

use of the word assassination, but Washington, not understanding French, was deceived by the interpreter, who was a paltroon, and though an officer with us, they say he has joined the French.' How long Vanbraam was detained as a hostage is not known, but he never returned to Virginia; and it was the general belief that he practiced an intentional deception in his attempts to interpret the articles of capitulation. But whether this be true or not, the consequence was unfortunate, as the articles, in their written form, implied an acknowledgment of the charge of assassinating Jumonville. The French writers, regarding this as an authentic public document, were confirmed by it in their false impressions derived from M. de Contrecoeur's letter, concerning the fate of Jumonville; and thus a grave historical error, inflicting deep injustice on the character of Washington, has been sanctioned by eminent names, and perpetuated in the belief of the reading portion of the French people.

"M. de Villiers, the commander of the French forces, was the brother of Jumonville. His account of the march from Fort Du Quesne, and the transaction at the Great Meadows, was published by the French government, in connection with what purported to be extracts from Col. Washington's journal, taken at Braddock's defeat. Many years afterwards, some persons sent to Washington a translation of these papers, upon which he made a brief comment, which it is proper to introduce in this place, after inserting an extract from that part of M. de Villiers' narration, which relates to the affair of the Great Meadows.

"As we had no knowledge of the place," says M. de Villiers, "we presented our flank to the fort, when they began to fire on us with their cannon. Almost at the same instant that I saw the English on the right coming toward us, the Indians, as well as ourselves, set up a loud cry, and we advanced upon them; but they did not give us time to fire before they retreated behind an entrenchment adjoining the fort. We then prepared ourselves to invest the fort. It was advantageously situated in a meadow, and within musket-shot of the wood. We approached as near them as possible, and did not uselessly expose his Majesty's subjects. The fire was spirited on both sides, and I placed myself in the position where it seemed to me most likely a sortie would be attempted. If the expression may be allowed, we almost extinguished the fire of their cannon by our musketry.

"About six o'clock in the evening the fire of the enemy increased with renewed vigor, and continued till eight. We returned it briskly. We had taken effectual measures to secure our post, and keep the enemy in the fort all night; and, after having put ourselves in the best position possible, we called out to the English, that if they desired a parley with us, we would cease firing. They accepted the proposal. A captain came out, and I sent M. de Mercier to receive him, and went to the Meadow myself, when we told him, that not being at war, we were willing to save them from the cruelties to which they would expose themselves on the part of the savages, by an obstinate resistance; that we would take from them all the hope of escape during the night; that we consented nevertheless to show them favor, as we had come only to avenge the assassination which they had inflicted upon my brother, in violation of the most sacred laws, and to oblige them to depart from the territories of the King. We agreed then to accord to them the capitulation, a copy of which is hereunto annexed.

"We considered that nothing could be more advantageous to the nation than this capitulation, and it was unnatural in the time of peace to take prisoners. We made the English consent to sign that they had assassinated my brother in his camp. We took hostages for the French, who were in their power; we caused them to abandon the lands belonging to the King; we obliged them to leave their cannon, which consisted of nine pieces; we had destroyed all their horses and cattle, and made them sign that the favor we granted them was only to prove how much we desired to treat them as friends. That very night the articles were signed, and I received in camp the hostages whom I had demanded.

"On the 4th, at the dawn of day, I sent a detachment to take possession of the fort. The garrison defiled, and the number of their dead and wounded excited my pity, in spite of the resentment which I felt for the manner in which they had taken away the life of my brother.

"The savages, who in everything had adhered to my wishes, claimed the right of plunder, but I prevented them. The English struck with a panic, took to flight, and left their flag and one of their colors. I demolished the fort, and M. de Mercier caused the cannon to be broken, as also the one granted by the capitulation, the English not being able to take it away. I hastened my departure, after having burst open the casks of liquor, to prevent the disorders which would otherwise infallibly have followed. One of my Indians took ten Englishmen, whom he brought to me, and whom I sent back by another."*

Such is the statement of M. de Villiers. The incident mentioned at the close, of an Indian taking ten Englishmen, is so ludicrous, that it must necessarily cast a shade of doubt over the whole, and cause one to suspect the writer's accuracy of facts, and soundness of judgment, whatever we may think of the fertility of his imagination, and his exuberant self-complacency.

*Memoire Contenent le Preics des Faits, &c., p. 147.

TRANSLATION.

Capitulation granted Mons. De Villier, captain and commander of infantry and troops of his most Christian Majesty, to those English troops actually in the fort of Necessity, which was built on the lands of the King's dominions, July the 3d, at eight o'clock at night, 1754.

As our intention has never been to trouble the peace and good harmony which reigns between the two princes in amity, but only to revenge the assassination which has been done on one of our officers, bearer of a citation, as appears by his writing, as also to hinder any establishment on the lands of the dominions of the King, my master; upon these considerations, we are willing to grant protection or favor, to all the English that are in the said fort, upon the conditions hereinafter mentioned.

1. We grant the English commander to retire with all his garrisons, to return peaceably into his own country, and promise to hinder his receiving any insult from us French, and to restrain as much as shall be in our power the savages that are with us.

2. It shall be permitted him to go out, and carry with him all that belongs to them except the artillery, which we keep.

3. That we will allow them the honors of war, that they march out drums beating, with a swivel gun, being willing to show them that we treat them as our friends.

4. That as soon as the articles are signed by the one part and the other, they may strike the English colors.

5. That to-morrow at break of day, a detachment of French shall go to make the garrison file off, and take possession of the fort.

6. And as the English have few oxen and horses, they are free to hide their effects, and come and search for them when they have found their horses; and that they may for this end have guardians in what number they please, upon condition that they will give their word of honor, not to work upon any building in this place, or any place this side of the mountain during a year, to be accounted from this day.

7. And as the English have in their power an officer, two cadets, and most of the prisoners made in the assassination of Sr. De Jumonville, and that they promise to send them back with safe guard to the fort Du Quesne, situated on the Fine River, and for surety of this article, as well as this treaty, Mr. Jacob Vanbraam and Robert Stobo,* both captains, shall be put as hostages, till the arrival of the Canadians and French above mentioned.

We oblige ourselves on our side to give an escort, to return in safety these two officers. We promise our French in two months and a half at farthest.

A duplicate being made upon one of the posts of our blockade the day above.

COULON VILLIER.

Captain Stobo*, it appears, was born in or near Glasgow, Scotland, and probably emigrated early to Virginia. He was a man of more than ordinary genius, and possessed a cultivated mind. He was sent as a hostage to fort Du Quesne. In the month of September, 1754, he was sent away from fort Du Quesne to Quebec, where, says Burk, he effected his escape; and after "various adventures," he visited Williamsburg, Va., in the month of November, 1759, when the Assembly "Resolved, That the sum of £1,000 be paid by the treasurer of this colony to Captain Robert Stobo, over and above the pay that is due to him from the time of his rendering himself a hostage to this day, as a reward for his zeal to his country, and a recompense for the great hardships he has suffered during his confinement in the enemy's country."

Hume writing Dr. Smollett, mentions a Captain Stobo, in a letter dated, Begley, 21st September, 1763—"I did not see your friend, Captain Stobo, till the day before I left Cirencester, and only for a little time; but he seemed to be a man of good sense, and has surely had the most extraordinary adventures in the world. He has promised to call on me when he comes to London, and I shall always see him with pleasure."

Vanbraam, as well as Stobo, after having been retained some time at fort Du Quesne, was sent to Quebec. Late in the fall of 1760, after six years confinement in Canada, he arrived at Williamsburg, Va. During part of the time he was confined at Canada, "he was allowed a pound of bread and a pound of horse flesh per day; but such was the quality of his provisions, that for four months he lived on bread and water only."

Washington's remarks on this extract were communicated in the following letter, to a gentleman who had previously written to him on this subject:

"Sir:—I am really sorry that I have it not in my power to answer your request in a more satisfactory manner. If you had favored me with a journal a few days sooner, I would have examined it carefully, and endeavored to point out such errors as might conduce to your use, my advantage, and the public satisfaction; but now it is out of my power.

"I had no time to make my remarks upon that peace, which is called my journal. The enclosed are observations on the French notes. They are of no use to me separated, nor will they, I believe, be of any to you; yet I send them unconnected and incoherent as they were taken, for I have no opportunity to correct them.

"In regard to the journal, I can only observe in general, that I kept no regular one during that expedition; rough minutes of occurrences I certainly took, and find them as certainly and strangely metamorphosed; some parts left out, which I remember were entered, and many things added that never were thought of; the names of men and things egregiously miscalled; and the whole of what I saw Englished is very incorrect and nonsensical; yet, I will not pretend to say that the little body who brought it to me, has not made a literal translation, and a good one.

"Short as my time is, I cannot help remarking on Villiers' account of the battle of, and transactions at, the Meadows, as it is very extraordinary, and not less erroneous than inconsistent. He says the French received the first fire. It is well known that we received it at six hundred paces distance. He also says, our fears obliged us to retreat in a most disorderly manner after the capitulation. How is this inconsistent with his other account? He acknowledges that we sustained the attack warmly from ten in the morning until dark, and that he called first to parley, which strongly indicates that we were not totally absorbed in fear. If the gentleman in his account had adhered to the truth, he must have confessed, that we looked upon his offer to parley as an artifice to get into and examine our trenches, and refused on this account, until they desired an officer might be sent to them, and gave their parole for his safe return. He might also, if he had been as great a lover of the truth as he was of vain-glory, have said, that we absolutely refused their first and second proposals, and would consent to capitulate on no other terms than such as we obtained. That we were wilfully, or ignorantly, deceived by our interpreter in regard to the word assassination, I do aver, and will to my dying moment;—so will every officer that was present. The interpreter was a Dutchman, little acquainted with the English tongue, therefore might not advert to the tone and meaning of the word in English; but whatever his motives were for so doing, certain it is, he called it the death, or the loss of the Sieur Jumonville. So we received and so we understood it, until, to our great surprise and mortification, we found it otherwise in a literal translation.

"That we left our baggage and horses at the Meadows is certain; that there was not even a possibility to bring them away is equally certain, as we had every horse belonging to the camp killed or taken away during the action; so that it was impracticable to bring anything off, that our shoulders were not able to bear; and to wait there was impossible, for we had scarce three days' provisions, and were seventy miles from a supply; yet, to say we came off precipitately is absolutely false; notwithstanding they did, contrary to articles, suffer their Indians to pillage our baggage,* and commit all kinds of irregularity; we were with them until ten o'clock the next day; we destroyed our powder and other stores, nay even our private baggage, to prevent its falling into their hands, as we could not bring it off. When we had got about a mile from the place of action, we missed two or three of the wounded, and sent a party back to bring them up; this is the party he speaks of. We brought them all safe off, and encamped within three miles of the Meadows. These are circumstances, I think, that make it evidently clear, that we were not very apprehensive of danger. The colors he speaks of as left, were a large flag of immense size and weight; our regimental colors were brought off and are now in my possession. Their gasconades, and boasted clemency, must appear in the most ludicrous light to every considerate person, who has read Villiers' journal; such preparations for an attack, such vigor and intrepidity as he pretends to have conducted his march with, such revenge as by his own account appeared in his attack; considered, it will hardly be thought that compassion was his motive for calling a parley. But to sum up the whole, Mr. Villiers pays himself a great compliment in saying, we were struck with a panic when matters were adjusted. We surely could not be afraid without cause, and if we had cause after capitulation, it was a reflection upon himself.

"I do not doubt, but your good nature, will excuse the badness of my paper, and the incoherence of my writing; think you see me in a public house in a crowd, surrounded with noise, and you hit my case. You do me particular honor in offering your friendship; I wish I may be so happy as always to merit it, and deserve your correspondence, which I should be glad to cultivate."

In September, somewhat more than two months after the capitulation, Capt. Mackay wrote to Washington from Will's creek, stating that he had recently returned to Philadelphia, and adding. "I had several disputes about our capitulation, but I satisfied every person that mentioned the subject, as to the articles in question, they were owing to a bad interpreter, and contrary to the translation made to us when we signed them."

*James Innes, in a letter to Governor Hamilton, dated at Winchester, 12th July, 1754, makes mention of the same:

"Having notice of a person going to your province immediately, I thought it proper on this occasion to give a short detail of what hath lately happened.

"After having regulated the march and transportation of the North Carolina regiment, I immediately proceeded to Williamsburg, and by my commission from Governor Dinwiddie as commander-in-chief of this expedition, I proceeded to Winchester, where I arrived the thirtieth of June, in order to take the command upon me, and to bring up the two New York independent companies, with those of the North Carolina regiment, then upon their march from Alexandria for this town.

"Colonel Washington with the Virginia regiment, and Captain McKay with the South Carolina Independent Company, together did consist but of four hundred men, of which a good many were sick and out of order. On the third of July, the French with about nine hundred men and a considerable body of Indians, came down upon our encampment, and continued to fire from all quarters, from eleven in the morning till night; when the French called out to our people, they would give them good conditions if they would capitulate. A copy of which I here enclose you.

"After the capitulation the French demolished the works, and in some time after retired to the Ohio, taking two captains as hostages along with them. We all know the French are a people that never pay any regard to treaties longer than they find them consistent with their interest, and this treaty they broke immediately by letting the Indians demolish and destroy everything our people had, especially the Doctor's box, that our wounded should meet with no relief. In this action, it is said, we had about one hundred killed and wounded—a third whereof is supposed to be killed. It is reported we killed double the number of the French.

"If this does not alarm the neighboring governments nothing can, and I make no doubt but the French will soon claim this fine body of land as their right by conquest, if we do not immediately raise a sufficient force to convince them of the contrary. What I can learn of their forces is, that they had seven hundred in their first division, eight hundred in the next, and five hundred in the last, not as yet joined, which, with their Indians, make a considerable body.

"Colonel Washington and Captain McKay told me there were many of our friendly Indians along with the French, sundry of which came up and spoke to them, told them they were their brothers, and asked them how they did, particularly Susquehannah Jack, and others that distinguished themselves by their names. It is also reported there were sundry of the Delawares there We had not one Indian to assist when the action commenced or ended.

"It is my real opinion that nothing will secure to us the Indians now in our friendship, if we allow ourselves to be baffled by the French; as it is very natural and common for a more polite people than the Indians to side with the strongest; so there is a necessity either to go into the case in dispute heartily at once, or to give it up entirely. We all may see the unlimited encroachments of the French, who in time will very modestly look on every part of America as their right, if they can worm the unhappy and unthinking people out of it by degrees, which at last must happen by the same rule. Witness Hispaniola from the Spaniards, and St. Lucia from us. Many more instances might be given to which you are no stranger."

No more need be said to show the true light, in which the capitulation was understood by Washington and his officers. It is not to be inferred, however, that M. de Villiers was knowingly guilty of an imposition, in regard to the clause relating to the death of his brother. On the contrary, it seems more than probable, that he really believed the report of the assassination, for he had received no other intelligence, or explanation, than the rumor brought to M. de Contrecoeur, by the Canadian and the savages. This fact, however, does not lessen the injury done to Washington, in seriously using the articles of capitulation as a historical document to sanction a charge, equally untrue in all its essential particulars, and unjust in its application.

When the Virginia House of Burgesses met in August, they requested the Governor to lay before them a copy of the capitulation, and, upon due consideration of the subject, passed a vote of thanks to Colonel Washington and his officers, "for their bravery and gallant defense of their country." The names of all the officers were enumerated, except those of the Major of the regiment, and of Captain Vanbraam, the former of whom was charged with cowardice, and the latter of having acted a treacherous part in his interpretation of the articles. The Burgesses, also, in an address to the Governor, expressed their approbation of the instructions he had given to the officers and forces sent on the Ohio expedition. In short, all the proceedings of the campaign were not only approved, but applauded, by the representatives of the people, and by the public generally. A pistole was granted to each of the soldiers, who had been in the engagement.

To the vote of thanks, Washington replied as follows:

"WILLIAMSBURG, October 23, 1754.

"To the Speaker of the House of Burgesses:

"SIR:—Nothing could give me, and the officers under my command, greater satisfaction, than to receive the thanks of the House of Burgesses, in so particular and public a manner, for our behaviour in the late unsuccessful engagement with the French; and we unanimously hope, that our future proceedings in the service of our country will entitle us to a continuance of your approbation. I assure you, sir, I shall always look upon it as my indispensable duty to endeavor to deserve it.

"I was desired by the officers of the Virginia regiment to make their suitable acknowledgments for the honor they have received in your thanks; I therefore, hope the enclosed will be agreeable, and answer their, and the intended purpose of,

"Sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

"To the Worshipful, the Speaker, and the gentlemen of their House of Burgesses:

"We, the officers of the Virginia regiment, are highly sensible of the particular mark of distinction, with which you have honored us, in returning your thanks for our behaviour in the late action, and cannot help testifying our grateful acknowledgments for your high sense of what we shall always esteem a duty to our country and the best of kings.

"Favored with your regard, we shall zealously endeavor to deserve your applause, and by our future actions strive to convince the worshipful House of Burgesses, how much we esteem their approbation, and, as it ought to be, regard it as the voice of our country.

"Signed for the whole corps.

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

The exact number of men engaged in the action of the Great Meadows cannot be ascertained. The Virginia regiment consisted of three hundred and five, including officers, of whom twelve were killed and forty-three wounded. These numbers are stated in a return made out by Col. Washington himself. Capt. Mackay's independent company was supposed to contain about one hundred, but the number of killed and wounded is not known. The two independent companies from New York, which arrived at Alexandria, never joined the Virginia regiment, although former writers, in describing this event, have said they were present. The amount of the French force is also uncertain. It was believed by Col. Washington, from such information as he could get, to consist of nine hundred men. M. de Villiers says, that he left Fort Duquesne with five hundred Frenchmen and eleven Indians. The number of French, is perhaps correct, but the Indians were much more numerous, when they arrived at the scene of action; and there is good reason for believing, that the French and Indians together made a body of at least nine hundred.

It was a subject of mortification to Colonel Washington, that Gov. Dinwiddie refused to ratify the capitulation in regard to the French prisoners. The Governor thus explained his conduct in a letter to the Board of Trade—"The French, after the capitulation entered into with Colonel Washington, took eight of our people and exposed them to sale, and missing thereof, sent them prisoners to Canada. On hearing of this I detained the seventeen prisoners, the officer, and two cadets, as I am of opinion, after they were in my custody, Washington could not engage for their being returned. I have ordered a flag of truce to be sent to the French, offering the return of their officer and the two cadets for the two hostages they have of ours." This course of proceeding was not suitable to the principles of honor and sense of equity entertained by Colonel Washington, but he had no further control of the affair.

The hostages were not returned, as requested by the Governor's flag of truce, and the French prisoners were detained in Virginia, and supported and clothed at the public charge, having a weekly allowance for that purpose. The private men were kept in confinement, but Drouillon and the two cadets were allowed to go at large, first in Williamsburg, then at Winchester, and last at Alexandria, where they resided when General Braddock arrived. It was then deemed improper for them to go at large, observing the motions of the general's army, and the Governor applied to Commodore Keppel to take them on board of his ship; but he declined, on the ground that he had no instructions about prisoners. By the advice of General Braddock, the privates were put on board the transports, and sent to England. Mr. Drouillon and the cadets went passengers in another ship at the charge of the colony. La Force, having been only a volunteer in the skirmish, and not in a military capacity, and having previously committed acts of depredation on the frontiers, was kept in prison at Williamsburg. Being a person of ready resources and an enterprising spirit, he broke from prison and made his way several miles into the country, where his foreign accent betrayed him, and he was taken up and remanded to close confinement."*

The conduct and courage of Colonel Washington, in his surprise and capture of the French detachment under Jumonville, and in the battle of the Great Meadows, were greatly applauded, and the Assembly of Virginia voted thanks to him and his officers. He retreated to Will's creek, and the French retired to their position at the junction of the Monongahela and Allegheny.†

After the battle of the Great Meadows, Colonel Innes was ordered to Will's creek to construct a fort, which would serve as a rallying point to the remaining forces, and a guard to the frontiers. This was afterwards called Fort Cumberland. It was chiefly built by the three independent companies; one from South Carolina, under Captain Mackay, and two others from New York, which were on their march from Alexandria to join Washington, at the time of the action at the Great Meadows. Ten four pounders, besides swivels, were mounted in the Fort.‡

*Spark's Washington, Vol. II. p. 456-68.
†Gordon's History of Penn'a., p. 283—Sparks, Vol, II. p. 464.
‡Spark's Washington, Vol. II. p. 63.

The remains of the army were collected here, together with a company from Maryland; but in consequence of the funds being exhausted and no pledge of future payment, the troops returned home, and left the frontiers without defence.

The necessity for taking bolder measures to contend with the combined forces of the French and Indians, was now evident to the English. The Assembly of Virginia met in October, and granted twenty thousand pounds for the public exigences, and the Governor received from England ten thousand pounds sterling in specie, with the promise of ten thousand more, and two thousand stand of arms. Upon this he resolved to enlarge the army to ten companies of one hundred men each, and to reduce them all to independent companies, by which there would be no officer in the Virginia regiment above the rank of a captain. This expedient he supposed would remedy the difficulty about rank, and the right to command, which had heretofore been the cause of much contention between the Colonial and British troops. Washington accordingly resigned, as he would not accept a lower commission than the one he held, and under which he had exhibited a rare example of bravery and good conduct, that had gained him the applause of the country*.

In the meantime Governor sharpe, of Maryland, had received an appointment from the King of England, as Commander-in-chief of all the forces engaged against the French; and Colonel Fitzhugh the second in command. Knowing the value of Colonel Washington's experience and reputation, the Commander-in-chief endeavored to bring him back into the army; but Washington, although attached to the service, declined the degradation which had been planned by Governor Dinwiddie, probably in concert with other British officers.†

Thus ended the military operations of the year 1754. The English colonists had been driven east of the mountains, and the French were in actual possession of the whole West, watered by the Ohio and its tributaries.

THE KING'S INSTRUCTION TO GEN. E. BRADDOCK, 1754 — BRADDOCK'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH GOV. MORRIS, 1755.

George Regis' instructions for our trusty and well beloved Edward Braddock, Esq., Major General of all our forces, and whom we have appointed General Commander of all and singular, our troops and forces, that are now in North America, or that shall be sent, or raised there, to vindicate our just rights and possessions in those parts: given at our court at St. James', the 25th day of November, 1754, in the 28th year of our reign.

Whereas, We have by our commission, bearing date the 24th day of September last past, appointed you to be General and Commander of all, and singular, our forces that are, or shall be in North America. For your better direction in discharge of your trust thereby reposed in you, we have judged it proper to give you the following instructions:

1st. We, having taken under our royal and serious consideration, the representatives of our subjects in North America, and the present state of our colonies, in order to vindicate our just rights and possessions from all encroachments, and to secure the commerce of our subjects, we have given direction, that two of our regiments of foot, now in Ireland, commanded by Sir Peter Halket and Col. Dunbar; and likewise, a suitable train of artillery, transports and store ships, together with a certain number of ships of war, to convey the same, shall forthwith repair to North America.

2d. You shall, immediately upon the receipt of these our instructions, embark on board one of our ships of war, and you shall proceed to North America, where you will take our forces under your command: and we having appointed Augustus Kepple, Esq., to command the squadron of our ships of war, on the American station, we do hereby require and enjoin you to cultivate a good understanding and correspondence with the said commander of our squadron, during your continuance upon the service with which you are now entrusted. We having given directions of the like nature to the said commander of our squadron, with regard to his conduct and correspondence with you.

3d. And whereas, There will be wanting a number of men to make up the designed complements of our said regiments, from five hundred to seven hundred each: And whereas, It is our intention that two other regiments of foot, to consist of one thousand men each, shall be forthwith raised, and commanded by General Shirley and Sir William Pepperell, whom we have appointed Colonels of the same, in our provinces and colonies in North America, and given directions, that the regiment under the command of the former, should rendezvous at Boston; and that under the command of the latter, at New York and Philadelphia; and we have given orders to our several Governors to be taking the previous steps towards contributing, as far as they can, to have about three thousand men in readiness, to be enlisted for these purposes, and to be put in proportion, as they shall be raised, under your command, and be subject to your distribution into the corps above mentioned. And we having thought proper to dispatch Sir John St. Clair, our Deputy Quarter Master General, and James Pilcher, Esq., our commissary of the musters in North America, to prepare every thing necessary for the arrival of the two regiments from Europe; and for the raising of the forces above mentioned in America. You will inform yourself of such of our Governors, as you can most conveniently upon your arrival, and of all of them in due time; and likewise of our said Deputy Quarter Master General, and Commissary of the Musters, concerning the progress they shall respectively have made in the execution of our commands, above mentioned, in order that you may be enabled, without delay, to act accordingly.

4th. Whereas, It has been represented to us, that the said forces, which are to go from Cork, under your command, may be in want of provisions upon their arrival in America, we caused, in consideration thereof, one thousand barrels of beef and ten tons of butter to be put on board the transport vessels, and to be delivered to you upon your arrival in America, in case you shall find the same to be necessary, in order to be distributed among the officers and troops, and the several persons belonging to the train of artillery. But it is our royal will and pleasure, that in case the Governors of our colonies shall have provided a proper quantity of provisions for our troops upon their arrival, you will then signify the same to the Commander-in-Chief of our fleet, in those ports, that the said thousand barrels of beef, and ten tons of butter, or such part thereof as shall not be expended, may be applied to the use of our royal navy.

5th. Whereas, We have given orders to our said Governors, to provide, carefully, a sufficient quantity of fresh victuals, for the use of our troops at their arrival; and they should also furnish all our officers, who may have occasion to go from place to place, with all necessaries for travelling by land, in case there are no means of going by sea; and likewise, to observe and obey all such orders as shall be given by you, or persons appointed by you from time to time, for quartering the troops, impressing carriages, and providing all necessaries for such, as shall arrive, or be raised in America, and that the said several services shall be performed at the charge of the respective governments, wherein the same shall happen. It is our will and pleasure that you should, pursuant thereto, apply to our said Governors, or any of them, upon all such exigencies.

6th. And, whereas, we have further directed our said governors, to prevail upon the Assemblies of their respective provinces, to raise, forthwith, as large a sum as can be afforded as their contribution to a common fund, to be employed provisionally for the general service, in North America, particularly for paying the charge of levying the troops, to make up the complements of the regiments above mentioned. It is our will and pleasure that you should give them all the advice and assistance you can towards effecting these good purposes, by establishing such a common fund as may fully supply the intended service. But you will take particular care to prevent payments of any money whatever, to the troops under your commands, except such as shall be pursuant to the returns made to you, of effective men.

*Spark's Washington, Vol. II. p. 64.
†Spark's Washington, Vol. II. p. 67.

7th. We having likewise directed our said governors to correspond, advise and confer with you about all such matters as may tend to the preventing the said levies in their respective provinces. You are hereby required to be aiding and assisting them in the execution of our said instructions; for which purpose you will not only keep a constant and frequent correspondence in writing with them, but will likewise visit the said provinces, or any of them, that you shall think it necessary for our service so to do: and, you will remind our said governors to use all possible dispatch, that the execution of our design may not be retarded by the slowness of levies to be made in their respective provinces; or, for the want of transports, victuals, or any other necessaries, at such times and places as you shall think fit to appoint for their general rendezvous. And if any preparations should be necessary for carrying on our services which is not contained in these, our instructions, you shall with the concurrence of the governors, who are to assist in any such service, make any such preparations, provided that the same shall appear to you absolutely necessary for the defence of our just rights and dominions; and you will, in all such emergencies and occurrences that may happen, whether herein mentioned or not provided for by these instructions, not only use your best circumspection, but shall likewise call to your assistance a counsel of war when necessary, which we have thought fit to appoint upon this occasion, consisting of yourself, the commander-in-chief of our ships in these ports, such governors of our colonies or provinces, and such Colonels and other of our field officers, as shall happen to be at a convenient distance from our said general and commander of our forces; and you shall with the advice of them, or the majority of them, determine all operations to be performed by our said forces under your command, and all other important points relating thereto, in a manner that shall be most conducive to the ends for which the said forces are intended, and for the faithful discharge of the great trust hereby committed to you.

8th. You will not only cultivate the best harmony and friendship possible with the several governors of our colonies and provinces; but likewise with the chiefs of the Indian tribes, and for the better improvement of our good correspondence with the said Indian tribes, you will find some fit and proper person agreeable to the southern Indians, to be sent to them for this purpose, in like manner, as we have ordered Col. Johnson to repair to the northern Indians, as the person thought to be most acceptable to them, to endeavor to engage them to take part, and act with our forces in such operations as you shall think most expedient.

9th. You will inform yourself, from time to time, of the nature and value of the presents that shall be voted, or ordered by the Assemblies of our different colonies and provinces, in the accustomed manner of the inviting and engaging the Indian tribes to our alliance and interest, and you will be very watchful that a just and faithful distribution be made of the same by all such persons who shall be entrusted therewith, and you shall assist the said person with your best advice in the said distribution. You will likewise give a particular attention to the prudent disposal of such presents as shall be made upon any occasion, or such as shall have been prepared by Lieut. Governor Dinwiddie for the said Indians out of the money already vested in his hands, or otherwise.

10th. Whereas, it has been represented to us that an illegal correspondence and trade is frequently carried on between the French and our subjects, in the several colonies, you will diligently take all possible measures to prevent the continuance of all such dangerous practices; particularly, that the French should not, upon any account whatever, be supplied with provisions, &c.

11th. Whereas, we have thought it necessary upon this occasion, to establish and ascertain the rank that shall be observed between the officers bearing our immediate commission, and those who act under the commissions of our governors, Lieutenant or Deputy Governors, or the Presidents of our colonies for the time being. We have ordered several printed copies thereof to be put into your hands, to be affixed or dispersed as you shall judge proper in America.

12th. You will herewith receive a copy of the early directions that were sent by our order, on the 28th August, 1753, to our several governors enjoining and exhorting our colonies in North America to unite together for their common, mutual defence, and you will see by our directions of the 5th July, copies whereof are now also delivered to you, our repeated commands for enforcing the observance of our said orders of the 28th August, 1753, and that we were graciously pleased to order the sum of £10,000, to be remitted in specie to Lieutenant Governor Dinwiddie, to draw bills for a further sum of £10,000, upon the conditions mentioned in our warrant of the 3d of July last, and transmitted to the said Lieutenant Governor Dinwiddie, on the 27th of September following, by our order for the general service and protection of North America; and, the several other letters of October the 25th and 26th, and of November 4th, to our governors, to Sir Wm. Pepperell and Colonel Shirley; copies of which will be delivered to you herewith, will fully acquaint you with our orders and instructions, which have been signified to our officers and governors upon this subject, at those respective times, will enable you to inform yourself what progress has been made in the execution thereof. And, as extracts of Lieut. Governor Dinwiddie's letters of May 10th, June 18th, and July 24th, relating to the summons of the fort which was erecting on the forks of the Monongahela, and the skirmish that followed soon after, and likewise of the action in the Great Meadows, near the river Ohio, are herewith delivered to you. You will be fully acquainted with what has hitherto happened of a hostile nature upon the banks of that river.

13th. You will not fail to send us the first, and on every occasion that may offer, a full and clear account of your proceedings, and of all material points, relating to our service by letter to one of our principal Secretaries of State, from whom you shall receive from time to time such further orders as may be necessary for your guidance and direction.

GEORGIUS REX.

GENERAL BRADDOCK'S AND GOVERNOR MORRIS' LETTERS, 1755.

WILLIAMSBURG, VA., February 28, 1755.

SIR:—Your answer to Sir John St. Clair's first letter, is just arrived. I waited for the return of the messenger, or would have informed you sooner of my being at William's with his Majesty's commission to command all the forces in North America. I cannot help expressing the greatest surprise to find such pusillanimous and improper behavior in your assembly, and to hear of faction and opposition, when liberty and property are invaded, and an absolute refusal to supply either men, money or provisions, for their own defence, while they furnish the enemy with provisions, which his Majesty has been informed of, and has ordered all suspected vessels to be stopped and forfeited; but to provide more effectually against this unnatural proceeding, I think it very advisable to put an embargo upon all provisions, and I should be much obliged to you, if you would immediately issue such an order. It is astonishing to see one of the principal colonies preserving a neutrality when his Majesty's dominions are invaded—when the enemy is on the frontier; nay, when it is undetermined if the Fort of Duquesne is not in the Province of Pennsylvania. His Majesty, to drive the French from their encroachments, and out of the great regard to his subjects in these parts, has ordered two regiments and a train of artillery from England; no measures are taken to repair roads, to provide horses and carriages to transport the stores; not even subsistence for those troops, who are come to restore and preserve that property, which their factious councils have suffered to be invaded.

My commission empowers me to settle with the rioters as I shall think proper. You may assure your Assembly, I shall have regard to the different behavior of the several colonies, and shall regulate their quarters accordingly; and that I will repair by unpleasant methods, what, for the character and honor of the Assembly, I should be much happier to see cheerfully supplied.

I hope you will not impute any part of this letter as being addressed or directed to you. I am thoroughly satisfied of your good intentions, and the means you have used to obtain the necessary assistance; nor do I doubt your continuation of them. I must desire you to establish a post with good horses at convenient distances, between Philadelphia and Winchester, for the forwarding yours and receiving my dispatches, which may be of great importance during the operation of the campaign; and I desire you will inform me of the places appointed.

Governor Dinwiddie writ to you concerning flour; if you can prevail on your Assembly to raise any money, I should be glad you would provide a large quantity, and send it to Winchester.

I was desired, before I left England, to recommend it to the governors of the provinces to make one common fund for the supplies of the several colonies; that a treasurer should be appointed, with orders to answer any demands; as it is only proposed to expedite business, and as I declare myself quite disinterested, I shall be ready to give an account of the disbursements.

Enclosed are letters from Lord Halifax and Mr. Penn. I hope they contain such matter as may prevail on your Assembly to contribute handsomely to the present service.

I am, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

E. Braddock.

Williamsburg, February 28, 1755.

Sir:—As the packet to Governor Shirley, which accompanies this, is of the utmost importance, to his Majesty's service, which, as well the welfare of the colonies may be greatly affected by the delay of it, I beg of you to forward it with all imaginable expedition, by a fresh express to Governor Shirley, and to use the same despatch in forwarding his answer upon the return of the express to me.

I am, sir, your humble and most obedient servant,

E. Braddock.

P. S.—I beg you would not keep the express above an hour.

Philadelphia, March 12, 1755.

Sir:—I was honored with yours of the 28th Feb. last, by express, who came here on the ninth instant at night; and I immediately, by a fresh hand, sent forward the letters to the northern government, and wrote Mr. Delaney to do the same; and you may depend upon my sending Shirley's letters by express to you as soon as they come.

I heartily congratulate you and this continent on your appointment to the command of his Majesty's forces, and safe arrival among us: events that must give pleasure to all that have any regard for the honor or interests of Britain, or the safety of these colonies.

The conduct of the Assemblies upon the continent, almost without exception, has been so very absurd, that they have suffered the French to take possession of the most advantageous places, not only to answer the purposes of a very extensive Indian trade, but to enable them to protect their own settlements and annoy ours; such are their forts at Niagara, Crown Point, and the several ones upon Lake Erie, the river Ohio and its branches. It is now about four years since the Indians first informed us of the designs of the French to take possession of the country upon the Ohio, and were very desirous that we should build them a strong house at, or near the place, where the French fort now stands; and Mr. Hamilton, then Governor of this Province, recommended the matter to the Assembly, but they refused to be at any expense about it, though a thousand pounds sterling would then have been sufficient; and having shamefully suffered the French to encroach upon them, now more shamefully refuse to afford assistance to the troops that are employed to remove them.

I am heartily sorry that a province, that I have the honor to preside over, should behave in so shocking a manner; especially as it ought to be foremost on the present occasion; not only as it is the country involved, but on account of its riches and number of inhabitants.

I am, sir, almost ashamed to tell you, that we have in this province upwards of three hundred thousand inhabitants; that we are blessed with a rich soil and temperate climate, and besides our own consumption, raise provisions to supply an army of one hundred thousand men, which is yearly exported from this city, and with other commodities employs upwards of five hundred vessels, mostly owned by the merchants of this town. From a province so circumstanced, what might not have been reasonably expected; especially, as we are burthened with no taxes, and are not only out of debt, but have a revenue of seven thousand a year, and fifteen thousand pounds in bank, all at the disposal of the House of Assembly; and yet, when their all is invaded, they refuse to contribute to the necessary defence of their country, either by establishing a militia, or furnishing men, money, or provisions! The manner in which I have labored in these points with my Assembly, you will see by my several messages to them, which I sent to Governor Dinwiddie, and which I beg leave to be referred to.

The trade that has been carried on from these colonies with the French at Cape Breton, has certainly enabled them to support an army on the back of us, which they could not otherwise have done, and if that supply be effectually cut off, it must destroy them in time; but, at present their magazines are so full that they will not feel it; for, I have been well informed, that in the month of May last, upwards of forty English vessels were seen in the harbor of Louisburg at one time; this trade was chiefly carried on from New York, Rhode Island, and Boston: the two last places, indeed, carry their flour for that purpose from hence, which was sent first to those places, but the people here were not otherwise concerned in that supply. However, agreeably to your request, I have made an order, that every vessel carrying provisions, or warlike stores, from hence, should give bond to land the same in some port of the king's dominions, or in the dominions of some prince or state in amity with his Majesty, other than the French King, a copy of which I send you herewith, and also to Commodore Keppel, to whom I also send a copy of the certificate of clearance, that I have ordered to be given to every vessel out of this port that shall give bond in pursuance to my order; and any vessel that does not produce such a certificate, may be justly suspected of intending to supply the French.

I had the pleasure of receiving an account of your arrival some days before your express came hither, and immediately summoned the Assembly of this province, who are to meet on Monday next, the seventeenth instant, when I shall press upon them the doing every thing that is proper upon the present occasion, in which I promise myself more success from your letter to me which I shall lay before them, than from any thing I can say. I have ordered the country, from a place called Carlisle, near the Susquehanna, westward to the Turkey's Fort, to be reconnoitered by persons best acquainted with those parts, with whom I sent a draughtsman; and if it be possible to make a road that way, I will recommend it to the Assembly to enable me to do it.

Governor Shirley's son, who is the only recruiting officer here, has already raised above two hundred men for his father's regiment; in doing which, he has conducted himself with great prudence, and good sense; and this day I expect a nephew of mine, to whom Gov. Shirley has promised one of his vacant companies, upon his raising one hundred and fifty men; he has been about ten days returned from Boston, and I believe, has a considerable part of his number already, and will, very soon, in this province, with the aid I shall give him, not only complete the number he has engaged to raise, but will soon fill Shirley's regiment, though it should require a much greater number.

With this, I have the honor to send you a letter from Gov. Shirley to me, of the twenty-fifth ultimo, with a message from him to his Assembly, and their resolutions upon it, which, together, contain the plan he had laid for the operations of this summer.

The scheme is very extensive, and to execute it properly, in all its parts, will require a great number of men: more, I am afraid, than can be raised and properly equipped in time; though, I am told, the two thousand men for the eastern service are already raised, and I must do the New England governments the justice to say, that they are very active upon such occasions; and, if you should approve the plan, and resolve to build a fort near Crown Point, I make no doubt, they would do their part; but I do not think that the governments of New York, New Jersey, or Pennsylvania, can be prevailed upon to do theirs; the Assemblies of the two last, are under the influence of Quaker councils, from whom nothing good is to be expected; and as to New York, the Albany members, who have a great deal of influence in their Legislature, are concerned in a very pernicious, but profitable trade, that is carried on between Albany and Crown Point; and it is to be feared, that they would rather see the former in the hands of the French, than contribute to annoying the latter. By that trade, the French are furnished with the most material articles of their India trade, and are thereby enabled, fully, to supply them, which they could not otherwise do; and within these few months, great quantities of gun powder have been bought up in this town and New York, and am told, sent from Albany to Crown Point; there being only twelve miles land carriage between them, which you will see marked by a pricked line from the head of lake St. Sacrament to Hudson's river, upon a map I sent to Sir John St. Clair, by the last express.

I shall try what the Assembly will enable me to do, with respect to the post you mention, and write you upon the head, as soon as I can form any judgment of their resolutions.

It will give me the most sensible pleasure, to afford you any assistance in the execution of your important command, not only from my zeal for his Majesty's service, but from the personal regard I have for you, and hope, when the public service will admit, you will give me an opportunity of seeing you in a place that I shall be proud of rendering as agreeable to you as possible, and am

Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

ROBT. H. MORRIS.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 10, 1755.

SIR:—As it must be attributed, principally, to a want of a proper union among the colonies, that the French have had it in their power to make so great encroachments upon the King's territories in America, as they have lately done, it ought to be considered as a very strong instance of his Majesty's care and regard for them, that he has sent a considerable force from England to their assistance, in order to repair their losses, which their own misconduct has occasioned. As it is highly reasonable, he has declared that he expects the several colonies, in proportion to their respective abilities, should furnish the forces, with supplies of provisions and all necessaries, and likewise, raise such additional numbers of men, as shall be requisite for the purpose now intended; upon this occasion, the province of Pennsylvania, by far the most populous and most opulent of any upon the continent, as well as most nearly interested in the event of the expedition, instead of making the earliest and largest contribution, is endeavoring to take advantage of the common danger, in order to encroach upon his Majesty's prerogative, in the administration of his government; in what light such conduct must appear to his Majesty, may be easily conceived. As I am directed by him to advise and assist his several Governors upon the present occasion, I would propose to you, sir, to call your Assembly together, and endeavor, once more, to bring them to a sense of their duty to his Majesty's, and their own interest, by representing to them, in the strongest light, the consequences which must attend their neglect of it. With the assistance required of the colonies, I shall have good hopes of answering his Majesty's expectations from me, by securing his dominions, and their possessions of his subjects in these parts; with their assistance, it may be in my power, and in such case it may be worth their while, particularly the province under your government, to consider, whether it may not be presumed, that the government at home will take some method to oblige them to act for the future, as becomes the duty of his Majesty's subjects.

I must repeat to you, sir, what I have already mentioned in a former letter, that I am directed by his Majesty, to propose to the several colonies, to make one common stock of the money they shall severally raise, in order to serve as a provisional fund for the present service; such a measure would greatly promote our success; but if it should be objected to, I must at least desire, that what is raised, may not be particularly appropriated, but granted, in general terms, for the service of the expedition.

I doubt not, sir, you will continue to exert your utmost endeavors for the present service, particularly according to their deserts, all, if any such shall be found, who are guilty of carrying on a traitorous correspondence with the enemy by supplying them with provisions.

I shall only add, that as I am to give a faithful account to his Majesty's ministers of the behavior of each colony at this important junction, I am still in hopes that the province under your government, will put it in my power to represent them as becomes their ability, their interest, and their duty to his Majesty.

I am, sir, your most humble and most ob't. serv't.

E. BRADDOCK.

Prov. Rec. M. p. 545.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 10, 1755.

SIR:—The inclosed is calculated to be laid before your Assembly, if you think it may be of any service towards bringing 'em to a sense of their duty to his Majesty and their own interest upon the present occasion, for which purpose I would propose to you the calling 'em together once more as soon as possible.

I am sensible of the difficulties you must have in the management of so factious a people as those under your government, but am persuaded they are not sufficient to discourage you from continuing your most earnest endeavors for reclaiming 'em to a reasonable conduct at this important juncture.

I am, &c.,

E. Braddock.

Philadelphia, 25 March, 1755.

Sir:—An express this minute from New York, brought me Gov. Shirley's packet, which I now forward to Maryland to Gov. Sharpe, and only take time to tell you that I have your favors of the 10th inst. that are designed for the Assembly. I have laid before them, with a message strongly recommending it to them to exert themselves upon the present occasion, and pointing out the consequences of their refusal; but such is their temper of mind at present that I have no hopes of their acting reasonably; however, this day and to-morrow will fully inform me of what they will do.

I promise myself the pleasure of meeting you at Annapolis* with Governor Shirley, who I expect in about a week, when I shall have opportunity of laying more fully before you the conduct of the Assembly, and in the man time, am,

Sir, your most humble and ob't. serv't.,

Robt. H. Morris.

Frederic, April 24, 1755

Sir—I have found it necessary to contract in Pennsylvania for wagons and horses to attend me over the mountains, and have already discovered the very great inconvenience of not having a road from Philadelphia to Wills' creek, as the march of these wagons must for want of it be greatly delayed, and consequently cannot join me soon, or in so good condition as they otherwise might. It is likewise of such importance to have a free communication with your province, to facilitate the march of any assistance or convoys I may require from thence, that I don't see how I can with safety move from Fort Cumberland till that work is finished, or in great forwardness. I must, therefore, desire you to give your orders to have it immediately made, and if you cannot prevail on your Assembly to bear the expense of it, nevertheless to have it done, and must be obliged to charge it to the public account. I am satisfied you have so much regard for his Majesty's service, and the safety of his colonies, that you will readily and speedily see this important work carried into execution,

I am, Sir, your most humble and most ob't. serv't.,

E. Braddock.

Fort Cumberland, May 10, 1755.

Sir—I have found it absolutely necessary to send Mr. Leslie, Assistant Deputy Quarter-Master General, into your Government to purchase a large quantity of oats for the service of the forces, and must beg of you to give him such countenance and assistance towards providing them, as may be in your power. And as the Deputy Paymaster General is not yet arrived at the camp, I should be much obliged to you if you would advance to Mr. Leslie such a sum as he shall have occasion for, and I will repay it to you in the manner that you shall desire. I have given Mr. Leslie an assurance that the wagons shall be suffered to return home immediately after the delivery of the forage, which shall be punctually complied with.

I am, Sir, your most humble and most ob't. serv't.,

E. Braddock.

Fort Cumberland, May 10, 1755.

Sir:—I received your letter yesterday, acquainting me with your proceedings relating to the road to be made from Philadelphia to the forks of the Youghiogheny, to which I shall only say, that as I am convinced of your zeal for his Majesty's service, and the success of the present expedition, I make no doubt you have already, and will continue to use your utmost endeavors for carrying that necessary work into execution.

I have engaged between forty and fifty Indians from the frontiers of your province to go with me over the mountains, and shall take Croghan and Montour into service. In a few days the women and children which accompanied them hither, will return to your government; and must repeat my desire to you, that you would take particular care of them, of which, I have given them the strongest assurances.

I have signified to Mr. Shirley, my approbation of his taking Colonel Schuyler, and the 500 men raised in the Jerseys, under his command, and have acquainted Governor Belcher with my resolutions.

This will be delivered you by Mr. Franklin.* I have received great assistance from his father and himself; for which I think myself the more obliged to them, as I have hitherto met with very few instances of ability or honesty in the persons I have had to deal with, in the execution of his Majesty's service in America.

I am, Sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

E. Braddock.

A letter came to the Governor from General Braddock, informing him that some persons were suspected of supplying the French with provisions, and two of the inhabitants of Cumberland county were particularly named, against whom the Governor issued warrants in council, and wrote the following answer to General Braddock:

Philadelphia, May 12, 1755.

Sir:—I am honored with your favors of the 24th of April and 4th instant, the former came to me at New York, where I was with Governor Shirley, and the letter I received yesterday by express.

I shall be heartily sorry, if the march of the troops should be retarded or the supply of provisions rendered more difficult for want of necessary roads, which it was the duty of this province to have opened in time; but as I have taken the greatest pains imaginable, ever since my arrival in their province, in October last, to prevail on the Assembly to grant the supplies necessary for carrying his Majesty's commands into execution, I cannot take any part of the blame to myself.

The first notice I had that such a road would be wanted was about the 24th of February, when I received a letter from Sir John St. Clair, dated 4th of that month, recommending it to me to open a communication from this town to the Forks of Youghiogheny, which I immediately sent to the speaker of the Assembly, who, with some other members had a power over £5,000 of the public money; but they would neither consent to open that road, or to enable me to do it, upon which I wrote Sir John, "that I was under very great difficulties, having no money at my command, and obliged for every article of expense, to apply to a set of men quite unacquainted with every kind of military service, and very unwilling to part with money upon any terms." I must observe to you, that the Assembly of the three lower counties upon Delaware, which form a little government district, and independent of Pennsylvania, had lodged £1,000 in the hands of the speaker of their House, to be disposed of as he and I should agree, for his Majesty's service; and when he came to town, which was not till the first week in March, we agreed to defray the expenses of reconnoitering that country and surveying a proper road out of that money, but thought what was then left of it not sufficient to open and clear the same, the expense of which I agreed to recommend to the Assembly of this province to bear; and as soon after this as a commission and proper instructions could be prepared, I issued one on the 12th of March, to a number of men* acquainted with that country west of the settled parts of this province, to reconnoitre the same, and to survey and lay out a road as nigh as they could to Ohio, and another to Fort Cumberland, and upon the meeting of the Assembly on the 18th of March, I strongly recommended it to make provision for that necessary service, but could not prevail with them to grant any money for that purpose, as I fully informed you when I was at Alexandria. But since my return, the same committee that refused it before, have with difficulty been prevailed on to advance some money for this service, and engaged to use their interest with the Assembly to pay the whole expense; whereupon, I sent orders to the commissioners who had made the survey, to open the roads with all possible dispatch, and they began the work on the first of this month, and nothing shall be wanting on my part to further this necessary service, which would not have remained thus long undone, if the Assembly had furnished money, or I had been sooner informed of your intention to defray the expense of it. I should not have been so particular as to this matter, had not Sir John St. Clair, taken the liberty to speak of my conduct in it, in a very improper manner to the persons I employed upon this service, which may lessen me in the eyes of those I am appointed to command, but cannot in the least contribute to his Majesty's service. Had he wrote me on the head, I should have been obliged to him; but as he took another method, I think it unbecoming me to take any other notice of it, than what I have done in answer to your letter, being satisfied that you want no proofs of my attachment to the crown, or zeal for his Majesty's service.

*A council was held at the camp at Alexandria, Virginia, April 14, 1755—present, his Excellency Edward Braddock, General and Commander-in-Chief of his Majesty's forces in North America; Hon. Augustus Keppel, Esq., Commander-in-Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels in North America; Hon. William Shirley, Hon. Robert Dinwiddie, Hon. James Delancy, Hon. Horatio Sharpe and Hon. Robert Hunter Morris.—Prov. Rec. N. p. 9, at Harrisburg, Pa.—I. D. R.

*William Franklin.—I. D. R.

Upon your letter, I have issued warrants to apprehend the two Irishmen mentioned in Delap's information, and such as shall be found carrying provisions or warlike stores to the French; and if any of them are taken, I shall have them punished according to an act of this province lately made for that purpose; but as the laws are slow in their motions, and legal proofs difficult to be obtained of transactions carried on in secret, and in the remote and unsettled part of this country, should your scouts take any that are concerned in that unnatural trade, or that utter treasonable words, I shall not be surprised to hear that you have proceeded to do them justice in a more summary way than I am able to do.

Agreeably to your requests, immediately upon my return from Alexandria, I sent to George Croghan,* the person entrusted with the management of the Indians in this province, to join you with as large a body of able bodied Indians as he could; copy of my letter to him upon that head, I send you herewith; but as I have had no answer to it, I send Mr. Peters, the Secretary of this Province, to further that affair, and to hasten the opening of the roads.

The letter herewith, from Governor Shirley, will inform you that the destination of the five hundred men raised in Jersey, is so far enlarged as to admit of their being employed under him at Niagara, which is the more necessary, as Sir William Pepperill's regiment is not near full.

I am glad Mr. Franklin has had success in procuring a number of horses and dragoons, and I shall endeavor to make my Assembly bear the charge of them, but cannot say I have any warm expectations upon that head. Mr. Franklin will be in town this evening, and I detain your messenger till he arrives, as he may have something to write to you of his transactions.

I am, sir, &c.,

ROBERT H. MORRIS.

PHILADELPHIA, 20th May, 1755.

SIR:—I had yours by Mr. Leslie on the 16th inst., and as my Assembly was then sitting and about to rise, I sent it to them to know if they would furnish the forage you wanted at the expense of the province, and by a private message they gave me to understand, that their committee would purchase and send the forage required; but upon my writing to the committee, they returned me for answer, that they had no money in their hands, and could not assist as private citizens. Upon which I have supplied Mr. Leslie with £500, and given Mr. Shippen, of Lancaster, where Leslie has contracted for part of the forage, an order to furnish him with any greater sum he may require, and to draw upon me for the same, which shall be punctually paid. Col. Hunter being here on his way to New York, desired me to recommend it to you to make as many payments by draught to this town, as you could, where he would lodge money subject to my call, or your order. This he imagined would save the money you have with you, and consequently the trouble of sending and escorting money to the camp.

Mr. Leslie is to purchase what oats, &c., he can in the back counties, and by letter to inform you what further quantity will be wanted, which I shall order to be brought here and sent to the camp; and upon his return, you will be kind enough to let me know of anything you may want for your own use, or for the army, and I will order it to be immediately supplied.

I am, &c.,

R. H. MORRIS.

*George Croghan wrote Gov. Morris from Fort Cumberland, May 20, 1755.—Prov. Rec. N. 37.

*These men were George Croghan, James Burd, John Armstrong, William Buchanan and Adam Hoops. They set out from Carlisle March 29, 1755, and reached the waters of Youghigheny, April 11th. In their return home called at Fort Cumberland, when Sir John St. Clair abused them shamefully, as appears from the subjoined letter to Gov. Morris.

FORT CUMBERLAND, April 16, 1755.

HONORED SIR:—In pursuance of your commission, we set out on the road from Carlisle on the 29th March, and with the greatest industry reached the waters of Yohiogain on the 11th inst. We stopped at about eighteen miles on this side of the Three Forks, and would have proceeded farther, had we not had certain intelligence of great numbers of French and Indians hunting and scouting, &c. Our Indians all fled from us, some at Rays town, and some on the Allegheny hills, save one Delaware.

We were very fortunate in finding a good road all the way, and particularly through the Allegheny hills, considering how mountainous that country is. From Parnal's Nob, or McDowell's Mill, to where we stopped is about sixty-nine miles, and were it not for the interposition of mountains, would not be so far by ten or fifteen miles. The expense of making the road thirty feet wide, and the principal pitches twenty, will make an expense of about eight hundred pounds.

Last Saturday evening we came to the camp, and were kindly received by the officers, but particularly by Captain Rutherford. We waited for Sir John's† coming to camp from the road towards Winchester, who came this day at three o'clock, but treated us in a very disagreeable manner; he is extremely warm and angry at our province: he would not look at our draughts, nor suffer any representations to be made to him in regard to the province, but stormed like a lion rampant. He said our commission to lay out the road should have issued in January last upon his first letter; that doing it now is doing nothing; that the troops must march on the first of May; that the want of this road and the provisions promised by Pennsylvania, has retarded the expedition, which may cost them their lives, because of the fresh number of the French, that are suddenly like to be poured into the country. That instead of marching to the Ohio, he would in nine days march his army into Cumberland county to cut the roads, press horses, wagons, &c. That he would not suffer a soldier to handle an axe, but by fire and sword oblige the inhabitants to do it, and take every man that refused to the Ohio, as he had yesterday some of the Virginians. That he would kill all kind of cattle, and carry away the horses, burn houses, &c.; and that if the French defeated them by the delay of this province, that he would with his sword drawn pass through the provinces, and treat the inhabitants as a parcel of traitors to his master. That he would to-morrow write to England by a man-of-war, shake Mr. Penn's proprietaryship, and represent Pennsylvania as disaffected. That he would not stop to impress our Assembly; that his hands were not tied, as we should find. Ordering us to take these precautions and instantly publishing them to our Governor and Assembly, telling us he did not value any thing they did or resolved, seeing they were dilatory, retarded the march of the troops, and hung an arse (as he phrased it) on this occasion; and told us to go to the general if we pleased, who would give us ten bad words for one that he had given.

At length he allowed us to speak, which we did in favor of the province, to the best of our powers. Capt. Rutherford and Col. Ennis assisted us, but all in vain; our delays were unpardonable; he would do our duty himself, and never trust to us, but we should dearly repent of it. To every sentence he solemnly swore, and desired we might believe him to be in earnest.

In these circumstances, sir, and especially as we have not yet run the camp road, we cannot send your honor a draught, but thought best forthwith to send you this express, that your honor might take the most speedy measures in regard of opening the road.

In the meantime, we have taken the liberty to write to the representatives of our country, to know whether the Assembly had made provision for opening the road, and if so, that they would immediately encourage people to set about it; and also to send the flour without delay to the mouth of Conegochege, as being the only thing or remedy left to prevent these threatened mischiefs. We acquainted Captain Rutherford of our design, who approved it much. We expect to be home in six days. Please, sir, to excuse the blunders of this letter, wrote at one o'clock last night.

We remain, honored sir, your most obedient and humble servants.

GEORGE CROGHAN,
JAMES BURD,
JOHN ARMSTRONG,
WM. BUCHANAN,
AD. HOOPS.

†John St. Clair, Deputy Quarter Master General.

Fort Cumberland, May 24, 1755.

Sir—As I propose soon to begin my march for Fort Du Quesne, I am desirous of adjusting every future contingency with the several Governors in such a manner as to avoid any mistake or misunderstanding. If I take the fort in its present condition, I shall make what additions to it I judge necessary, and shall leave the guns, ammunition and stores belonging to the fort with a garrison of Virginia and Maryland forces. But in case, as I have some reason to apprehend, they should abandon and destroy the fortifications with the guns, &c., I will repair or construct some place of defence and leave a garrison as before. But as to the artillery, ammunition, stores, provisions, &c., they must be immediately supplied by the governments of Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland, separately or conjunctively, for the train I take with me I shall find it absolutely necessary for the farther execution of my plan; and these are determined to leave none of them in the fort.

And that I may not, by any delays in yours and the other governments, be detained so long for the arrival of your guns and convoy, as to frustrate any other designs for this year, I must beg that the artillery, ammunition, provisions, stores, &c., may be sent with all diligence to the fort; and a proper quantity of flour and meat should be preparing, as these, in every situation, must be required, and if care is not taken to send these convoys to them the men must starve, and his Majesty's arms be dishonored, (should they prove successful.) and the expenses and trouble which his regard to his Colonies have engaged him in, rendered useless. A neglect of this kind must therefore consequently be highly disapproved by the King and his ministers.

Some Indians lately arrived from Fort Du Quesne, mention a bravado of the French and their Indians, (at best it appears to me as such,) that they propose, when the army is far advanced to fall upon this back country and to destroy its inhabitants. Make what use or give credit to this intelligence as you please. However it may not be amiss to take all possible precautions.

I am, Sir, your most obedient and most humble servt.

E. Braddock.

Dear Morris—You will by the bearer, Mr. Peters, be informed of the situation I am in by the folly of Mr. Dinwiddie and the roguery of his Assembly, and unless the road of communication from your province is opened, and some contract made in consequence of the power I have given, I must inevitably be starved. Sir John St. Clair, (who by the the by is ashamed of his having talked to you in the manner he did,) has employed, by the advice of Governor Sharpe, a fellow at Connegogee, one Cressap, who has behaved in such a manner in relation to the Pennsylvania flour, that if I had been a French commissary he could not have acted more for their interest—in short, in every instance, but in my contract for the Pennsylvania wagons, I have been deceived, and met with nothing but lies and villainy. I hope, however, in spite of this that we shall pass a merry Christmas together! (?) E. B.

Philadelphia, June 3d, 1755.

Sir:—Mr. Peters brought me your proposals for a contract for three months provisions for the army under your command, upon which we immediately consulted some men best acquainted with the trade and circumstances of this country, and I am well assured the quantity of provisions may be furnished in time to answer your demand.

Mr. Turner, a gentleman of note in this province, has undertaken to purchase the provisions necessary upon this occasion, and has already, at my request, bought one hundred head of cattle, and twelve barrels of pork, twenty barrels of rice, and two hundred bushels of peas; and he is endeavoring to get two hundred and forty barrels of pork more; the rest of the meat will be supplied in beeves, which may be had very good in this and the neighboring province of New Jersey. All the pork mentioned above is of the very best kind, well cured and packed, and may be depended on for keeping.

I send a man into the counties of York, Lancaster, and Cumberland, to purchase up twelve hundred barrels of flour, and to hire or build proper storehouses at Shippensburg, or McDowell's Mills, for the reception of that and other species of provisions that will be sent from hence, who is to remain at the place and take particular account of all the provision he receives and sends away—and he is to provide good pasture for three hundred head of cattle, so that what are sent up and remain in his care may be kept fat and fit for use, and you may have them drove to the army from time to time in such numbers as you shall judge best.

Mr. Peters, who, in his way from the camp through Cumberland county, judges that a place called McDowell's Mill, situated upon the new road about twenty miles westward of Shippensburg, is much more convenient for the magazine than Shippensburg, which, if you approve of, you will let your Secretary notify your approbation by the return of this express, to Charles Swaine at Shippensburg, who, by my instructions, is to wait that approbation before he begins to build or hire storehouses; and in the meantime he is to employ himself in procuring pastures and purchasing the flour.

I observe that in your proposals you mention bread, and if you have conveniences for baking in the camp, it may answer the purpose as well; but if not, and bread is not absolutely necessary, I will order the whole or any part of the flour to be baked at the magazine, and will send bakers up for that purpose, but that will be attended with additional expense.

The hay and corn, (wheat and rye,) harvest in this country begins in this month, which will render it very difficult, to have the whole quantity of provisions laid in by the beginning of July; but notwithstanding that, I can venture to promise that a great part, at least one-third, shall be ready by the first week in July, and the remainder by the first week in August. This you may depend on and govern yourself accordingly.

The expense of this supply cannot be reduced to any exact certainty, till the several things are bought and delivered at the magazine; but enclosed I send you an estimate of the expense, which you see amounts to between six and seven thousand pounds, or about £4,000 sterling, which you must be sensible, is more than a plantation Governor, lately returned from Europe and upon bad terms with his Assembly, can easily furnish. I must, therefore, desire you will send me bills for that sum, and every thing shall be managed to the best advantage, and the public served at as cheap a rate as any private merchant in this town.

I send you enclosed a copy of instructions I have given to Charles Swaine, for the government of himself in the management of the affair I have intrusted him with, to which I shall add such others as may be from time to time necessary.

I am told that a great part of the flour, sent by the committee of the Assembly to the mouth of Conegochege, is put into casks made of green timber, which will inevitably turn it sour. I mention this to you that you may have it surveyed as it arrives at the camp; and if not quite spoiled, it may be saved by putting it into bags, or other casks.

I am, Sir, &c.,

Robert H. Morris.

Fort Cumberland, June 9th, 1755.

Sir:—I have, this morning, received a letter from Governor Glen, inclosing bills upon England, payable to myself, for £4,000 sterling. As you have been so good as to advance money for purchasing forage, and have undertaken to make contracts for provisions, for the supply of the forces, I send the bills to you, to be sold at the best price you can get for them, that you may reimburse yourself what you are in advance, and may leave a fund in your hands for further contracts. When I have the pleasure of seeing you, I shall call upon you, to settle accounts with me and others.

Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

E. BRADDOCK.

P. S. If you should have it in your power to employ some of the money in raising recruits for me, I should be obliged to you; and desire you would send them after me, as soon as the road from your province is opened. I want them to complete the English regiment. You may allow them £3 sterling per man. Arms and clothes will be ready for them; and if you have any body you can confide in to bring them up, he shall be well rewarded for his service.

I beg you would send me advice by the return of the express, of your receipt of the bills.

E. B.

CAMP, FIVE MILES FROM FORT CUMBERLAND, June 11, 1755.

SIR:—I received your two letters, by express, last night, and am greatly obliged to you and Mr. Peters, for the steps you have taken towards laying in a magazine of provision for me; as also, for the supply you are collecting of forage.

I shall signify to Mr. Swain, by the return of your messenger, my approbation of the deposites being made at M'Dowell's mill, instead of Shippensburg. I dispatched an express to you yesterday, with bills upon England, £4,000 sterling, sent me by Governor Glen: and upon notice from you, I will send the draughts, from the deputy paymaster, upon Mr. Franklin, for such further sums as you may have occasion for.

I have ordered a party of an hundred men, as a guard, to the people working upon the new road, which will set out this day.

I am much obliged to yourself and your little government, for the present of oxen they have made me, and am,

Sir, your most humble and obedient servant,

E. BRADDOCK.

PHILADELPHIA, June 12, 1755.

SIR:—Governor Delancey, by express, sent me the letter that accompanies this; and also a letter from Capt. Bradstreet, giving an account of the passing of some French troops to Oswego, with some cannon. I send you a copy of this letter under this cover, as it is uncertain whether the express which he mentions to have sent through the woods, will get safe to you in time. From this, and other pieces of intelligence sent you, the French seem to be mustering to oppose you; but whether they will exert their strength on the Ohio or Niagara, I can't take upon me to say, but am rather inclined to think they will choose the latter, as they can, with more ease, draw their forces together and supply them there, than at Fort Du Quesne, and your march through an uninhabited country, will be much longer than the other, and consequently, more liable to be interrupted and harrassed by the Indians and wood-fighters, and your communication with the country behind you, rendered more difficult.

Upon this intelligence, I shall press my Assembly to enable me to escort provisions and other necessaries to you, from time to time, that you may not be under a necessity of dividing or lessening your force; but I have little reason to expect any thing from them.

On the 13th inst. my Assembly met, agreeable to my summons, and I sent them a message, strongly recommending it to them, to enable me to supply the cannon and stores you had demanded, and to regulate the hire of wagons, horses and men, and the price of provisions, that private men might not be at liberty to distress public measures, as you will see by a copy of the message under this cover, but I have no hopes of their doing any thing to the purpose.

I am, sir, &c.,

ROBT. H. MORRIS.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16, 1755.

SIR:—Your express just brought me your favor of the 9th inst., with Carolina bills of exchange to the amount of £4,000 sterling, which are drawn in such large sums that they will not readily sell, wherefore, I have directed the merchant I employ to send them immediately to England, and draw his own bills to the amount in such sums as may suit the traders here, which he will do at the highest exchange; but bills are so plenty here and at New York, by means of Shirley's and Pepperell's regiments, the Northern expedition and Col. Hunter's draughts, that I am fearful exchange will soon fall. Before you receive this, you will be informed of what I have done with regard to the forage and provisions, which I flatter myself will meet with your approbation. I have done my utmost, and make no doubt I shall have every thing you want in great readiness before you will have occasion for it; my only doubt is about escorts, but I shall try to work upon my Assembly to keep some men in pay for that purpose, for the reasons I have mentioned to you in another letter of this day. As soon as the Assembly is adjourned, and a London ship just going is departed, I shall go into the back counties to settle all matters about the magazine; and you may rest assured, that every thing that is possible shall be done in the best and cheapest manner.

My intelligence from the roads is, that they have got as far as Raystown, and I hope they will soon join you. If some log store houses were built nigh the falls of Ohiogany, or at some other more convenient place upon that new road, flour and other provisions might be sent thither from the magazine near Shippensburg; and you might with greater ease be supplied when you get to the Ohio; but of that you are the best judge.

The getting recruits here is become somewhat difficult, and Shirley's and Pepperell's officers have taken great numbers from here. However, I will try what can be done, and if I had some arms, the recruits might serve as escorts from time to time.

The women you have discharged shall be taken care of as soon as they arrive, if I can prevail on my Assembly to contribute anything to it.

I am, sir, &c.,

ROBT. H. MORRIS.

Prov. Rec. N. p. 63.

BEAR CAMP, June 21, 1755.

SIR:—I have this day received your two letters of June 12 and 16, and am much obliged to you for the trouble you have had, as well with regard to the magazine of provisions, as the forage you have procured for me. I have a firm dependence upon your care and regard for the service you have undertaken that shall meet with no disappointments, and that everything will be conducted in the best manner.

I shall order the Deputy Pay Master to send Mr. Franklin a draught by this opportunity upon Col. Hunter, for £1,000 sterling, on account of the purchase of forage. You will please to let me know what further demands there may be on that account. When I am further advanced, I shall be able to judge better of the expediency of forming a second magazine upon the new road.

The party I have sent for the protection of your people working upon that road, will, I hope, be a sufficient security for them against all panics.

I am obliged to you for the enclosed from Captain Brodstreet. Herewith I send you some letters which are to go to the northward; and you will be so good as to forward them in the best manner.

I am, sir, &c.

E. Braddock.

P. S.—As it is perfectly understood here in what part the road making in your province is to communicate with, through which I am now proceeding to Fort Duquesne; I must beg that you and Mr. Peters, would immediately settle it, and send an express on purpose after me with the most exact description of it, that there may be no mistake in a matter of so much importance.

From the Camp at the Last Crossing of the Youghiogheny, June 30, 1755.

Sir:—I shall be very soon in want of supplies from your province, I must beg you would order all possible dispatch to be made use of in finishing the new road as far as Crow Foot of the Youghiogheny, and immediately afterwards send forward to me such articles of provision as shall be in your power. Some of the inhabitants near Fort Cumberland having been killed, and taken prisoners by straggling parties of Indians, the people in these parts have been deterred from coming to the camp. My chief dependence must therefore be upon your province, when the road will be secure from insults or attacks of that kind; and lest it should not be in my power to send a sufficient number of wagons or horses, to bring up from the magazine at McDowell's mill* the provisions I may have occasion for, I must desire you to direct Mr. Swaine, or some proper person, to have in view such a number of them as may answer that purpose, which shall be conducted to the camp under a proper escort; but I would not have any contract or positive engagement made till further orders, as I am in hopes this measure may not be necessary, and expense consequently avoided.

I hope soon to have an express from you, with an exact account of the place fixed upon for the communication between the two roads,

And am, sir, your most humble and most ob't serv't,

E. Braddock.

Philadelphia, July 6, 1755.

Sir:—The packet I have the honor to transmit to you, by this conveyance, will inform you of the success of our part of his Majesty's forces under your command, and of the treatment that part of their fleet have received from Admiral Boscawen, who, with Admiral Moslyn, commanded thirteen sail of the line, now cruising between St. Lawrence Bay and Cape Table. It is said that the French fleet consists of twenty-four ships, and the English of thirty, but I cannot think these accounts are to be depended on; but as our fleet has fallen in with theirs, I am in hopes we shall have as good an account of the whole as we have of the two that are mentioned in the letters herewith.

I make no doubt Colonel Innis has informed you that some Indians have been murdering some of the inhabitants near Fort Cumberland, and given you the particulars, which I have not yet received. This has struck a panic into the people of the back parts of our country, and I expect it will be difficult to prevail with them to go with provisions to the road cutters without an escort, which I have it not in my power to furnish, not being enabled by my Assembly.

Mr. Franklin tells me that the £1,000 you have sent him, will be sufficient to pay the forage bought to my order in this town, and for transporting it to the camp. He thinks, too, that it will be sufficient to pay for a thousand bushels of wheat, that you have ordered him to buy, of all which, he tells me, he will give me an account. That there will be wanting about £500 sterling more to pay for the forage that was bought and sent from the back counties. I have 330 bushels of Indian corn remaining in this town, which I can sell again for what it cost: but do not intend to do it till I hear from you, which I shall expect to do by the return of the express, when I shall be at Shippensburg; and beg you would direct me whether any, and what forage must be laid in at Shippensburg, that I may give the necessary orders, when I am in that county.

The panic that has taken possession of the people near the mountains, since the Indians have begun to scalp, will make it next to impossible to carry the magazine further back than Shippensburg. However, I shall judge better of that when I am upon the spot, and fix it either at McDowell's mill, at Shippensburg, or at some place between them, as I shall think will best answer the public purpose.

This express will bring you letters from Colonel Johnson, that will let you into the progress he is making among the Indians, and in which I suppose he mentions the state of things in that quarter, of which I had no account for some time, further than all our troops are in motion. The cutting off of this re-inforcement of six batallions, will put it out of the power of the French to hinder the execution of any part of your plan; and if a war should be the consequence of our success in America, and the colonies can be prevailed upon to keep up the troops they have at present, Canada itself may find you employment for next summer.

I am, sir, &c.,

Robert H. Morris.

Carlisle, July 14, 1755.

Sir:—I have this minute the favor of yours of the 30th of last month, from the last crossing of the Youghiogheny, upon which I congratulate you, and I hope this will find you in possession of Fort Duquesne. The opening of this road has been somewhat interrupted by some Indians, who have killed some of the wagoners, and people employed in carrying them provisions, which has generally alarmed this part of the province. And Mr. Burd writes me from Allegheny mountain, that thirty of his men had left him for want of arms. As soon as possible after the people that escaped the Indians arrived, a number of cattle were procured, and with a proper quantity of flour, were sent under the protection of sixty-four volunteers, who, I imagine, will meet the thirty now on their way home, and carry them back to their work. As soon as I am informed that the new road is nigh joining your route, which, as I have written, I imagine will be about the Great Crossing, I shall send forward a parcel of oxen, some pork, and some flour; as much of the two last articles as I can procure wagons to carry; and propose staying in this part of the province (where I came to forward and secure the magazine) till that be done. The letter herewith I wrote at Philadelphia, but the bearer has been detained a long time on the road, on account of the murders committed by the Indians, and his hopes of an escort from me; but for want of militia, it is not in my power; so he goes round by Winchester, and may be some time before he reaches you with the good news he is charged with.

I am your Excellency's most ob't and most humble serv't,

Robert H. Morris.

*Franklin county, a few miles from Loudon, Pa.

CHAPTER XIX.

BRADDOCK'S ARMY—THE MARCH, BATTLE AND RETREAT.

GENERAL BRADDOCK landed in Virginia on the 20th of February, 1755, with two regiments of the British army from Ireland, the Forty-fourth and Forty-eighth, each consisting of five hundred men, one of them commanded by Sir Peter Halket, and the other by Colonel Dunbar. To these were joined a suitable train of artillery, with military supplies and provisions. The General's first headquarters were at Alexandria, and the troops were stationed in that place and its vicinity till they marched for Will's creek.

One division of the army, consisting of the provincials and a part of the forty-fourth, set out on the 8th and 9th of April, under Sir Peter Halket, for Winchester, Virginia, whence a new road had been opened, and was nearly completed, to Cumberland, and arrived by that route at Will's creek, on the 10th of May. On the 18th of April, Colonel Dunbar, with the remainder of the army, bringing the artillery and stores, set out for Frederick, Maryland. Arriving there, it was found that there was no road to Will's creek, and Dunbar was compelled to cross the Potomac, at the mouth of the Conococheague, passed over the little Cacapon, and again ferried the Potomac at Ferry Fields. Thence on the river side, through Shawanee Old Town, or Skipton, the army passed the narrows, and on the 20th of May arrived at Cumberland.

In letters written at Will's creek, General Braddock, with much severity of censure, complained of the lukewarmness of the colonial governments, and tardiness of the people in facilitating his enterprise, the dishonesty of agents, and the faithlessness of contractors. The forces which he brought together at Will's creek, however, amounted to somewhat more than two thousand effective men, of whom about one thousand belonged to the royal regiments, and the remainder were furnished by the colonies. In this number were embraced the fragments of two independent companies from New York, one of which was commanded by Captain Gates, afterward a major-general in the Revolutionary war. Thirty sailors had also been granted for the expedition by Admiral Keppel, who commanded the squadron that brought over the two regiments.

At this post the army was detained three weeks, nor could it then have moved had it not been for the energetic personal services of Franklin, among the Pennsylvania farmers, in procuring horses and wagons to transport the artillery, provisions and baggage.

The details of the march were well described in Colonel Washington's letters. The army was separated into two divisions. The advanced division, under General Braddock, consisted of twelve hundred men, besides officers. The other, under Colonel Dunbar, was left in the rear, to proceed by slower marches. On the 8th of July the General arrived with his division, all in excellent health and spirits, at the junction of the Youhiogheny and Monongahela rivers. At this place Colonel Washington joined the advance division, being but partially recovered from a severe attack of fever, which had been the cause of his remaining behind. The officers and soldiers were now in the highest spirits, and firm in the conviction that they should, within a few hours, victoriously enter the walls of Fort Du Quesne.

The steep and rugged grounds on the north side of the Monongahela prevented the army from marching in that direction, and it was necessary in approaching the fort, now about fifteen miles distant, to ford the river twice, and march part of the way on the south side. Early on the morning of the 9th all things were in readiness, and the whole train passed through the river, a little below the mouth of the Youghiogheny, and proceeded in perfect order along the southern margin of the Monongahela.

Washington was often heard to say during his lifetime, that the most beautiful spectacle that he ever beheld was the display of the British troops on this eventful morning. Every man was neatly dressed in full uniform, the soldiers were arranged in columns and marched in exact order, the sun gleamed from their burnished arms, the river flowed tranquilly on their right, and the deep forest overshowed them with solemn grandeur on their left. Officers and men were equally inspired with cheering hopes and confident anticipations.

In this manner, they marched forward 'till about noon, when they arrived at the second crossing place, ten miles from Fort Du Quesne. They halted but a little time, and then began to ford the river, and regain its northern bank. As soon as they had crossed, they came up on a level plain, elevated but a few feet above the surface of the river, and extending northward nearly half a mile from its margin. Then commenced a gradual ascent at an angle of about three degrees, which terminated in hills of a considerable height, at no great distance beyond. The road from the fording place to Fort Du Quesne, led across the plain and up this ascent. and thence proceeded through an uneven country, at that time covered with woods.

By the order of march a body of three hundred men, under Colonel Gage, afterward General Gage, of Boston memory, made the advanced party, which was immediately followed by another of two hundred. Next came the general with the columns of artillery, the main body of the army, and the baggage. At one o'clock the whole had passed the river, and almost at this moment a sharp firing was heard upon the advance parties, who were now ascending the hill, and had got forward about a hundred yards from the termination of the plain. A heavy discharge of musketry was poured in upon their front, which was the first intelligence they had of their proximity, and this was suddenly followed by another on the right flank. They were filled with great consternation, as no enemy was in sight, and the firing seemed to proceed from an invisible foe. They fired in their turn, however, but quite at random, and obviously, without effect, as the enemy kept up a discharge in quick, continued succession.

The General advanced speedily to the relief of these detachments, but before he could reach the spot which they occupied, they gave way and fell back upon the artillery and the other columns of the army, causing extreme confusion, and striking the whole mass with such a panic, that no order could afterwards be restored. The General and the officers behaved with the utmost courage, and used every effort to rally the men, and bring them to order, but all in vain. In this state they continued nearly three hours, huddling together in confused bodies, firing irregularly, shooting down their own officers and men, and doing no perceptible harm to the enemy. The Virginia provincials were the only troops who seemed to retain their senses, and they behaved with a bravery and resolution worthy of a better fate. They adopted the Indian mode, and fought each man for himself behind a tree. This was prohibited by the General, who endeavored to form his men into platoons and columns, as if they had been manoeuvreing on the plains of Flanders. Meantime, the French and Indians, concealed in the ravines and behind trees, kept up a deadly and unceasing discharge of musketry, singling out their objects, taking deliberate aim, and producing a carnage almost unparalleled in the annals of modern warfare. More than half of the whole army, which had crossed the river in so proud an array only three hours before, were killed or wounded; the General himself had received a mortal wound, and many of his best officers had fallen by his side.

In describing the action a few days afterward, Colonel Orme wrote to the Governor of Pennsylvania: "The men were so extremely deaf to the exhortations of the General and the officers, that they fired away, in the most irregular manner, all their ammunition, and then ran off, leaving to the enemy the artillery, ammunition, provisions and baggage; nor could they be persuaded to stop till they had got as far as Gist's plantation, nor there only in part, many of them proceeding as far as Colonel Dunbar's party, who lay six miles on this side. The officers were absolutely sacrificed by their good behavior, advancing sometimes in bodies, sometimes separately, hoping by such example to engage the soldiers to follow them, but to no purpose. The General had five horses shot under him, and at last received a wound through his right arm into his lungs, of which he died the 13th instant. Secretary Shirley was shot through the head; Captain Morris, wounded; Colonel Washington had two horses shot from under him, and his clothes shot through in several places, behaving the whole time with the greatest courage and resolution. Sir Peter Halket was killed upon the spot. Colonel Burton and Sir John St. Clair were wounded."

In addition to these, the other field officers wounded were Lieutenant-Colonel Gage, (afterward so well known as the commander of the British forces in Boston, at the beginning of the Revolution,) Colonel Orme, Major Sparks, and Brigade Major Halket. Ten captains were killed and twenty-two wounded. The whole number of officers in the engagement was eighty-six, of whom twenty-six were killed and thirty-seven wounded. The killed and wounded of the privates amounted to seven hundred and fourteen. Of these, at least one half were supposed to be killed. Their bodies left on the field of action, were stripped and scalped by the Indians. All the artillery, ammunition, provisions, and baggage, everything in the train of the army, fell into the enemy's hands, and were given up to be pillaged by the savages. General Braddock's papers were also taken, among which were his instructions and correspondence with the ministry after his arrival in Virginia. The same fate befel the papers of Colonel Washington, including a private journal and his official correspondence during his campaign of the preceding year.

M. de Contrecoeur, the Commander of Fort Duquesne, received early intelligence of the arrival of General Braddock and the British regiments in Virginia. After his removal from Wills' creek, French and Indian scouts were constantly abroad, who watched his motions, reported the progress of his march and the route he was pursuing. His army was represented to consist of three thousand men. M. de Controcoeur was hesitating what measures to take, believing his small force wholly inadequate to encounter so formidable an enemy. When M. de Beaujeu, a captain in the French service, proposed to head a detachment of French and Indians, and meet the enemy in their march. The consent of the Indians was first obtained. A large body of them was then encamped in the vicinity of the fort, and M. de Beaujeu opened to them his plan, and requested their aid. This they at first declined, giving as reason, the superior force of the enemy, and the impossibility of success. But at the pressing solicitation of M. de Beaujeu, they agreed to hold a council on the subject, and talk with him again the next morning. They still adhered to their first decision, and when M. de Beaujeu went out among them to inquire the result of their deliberations, they told him a second time they could not go. This was a severe disappointment to M. de Beaujeu, who had set his heart upon the enterprise, and was resolved to prosecute it. Being a man of great good nature, affability, and ardor, and much beloved by the savages, he said to them: "I am determined to go out and meet the enemy. What! will you suffer your father to go out alone? I am sure we shall conquer." With this spirited harangue, delivered in a manner that pleased the Indians, and won upon their confidence, he subdued their unwillingness, and they agreed to accompany him.

It was now on the 7th of July, and news came that the English were within six leagues of the fort. This day and the next were spent in making preparations and reconnoitering the ground for attack. Two other captains, Dumas and Liquery, were joined with M. de Beaujeu, and also four lieutenants, six ensigns, and two cadets. On the morning of the 9th they were all in readiness, and began their march at an early hour. It seems to have been their first intention, to make a stand at the ford, and annoy the English while crossing the river, and then retreat to the ambuscade on the side of the hill, where the contest actually commenced. The trees on the bank of the river afforded a good opportunity to effect this measure, and the Indian mode of warfare, since the artillery could be of little avail against an enemy, where every man was protected by a tree, and at the same time the English would be exposed to a point blank musket shot in fording the river. As it happened, however, M. de Beaujeu and his party did not arrive in time to execute this part of the plan.

The English were preparing to cross the river, when the French and Indians reached the defiles on the rising ground, where they posted themselves, and waited until Braddock's advanced columns came up. This was the signal for the attack, which was made at first in front, and repelled by so heavy a discharge from the British, that the Indians believed it proceeded from artillery, and showed symptoms of wavering and retreat. At this moment M. de Beaujeu was killed, and the command devolving upon M. Dumas, he showed great presence of mind in rallying the Indians, and ordered his officers to lead them to the wings and attack the enemy in the flank, while he with the French troops would maintain the position in front. This order was promptly obeyed, and the attack became general. The action was warm and severely contested for a short time; but the English fought in the European method, firing at random, which had little effect in the woods, while the Indians fired from concealed places, took aim, and almost every shot brought down a man. The English columns soon got into confusion; the yell of the savages, with which the woods resounded, struck terror into the hearts of the soldiers, till at length they took to flight, and resisted all the endeavors of their officers to restore any degree of order in their escape. The rout was complete, and the field of battle was left covered with the dead and wounded, and all the artillery, ammunition, provisions and baggage of the British army. The Indians gave themselves up to pillage, which prevented them from pursuing the English in their flight.

Such is the substance of the accounts written at the time by the French officers, and sent home to their government. In regard to the numbers engaged there are some slight variations in the three statements. The largest reported is two hundred and fifty French and Canadians, and six hundred Indians. If we take a medium, it will make the whole number led out by M. de Beaujeu at least eight hundred and fifty. In an imperfect return, three officers were stated to have been killed, and four wounded; about thirty soldiers and Indians killed, and as many wounded. When these facts are taken into view, the result of the action will appear much less wonderful than has generally been supposed. And this wonder will still be diminished, when another circumstance is recurred to, worthy of particular consideration, and that is, the shape of the ground upon which the battle was fought. This part of the description, so essential to the understanding of military operations, and above all in the present instance, has never been touched upon, it is believed, by any writer. We have seen that Braddock's advanced columns, after crossing the valley, extending nearly half a mile from the margin of the river, began to move up a hill, so uniform in its ascent, that it was little less than an inclined plane of a somewhat crowning form. Down this inclined surface extended two ravines, beginning near together, at about one hundred and fifty yards from the bottom of the hill, and proceeding in different direc- till they terminated in the valley below. In these ravines, the French and Indians were concealed and protected. At this day they are from eight to ten feet deep, and sufficient in extent to contain at least ten thousand men. At the time of the battle, the ground was covered with trees and long grass, so that the ravines were entirely hidden from view, till they were approached within a few feet. Indeed, at the present day, although the place is cleared from trees, and converted into pasture, they are perceptible only at a very short distance. By this knowledge of the local peculiarities of the battle ground, the mystery that the British conceived themselves to be contending with an invisible foe, is solved. Such was literally the fact. They were so paraded between the ravines, that their whole front and right flank were exposed to the incessant fire of the enemy, who discharged their muskets over the edge of the ravines, concealed during the operation by the grass and bushes, and protected by an invisible barrier below the surface of the earth. William Butler, a veteran soldier, who was in this action, and afterward at the Plains of Abraham, said, "We could only tell where the enemy was by the smoke of their muskets." A few scattering Indians were behind trees, and some were killed venturing out to take scalps, but much the larger portion fought wholly in the ravines.

It is not probable that either General Braddock, or any one of his officers, suspected the actual situation of the enemy during the whole bloody contest. It was a fault with the General, for which no apology can be offered, that he did not keep scouts and guards in advance, and on the wings of the army, who would have made all proper discoveries before the whole had been brought into a snare. This neglect was the primary cause of his defeat, which might have been avoided. Had he charged with the bayonet, the ravine would have been cleared instantly; or had he brought his artillery to the points where the ravines terminated in the valley, and scoured them with grape shot, the same consequence would have followed.

But the total insubordination of his troops would have prevented both these movements, even if he had become acquainted with the ground in the early part of the action. The disasters of this day, and the fate of the commander, brave and resolute as he undoubtedly was, are to be ascribed to his contempt of Indian warfare, his overweening confidence in the prowess of veteran troops, his obstinate self-complacency, his disregard of prudent counsel, and his negligence in leaving his army exposed to a surprise on their march. He freely consulted Colonel Washington, whose experience and judgment, notwithstanding his youth, claimed the highest respect for his opinions; but the General gave little heed to his advice. While on his march, George Croghan, the Indian interpreter, joined him with one hundred friendly Indians, who offered their services. These were accepted in so cold a manner, and the Indians themselves treated with so much neglect, that they deserted him, one after another. Washington pressed upon him the importance of these men, and the necessity of conciliating and retaining them, but without effect.

When the battle was over, and the remnants of Braddock's army had gained, in their flight, the opposite bank of the river, Colonel Washington was dispatched by the General to meet Colonel Dunbar, and order forward wagons for the wounded with all possible speed. But it was not till the 11th, after they had reached Gist's plantation, with great difficulty and much suffering from hunger, that any arrived. The General was first brought off in a tumbrel; he was next put on horseback, but being unable to ride, was obliged to be carried by the soldiers.

They all reached Dunbar's camp, to which the panic had already extended, and a day was passed there in great confusion. The artillery was destroyed, and the public stores and heavy baggage were burnt; by whose order was never known. They moved forward on the 13th, and that night General Braddock died, and was buried on the road for the purpose of concealing his body from the Indians. The spot is still pointed out, within a few yards of the present National road, and about a mile west of the site of Fort Necessity, at the Great Meadows. Captain Stewart, of the Virginia forces, had taken particular charge of him from the time he was wounded till his death. On the 17th the sick and wounded arrived at Fort Cumberland, and were soon after joined by Colonel Dunbar, with the remaining fragments of the army.

The French sent out a party as far as Dunbar's camp, and destroyed everything that was left. Colonel Washington, being in very feeble health, proceeded in a few days to Mount Vernon.

Although the doings of 1755 could not be looked on as of a very amicable character, war was not declared by either France or England until May, the following year; and even then France was the last to proclaim the contest which she had been so long carrying on, though more than three hundred of her merchant vessels had been taken by British privateers. The causes of this proceeding are not very clear. France thought, beyond doubt, that George would fear to declare war, because Hanover was so exposed to attack; but why the British movements upon the sea particularly, did not lead to the declaration on the part of France, is not easily suggested. Early in 1756, however, both kingdoms formed alliances in Europe. France with Austria, Russia and Sweden; England with the great Frederick. And then commenced the seven years war, wherein most of Europe, North America, and the East and West Indies, partook and suffered.

CHAPTER XX.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL JOHN ARMSTRONG'S EXPEDITION AGAINST KITANNING—LIST OF THE KILLED AND WOUNDED—DELAWARE CHIEFS—CAPTAIN JACOBS AND SHINGAS.

THE expedition was planned and carried out with great secrecy, for the sole object of punishing the Indians engaged in the massacres along the borders, and who, it was known, had their headquarters at Kitanning, where the chief instigators of all the mischief, Shingas, and Captain Jacobs, lived. The command was entrusted to Lieut. Col. John Armstrong, a brave and prudent officer, and the forces consisted of seven companies.

He left Fort Shirley (Aughwick, Huntingdon county), on the 30th of August, 1756, and on the 3d of September came up with the advanced party at Beaver Dams, a few miles from Frankstown, on the north branch of the Juniata. This junction of the forces occurred on the flat where Guysport now stands, where the little army struck the celebrated trail known as the Kitanning Path. In his official account of the expedition, dated at Fort Littleton, September 14th, 1756, Colonel Armstrong says:

We were there (at the Beaver Dams) informed that some of our men, having been out upon a scout, had discovered the tracks of two Indians, about three miles this side of the Allegheny mountain, and but a few miles from the camp. From the freshness of the tracks, their killing of a bear cub, and the marks of their fires, it seemed evident they were not twenty-four hours before us, which might be looked upon as a particular providence in our favor that we were not discovered. Next morning we decamped and in two days came within fifty miles of the Kitanning. It was then adjudged necessary to send some persons to reconnoitre the town, and to get the best intelligence they could concerning the situation and position of the enemy; whereupon an officer, with one of the pilots and two soldiers, were sent off for that purpose. The day following we met them on their return, and they informed us that the roads were entirely clear of the enemy, and that they had the greatest reason to believe they were not discovered; but from the rest of the intelligence they gave, it appeared they had not been nigh enough the town either to perceive the true situation of it, the number of the enemy or in what way it might most advantageously be attacked.

We continued our march, in order to get as near the town as possible that night, so as to be able to attack it next morning about daylight, but to our great dissatisfaction, about nine or ten o'clock at night one of our guides came and told us that he perceived a fire by the road-side, at which he saw two or three Indians, a few perches distant from our front; whereupon, with all possible silence, I ordered the rear to retreat about one hundred perches, in order to make way for the front, that we might consult how we could best proceed without being discovered by the enemy. Soon after, the pilot returned a second time, and assured us, from the best observations he could make, there were not above three or four indians at the fire, on which it was proposed that we should immediately surround and cut them off; but this was thought too hazardous, for, if but one of the enemy had escaped, it would have been the means of discovering the whole design; and the light of the moon, on which depended our advantageously posting our men and attacking the town, would not admit of our staying until the Indians fell asleep; on which it was agreed to leave Lieutenant Hogg, with twelve men and the person who first discovered the fire, with orders to watch the enemy, but not to attack them, till break of day, and then, if possible, to cut them off. It was also agreed (we believing ourselves to be about six miles from the town) to leave the horses, many of them being tired, with what blankets and other baggage we then had, and to take a circuit off the road, which was very rough and incommodious on account of the stones and fallen timber, in order to prevent our being heard by the enemy at the fire place. This interruption much retarded our march, but a still greater loss arose from the ignorance of our pilot, who neither knew the true situation of the town, nor the best paths that led thereto; by which means, after crossing a number of hills and valleys, our front reached the river Ohio (Alleghany) about one hundred perches below the main body of the town, a little before the setting of the moon, to which place, rather than by the pilot, we were guided by the beating of the drum, and the whooping of the warriors at their dance. It then became us to make the best use of the remaining moon light; but, ere we were aware, an Indian whistled in a very singular manner, about thirty perches from our front, in the foot of a corn field; upon which we immediately sat down, and, after passing in silence to the rear, I asked one Baker, a soldier, who was our best assistant, whether that was not a signal to the warriors of our approach. He answered "No," and said it was the manner of a young fellow's calling a squaw after he had done his dance, who accordingly kindled a fire, cleaned his gun and shot it off before he went to sleep. All this time we were obliged to lie quiet and lurk, till the moon was fairly set. Immediately after, a number of fires appeared in different places in the corn field, by which, Baker said, the Indians lay, the night being warm and that these fires would immediately be out, as they were only designed to disperse the gnats. By this time it was break of day, and the men, having marched thirty miles, were mostly asleep. The time being long, the three companies of the rear were not yet brought over the last precipice.

For these, some proper hands were immediately dispatched; and the weary soldiers being roused to their feet, a proper number, under sundry officers, were ordered to take the end of the hill at which we then lay, and march along the top of the said hill, at least one hundred perches, and so much farther (it being daylight) as would carry them opposite the upper part, or at least the body of the town. For the lower part thereof, and the corn field, presuming the warriors were there, I kept rather the larger number of men, promising to postpone the attack in that part for eighteen or twenty minutes, until the detachment along the hill should have time to advance to the place assigned them—in the doing of which, they were a little unfortunate. The time being elapsed, the attack was begun in the corn field, and the men, with all expedition possible, dispatched through the several parts thereof, a party being also despatched to the houses, which were then discovered by the light of the day. Captain Jacobs immediately then gave the war whoop, and, with sundry other Indians, as the English prisoners afterwards told, cried the white men were at last come, and they would have scalps enough, but at the same time, ordered their squaws and children to flee to the woods. Our men with great eagerness, passed through and fired in the corn field, where they had several returns from the enemy, as they also had from the opposite side of the river. Presently, after a brisk fire began among the houses, which, from the house of Captain Jacobs, was returned with a great deal of resolution, to which place I immediately repaired, and found that from the advantage of the house and port holes, sundry of our people were wounded and some killed; and finding that returning the fire upon the house was ineffectual, I ordered the contiguous houses to be set on fire, which was performed by sundry of the officers and soldiers with a great deal of activity, the Indians always firing whenever an object presented itself, and seldom missing wounding or killing some of the people—from which house, in moving about to give the necessary orders and directions, I received a wound from a large musket ball in the shoulders. Sundry persons, during the action, were ordered to tell the Indians to surrender themselves prisoners, but one of the Indians in particular, answered, and said he was a man, and would not be a prisoner; upon which he was told in Indian, he would be burnt. To this he answered, he did not care, for he would kill four or five before he died; and, had we not desisted from exposing ourselves, they would have killed a great many more, they having a number of loaded guns by them. As the fire began to approach and the smoke grew thick, one of the Indian fellows, to show his manhood, began to sing. A squaw in the same house, and at the same time, was heard to cry and make a noise, but for so doing was severely rebuked by the man; but by and by, the fire being too hot for them, two Indian fellows and a squaw sprang out and made for the cornfield, who were immediately shot down by our people then surrounding the houses. It was thought Captain Jacob tumbled himself out at a garret or cockloft window, at which he was shot—our prisoners offering to be qualified to the powder horn and pouch there taken off him, which they say he had lately got from a French officer in exchange for Lieutenant Armstrong's boots, which he carried from Fort Granville, where the Lieutenant was killed.

The same prisoners say they are perfectly assured of his scalp, as no other Indians there wore their hair in the same manner. They also say they know his squaw's scalp by a particular bob, and also know the scalp of a young Indian called the King's Son. Before this time, Captain Hugh Mercer, who, early in the action, was wounded in the arm, had been taken to the top of a hill above the town, to whom a number of the men and some of the officers were gathered, from whence they had discovered some Indians pass the river and take the hill, with an intention, as they thought, to surround us and cut off our retreat, from whom I had sundry pressing messages to leave the houses and retreat to the hills, or we should all be cut off. But to this I would by no means consent until all the houses were set on fire. Though our spreading upon the hills appeared very necessary, yet did it prevent our researches of the cornfield and river side, by which means sundry scalps were left behind, and doubtless some squaws, children and English prisoners, that otherwise might have been got. During the burning of the houses, which were near thirty in number, we were agreeably entertained with a quick succession of charged guns gradually firing off as reached by the fire, but much more so with the vast explosions of sundry bags and large kegs of gun powder, wherewith almost every house abounded; the prisoners afterward informing us that the Indians had frequently said they had a sufficient stock of ammunition for ten years' war with the English. With the roof of Captain Jacob's house, when the powder blew up, was thrown the leg and thigh of an Indian, with a child of three or four years old, to such a height that they appeared as nothing, and fell in an adjoining corn field. There was also a great quantity of goods burnt, which the Indians had received in a present but ten days before from the French. By this time I had proceeded to the hill, to have my wound tied up and the blood stopped, where the prisoners, which in the morning had come to our people, informed me that that very day two bateaux of Frenchmen, with a large body of Delaware and French Indians, were to join Captain Jacobs at the Kitanning, and to set out early the next morning to take Fort Shirley, or, as they called it, George Croghan's Fort; and that twenty-four warriors, who had lately come to the town, were set out on the evening before, for what purpose they did not know,—whether to prepare meat, to spy the fort, or to make an attack on some of our back inhabitants. Soon after, upon a little reflection, we were convinced these warriors were all at the fire we had discovered but the night before, and began to doubt the fate of Lieutenant Hogg and his party. From this intelligence of the prisoners, our provisions being scaffolded some thirty miles back except what were in the men's haversacks, which were left, with the horses and blankets, with Lieutenant Hogg and his party,—and having a number of wounded people then on hand, by the advice of the officers it was thought imprudent then to wait for the cutting down of the corn field, (which was before designed), but immediately to collect our wounded and force our march back in the best manner we could; which we did, by collecting a few Indian horses to carry off our wounded.

From the apprehension of being waylaid and surrounded, (especially by some of the woodsmen,) it was difficult to keep the men together, our march for sundry miles, not exceeding two miles per hour; which apprehensions were heightened by the attempt of a few Indians, who for some time after the march, fired upon each wing and immediately ran off; from whom we received no other damage but one of our men being wounded through both legs. Captain Mercer—being wounded, was induced, as we have every reason to believe, by some of his men, to leave the main body, with his ensign, John Scott, and ten or twelve men, they being heard to tell him that we were in great danger, and that they could take him into the road a nigh way—is probably lost, there being yet no account of him, and most of the men come in. A detachment was sent back to bring him, but couldn't find him; and upon the return of the detachment it was generally reported he was seen with the above number of men, to take a different road. Upon our return to the place where the Indian fire had been discovered the night before, we met with a sergeant of Captain Mercer's company, and two or three other of his men, who had deserted us that morning, immediately after the action at the Kitanning. These men, on running away, had met with Lieutenant Hogg, who lay wounded in two different parts of his body by the roadside. He there told them of the fatal mistake of the pilot, who had assured us there were but three Indians, at the most, at the fire place; but when he came to attack them that morning, according to orders, he found a number considerably superior to his, and believes they killed or mortally wounded three of them the first fire, after which a warm engagement began, and continued for above an hour, when three of his best men were killed and himself twice wounded. The residue fleeing off he was obliged to squat in a thicket, where he might have lain securely until the main body had come up, if this cowardly sergeant and others that fled with him, had not taken him away.

They had marched but a short space when four Indians appeared, on which these deserters began to flee. The Lieutenant then, notwithstanding his wounds, urged and commanded them to stand and fight, which they all refused. The Indians pursued, killing one man and wounding the Lieutenant a third time, through the belly, of which he died in a few hours, but, having sometime before been put on horseback, rode some miles from the place of action. This last attack of the Indians upon Lieutenant Hogg and the deserters was by the beforementioned sergeant represented to us quite in a different light, he telling us that there was a far larger number of the Indians there than appeared to them, and that he and the men with him had fought five rounds; that he had there seen the Lieutenant and sundry others killed and scalped, and had also discovered a number of Indians throwing themselves before us, and insinuated a great deal of such stuff as threw us into much confusion; so that the officers had a great deal to do to keep the men together, but could not prevail upon them to collect what horses and other baggage the Indians had left after the conquest of Lieutenant Hogg and the party under his command in the morning, except a few of the horses, which some of the bravest of the men were prevailed on to collect; so that from the mistake of the pilot who spied the Indians at the fire, and the cowardice of the said sergeant and other deserters, we here sustained a considerable loss of our horses and baggage.

It is impossible to ascertain the exact number of the enemy killed in the action, as some were destroyed by fire, and others in different parts of the corn field; but upon a moderate computation, it is generally believed there cannot be less than thirty or forty killed and mortally wounded, as much blood was found in sundry parts of the corn field, and Indians seen in several places, crawl into the woods on hands and feet,—whom the soldiers, in pursuit of others, then overlooked, expecting to find and scalp them afterward,—and, also, several killed and wounded in crossing the river. On beginning our march we had about a dozen of scalps and eleven English prisoners; but now we find that four or five of the scalps are missing, part of which were lost on the road, and part in possession of those men who, with Captain Mercer, departed from the main body, with whom went also four of the prisoners, the other seven being now at this place, where we arrived on Sun, day night, not being separated or attacked through our whole march by the enemy, though we expected it every day. Upon the whole, had our pilots understood the true position of the town, and the paths leading to it, so as to have posted us at a convenient place, where the disposition of the men, and the duty assigned to them, could have been performed with greater advantage, we had, by Divine assistance, destroyed a much greater number of the enemy, recovered more prisoners, and sustained less damage, than what we at present have. But though the advantage gained over this, our common enemy, is far from being satisfactory to us, yet we must not despise the smallest degree of success that God is pleased to give, especially at a time of such general calamity, when the attempts of our enemies have been so prevalent and successful. I am sure there was the greatest inclination to do more, had it been in our power, as the officers, and most of the soldiers, throughout the whole action exerted themselves with as much activity and resolution as could be expected. Our prisoners inform us the Indians have for some time past talked of fortifying at the Kitanning and other towns."

The following is a list of the killed and wounded in Colonel Armstrong's official report of the expedition:

Lieutenant-Colonel John Armstrong's Company.—Killed—Thomas

Power, John McCormick. Wounded—Lieutenant-Colonel Armstrong, James Caruthers, James Strickland, Thomas Foster.

Captain Hamilton's Company.—Killed—John Kelly.

Captain Mercer's Company.—Killed—John Baker, John McCartney, Patrick Mullen, Cornelius McGinnis, Theophilus Thompson, Dennis Kilpatrick, Bryan Carrigan. Wounded—Richard Fitzgibbons. Missing—Captain Hugh Mercer, Ensign John Scott, Emanuel Minskey, John Taylor, John Francis Phillips, Robert Morrow, Thomas Burk, Philip Pendegrass.

Captain Armstrong's Company.—Killed—Lieutenant James Hogg, James Anderson, Holdcraft Stringer, Edward Obrians, James Higgins, John Lasson. Wounded—William Findley, Robert Robinson, John Ferrol, Thomas Camplin, Charles O'Neal. Missing—John Lewis, William Hunter, William Barker, George Appleby, Anthony Grissy, Thomas Swan.

Captain Ward's Company.—Killed—William Welch. Wounded—Ephraim Bratton. Missing—Patrick Myers, Lawrence Donnahow, Samuel Chambers.

Captain Potter's Company.—Wounded—Ensign James Potter, Andrew Douglas.

Captain Steel's Company.—Missing—Terence Cannaherry.

Total killed, 17; wounded, 13; Missing, 29. All the missing, with one or two exceptions, reached their homes, and nearly all of the wounded recovered.

The loss on the part of the colonists was severe, when we consider that they had three hundred and fifty men engaged in the action, while the Indian force did not consist of over one hundred warriors. The ignorance of the pilot, and the great error of some of the officers in persisting in trying to dislodge the enemy from the houses by discharge of firearms, was no doubt the direct cause of the death of many of the brave men; for all must admit that the expedition was well planned and admirably carried out, as far as circumstances would permit.

In speaking of the horrible Indian massacres which followed the defeat of Braddock, Drake, in his Indian history, says:

"Shingas and Captain Jacobs were supposed to have been the principal instigators of them, and a reward of seven hundred dollars was offered for their heads. It was at this period that the dead bodies of some of the murdered and mangled were sent from the frontiers to Philadelphia, and hauled about the streets, to inflame the people against the Indians, and also against the Quakers, to whose mild forbearance was attributed a laxity in sending out troops. The mob surrounded the House of Assembly, having placed the dead bodies at its entrance, and demanded immediate succor. At this time, the above reward was offered."

King Shingas, as he was called by the whites (who is noticed in the preceding paragraph), but whose proper name was Shingask, which is interpreted Bog-Meadow, was the greatest Delaware warrior at that time. Heckwelder, who knew him personally, says: "Were his war exploits all on record, they would form an interesting document, though a shocking one." Conococheague, Big Cove, Sherman's Valley, and the settlements along the frontier, felt his strong arm sufficiently to attest that he was a "bloody warrior," cruel his treatment, relentless his fury. His person was small, but in point of courage, activity and savage prowess, he was said to have never been exceeded by any one. In 1753, when Washington was on his expedition to fight the French on the Ohio (Allegheny), Shingas had his house at Kitanning.

King Shingas was at Fort Duquesne when Colonel Armstrong destroyed Kitanning; and there is no doubt whatever that Captain Jacobs fell in the engagement, notwithstanding Hans Hamilton, in a letter to the Council, dated at Fort Lyttleton, April 4th, 1756, said, "Indian Isaac hath brought in the scalp of Captain Jacobs." This Indian Isaac claimed, and, we believe, received the reward offered for killing and scalping Captain Jacobs, and yet Captain Jacobs lived to do a great deal of mischief before his scalp fell into the hands of the English colonists.

Not only was Captain Jacobs a great warrior, but it would appear that all his family connections were Indians of note. In a letter from Colonel Stephen to Colonel Armstrong, it is stated on the authority of a returned captive from Muskingum that "A son of Captain Jacobs is killed, and a cousin of his, about seven foot high, called Young Jacob, at the destroying of Kitanning, and it is thought a noted warrior by the name of The Sunfish, as many of them were killed that we know nothing of."

There is no doubt that Armstrong's return did not embrace half the actual loss of the enemy, including women and children; but it was a mistake in Colonel Stephen, or his informant, to include the warrior Sunfish among the slain, for he was a hale old chief in 1781.*

CHAPTER XXI.

POST'S SECOND JOURNAL, 1758.

THE SECOND JOURNAL* OF CHRISTIAN FREDERICK POST, ON A MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO THE INDIANS ON THE OHIO, IN THE LATTER PART OF THE SAME YEAR CONTAINING HIS FURTHER NEGOTIATION WITH THESE PEOPLE TO ACCOMPLISH THE DESIGN OF HIS FORMER JOURNEY, AND PROCURE A PEACE WITH THEM; IN WHICH HE MET WITH FRESH DIFFICULTIES AND DANGERS, OCCASIONED BY THE FRENCH INFLUENCE, &C., BUT THE INDIANS, BEING ACQUAINTED WITH HIS HONEST SIMPLICITY, AND CALLING TO MIND THEIR FORMER FRIENDSHIP WITH THE INHABITANTS OF PENNSYLVANIA, SO FAR PAID A REGARD TO HIS SINCERITY, AS TO LISTEN TO THE TERMS PROPOSED; AND IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF THE FRENCH WERE OBLIGED TO ABANDON THE WHOLE OHIO COUNTRY TO GENERAL FORBES, AFTER DESTROYING, WITH THEIR OWN HANDS, THEIR STRONG FORT OF DUQUESNE.

OCTOBER 25, 1758. Having received the orders of the Honorable Governor Denny, I set out from Easton to Bethlehem, and arrived there about three o'clock in the afternoon. I was employed most of the night in preparing myself with necessaries, &c., for the journey.

26th. Rose early, but my horse being lame, though I traveled all the day, I could not, till after night, reach to an inn, about ten miles from Reading.

27th. I set out early, and about seven o'clock in the morning came to Reading, and there found Captain Bull, Mr. Hays, and the Indians, just mounted, and ready to set out on their journey. They were heartily glad to see me. Pisquetomen stretched out his arms and said, "Now, brother, I am glad I have got you in my arms, I will not let you go again from me, you must go with me;" and I likewise said the same to him, and told him, "I will accompany you if you will go the same way as I must

---

*History of the Juniata Valley.—N. J. Jones, Editor.

* His first journal gives an account of his message to the Delawares, Shawanese and Mingo Indians settled on the Ohio, and formerly in alliance with the English; in order to prevail on them to withdraw from the French interest, in the year 1758.

Christian Frederick Post was an unassuming, honest German, a Norwegian. He came from Germany to Pennsylvania in 1742. In 1743 he accompanied some missionaries (Pyrlaens and Senseman) to Shekomeko, an Indian town bordering on Connecticut, where he married a baptized Indian woman. Having preached the gospel among the Indians for several years, and after much persecution and personal abuse, having been arrested at Albany and imprisoned at New York; and on his enlargement preached the gospel to the Indians at Skatlock, Connecticut, and at the same time worked at his trade as a joiner, returned to Europe about 1749. He again visited this country, and while at Bethlehem was prevailed on to carry a message to the Western Indians. Having discharged his duties faithfully as a messenger on both occasions, he again attempted to convert the Indians West of the Ohio. In 1762 he made his residence one hundred miles West of Fort Pitt, in Tuscarora Town. He abandoned this project and went to Hondurora to preach to the Mosenito Indians, who were more tractable.

go." And then I called them together in Mr. Weiser's house, and read a letter to them which I had received from the Governor, which is as follows, viz:

"To Pisquetoman and Thomas Hickman, to Yotiniowtonna and Slickalamy, and to Isaac Still:

"BRETHREN: Mr. Frederick Post is come express from the General, who sends his compliments to you, and desires you would come by the way of his camp, and give him an opportunity of talking with you.

"By this string of wampum I request of you to alter your intended route by way of Shamokin, and to go to the General, who will give you a kind reception. It is a nigher way, in which you will be better supplied with provisions, and can travel with less fatigue and more safely.

"WILLIAM DENNY.

"EASTON, Oct. 23rd, 1758."

To which I added, "Brethren, I take you by this string, by the hand, and lift you from this place, and lead you along to the General."

After which they consulted among themselves, and soon resolved to go with me. We shook hands with each other, and Mr. Hay immediately set out with them. After which, having with some difficulty procured a fresh horse, in the King's service, I set out about noon with Captain Bull; and when we came to Conrad Weiser's plantation,* we found Pisquetomen lying on the ground very drunk, which obliged us to stay there all night; the other Indians were gone eight miles farther on their journey.

28th.—We rose early, and I spoke to Pisquetomen a great deal. He was very sick, and could hardly stir when we overtook the rest, we found them in the same condition, and they seemed discouraged from going the way to the General, and wanted to go through the woods. I told them I was sorry to see them wavering, and reminded them, that when I went to their towns, I was not sent to the French, but when your old men insisted on my going to them, I followed their advice, and went. And as the General is, in the King's name, over the provinces, in matters of war and peace, the Indians at Allegheny, want to know whether the English government will join in the peace with them. The way to obtain full satisfaction is to go to him, and there you will receive another great belt to carry home, which I desire you seriously to take into consideration. They then resolved to go to Harris' Ferry, and consider about it as they went. We arrived there late in the night.

29th. In the morning, the two Cayugas being most desirous of going through the woods, the others continued irresolute; upon which I told them, "I wish you would go with courage and with hearty resolution," and repeated what I had said to them yesterday, and reminded them, as they were messengers, they should consider what would be best for their whole nation; "consult among yourselves, and let me know your true mind and determination;" and I informed them I could not go with them, unless they would go to the General, as I had messages to deliver him. After which, having consulted together, Pisquetomen came and gave me his hand, and said, "Brother, here is my hand, we have all joined to go with you, and we put ourselves under your protection to bring us safe through, and to secure us from all danger." We came that night to Carlisle and found a small house without the fort, for the Indians to be by themselves, and hired a woman to dress their victuals which pleased them well.

30th. Setting out early we came to Shippensburg, and were lodged in the fort, where the Indians had a house to themselves.

31st. Set out early. In our passing by Chamber's Fort, some of the Irish people, knowing some of the Indians, in a rash manner exclaimed against them, and we had some difficulty to get them off clear. At Fort Loudon we met about sixteen of the Cherokees, who came in a friendly manner to our Indians, inquiring for Bill Sockum, and shewed the pipe they had received from the Shawanese, and gave it, according to their custom, to smoke out of, and said they hoped they were friends of the English. They knew me. Pisquetomen begged me to give him some wampum, that he might speak to them. I gave him 400 white wampum, and he then said to them: "We formerly had friendship one with another; we are only messengers, and cannot say much, but by these strings we let you know we are friends, and we are about settling a peace with the English, and wish to be at peace also with you, and all other Indians," and informed them further, they came from a treaty which was held at Easton, between the Eight United Nations and their confederates, and the English, in which peace was established; and shewed them the two messengers from the Five Nations, who were going with them, to make it known to all the Indians to the westward. Then the Cherokees answered and said: "they should be glad to know how far the friendship was to reach; they, for themselves, wished it might reach from sunrise to sunset; for, as they were in friendship with the English, they would be at peace with all their friends, and at war with their enemies."

Nov. 1st. We reached Fort Littleton, in company with the Cherokees, and were lodged in the fort; they, and our Indians in distinct places; and they entertained each other with stories of their warlike adventures.

2nd. Pisquetomen said to me, "you have led us this way, through the fire; if any mischief should befall us, we shall lay it entirely to you; for we think it was your doing to bring us this way; you should have told us at Easton if it was necessary we should go to the General."

I told him "that I had informed the great men at Easton, that I then thought it would be best not to let them go from thence, till they had seen the General's letter, and assured them that it was agreeable to the General's pleasure.

3rd. Pisquetomen began to argue with Captain Bull and Mr. Hays, upon the same subject, as they did with me, when I went to them with my first message; which was, "that they should tell them, whether the General would claim the land as his own, when he should drive the French away? or, whether the English thought to settle the country? We are always jealous the English will take the land from us. Look, brother, what makes you come with such a large body of men, and make such large roads into our country; we could drive away the French ourselves, without your coming into our country."

Then I desired Captain Bull and Mr. Hays to be careful how they argued with the Indians; and be sure to say nothing that would affront them, for it may prove to our disadvantage when we come amongst them. This day we came to Raystown, and with much difficulty got a place to lodge the Indians by themselves, to their satisfaction.

4th. We intended to set out, but our Indians told us, the Cherokees had desired us to stay that day, as they intended to hold a council, and they desired us to read over to them the Governor's message, which we accordingly did. Pisquetomen, finding Jenny Frazier there, who had been their prisoner, and escaped, spoke to her a little rashly. Our Indians, waiting all the day, and the Cherokees not sending to them, were displeased.

5th. Rose early, and, it raining smartly, we asked our Indians if they would go; which they took time to consult about.

The Cherokees came and told them the English had killed thirty of the people, for taking some horses, which they resented much, and told our Indians they had better go home, than go any farther with us, lest they should meet with the same. On hearing this, I told them how I heard it happened; upon which our Indians said they had behaved like fools, and brought the mischief on themselves.

*Near Womelsdorf, fourteen miles west of Reading.

Pisquetomen, before we went from hence, made it up with Jenny Frazier, and they parted good friends, and though it rained hard, we set out at ten o'clock, and got to the foot of the Allegheny, and lodged at the first run of water.

6th. One of our horses went back; we hunted a good while for him. Then we set off, and found one of the worst roads that ever was traveled, until we reached Stoney creek. Upon the road we overtook a great number of pack horses, whereon Pisquetomen said: "Brother, now you see if you had not come to us before, this road would not be so safe as it is; now you see we could have destroyed all these people on the road, and great mischief would have been done, if you had not stopped, and drawn our people back." We were informed that the General was not yet gone to Fort Duquesne, wherefore Pisquetomen said he was glad, and expressed, "If I can come to our towns before the General begins the attack, I know our people will draw back and leave the French." We lodged this night at Stoney Creek.

7th. We rose early and made all the haste we could on our journey; we crossed the large creek, Rekempalin, near Laurel hill. Upon this hill we overtook the artillery, and came, before sunset, to Loyal Hanning. We were gladly received in camp by the General and most of the people. We made our fire near the other Indian camps, which pleased our people. Soon after some of the officers came, and spoke very rashly to our Indians in respect to their conduct to our people, at which they were much displeased, and answered as rashly, and said, "they did not understand such usage, for they were come upon a message of peace. If we had a mind to war, they knew how to help themselves, and that they were not afraid of us."

8th. At eleven o'clock the general called the Indians together, the Cherokees and Catawbas being present. He spoke to them in a kind and loving manner, and bid them heartily welcome to his camp, and expressed his joy to see them, and desired them to give his compliments to all their kings and captains. He desired them that had any love for the English nation, to withdraw from the French, for if he should find them among the French, he must treat them as enemies, as he should advance with a large army very soon, and cannot wait longer on account of the winter season. After that, he drank the King's health, and all that wish well to the English nation. Then he drank King Beaver's, Shingas', and all the warrior's healths, and recommended us (the messengers) to their care, and desired them to give credit to what we should say. After that we went to another house with the General alone, and showed them the belt, and said he would furnish them with a writing for both the belt and string; and after a little discourse more, our Indians parted in love and well satisfied. And we made all necessary preparation for our journey.

9th. Some of the Colonels and chief commanders wondered how I came through so many difficulties, and how I could rule and bring these people to reason, making no use of gun or sword. I told them, it is done by no other means than by faith. Then they asked me if I had faith to venture myself to come safe through with my companions. I told them it was in my heart to pray for them, "you know that the Lord has given many promises to his servants, and what he promises, you may depend upon, he will perform." Then he wished us good success. We waited till almost noon for the writing of the General. We were escorted by a hundred men, rank and file, commanded by Captain Haselet; we passed through a tract of good land, about six miles on the old trading path, and came to the creek again, where there is a large fine bottom, well timbered; from thence we came upon a hill, to an advanced breast work, about ten miles from the camp, well situated for strength, facing a small branch of the aforesaid creek; the hill is steep down, perpendicular about twenty feet, on the south side; which is a great defense; and on the west side the breast work, about seven feet high, where we encamped that night. Our Indian companions heard that we were to part in the morning, and that twelve men were to be sent with us, and the others, part of the company, to go towards Fort Duquesne. Our Indians desired that the Captain would send twenty men instead of twelve; that if any accident should happen they could be more able to defend themselves in returning back, "for we know, say they, the enemy will follow the smallest party." It began to rain. Within five miles from the breast work we departed from Captain Haselet, he kept the old trading path to the Ohio. Lieutenant Hays was ordered to accompany us to the Allegheny river with fourteen men. We went the path that leads along the Loyal Hanning creek, where there is a rich fine bottom, land well timbered, good springs and small creeks. At four o'clock we were alarmed by three men in Indian dress, and preparation was made on both sides for defense. Isaac still showed a white token, and Pisquetomen gave an Indian halloo; after which they threw down their bundles and ran away as fast as they could. We afterwards took up their bundles and found that it was a small party of our men that had been long out. We were sorry that we had scared them, for they lost their bundles with all their food. Then I held a conference with our Indians, and asked them if it would not be good to send one of our Indians to Logstown and Fort Duquesne and call the Indians from thence before we arrive at Kushkushking. They all agreed it would not be good, as they were but messengers, it must be done by their chief men. The wolves made a terrible noise this night.

11th. We started early, and came to the old Shawnese town called Keckkeknepolin, grown up thick with weeds, briars and bushes, that we scarcely could get through. Pisquetomen led us upon a steep hill that our horses could scarcely get up, and Thomas Hickman's horse tumbled and rolled down the hill like a wheel, on which he grew angry and would go no further with us, and said he would go by himself. It happened we found a path on the top of the hill. At three o'clock we came to Kiskemeneco,* an old Indian town, a rich bottom, well timbered, good, fine English grass, well watered, and lays waste since the war began. We let our horses feed here, and agreed that Lieutenant Hays might go back with his party, and as they were short of provisions, we, therefore, gave them a little of ours, which they took very kindly of us. Thomas Hickman could find no other road, and came to us again a little ashamed. We were glad to see him, and we went about three miles farther, where we made a large fire. Here the Indians looked over their presents and grumbled at me. They thought if they had gone the other way — by Shamokin — They would have got more. Captain Bull spoke in their favor against me. Then I said to them: "I am ashamed to see you grumble about presents; I thought you were sent to establish peace." Though I confess I was not pleased that the Indians were so slightly fitted out from Easton, as the General had nothing to give them, in the critical circumstances he was in, fit for their purpose.

12th. Early in the morning I spoke to the Indians of my company: "Brethren, you have now passed through the heart of the country, back and forward; likewise through the midst of the army, without any difficuly or danger; you have seen and heard a great deal. When I was among you at Allegheny you told me that I should not regard what the common people would say, but only hearken to the chief; I should take no bad stories along. I did accordingly; and when I left Allegheny I dropped all evil reports, and only carried the agreeable news, which was pleasing to all that heard it. Now, brethren, I beg of you to do the same, and to drop all evil reports which you may have heard of bad people, and only to observe and keep what you have heard of our rulers and the wise people, so that all your young men, women and children may rejoice at our coming to them, and may have the benefit of it."

*Opposite the present site of Saltsburg.

They took it very kindly. After a while they spoke in the following manner to us, and said: "Brethren, when you come to Kushkushking you must not mind the prisoners, and have nothing to do with them. Mr. Post, when he was first there, listened too much to the prisoners; the Indians were almost mad with him for it and would have confined him for it, for they said he had wrote something of them."

As we were hunting for our horses, we found Thomas Hickman's horse dead which rolled, yesterday, down the hill. At one o'clock we came to the Allegheny, to an old Shawanee town, situated under a high hill on the east, opposite an island of about one hundred acres, very rich land well timbered. We looked for a place to cross the river, but in vain. We then went smartly to work and made a raft, we cut the wood and carried it to the water side. The wolves and owls made a great noise in the night.

13th. We got up early and boiled some chocolate for breakfast, and then began to finish our rafts. We clothed ourselves as well as we could in Indian dress. It was about two o'clock in the afternoon before we all got over to the other side near an old Indian town. The Indians told us we should not call Mr. Bull, Captain, their young men would be mad that we brought a warrior there. We went up a steep hill, good land, to the creek Cowewanick where we made our fire. They wanted to hunt for meat and look for a road. Captain Bull shot a squirrel and broke his gun. I cut fire wood and boiled some chocolate for supper. The others came home and brought nothing. Pisquetomen wanted to hear the writing from the General, which we read to them to their great satisfaction. This was the first night we slept in the open air. Mr. Bull took the tent along with him. We discoursed a good deal of the night together.

14th. We rose early and thought to make good progress on our way. At one o'clock Thomas Hickman shot a large buck, and as our people were hungry for meat, we made our camp there and called it the Water Buck run. In the evening we heard the great guns fired from Fort Duquesne. Whenever I looked towards that place I felt a dismal impression, the very place seemed shocking and dark. Pisquetomen looked his things over and found a white belt, sent by the commissioners of trade for the Indian affairs. We could find no writing concerning the belt, and did not know what was the significations thereof. They seemed much concerned to know it.

15th. We arose early and had a good day's journey. We passed these two days through thick bushes of briers and thorns, so that it was very difficult to get through. We crossed the creek Paquakonink; the land is very indifferent. At twelve o'clock we crossed the road from Venango to Fort Duquesne. We went west towards Kushkushking, about fifteen miles from the fort. We went over a large barren plain and made our lodging by a little run. Pisqueetomen told us we must send a messenger to let them know of our coming, as the French live amongst them. He desired a string of wampum; I gave him three hundred and fifty. We concluded to go within three miles of Kushkushking to their sugar cabins, and to call their chiefs there. In discourse, Mr. Bull told the Indians they should let all the prisoners stay amongst them that liked to stay.

16th. We met two Indians on the road and sat down with them to dinner. They informed us that nobody was at home, at Kushkushking; that one hundred and sixty from that town were gone to war against our party. We crossed the above mentioned creek; good land, but hilly. We went down a long valley to Beaver Creek, through old Kushkushking, a large spot of land about three miles long. They both went with us to the town. One of them rode before us to let the people in the town know of our coming. We found there but two men and some women. Those that were home received us kindly. Pisquetomen desired us to read the message to them that were there.

17th. There were five Frenchmen in the town, the rest were gone to war. We held a council with Delaware George, delivered him the string and presents that were sent to him and informed him of the General's sentiments and what he desired of them, upon which he agreed and complied to go with Mr. Bull to the General. Towards night Keckkenepalin came home from the war, and told us the disagreeable news that they had fallen in with that party that had guided us. They had killed Lieutenant Hays, and four more and took five prisoners, the others got clear off. They had a skirmish with them within twelve miles of Fort Duquesne. Further he told us that one of the captives was to be burnt, which grieved us. By the prisoners they were informed of my arrival, on which they concluded to leave the French and to hear what news we brought them. In the evening they brought a prisoner to town. We called the Indians together that were at home, and explained the matter to them and told them as their own people had desired the General to give them a guide to conduct them safe home, and by a misfortune, your people have fallen in with this party, and killed five and taken five prisoners, and we are now informed that one of them is to be burnt. "Consider, my brethren, if you should give us a guide to bring us safe on our way home, and our parties should fall in with you how hard you would take it."

They said, "Brother, it is a hard matter, and we are sorry it hath happened so." I answered, "Let us, therefore, spare no pains to relieve them from any cruelty." We could scarce find a messenger that would undertake to go to Sawkung, where the prisoner was to be burnt. We promised to one named Compass, five hundred black wampum, and Mr. Hays gave him a shirt and a dollar, on which he promised to go. We sent him as a messenger. By a string of wampum I spoke these words: "Brethren, consider the messengers are come home with good news, and three of your brethren, the English, with them. We desire you would pity your own young men, women and children, and use no hardships towards the captives, as having been guiding our party."

Afterwards the warriors informed us that their design had not been to go to war, but that they had a mind to go to the General and speak with him, and on the road the French made a division among them, that they could not agree, after which they were discovered by the Cherokees and Catawbas, who fled, and left their bundles, where they found an English color. So Kekeuscung told them he would go before them to the General if they would follow him, but they would not agree to it, and the French persuaded them to fall upon the English at Loyalhanning. They accordingly did, and as they were driven back they fell in with that party that guided us, which they did not know. They seemed very sorry for it.

18th. Captain Bull acted as commander without letting us know anything or communicating with us. He and George relieved a prisoner from the warriors, by what means I do not know. When the warriors were met, he then called us first to sit down, and to hear what they had to say. The Indian that delivered the prisoner to Bull and George, spoke as follows:

"My brethren, the English are at such a distance from us, as if they were under ground, that I cannot hear them. I am very glad to hear from you such good news; and I am very sorry that it happened so that I went to war. Now, I let the General know he should consider his young men, and if you should have any of us, to set them at liberty, so as we do to you."

Then Pisquetomen said:

"As the Governor gave these three men into my bosom, so I now likewise, by this string of wampum, give Bull into Delaware George's bosom, to bring him safe to the General."

Mr. Bull sat down with the prisoner, who gave him some intelligence in writing, at which the Indians grew very jealous, and asked them what they had to write there? I wrote a letter to the General by Mr. Bull. In the afternoon Mr. Bull, Delaware George and Keskenepolin set out for the camp. Towards night they brought in another prisoner. When Mr. Bull and company were gone, the Indians took the same prisoner, whom Bull had relieved, and bound him and carried him to another town, without our knowledge. I a thousand times wished Mr. Bull had never meddled in the affair, fearing they would exceedingly punish and bring the prisoner to a confession of the contents of the writing.

19th. A great many of the warriors came home. The French had infused bad notions into the Indians by means of the letters they found upon Lieutenant Hays, who was killed, which they falsely interpreted to them, viz: That in one letter it was wrote that the General should do all that was in his power to conquer the French, and in the meantime the messengers to the Indians should do their utmost to draw the Indians back, and keep thom together in conferences till he, the General, had made a conquest of the French, and afterwards he should fall upon all Indians and destroy them; and that, if we should lose our lives, the English would carry on the war so long as an Indian or Frenchman was alive. Thereupon the French said to the Indians:

"Now you can see, my children, how the English want to deceive you, and if it would not offend you, I would go and knock these messengers on the head before you should be deceived by them." One of the Indian captains spoke to the French and said: "To be sure it would offend us, if you should offer to knock them on the head. If you have a mind to go to war, go to the English army, and knock them on the head, and not these three men that come with a message to us."

After this speech, the Indians went off and left the French. Nevertheless, it had enraged some of the young people, and made them suspicious, so that it was a precarious time for us. I said: "Brethren, have good courage, and be strong; let not every wind disturb your mind; let the French bring the letter here; for, as you cannot read, they may tell you thousands of false stories. We will read the letter to you. As Isaac Still can read, he will tell you the truth."

After this all the young men were gathered together, Isaac Still being in company. The young men said: "One that had but half an eye could see that the English only intended to cheat them, and that it was best to knock every one of us messengers on the head."

Then Isaac began to speak, and said: "I am ashamed to hear such talking from you; you are but boys like me; you should not talk of such a thing. There have been thirteen nations at Easton, where they established a firm peace with the English, and I have heard that the Five Nations were always called the wisest. Go tell them they are fools, and cannot see; and tell them that you are kings and wise men. Go and tell the Cayuga chiefs so, that are here, and you will become great men." Afterwards they were all still, and said not one word more.

20th. There came a great many more together in the town, and brought Henry Osten, the sergeant, who was to have been burnt. They hallooed the war-halloo, and the men and women beat him 'till he came into the house. It is a grievous and melancholy sight to see our fellow mortals so abused. Isaac Still had a long discourse with the French captain, who made himself great, by telling how he had fought the English at Loyal Hanning. Isaac rallied him, and said he had seen them scalp horses, and take others for food. The first he denied, but the second he owned. Isaac ran the captain quite down before them all. The French captain spoke with the two Cayugas; at least the Cayugas spoke very sharp to him, so that he grew pale, and was quite silent.

These three days past was a precarious time for us. We were warned not to go far from the house, because the people who came from the slaughter, having been driven back, were possessed with a murdering spirit; which led them as in a halter, in which they were catched, and with bloody vengeance was thirsty and drunk. This afforded a melancholy prospect. Isaac Still was himself dubious of our lives. We did not let Mr. Hayes know of the danger. I said: "As God hath stopped the mouth of lions, that they could not devour Daniel, so He will preserve us from their fury and bring us through." I had a discourse with Mr. Hayes concerning our message, and begged him that he would pray to God for grace and wisdom, that He would grant us peace among this people. We will remain in stillness, and not look to our own credit. We are in the service of our king and country. This people are rebellious in heart; now we are here to reconcile them again to the General, Governor, and the English nation; to turn them again from their errors. And I wished that God would grant us his grace, whereby we may do it, which I hope and believe He will do." Mr. Hays took it to heart and was convinced of all, which much rejoiced me. I begged Isaac Still to watch over himself, and not to be discouraged, for I hoped the storm would soon pass by.

In the afternoon all the captains gathered together in the middle town. They sent for us and desired that we should give them information of our message. Accordingly we did. We read the message with great satisfaction to them. It was a great pleasure both to them and us. The number of captains and counsellors were sixteen. In the evening messengers arrived from Fort Duquesne with a string of wampum from the commander, upon which they all came together in the house where we lodged. The messengers delivered their string with these words from their father, the French king:

"My children, come to me, and hear what I have to say. The English are coming with an army to destroy both you and me. I therefore, desire you immediately, my children, to hasten with all the young men; we will drive the English and destroy them. I, as a father, will tell you always what is best." He laid the string before one of the captains. After a little conversation, the Captain stood up and said: "I have just heard something of our brethren, the English, which pleaseth me much better. I will not go. Give it to the others, may be they will go." The messenger again took up the string and said: "He wont go, he has heard of the English." Then all cried out, "Yes, yes, we have heard from the English." He then threw the string to the other fire place, where the other captains were; but they kicked it from one to another, as if it was a snake. Captain Peter took a stick, and with it flung the string from one end of the room to the other, and said: "Give it to the French Captain, and let him go with his young men; he boasted much of his fighting: now let us see his fighting. We have often ventured our lives for him; and had hardly a loaf of bread, when we came to him, and now he thinks we should jump to serve him." Then we saw the French captain mortified to the uttermost: he looked as pale as death. The Indians discoursed and joked till midnight, and the French captain sent messengers at midnight to Fort Duquesne.

21st. We were informed that the General was within twenty miles of Fort Duquesne. As the Indians were afraid the English would come over the river Ohio, I spoke with some of the captains, and told them that, "I supposed the General intended to surround the French, and therefore must come to this side of the river, but we assure you that he will not come to your town to hurt you." I begged them to let the Shawanese at Logstown, know it, and gave them four strings of 300 wampum, and with this message: "Brethren, we are arrived with good news, waiting for you; we desire you to be strong, and remember the ancient friendship your grandfathers had with the English. We wish you would remember it, and pity your young men, women and children, and keep away from the French; and if the English should come to surround the French, be not afraid. We assure you they wont hurt you."

22nd. Kittinskund came home, and sent for us, being very glad to see us. He informed us the General was within fifteen miles of the French fort; that the French had uncovered their houses, and laid the roofs round the fort to set it on fire, and made ready to go off, and would demolish the fort, and let the English have the bare ground, saying: "they are not able to build a strong fort this winter, and we will be early enough in the spring to destroy them. We will come with seventeen nations of Indians and a great many French, and build a stone fort."

The Indians danced round the fire till midnight for joy of their brethren, the English, coming. There went some scouting parties towards the army. Some of the Captains told me that Shamokin Daniel, who came with me in my former journey, had fairly sold me to the French, and the French had been very much displeased that the Indians had brought me away.

23d. The liar raised a story, as if the English were divided into three bodies, to come on this side of the river. They told us the Cayugas that came with us had said so. We told the Cayugas of it, on which they called the other Indians together, denied that they ever said so, and said they were sent to this place from the Five Nations to tell them to do their best endeavors to send the French off from this country; and when that was done they would go and tell the General to go back over the mountain.

I see the Indians concern themselves very much about the affair of land, and are continually jealous and afraid the English will take their land. I told them to be still and content themselves, "for there are some chiefs of the Five Nations with the army—they will settle the affair, as they are the chief owners of the land, and it will be well for you to come and speak with the General yourselves."

Isaac Still asked the French captain whether it was true that Daniel had sold me to the French? He owned it and said I was theirs, they had bought me fairly, and if the Indians would give them leave, he would take me.

24th. We hanged out the English flag in spite of the French, on which our prisoners folded their hands in hopes that their redemption was nigh, looking up to God, which melted my heart in tears and prayers to God to hear their prayers and change the times and the situation which our prisoners are in, and under which they groan. "O Lord," said they, "when will our redemption come, that we shall be delivered and return home?" And if any accident happeneth which the Indians dislike, the prisoners all tremble with fear, saying "Lord, what will become of us, and what will be the end of our lives?" So that they often wish themselves rather under the ground than in this life. King Beaver came home and called us to his house and saluted us in a friendly manner, which we in like manner did to him. Afterwards I spoke by four strings of 350 wampum, and said as followeth:

"I have a salutation to you and all your people from the General, the Governor and many other gentlemen. Brother, it pleases me that the day is come to see you and your people. We have warmed ourselves by your fire, and waited for you, and thank you that you did come home. We have good news of great importance, which we hope will make you and all your people's hearts glad. By these strings I desire you would be pleased to call all your kings and captains, from all the towns and nations, so that they all may hear us, and have the benefit thereof, while they live and their children after them."

Then he said, "As soon as I heard of your coming, I rose up directly to come to you." Then there came another message, which called me to another place where six kings of six nations were met together. I sent them word they should sit together a while and smoke their pipes, and I would come to them. King Beaver said further:

"Brother: It pleaseth me to hear that you brought such good news, and my heart rejoices already at what you said to me. It rejoices me that I have now heard of you." I said, "Brother: You did well that you first came here before you went to the kings, as the good news we brought is to all nations, from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, that want to be in peace and friendship with the English. So it will give them satisfaction when they hear it." The French Captain told us that they would demolish the fort, and he thought the English would be to-day at the place.

25th. Shingas came home and saluted us in a friendly manner, and so did Beaver, in our house, and then they told us they would hear our message, and we perceived that the French captain had an inclination to hear it. We called Beaver and Shingas, and informed them that all the nations at Easton, had agreed with the Governor, that everything should be kept secret from the ears and eyes of the French. He said: "It was no matter, they were beaten already. It is good news, and if he would say anything, we would tell him what friendship we have together." Accordingly they met together, and the French Captain was present. The number consisted of about fifty.

King Beaver first spoke to his men: "Hearken all you captains and warriors—here are our brethren, the English; I wish that you may give attention, and take notice of what they say. As it is for our good, that there may an everlasting peace be established; although there is a great deal of mischief done, if it pleaseth God to help us, we may live in peace again."

Then I began to speak by four strings to them, and said:

"Brethren: Being come here to see you, I perceive your bodies are all stained with blood, and observe tears and sorrow in your eyes. With this string, I clean your body from blood, and wipe and annoint your eyes with the healing oil, so that you may see your brethren clearly. And as so many storms have blown since we last saw one another, and we are at such a distance from you that you could not rightly hear us as yet; I, by this string, take a soft feather, and, with that good oil, our grandfathers used, open and clear your ears, so that you may both hear and understand what your brethren have to say to you. And by these strings I clear your throat from the dust, and take all the bitterness out of your heart, and clear the passage from the heart to the throat, that you may speak freely with your brethren, the English, from the heart."

Then Isaac Still gave the pipe, sent by the Friends,* filled with tobacco, and handed round after their custom, and said:

"Brethren: Here is the pipe which your grandfathers used to smoke with when they met together in councils of peace, and here is some of that good tobacco, prepared for our grandfathers, from God. When you shall taste of it, you shall feel it through all your body, and it will put you in remembrance of the good councils your grandfathers used to hold with the English, your brethren, and that ancient friendship they had together."

King Beaver rose and thanked us first, that we had cleaned his body from the blood and wiped the tears and sorrow from his eyes and opened his ears, so that now he could well hear and understand. Likewise he returned thanks for the pipe and

* The Quakers of Philadelphia, who first set on foot these negotiations of peace, and for whom the Indians have always had a great regard.

tobacco that we brought which our grandfathers used to smoke. He said, "when I tasted that good tobacco, I felt it all through my body, and it made me all over well."

Then we delivered the messages as followeth:

GOVERNOR DENNY'S ANSWER TO THE MESSAGE OF THE OHIO INDIANS, BROUGHT BY FREDERICK POST, PISQUETOMEN AND THOMAS HICKMAN.

"By this string, my Indian brethren of the United Nations and Delawares, join with me in requiring of the Indian councils, to which these following messages shall be presented to keep everything private from the eyes and ears of the French." A string.

"Brethren: We received your message by Pisquetomen and Frederick Post, and thank you for the care you have taken of our messenger of peace, and that you have put him in your bosom and protected him against our enemy Onontio, and his children and sent him safe back to our council fire by the same man that received him from us." A string.

"Brethren: I only sent Post to peep into your cabins, and to know the sentiments of your old men and to look at your faces, to see how you look. And I am glad to hear from him that you look friendly; and that there still remain some sparks of love toward us. It is what we believed before hand, and therefore we never let slip the chain of friendship, but held it fast on our side, and it has never dropped out of our hands. By this belt we desire that you will dig up your end of the chain of friendship that you suffered by the subtlety of the French to be buried." A belt.

"Brethren: It happened that the Governor of Jersey was with me, and a great many Indian brethren sitting in council at Easton when your messengers arrived, and it gave pleasure to every one that heard it, and it will afford the same satisfaction to our neighboring Governors and their people, when they come to hear it. I shall send messengers to them and acquaint them with what you have said.

"Your requesting us to let the King of England know your good dispositions, we took to heart and shall let him know it, and we will speak in your favor to his Majesty, who has for some time past looked upon you as his lost children. And we can assure you, that as a tender father over all his children, he will forgive you for what is past and receive you again into his arms." A belt.

"Brethren: If you are in earnest to be reconciled to us, you will keep your young men from attacking our country and killing and carrying captive our back inhabitants. And will likewise give orders that your people may be kept at a distance from Fort Duquesne, that they may not be hurt by our warriors, who are sent by our King to chastise the French and not to hurt you. Consider the commanding officer of that army treads heavy and would be very sorry to hurt any of his Indian brethren." A large belt.

"And brethren: The chiefs of the United Nations, with their cousins, our brethren, the Delawares, and others now here, jointly with me send this belt, which has upon it two figures that represent all the English and all the Indians now present taking hands, and delivering it to Pisquetomen; and we desire it may be likewise sent to the Indians who are named at the end of these messages,* as they have all been formerly our very good friends and allies; and we desire they will go from among the French to their own towns, and no longer help the French."

"Brethren on the Ohio: If you take the belts we just now gave you, in which all here join, English and Indians, as we do not doubt you will, then, by this belt, I make a road for you and invite you to come to Philadelphia to your first old council fire, which was kindled when we first saw one another; which fire we will kindle up again, and remove all disputes, and renew the old and first treaties of friendship. This is a clear and open road for you; fear, therefore, nothing, and come to us with as many as can be of the Delawares, Shawanese, or of the Six Nations. We will be glad to see you; we desire all tribes and nations of Indians, who are in alliance with you, may come. As soon as we hear of your coming, of which you will give us timely notice, we will lay up provisions for you along the road."

A large white belt, with the figure of a man at each end, and streaks of black representing the road from the Ohio to Philadelphia.

"Brethren: The Six Nation and Delaware Chiefs join with me in those belts, which are tied together to signify our union and friendship for each other; with them we jointly take the towahawks out of your hands and bury them under ground.

"We speak aloud, so as you may hear us; you see we all stand together hand in hand." Two belts tied together.

General Forbes to the Shawanese and Delawares, on the Ohio:

BRETHREN: I embrace this opportunity by our brother, Pisquetomen, who is now on his return home with some of your uncles of the Six Nations from the treaty of Easton, of giving you joy of the happy conclusion of that great council, which is perfectly agreeable to me; as it is for the mutual advantage of our brethren, the Indians, as well as the English nation.

"I am glad to find that all past disputes and animosities are now finally settled and amicably adjusted, and I hope they will be forever buried in oblivion, and that you will now again be firmly united in the interest of your brethren, the English.

"As I am now advancing at the head of a large army against his Majesty's enemies, the French, on the Ohio. I must strongly recommend to you to send immediate notice to any of your people who may be at the French fort, to return forthwith to your towns, where you may sit by your fires with your wives and children, quiet and undisturbed, and smoke your pipes in safety. Let the French fight their own battles as they were the first cause of the war and the occasion of the long difference which hath existed between you and your brethren, the English; but I must entreat you to restrain your young men from crossing the Ohio, as it will be impossible for me to distinguish them from our enemies, which I expect you will comply with without delay, lest by your neglect thereof, I should be the innocent cause of some of our brethren's death. This advice take and keep in your own breasts and suffer it not to reach the ears of the French.

"As a proof of the truth and sincerity of what I say, and to confirm the tender regard I have for the lives and welfare of our brethren on the Ohio, I send you this string of wampum.

"I am, brethren and warriors, your friend and brother,

"JOHN FORBES."

"Brethren, Kings Beaver and Shingas, and all the warriors who join with you:

"The many acts of hostility committed by the French against the British subjects, made it necessary for the king to take up arms in their defence, and to redress their wrongs which have been done them. Heaven hath favored the justice of the cause and given success to his fleets and armies in different parts of the world. I have received his commands with regard to what is to be done on the Ohio, and shall endeavor to act like a soldier by driving the French from thence or destroying them.

"It is a particular pleasure to me to learn that the Indians, who inhabit near that river, have lately concluded a treaty of peace with the English, by which the ancient friendship is renewed with their brethren and fixed on a firmer foundation than ever. May it be lasting and unmovable as the mountains. I make no doubt but it gives you equal satisfaction and that you will unite your endeavors with mine, and all the Governors of these provinces to strengthen it. The clouds that for some time hung over the English and their friends, the Indians on the Ohio, and kept them both in darkness are now dispersed and the cheerful light now again shines upon us and warms both. May it continue to do so while the sun and moon give light.

*Sastaghretsy, Anigh Kalicken, Atowateany, Towigh, Towighroano, Geghdageghroano, Oyaghtanont, Sifaghroano, Stiageghroano, Jonontadynago."

"Your people, who were sent to us, were received by us with open arms; they were kindly entertained while they were here, and I have taken care that they shall return safe to you. With them come trusty messengers whom I earnestly recommend to your protection. They have several matters in charge, and I desire you may give credit to what they say. In particular, they have a large belt of wampum, and by this belt we let you know that it is agreed by me and all the Governors that there shall be an everlasting peace with all the Indians, established as sure as the mountains between the English nation and the Indians all over, from the sun-rising to the sun-setting; and as your influence on them is great, so you will make it known to all the different nations that want to be in friendship with the English; and I hope by your means and persuasions, many will lay hold on this belt and immediately withdraw from the French. This will be greatly to their own interest and your honor, and I shall not fail to acquaint the great King of it. I sincerely wish it for their good, for it will fill me with concern to find any of you joined with the French, as in that case you must be sensible I must treat them as enemies. However, I once more repeat that there is no time to be lost, for I intend to march with the army very soon, and I hope to enjoy the pleasure of thanking you for your zeal, and of entertaining you in the fort ere long. In the meantime I wish happiness and prosperity to you, your women and children.

"I write to you as a warrior should, that is, with candor and love, and I recommend secrecy and dispatch.

"I am, Kings Beaver and Shingas, and brother warriors.

"Your assured friend and brother,

"JOHN FORBES.

"FROM MY CAMP AT LOYALHANNON, Nov. 9, 1758."

The message pleased and gave satisfaction to all the hearers except the French captain. He shook his head with bitter grief, and often changed his countenance. Isaac Still ran down the French Captain with great boldness, and pointed at him, saying, "There he sits." Afterwards Shingas rose up and said:

"Brethren. Now we have rightly heard and understood you. It pleaseth me and all the young men that hear it. We shall think of it and take it into due consideration, and when we have considered it well, then we will give you an answer, and send it to all the towns and nations as you desired us.

We thanked them and wished them good success in their undertaking, and wished it might have the same effect upon all other nations that may hereafter hear it as it had on them. We went a little out of the house. In the meantime Isaac Still demanded the letter which the French had falsely interpreted, that it might be read in public. Then they called us back, and I, Frederick Post, found it was my own letter, I had wrote to the General. I therefore stood up and read it, which Isaac interpreted. The Indians were well pleased, and took it as if it was written to them. Thereupon they all said. "We always thought the French report of the letter was a lie. They always deceived us," pointing at the French Captain, who, bowing down his head, turned quite pale, and could look no one in the face. All the Indians began to mock and laugh at him. He could hold it no longer, and went out. Then the Cayaga Chief delivered a string in the name of the Six Nations, with these words:

"Cousins, hear what I have to say; I see you are sorry, and the tears stand in your eyes. I would open your ears, and clear your eyes from tears, so that you may see, and hear what your uncles, the six nations have to say. We have established a friendship with your brethren, the English. We see that you are all over bloody, on your body; I clean the heart from the dust, and your eyes from the tears, and your bodies from the blood, that you may hear and see your brethren, the English, and appear clean before them, and that you may speak from the heart with them."

Delivered four strings.

Then he showed to them a string from the Cherokees, with these words:

"Nephews, we let you know, that we are exceeding glad that there is such a firm friendship established on so good a foundation with so many nations, that it will last forever; and as the Six Nations have agreed with the English, so we wish that you may lay hold of the same friendship. We will remind you that we were formerly good friends. Likewise we let you know that the Six Nations gave us a tomahawk, and if any body offended us, we should strike him with it; likewise, they gave us a knife to take off the scalp. So we let you know that we are desirous to hear very soon from you what you determine. It may be, we shall use the hatchet very soon, therefore, I long to hear from you."

Then the council broke up. After a little while, messengers arrived, and Beaver came into our house, and gave us the pleasure to hear that the English had the field, and that the French had demolished and burnt the place entirely, and went off; that the Commander has gone with two hundred men to Venango, and the rest has gone down the river in batteaux, to the lower Shawanese town, with the intention of building a fort there. They were seen yesterday, passing by Sawkung.

We ended this day with pleasure, and great satisfaction on both sides. The Cayuga chief said, he would speak further to them to-morrow.

26th. We met together about 10 o'clock. First—King Beaver addressed himself to the Cayuga chief, and said:

"My uncles, as it is customary to answer one another, so I thank you, that you took so much notice of your cousins, and that you have wiped the tears from our eyes, and cleaned our bodies from the blood. When you spoke to me, I saw myself all over bloody, and since you cleaned me, I feel myself quite pleasant through my whole body, and I can see the sun shine clear over us."

Delivered four strings.

He said further, "As you took so much pains, and came a great way through the bushes, I, by this string, clean you from the sweat, and clean the dust out of your throat, so that you may speak what you have to say from your brethren, the English, and our uncles, the Six Nations, to your cousins, I am ready to hear."

Then Petiniontonka, the Cayuga chief, took the belt with eight diamonds, and said:

"Cousins, take notice of what I have to say; we let you know what agreement we have made with our brethren, the English. We had almost slipped and dropped the chain of friendship with our brethren, the English; now we let you know that we have renewed the peace and friendship with our brethren, the English; and we have made a new agreement with them. We see that you have dropped the peace and friendship with them. We desire you would lay hold of the covenant we have made with our brethren, the English, and be strong. We likewise take the tomahawk out of your hands, that you received from the white people; use it no longer, fling the tomahawk away, it is the white people's, let them use it among themselves; it is theirs, and they are of one color; let them fight with one another, and do you be still and quiet in Kushkushking. Let our grand-children, the Shawanese, likewise know of the covenant we established with our friends the English, and also let all other nations know it."

Then he explained to them the eight diamonds on the belt, signifying the five united nations, and the three younger nations which join them; these all united with the English. Then he proceeded thus:

"Brethren, (delivering a belt with eight diamonds, the second belt,) we hear that you did not sit right; and when I came I found you in a moving posture, ready to jump towards the sunset; so we will set you at ease, and quietly down, that you may sit well at Kushkushking; and we desire you to be strong; and if you will be strong, your women and children will see from day to day, the light shining more over them; and our children and grandchildren will see that there will be an everlasting peace established. We desire you to be still; we do not know as yet, what to do; towards the spring you shall hear from your uncles what they conclude; in the meantime, do you sit still by your fire at Kushkushking."

In the evening the devil made a general disturbance to hinder them in their good dispositions. It was reported they saw three Catawba Indians in their town, and they roved about all that cold night in great fear and confusion. When I consider with what tyranny and power the prince of the world rules over this people, it breaks my heart over them; and I wish that God would have mercy upon them, and that their redemption may draw nigh and open their eyes that they may see what bondage they are in, and deliver them from the evil.

27th. We waited all the day for an answer. Beaver came out and told us "they were busy all the day long." He said, "It is a great matter and wants much consideration. We are three tribes which must separately agree among themselves; it takes time before we hear each agreement, and the particulars thereof." He desired us to read our message once more to them in private; we told them we were at their service at any time, and then we explained him the whole again. There arrived a messenger from Sawkung and informed us that four of their people were gone to our camp to see what the English were about, and that one of them climbing upon a tree was discovered by falling down, and then our people spoke to them; three resolved to go to the other side and one came back and brought the news, which pleased the company. Some of the captains and counsellors were together; they said that the French would build a strong fort at the lower Shawanese town. I answered them: "Brethren, if you suffer the French to build a fort there, you must suffer likewise the English to come and destroy the place; the English will follow the French and pursue them, let it cost whatever it will, and wherever the French settle the English will follow and destroy them."

They said, "we think the same, and would endeavor to prevent it if the English only would go back after having drove away the French and not settle there." I said, "I can tell you no certainty in this affair; it is the best for you to go with us to the general and speak with him. So much I know, that they only want to establish a trade with you, and you know yourselves that you cannot do without being supplied with such goods as you stand in need of; but, brethren, be assured you must entirely quit the French and have no communication with them, else they will always breed disturbance and confusion amongst you, and persuade your young people to go to war against our brethren, the English."

I spoke to them further about Venango, and said, "I believed the English would go there if they suffered the French longer to live there." This speech had much influence on them and they said, "we are convinced of all that you have said, it will be so." I found them inclined to send off the French from Venango, but they wanted first to know the disposition of the English, and not to suffer the French to build anywhere.

28th. King Beaver arose early before the break of day and bid all his people a good morning, desired them to rise early and prepare victuals, for they had to answer their brethren, the English, and their uncles, and therefore they should be in a good humor and disposition. At ten o'clock they met together. Beaver addressed himself to his people, and said:

"Take notice all you young men and warriors to what we answer now: It is three days since we heard our brethren, the English, and our uncles; and what we have heard of both is very good, and we are all much pleased with what we have heard. Our uncles have made an agreement, and peace is established with our brethren, the English, and they have shook hands with them; and we likewise agree in the peace and friendship they have established between them." Then he spoke to the French Captain Canaquais, and said:

"You may hear what I answer; it is good news that we have heard. I have not made myself a King. My uncles have made me like a queen, that I always should mind what is good and right, and whatever I agree with, they will assist me, and help me through. Since the warriors came amongst us, I could not follow that which is good and right, which has made me heavy; and since it is my duty to do that which is good, so I will endeavor to do and speak what is good, and not let myself be disturbed by the warriors."

Then he spoke to the Mingoes, and said: "My uncles hear me. It is two days since you told me that you have made peace and friendship, and shook hands with our brethren, the English. I am really very much pleased with what you told me, and I join you in the same; and as you said I should let the Shawanese and Delamattanoes know of the agreement you have made with our brethren, the English, I took it to heart, and shall let them know it very soon." He delivered a string.

"Look now, my uncles, and hear what your cousins say: You have spoke the day before yesterday to me. I have heard you. You told me you would set me at Kushkushking, easy down. I took it to heart, and I shall do so, and be still, and lay myself easy down, and keep my match-coat close to my breast. You told me you will let me know in the next spring what to do; so I will be still and wait to hear from you." Gave him a belt.

Then he turned himself to us and gave us the following answers. First to the General:

"Brother: By three strings, I would desire in a most kind and friendly manner, you would be pleased to hear me what I have to say, as you are not far off.

"Brother:—Now you told me you have heard of that good agreement that has been agreed to at the treaty of Easton, and that you have put your hands to it, to strengthen it, so that it may last forever. Brother, you have told me, that after you have come to hear it, you have taken it to heart, and then you sent it to me, and let me know it. Brother, I would desire you would be pleased to hear me, and I would tell you, in a most soft, loving and friendly manner, to go back over the mountains, and to stay there; for, if you will do that, I will use it for an argument, to argue with other nations of Indians. Now, brother, you have told me you have made a road clear, from the sun-set to our first old council fire at Philadelphia, and therefore I should fear nothing, and come into that road. Brother, after these far Indians shall come to hear of that good and wide road that you have laid out for us, then they will turn and look at the road, and see nothing in the way; and that is the reason that maketh me tell you to go back over the mountains again, and to stay there, for then the road will be clear, and nothing in the way."

Then he addressed himself to the Governor of Pennsylvania as follows:

"Brother: Give good attention to what I am going to say, for

I speak from my heart, and think nothing the less of it, though the strings be small.

Brother: I now tell you what I have heard from you is quite agreeable to my mind, and I love to hear you. I tell you likewise, that all the chief men of Allegheny are well pleased with what you have said to us, and all my young men, women and children that are able to understand, are well pleased with what you have said to me.

"Brother: You tell me that all the Governors of the several provinces have agreed to a well established and everlasting peace with the Indians; and you likewise tell me that my uncles, the Six Nations, and my brethren, the Delawares, and several other tribes of Indians join with you in it, to establish it, so that it may be everlasting. You likewise tell me you have all agreed on a treaty of peace to last forever, and for these reasons I tell you, I am pleased with what you have told me.

"Brother: I am heartily pleased to hear that you never let slip the chain of friendship out of your hands, which our grandfathers had between them, so that they could agree as brethren and friends in anything.

"Brother: As you have been pleased to let me know of that good and desirable agreement that you and my uncles and brethren have agreed to, at the treaty of peace. I now tell you I heartily join and agree in it, and to it. And now I desire you to go on steadily in that great and good work you have taken in hand, and I will do as you desire me to do, that is, to let the other tribes of Indians know it, and more especially my uncles, the Six Nations, and the Shawanese, my grand-children, and all other nations settled to the westward.

"Brother: I desire you not to be out of patience, as I have a great many friends at a great distance, and I shall use my best endeavors to let them know it as soon as possible, and as soon as I obtain their answer shall let you know it." Then he gave six strings, all white.

In the evening arrived a messenger from Sawkung, Netodwehement, and desired they should make all the haste to dispatch us, and we should come to Sawkung, for, as they did not know what become of those three that went out to our camp, they were afraid the English would keep them till they heard what was become of us, their messengers.

29th. Before daybreak Beaver and Shingas came and called us into their council. They had been all the night together. They said: "Brethren, now is the day coming you will set off from here. It is a good many days since we heard you, and what we have heard is very pleasing and agreeable to us. It rejoices all our hearts, and all our young men, women and children that are capable to understand, are really very well pleased with what they have heard. It is so agreeable to us that we never received such good news before. We think God has made it so. He pities us, and has mercy on us. And now, brethren, you desire that I should let it be known to all other nations, and I shall let them know very soon. Therefore, Shingas cannot go with you. He must go with me to help me in this great work, and I shall send nobody, but go myself, to make it known to all nations."

Then we thanked them for their care, and wished him good success on his journey and undertaking, and as this message had such a good effect on them, we hoped it would have the same on all other nations, when they came to hear it. I hoped that all the clouds would pass away and the cheerful light would shine over all nations; so I wished them good assistance and help on their journey. Further he said to us:

"Now we desire you to be strong, because I make it my strong argument with other nations. But as we have given credit to what you have said, hoping it is true, and we agree to it, if it should prove the contrary, it would make me so ashamed that I could never lift up my head and never undertake to speak any word more for the interest of the English."

I told them, "Brethren: You will remember that it was wrote to you by the General, that you might give credit to what we say; so I am glad to hear of you, that you give credit, and we assure you that what we have told you is the truth, and you will find it so."

They said further, "Brethren: We let you know that the French have used our people kindly in every respect; they have used them like gentlemen, especially those that live near them. So they have treated the chiefs. Now we desire you to be strong; we wish you would take the same method and use our people well, for the other Indians will look upon us and we do not otherwise know how to convince them, and to bring them into the English interest without your using such means as will convince them. For the French will still do more to keep them to their interest."

I told them I would take it to heart and inform the Governor and other gentlemen of it, and speak to them in their favor. Then they said, it is so far well and the road is cleared, but they thought we should send them another call when they may come. I told them we did not know when they would have agreed with the other nations. "Brothers, it is you who must give us the first notice when you can come; the sooner the better, and as soon as you send us word we will prepare for you on the road." After this we made ready for our journey.

Ketinshund, a noted Indian, one of the chief counsellors, told us in secret that all the nations had jointly agreed to defend their hunting place at Allegheny and suffer nobody to settle there, and as these Indians are very much inclined to the English interest, so he begged us very much to tell the Governor, General, and all other people not to settle there. And if the English would draw back over the mountain they would get all the other nations into their interest, but if they staid and settled there all the nations would be against them, and he was afraid it would be a great war and never come to a peace again.

I promised to inform the Governor, General and all other people of it, and repeated my former request to them, not to suffer any French to settle amongst them. After we had fetched our horses we went from Kushkushking and came at five o'clock to Sawkung in company with twenty Indians. When we came about half way, we met a messenger from Fort Duquesne with a belt from Thomasking inviting all the chiefs to Sawkung. We heard at the same time that Mr. Croghan and Henry Montour would be there to-day. The messenger was one of those three that went to our camp, and it seemed to rejoice all the company, for some of them were much troubled in their minds, fearing the English had kept them as prisoners or killed them. In the evening we arrived at Sawkung, on the Beaver creek. We were well received; the king provided for us. After a little while we visited Mr. Croghan and his company.

30th. In the morning the Indians of the town visited us. About eleven o'clock about forty came together when we read the message to them. Mr. Croghan, Henry Montour and Thomas King being present. They were all pleased with the message. In the evening we came together with the chiefs and explained the signification of the belts, which lasted till eleven o'clock at night.

December 1st. After hunting a great while for our horses, without finding them, we were obliged to give an Indian three hundred wampum for looking for them. We bought corn for four hundred and fifty wampum for our horses. The Indians met together to hear what Mr. Croghan had to say. Thomas King spoke by a belt, and invited them to come to the General, upon which they all resolved to go.

In the evening the captains and counsellors came together, I and Isaac still being present, they told us that they had formerly agreed not to give any credit to any message sent from the English by Indians; thinking if the English would have peace with them they would come themselves; so soon, therefore, as you came, it was as if the weather changed, and a great cloud passed away, and we could think again on our ancient friendship with our brethren, the English. We have thought since that time more on the English than ever before, although the French have done all in their power to prejudice our young men against the English. Since you now come the second time, we think it is God's work; he pities us that we should not all die, and if we should not accept of the peace offered to us, we think God would forsake us."

In discourse, they spoke about preaching, and said: "They wished many times to hear the word of God; but they were always afraid the English would take that opportunity to bring them into bondage." They invited me to come and live amongst them, since I had taken so much pains in bringing a peace about them and the English. I told them: "It might be that when the peace was firmly established, I would come to proclaim the peace and love of God to them."

In the evening arrived a message with a string of wampum to a noted Indian, Ketinscund, to come to Venango, to meet the Unami chief, Quitahicung, there; he said that a French Mohock had killed a Delaware Indian; and when he was asked why he did it, he said the French bade him do it.

2nd. Early before we set out, I gave three hundred wampum to the Cayugas to buy some corn for their horses; they agreed that I should go before to the General to acquaint him of their coming. The Beaver creek being very high, it was almost two o'clock in the afternoon before we came over the creek; this land seems to be very rich. I, with my companion, Ketinscund's son, came to Logstown, situated on a hill. At the east end is a great piece of lowland, where the old Logstown used to stand. In the new Logstown the French have built about thirty houses for the Indians. They have a large cornfield on the south side where the corn stands ungathered. Then we went further through a large tract of fine land, along the river side, and we came within eight miles of Pittsburg, where we lodged on a hill in the open air. It was a cold night, and I had forgot my blanket, being packed upon Mr. Hays' horse. Between Sawkung and Pittsburgh, all the Shawanese towns are empty of people.

3d. We started early and came to the river by Pittsburgh. We called that they should come over and fetch us, but their boats having gone adrift, they made a raft of black oak pallisadoes, which sunk as soon as it came into the water. We were very hungry and staid on that Island, where I had kept council with the Indians in the month of August last; for all I had nothing to live on. I thought myself a great deal better off now than at that time, having now liberty to walk upon the Island according to pleasure, and it seemed as if the dark clouds were dispersed.

While I waited here, I saw the General march off from Pittsburgh, which made me sorry that I could not have the pleasure of speaking with him. Towards evening our whole party arrived, upon which they fired from the fort twelve great guns, and our Indians saluted again three times round with their small arms. By accident some of the Indians found a small raft hid in the bushes, and Mr. Hays, coming last, went over first with two Indians. They sent us but a small allowance, so that it would not serve each round. I tied my belt a little closer, being very hungry and nothing to eat*. It snowed, and we were obliged to sleep without any shelter. In the evening they threw light balls from the fort, at which the Indians started, thinking they would fire at them, but seeing it was not aimed at them, they rejoiced to see them fly so high.

*As it often happens to the Indians on their long marches in war, and sometimes in their hunting expeditions, to be without victuals for several days, occasioned by bad weather and other accidents, they have this custom in such cases, which Post probably learned of them, viz.: girding their abdomens tightly when they have nothing to put in them; and they say it prevents the pain of hunger.

4th. We got up early and cleared a place from the snow, cut some fire wood and hallooed till we were tired. Towards noon Mr. Hays came with a raft and the Indian chiefs went over; he informed me of Colonel Bouquet's displeasure with the Indians' answer to the General, and his desire that they should alter their minds in insisting upon the General's going back, but the Indians had no inclination to alter their mind. In the afternoon some provisions was sent over, but a small allowance. When I came over to the fort the council with the Indians was at an end. I had a discourse with Colonel Bouquet about the affairs, disposition and resolution of the Indians.

I drew provision for our journey to Fort Ligonier, and baked bread for our whole company. Towards noon the Indians met together in a conference. First, King Beaver addressed himself to the Mohocks, desiring them to give their brethren an answer about settling at Pittsburgh. The Mohocks said "they lived at such a distance that they could not defend the English there if any accident should befal them, but your cousins, who live close here, must think what to do." Then Beaver said by string:

"What this messenger has brought is very agreeable to us, and as our uncles have made peace with you, the English and many other nations, so we likewise join and accept of the peace offered to us, and we have already answered by your messenger what we have to say to the General, that he should go back over the mountains; we have nothing to say to the contrary,"

Neither Mr. Croghan nor Andrew Montour would tell Colonel Bouquet the Indians' answer. Then Mr. Croghan, Colonel Armstrong and Colonel Bouquet went into the tent by themselves, and I went upon my business. What they have further agreed I do not know; but when they had done, I called King Beaver, Shingas and Kedenscund, and said:

"Brethren:—If you have any alteration to make in the answer to the General, concerning leaving this place, you will be pleased to let me know." They said they would alter nothing. "We have told them three times to leave the place and go back; but they insist upon stopping here. If therefore, they will be destroyed by the French and Indians, we cannot help them."

Colonel Bouquet set out for the Loyal Hannon. The Indians got some liquor between 10 and 11 o'clock. One Mohock died; the others fired guns three times over him. At the last firing, one had accidentally loaded his gun with a double charge. This gun burst to pieces and broke his hand clean off—he also got a hard knock on his breast; and in the morning at 9 o'clock, he died, and they buried them in that place, both in one hole.

6th. It was a cold morning. We swam our horses over the river, the ice running violently. Mr. Croghan told me that the Indians had spoke upon the same string that I had to Colonel Bouquet, and altered their minds, and had agreed and desired that two hundred men should stay at the Fort. I refused to make any alteration in the answer to the General, till I myself did hear it of the Indians; at which Mr. Croghan grew very angry. I told him I had already spoken with the Indians. He said it was a d—d lie, and desired Mr. Hays to enquire of the Indians and take down in writing what they said. Accordingly he called them, and asked them if they had altered their speech, or spoke to Colonel Bouquet on that string they gave me. Shingas and the other counsellor said they had spoken nothing to Col. Bouquet on the string they gave me, but what was agreed between the Indians at Kushkushking. They said Mr. Croghan and Henry Montour had not spoken and acted honestly and uprightly. They bid us not to alter the least, and said: "We have told them three times to go back, but they will not go, insisting upon staying here. Now you will let the Governor, General, and all people know, that our desire is, that they should go back till the other nations have joined in the peace, and then they may come and build a trading house."

They then repeated what they had said the 5th instant. Then we took leave of them, and promised to inform the General, Governor, and all other gentle people of their disposition; and so we set out from Pittsburgh, and came within fifteen miles of the breast work, where we encamped. It snowed, and we made a little cabin of hides.

7th. Our horses were fainting, having little or no food. We came that day about twenty miles, to another breast-work, where the whole army had encamped on a hill; the water being far to fetch.

8th. Between Pittsburgh and Fort Ligonier, the country is hilly, with rich bottoms, well timbered, but scantily watered. We arrived at Fort Lagonier in the afternoon, about 4 o'clock, where we found the General very sick, and therefore could have no opportunity to speak with him.

9th. We waited to see the General. They told us he would march the next day, and we should go with him. Captain Sinclair wrote us a return for the provisions for four days.

10th. The General was still sick, so that he could not go on the journey.

11th. We longed very much to go farther; and therefore spoke to Major Halket, and desired him to enquire of the General if he intended to speak with us, or, if we might go, as we were in a poor condition for want of linen, and other necessaries. He desired us to bring the Indians' answer, and our journal to the General. Mr. Hays read his journal to Major Halket and Gov. Glen. They took memoranda and went to the General.

12th. They told us we should surely stay till the General went.

14th. The General intended to go, but his horses could not be found. They thought the Indians had carried them off. They hunted all day for the the horses, but could not find them. I spoke to Col. Bouquet about our allowance being so small, that we could hardly subsist; and that we were without money, and desired him to let us have some money that we might buy necessaries. Provisions, and everything is exceedingly dear. One pound of bread cost a shilling, one pound of sugar four shillings, a quart of rum seven shillings and sixpence, and so in proportion. Col. Bouquet laid our matters before the General, who let me call, and excused himself, that his distemper had hindered him from speaking with me; and promised to help me in everything I should want, and ordered him to give me some money. He said further, that I often should call, and when he was alone he would speak with me.

16th. Mr. Hays, being hunting, was so lucky as to find the General's horses, and brought them home; for which the General was very thankful to him.

17th. Mr. Hays, being desired by Mayor Halket to go and look for the other horses, went, but found none.

18th. The General told me to hold myself ready, to go with him down the country.

20th. After we had been out two days to hunt for our horses, in the rain, we went again to-day, and were informed they had been seen in a lost condition; one lying on the hill, and the other standing; they had been hoppled together, but a person told us he had cut the hopples. When we came home we found the horses, they having made home to the Fort.

22d. It was cold and stormy weather.

23d. I hunted for our horses, and having found them, we gave them both to the King's commissary, they not being able to carry us further.

The sergeant, Henry Osten, being one of the company that guided us, as above mentioned, and was that same prisoner whom the Shawanese intended to burn alive, came to-day to the fort. He was much rejoiced to see us and said: "I thank you a thousand times for my deliverance from the fire, and think it not too much to be at your service my whole life time." He gave us intelligence that the Indians were, as yet, mighty for the English. His master had offered to set him at liberty, and bring him to Pittsburgh, if he would promise him ten gallons of rum, which he did, and he was brought safe to Pittsburgh. Delaware George is still faithful to the English, and was very helpful to procure his liberty. Isaac Still, Shingas and Beaver are gone with the message to the natives living further off. When the French had heard that the garrison at Pittsburgh, consisted only of 200 men, they resolved to go down from Venango, and destroy the English fort. So soon as the Indians at Kushkushking heard of their intention, they sent a message to the French desiring them to draw back, for they would have no war in their country. The friendly Indians have sent out parties with that intention, that if the French went on in their march towards the fort, they would catch them and bring them to the English. They showed Osten the place where eight French Indian spies had lain near the fort. By their marks upon the place they learned that these eight were gone back and five more were to come to the same place again. He told us further that the Indians had spoke among themselves, that if the English would join them they would go to Venango and destroy the French there. We hear that the friendly Indians intend to hunt round the fort at Pittsburgh, and bring the garrison fresh meat. And upon this intelligence the General sent Captain Wedderbotz, with fifty men, to reinforce the garrison at Pittsburgh.

25th. The people in the camp prepared for a Christmas frolic, but I kept Christmas in the woods by myself.

26th. To-day an express came from Pittsburgh to inform the General that the French had called all the Indians in their interest together, and intended to come and destroy them there.

27th. Towards noon the General set out, which caused a great joy among the garrison, which had hitherto lain in tents, but now being a smaller company, could be more comfortably lodged. It snowed the whole day. We encamped by a beaver dam, under Laurel Hill.

28th. We came to Stony creek, where Mr. Quicksell is stationed. The General sent Mr. Hays express to Fort Bedford (Ray's town) and commanded him to see if the place for encampment, under the Allegheny mountain, was prepared, as also to take care that refreshments should be at hand at his coming. It was stormy and snowed all the day.

29th. On the road I came up with some wagons and found my horses with the company, who had taken my horses up, and intended to carry the same away. We encamped on this side, under the Allegheny hill.

30th. Very early I hunted for my horses, but in vain, and therefore was obliged to carry my saddle bags, and other baggage on my back. The burden was heavy, the roads bad, which made me very tired, and came late to Bedford, where I took my old lodging with Mr. Frazier; they received me kindly, and refreshed me according to their ability.

31st. This day we rested, and, contrary to expectation, preparation was made for moving further to-morrow. Mr. Hays, who has his lodging with the commander of that place, visited me.

January 1st, 1759. We set out early. I got my saddle bags upon a wagon, but my bed and covering I carried upon my back, and came that day to the crossing of Juniata, where I had poor lodgings, being obliged to sleep in the open air, the night being very cold.

2d. We set out early. I wondered very much that the horses in these slippery roads, came so well with the wagons over these steep hills. We came to Fort Littleton, where I drew provisions, but could not find any who had bread to exchange for flour. I took lodgings in a common house. Mr. Hays arrived late.

3d. We rose early. I thought to travel the nearest road to Shippenstown, and therefore desired leave of the General to prosecute my journey to Lancaster and wait for his Excellency there, but he desired me to follow in his company. It snowed, froze and rained and was stormy the whole day. All were exceeding glad that the General arrived safe at Fort Loudon. There was no room in the fort for such a great company. I therefore, and some others, went two miles further, and got lodgings at a plantation.

4th. I and my company took the upper road, which is three miles nearer to Shippenstown, where we arrived this evening. The slippery roads made me, as a traveler, very tired.

5th. To-day I staid here for the General. Mr. Hays went ten miles further to see some of his relations. In the afternoon Israel Pemberton came from Philadelphia to wait upon the General.

6th. I came to-day ten miles to Mr. Miller's, where I lodged, having no comfortable place in Shippen's town, all the houses being crowded with people.

7th. They made preparation at Mr. Miller's for the reception of the General, but he, being so well to-day, resolved to go as far as Carlisle. I could scarcely find any lodging there. Henry Montour was so kind as to take me in his room.

8th. I begged the General for leave to go to Lancaster, having some business, which he at last granted. I went to Captain Sinclair for a horse, who ordered me to go to the chief justice of the town, who ought to procure one for me in the province service. According to this order I went, but the justice told me he did not know how to get a horse; if I would go and look for one he should be glad if I found any. But having no mind to run from one to another, I resolved to walk, as I had done before, and so traveled along, and came about ten miles that day to a tavern keeper's, named Chestnut.

9th. To-day I crossed the Susquehanna, over the ice, and came within thirteen miles of Lancaster. It was slippery and heavy traveling.

10th. It rained all the day. I arrived at three o'clock in the afternoon in Lancaster, and was quite refreshed to have the favor to see my brethren." *

CHAPTER XXII.

Forbes' Expedition.† The March. An Engagement. Attack of the French and Indians. Occupation of the Forks. Erection of Fort Pitt Post.

IN 1758 the French, being disheartened by the British success elsewhere, and their force at Duquesne weak, it was determined by the English government to make an effort to draw the Western Indians, and thereby still further to weaken the force that would oppose General Forbes' army, which was now on the eve of starting for Fort Duquesne.

POST'S MISSION.

It was no easy matter, however, to find a true and trustworthy man whose courage, skill, ability, knowledge and physical powers would fit him for such a mission. He was to pass through a wilderness filled with doubtful friends, into a country filled with open enemies. The whole French interest would be against him, and the Indians of the Ohio were little to be trusted. Every stream on his way had been dyed with blood; every hillside had rung with the death yell, and grown red in the light of burning huts. The man who was at last chosen was a Moravian, who had lived among the savages seventeen years, and married among them. His name, Christian Frederick Post. Of his journey, sufferings and doings, his own journal is the evidence, though Heckwelder says that those parts which redound most to his own credit he omitted when printing it.

He left Philadelphia upon the 15th of July, 1758, and against the protestations of Yeedyuscung, who said he would surely lose his life, proceeded up the Susquehanna, passing "many plantations deserted and laid waste." Upon the 7th of August he came to the Allegheny, opposite French creek, and was forced to pass under the very eyes of the garrison of Fort Venango, but was not molested.

From Venango he went to "Kushkushkee," which was on or near Big Beaver creek. "This place," he says, "contained ninety houses and two hundred able warriors." At this place Post had much talk with the chiefs, who seemed well disposed, but somewhat afraid of the French. The great conference, however, it was determined should be held opposite Fort Duquesne, where there were Indians of eight nations. The messenger was at first unwilling to go thither, fearing the French would seize him, but the savages said "they would carry him in their bosom, he need fear nothing," and they well redeemed this promise. On the 24th of August, Post, with his Indian friends, reached the point opposite the fort, and there immediately followed a series of speeches, explanations and agreements which are found in his journal.

At first he was received rather hardly by an old and deaf Onondago, who claimed the land whereon they stood as belonging to the Six Nations; but a Delaware rebuked him in no very polite terms. "That man speaks not as a man," he said, "he endeavors to frighten us by saying this ground is his. He dreams. He and his father (the French) have certainly drank too much liquor—they are drunk; pray let them go to sleep till they are sober. You do not know what your own nation does at home, how much they have to say to the English. You do nothing but smoke your pipe here. Go to sleep with your father, and when you are sober, we will speak to you."

It was clear that the Delawares, and indeed all the western Indians, were wavering in their affection for the French, and though some opposition was made to a union with the Colonists, the general feeling produced by the prospect of a quick approach of Forbes' army, and by the truth and kindness of Post himself, was in favor of England. The Indians, however, complained bitterly of the disposition which the whites showed in claiming and seizing their lands.

"Why did you not fight your battles at home, or on the sea, instead of coming into our country to fight them?" they asked again and again, and were mournful when they thought of the future. "Your heart is good," they said to Post. "You speak sincerely; but we know there is always a great number who wish to get rich; they have enough. Look! we do not want to be rich, and take away what others have. The white people think we have no brains in our heads—that they are big and we a little handful—but remember, when you hunt for a rattle snake you cannot find it, and perhaps it will bite you before you see it."

When the war of Pontiac came, this saying might have been justly remembered. At length having concluded a peace, Post turned toward Philadelphia, setting out on the 9th of September, and, after the greatest sufferings and perils from French scouts and Indians, reached the settlements uninjured.

THE MARCH OF THE ARMY.

While Post was engaged upon his dangerous mission, the van of Forbes' army was pressing forward under the heats of August from Raystown, (Bedford), toward Loyalhanna, hewing their way as they went.* Early in September the General reached Raystown, whither we had also ordered Washington, who had till then been kept inactive among his sick troops at Fort Cumberland. Meantime two officers of the First Virginia regiment had gone separately, each with his party, to reconnoitre Fort Duquesne, and had brought accounts of its condition up to the 13th of August. It being deemed desirable, however, to have fuller statements than they were able to give, a party of eight hundred men, under Major Grant, with whom went Major Andrew Lewis, of Virginia, was sent forward on the 11th of September to gain the desired information.

*From Provincial Records. †Western Annals.

The third day after their march, they arrived within eleven miles of Fort Duquesne, and halted till three o'clock in the afternoon, then marched within two miles of the fort, and left their baggage there under a guard, and arrived at eleven o'clock at night, upon a hill a quarter of a mile distant from it, Major Grant sent two officers and fifty men to attack all the Indians they could find lying out of the fort; they saw none, nor were they challenged by the sentries. As they returned, they set fire to a large stone house, which was put out as soon as they left it. At break of day, Major Lewis was sent, with four hundred men, to lie in ambush, a mile and a half from the main body, on the path on which they left their baggage, imagining the French would send a force to attack the baggage guard and seize it.

AN ENGAGEMENT.

Four hundred men were posted along the hill, facing the fort, to cover the retreat of Captain McDonald's company, who marched with drums beating toward the fort, in order to draw a party out of it, as Major Grant had some reason to believe there were not more than two hundred men there, including Indians; but, as soon as they heard the drums, they sallied out in great numbers, both French and Indians, and fell upon Captain McDonald, and two columns that were posted lower on the hill to receive them. The Highlanders exposed themselves without any covers, and were shot down in great numbers, and soon forced to retreat. The Carolinians, Marylanders, and Lower County men, concealing themselves behind trees and the brush, made a good defence, but were overpowered by numbers, not being supported, were obliged to follow the rest. Major Grant exposed himself in the thickest of the fire, and endeavored to rally his men, but all to no purpose, as they were by this time flanked on all sides. Major Lewis and his party came up and engaged, but were soon obliged to give way, the enemy having the hill of him, and flanking him every way. A number were driven into the river, most of whom were drowned. Major Grant retreated to the baggage, where Captain Bullet was posted with fifty men, and again endeavored to rally the flying soldiers, by entreating them in the most pathetic manner to stand by him, but all in vain, as the enemy were close at their heels.

As soon as the enemy came up to Captain Bullet, he attacked them very furiously for some time, but not being supported, and most of his men killed, was obliged to give way. However, his attacking them stopped the pursuit, so as to give many an opportunity of escaping. The enemy followed Major Grant, and at last Captain Bullet was obliged to make off. He imagined the Major must be taken, as he was surrounded on all sides, but the enemy would not kill him, and often called to him to surrender. The French gave quarter to all who would accept it.* The loss sustained in this engagement was two hundred and seventy killed, forty-two wounded, and several, including Major Grant, taken prisoners.† "It was," says Washington, "a very ill-concerted, or a very ill-executed plan, perhaps both, but it seems to be generally acknowledged that Major Grant exceeded his orders, and that no disposition was made for engaging."

ATTACK BY THE FRENCH AND INDIANS.

The French and Indians, emboldened by their victory over Grant, made an attack on the 14th of October, on the advance guard of the army at Loyal Hanna. The attacking party consisted of twelve hundred French and two hundred Indians, and the attack was continued for four hours, and afterwards renewed at night. But the assailants gained no advantage, and retired to Fort Duquesne. The returns of the army show a loss in this engagement of twelve killed, seventeen wounded, and thirty-one prisoners.

OCCUPATION OF THE FORKS OF THE OHIO.

On the 18th of November, the army marched from Loyal Hanna, and on the evening of the 24th, arrived at Turtle Creek. "Here," says Mr. Ormsby, (a commissary in the army,) "a council of war was held, the result of which was, that it was impracticable to proceed; all the provisions and forage being exhausted. On the General's being told of this, he swore a furious oath that he would sleep in the fort, or in a worse place, the next night. It was a matter of indifference to the emaciated General, where he died, as he was carried the whole distance from Philadelphia and back on a litter.

About midnight, a tremendous explosion was heard from the westward, on which Forbes swore that the French magazine was blown up by design or accident, which revived our spirits. This conjecture of the head of iron, was soon confirmed by a deserter from Fort Duquesne, who said that the Indians, who had watched the English army, reported that they were as numerous as trees in the woods. This so terrified the French, that they set fire to their magazines, barracks, &c., and pushed off in their boats, some up and some down the Ohio, so that the next morning we took peaceable possession of the remains of the fort. The place had a most desolate appearance, as all the improvements made by the French, had been burnt to the ground."

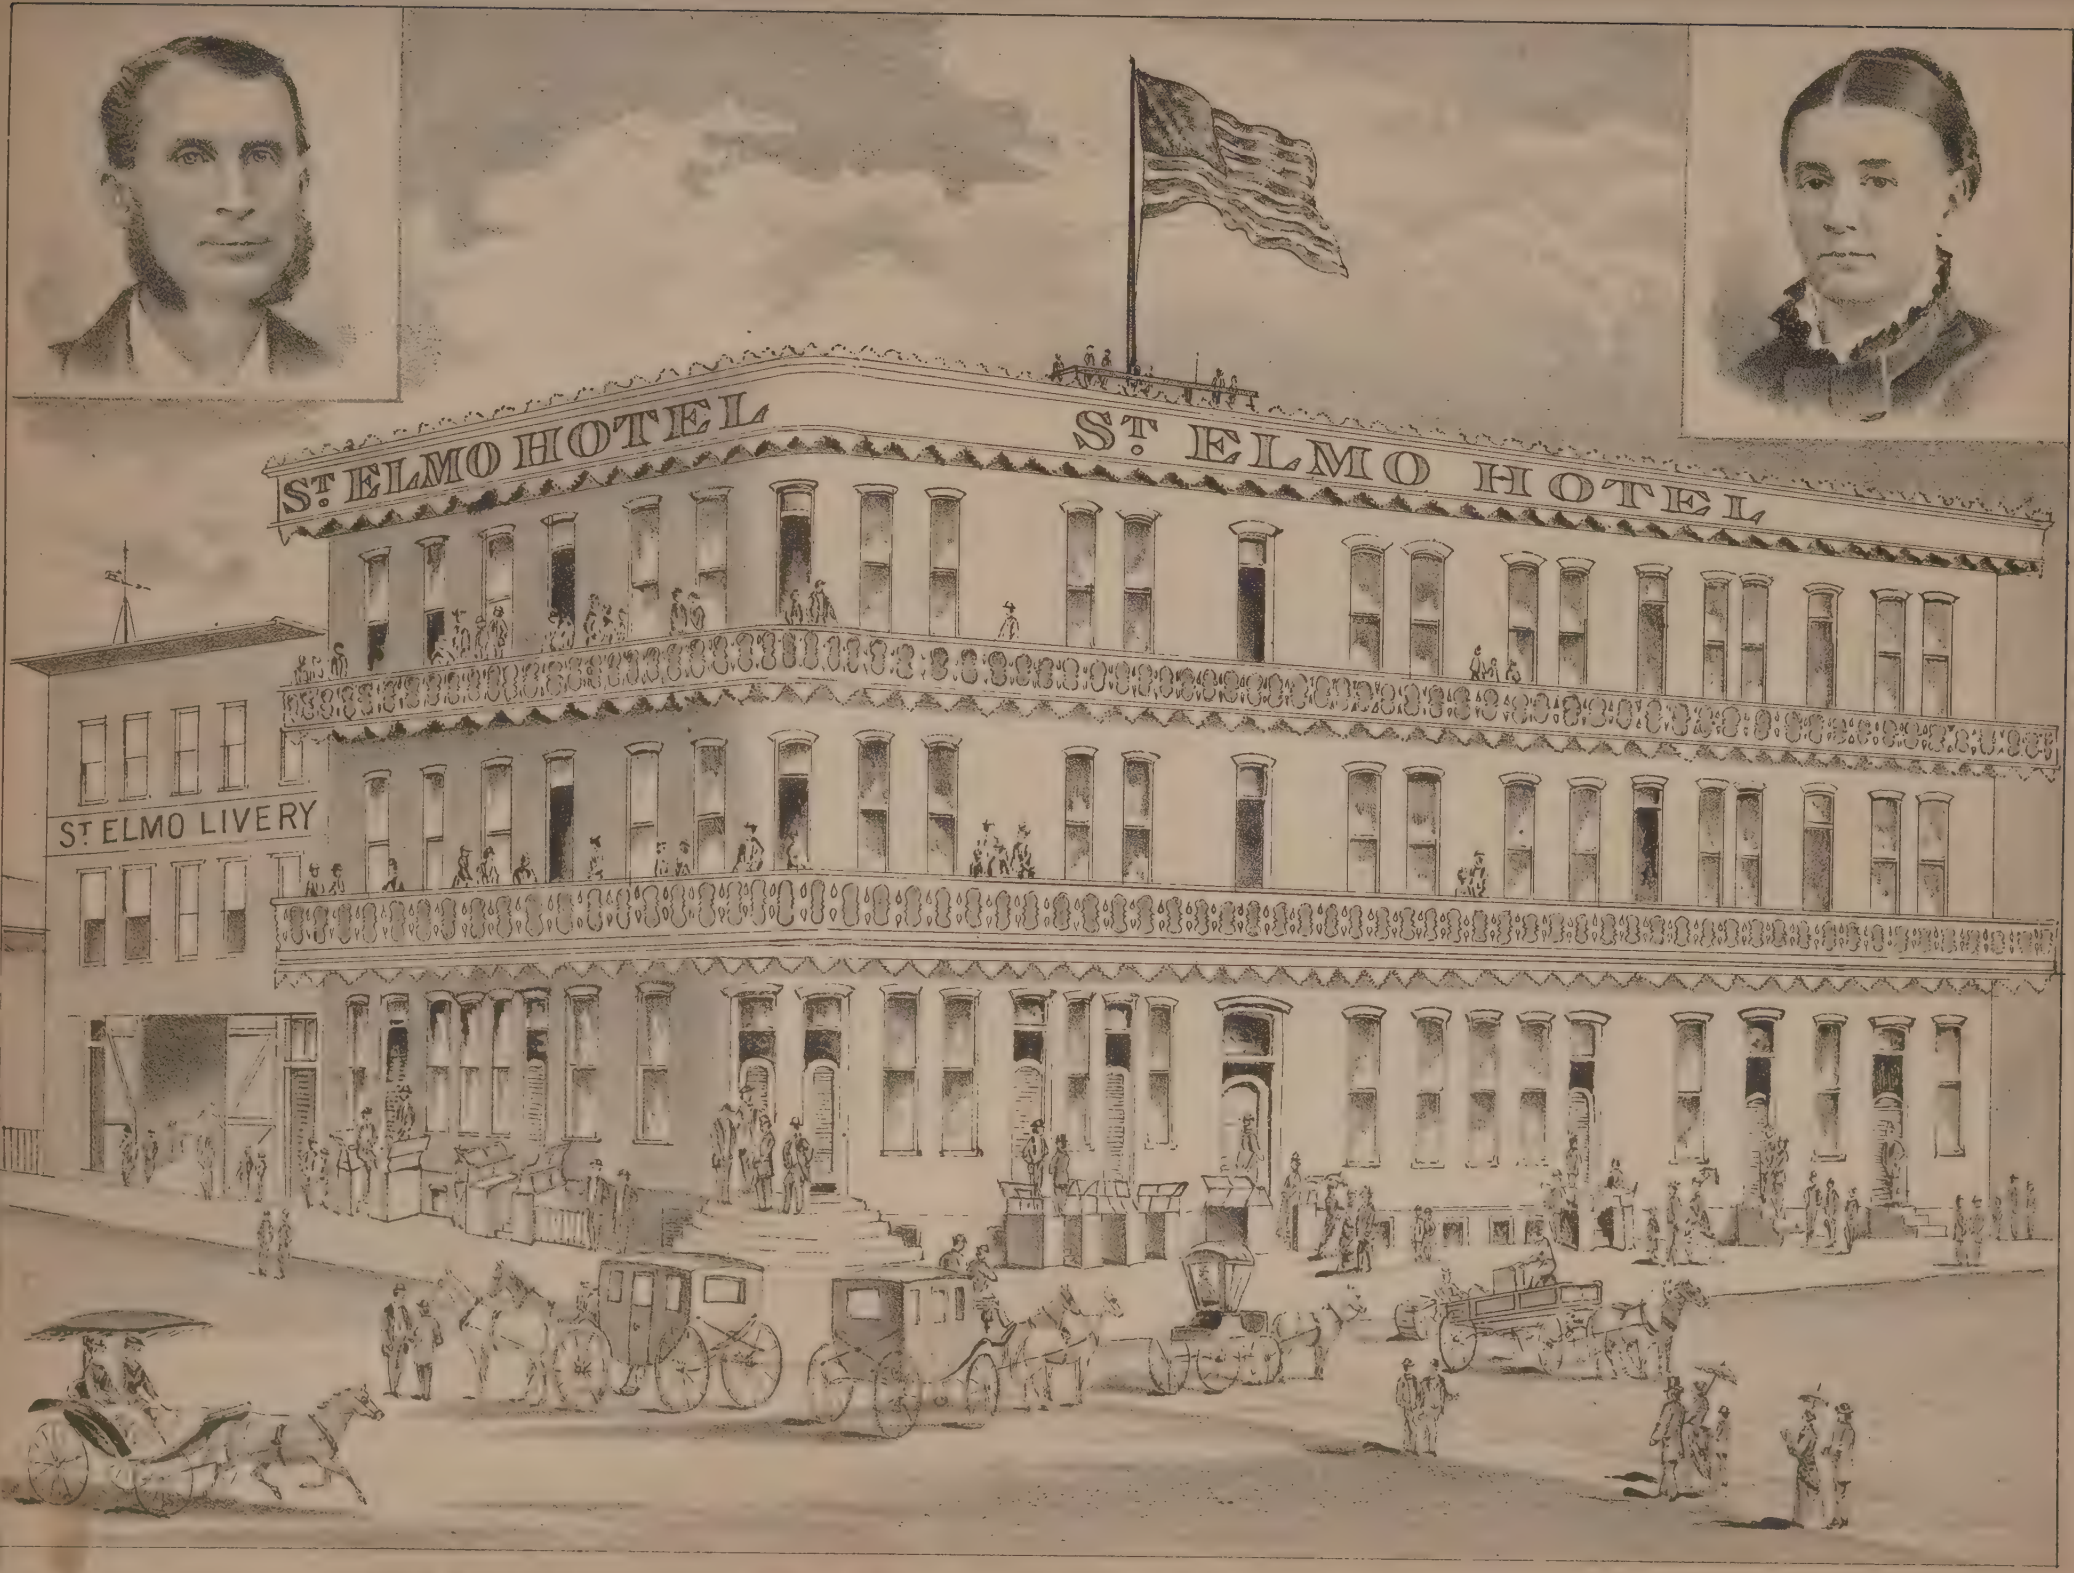
ERECTION OF FORT PITT.

Thus the forks of the Ohio, the occupation of which had been the cause of the war, came again into the possession of the English. It was necessary to make immediate provision for securing the possession of that point, which had cost so much blood and treasure to acquire, and a small foritfication was thrown up on the bank of the Monongahela, and named in honor of the great minister, Fort Pitt. Colonel Hugh Mercer, of Virginia, was left in command with two hundred men, and the main army marched back to the settlements. It reached Philadelphia on the 17th of January, 1759, and on the 11th of March, General Forbes died, and was buried in the Chancel of Christ Church.

Christian Frederick Post meanwhile had been sent westward with the chiefs of the Six Nations with a report of the treaty of Easton. He followed after General Forbes, from whom he received messages to the various tribes, with which he once more

*The troops from Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland, were ordered to assemble at Winchester, under Colonel Washington; and the Pennsylvania forces at Raystown, now Bedford, where Colonel Bouquet had marched the regular troops, in advance of General Forbes, who remained at Philadelphia until the combined army would be in readiness to move forward. But the ill health of General Forbes, the difficulties in procuring supplies and means of transportation, and the construction of a new road for the army, the artillery, and baggage wagons to pass over the mountains, detained the expedetion until late in the season. Colonel Washington strongly recommended that the army should follow the route of Braddock, as it would take but little time to repair the road, which was the best over the mountains, and remonstrated against cutting a new road, as it might entirely defeat the expedition, by unnecessary delay. Colonel Bouquet strenuously advocated a new route through Pennsylvania, and prevailed upon General Forbes to adopt it; and on the first day of August, seventeen hundred men were employed west of Bedford, in constructing a road across the mountains, to the Loyalhanna. This is the first road in what is now Westmoreland county.

*Craig's History of Pittsburgh, p. 74. †Early History of Pa. p. 138.



ST. ELMO HOTEL, B. K. FISHER, PROPRIETOR, PUNXSUTAWNEY, PA.

sought their chiefs, and was again instrumental in preventing any junction of the Indians with the French. Indeed, but for Post's mission, there would in all probability, have been gathered a strong force of western savages to waylay Forbes and defend Fort Duquesne, in which case, so adverse was the season and the way, so wearied the men, and so badly managed the whole business, that there would have been great danger of a second "Braddock's field," so that the humble Moravian played no unimportant part in securing again to his British Majesty, the key to Western America.

CHAPTER XXIII.

FRENCH DOCUMENTS.

"Memoir on the Position of the French and English in America.

"Memoir respecting, first, the position of the English and French in North America; secondly, what is absolutely necessary to send there so as to be able to at least attempt some defense. [January. 1759.]

"The English have had in North America, during the last campaign, sixty-three thousand men, 23,000 of whom were troops from Old England. They have sent some more there since, and their latest papers announce the departure of ten thousand Scotch for the New World.

"They have in their Colonies the greatest abundance of provisions, horses, oxen, munitions of war, Indian goods, and more than 350 leagues of coast open to succors from Europe.

"Their troops are at present distributed in winter quarters, as follows: At Louisbourg and Halifax, on the banks of the Hudson river, on the Mohawk river, at the head of Oneida lake, on the banks of the Ohio and its tributaries, thereby announcing the plan of attacking us simultaneously by the river St. Lawrence, Lake Champlain and Lake Ontario.

"Eight French battalions which will hardly number, at the opening of the campaign, 3,400 men, twelve hundred troops of the Marine, at most, five or six thousand militia. Such are our forces. Tne Indians cannot be included in the account. English presents, our poverty, our prodigious inferiority—what motives to abate their ardor! Besides, being independent, never making two expeditions consecutively, even should the first have resulted only in raising one scalp; ill qualified for defense; afraid of death; what benefit can be expected to be derived from them?

"No stronghold in the country; Niagara, the most tenable of the whole, cannot, if properly attacked, hold out more than three weeks. Shell alone will force Carillon to surrender; a small, narrow, right angle, inasmuch as its longest side is 54 toises and the small one 39, without casements; besides, all the other bicoques, which are called forts, are scarcely proof against a sudden assault. I do not expect even Mont-Real and Quebec, if the foot of their walls be once reached.

"We are in want of provisions; that is to say, by carefully economising the little we have, it will be hardly possible to enter upon the campaign and subsist throughout its first month.

"We are in want of powder to such a degree, that if the English come to Quebec, there is not six days' supply for the cannon. Almost all the guns are iron, and bad. Mortars are wanting, and still more so, shell, of the calibre of those we have.

"For the service of all the forts and of several bodies of troops, scattered over more than five hundred leagues of country, there are in the whole Colony only two Engineers, without any draughtsman, eight artillery officers, five of whom are from France, eighty-six gunners, including 4 sergeants and 10 cadets; these last are useless in a service of urgency, not a single man having the remotest idea of mines; not a mechanic of any sort whatever.

"Goods, to trade with the Indians, are almost entirely wanting.

"Under these circumstances, 'tis evident that France, should she send ten thousand men, with munitions of war, and provisions proportionate to such a force, and to the actual necessities of the Colony, would not place herself again there on anything near a level with the enemy.

"But this expedition would require at least one hundred sail, and such a fleet would run the risk, either from the danger of unfortunate encounters, or forcible delay from ice, of not arriving at all, or of arriving too late, and find the campaign already opened and the Colony perhaps invaded.

"It appears then, that this armament cannot be thought of, and we must confine ourselves to treating Canada as a desperate disease is treated, in which the sick man is supported by cordials until he either sink or a crisis save him; that is to say to send thither only what is absolutely necessary so as to be able to try and make a defence.

"Now what is absolutely necessary?

"1st, Provisions; to freight ships with them on account of the King; to encourage the contractor, who fits out, in this way very considerable armaments in order that his ships may have crews; to send poudre alimentaire tested at the Invalides.

"2nd, Munitions of war; a train of artillery; Artillerists and Engineers. In the first place, the largest quantity of powder possible, nine and twelve-inch mortars, and the greatest quantity possible of shells of the same calibre; all the ships ought to be ballasted with them. In the second place a train of field artillery, and to work them a detachment with the troops of the Line, composed of four Engineers and two draftsmen, fifty gunners, fifty bombardiers, four sergeants included, thirty workmen, wheelrights, joiners, carpenters, and smiths, including 5 sergeants or corporals, with an overseer of workmen, twenty miners, including two sergeants and two corporeals, with one overseer of miners; observing that the two aforesaid overseers be junior officers to those detached from the Royal corps in 1757 for Canada. In the third place a great number of guns, flints, and powder horns, which save half the consumption.

"3d, Indian goods. Some must be sent and in considerable quantity. These articles are extremely necessary, if it be desirable to preserve any Indians.

4th, Recruits visit: First, at least one thousand with their arms and eighteen months provisions, secondly, some miquelets, troops of no use in Europe in the present war, and who will render the greatest service in Canada. Thirdly, one hundred and fifty Scotch, Irish, and Germans to encourage and attract deserters of these nations, who, in that case, will join us in great numbers."

INSTRUCTIONS FROM M. DE VAUDREUIL, GOVERNOR OF CANADA, TO M. DE LIGNERIS, COMMANDANT OF THE GARRISON AT FORT MACHAULT.

"Montreal, 23d March, 1759.

"Monsieur: I have to instruct you to remain at Fort Machault and continue the service of French and trusty Indian scouts to watch the movements of the English. Continue to support the nations and exercise all vigilance in preventing them from being persuaded from their friendship and alliance by English intrigue. Represent to the Inroquois, Chaonanons and Loups of Kanaouagon, that your forces will soon be largely increased, and that then you will descend the Beutiful river, and drive the English from its borders. Indian goods will be forwarded you from time to time for the purpose of continuing their assistance in our cause and stimulating the enthusiasm of the young men.

"The change of the English from extreme suavity towards the Indians to that of the greatest threats, will naturally make a deep impression upon them all along the Beautiful river, and they must conclude therefrom that the principal object of the English is to deceive them. You should avail yourself of every opportunity to persuade them that if they are not under the protection of the French, they will soon be reduced to slavery, and probably something worse, that therefore it is for their own interest to despise and reject all proposals of neutrality or friendship for the English; to be inseparable lrom the French, and to be more ardent than ever to fight for the French in the united effort to drive away the English from their lands.

"Leave nothing unsaid to all the Nations on the Beautiful river that it is for their own interest to assist in placing a check upon the ambition of the English. I am glad to learn you have prevailed upon the Loups to assemble again at Cachecacheki, and that they have promised to again strike the English when you form the next expedition down the Beautiful river. As soon as advices and further instructions are received from M. Berryer preparations will be immediately made to augment the forces under your command for the purpose of forming the proposed expedition down the Beautiful river, and capturing the English and their fort on the Mananguailée.*

"The English have designs against Niagara, and we are compelled to make such disposition of our resources as will best protect our interests under all emergencies. For the present I have ordered M. Pouchot to retain under his command three hundred Canadian troops which I had designed for service on the Beautiful river, and if he finds it necessary, he will call to his assistance all the forces from Detroit and the other posts, whom I have ordered to rendezvous at Presqu'isle.

I have fully acquainted M. Berryer with the improvements you have made upon Fort Machault since the abandonment of Duquesne, and of its present strength and character, but if you are attacked by too large a force against which a successful defence can be made, I would instruct you to fall back successively upon La Bœuf and Presqu'ile, and so completely destroy the works as to leave nothing behind you that will be available to the enemy.†

"I would have you manœuvre so as to annoy the enemy and keep him continually before you, and I would remind you that if the Indians of the Beautiful river remain faithful to the French, and act in consequence, you will not fail to afford the English an abundance of work. You cannot do better than to impress strongly on those Indians the critical position they would be placed in, abandoned to themselves, had they no help to expect, except from the English, who would not treat them any better than they had treated the Abenakis.

"M. Pouchot will, with pleasure, embrace the opportunity of corresponding with you, and according as circumstances will be favorable, will render all the aid in his power for the expedition to descend the Beautiful river and recover our lost Duquesne. That is to say, if Niagara be not menaced, he will reunite under your orders not only the forces and succors which will rendezvous Prisqu'isle, the three hundred Canadians which I have destined for you, but in addition, all the forces and other assistance M. Pouchot will have it in his power to forward to you.

"I am with most profound respect,

"Your humble and obedient Servant,"

"VAUDREUIL."

* Monongahela.

† Some doubts have heretofore existed in the minds of a number of men who have formerly investigated this subject to some extent, as to whether the French built two forts at Venango, or whether what was afterwards known as Fort Venango was built by the English. This evidently settles the matter beyond dispute that the French did not build a new fort at Venango in 1758-9, on their return from Duquesne, but that they simply improved and strengthened Fort Machault.

LETTER OF M. DE VAUDREUIL TO M. BERRYEIR.

"MONTREAL, 30th March, 1759.

"MY LORD:—M. de Ligneris has not ceased having French and Indian scouts to watch the English. M. de la Valtrie informs him that the English were building a small fort on the river Mananguailee, a little above Fort Duquesne.

"He learned at the same time by some Delaware Indians, who are beginning to become familiar with the English, and go frequently to see them, that 2@300 men were to remain at the fort during the winter.

"That General Forbes had returned with his army to Loyal Hannon, where he had stationed a strong garrison to support that of Mananguailee.

"That the remainder of his army was to be sent to winter quarters in different provinces.

"That it was asserted that this General was to return this year to Europe.

"It would not be difficult, my Lord, to drive the English from their fort on the Mananguailee or to take them, were there plenty of men and provisions, but M. de Ligneris is in want of both to such a degree that he will have considerable difficulty to pass the winter.

"The Iroquois, Chaouanons and Loups of Kanaouagon, far from responding favorably to M. de Ligneris' invitatiou to go and attack the English, continue to solicit him to vacate Fort Machault and to retire to Presque'isle, continually representing to him that he has too few men to resist the English, who were assuredly to come and attack him this winter.

"He obtained, however, from those Indians, [a promise] that they would go to the English only with a view to learn their plans against the French, to inform him thereof; they likewise promised him to summon them to withdraw very speedily to the other side of the mountains.

"But there is reason to presume that the Indians would wish that there were neither French nor English at the Beautiful river, and that they are heartily tired of the war.

"What confirms me in this idea is, the Council the English held on the 26th of November, at Cachekacheki.

"The English have had recourse to the most affecting and most pressing language; they requested the Indians to forget the past; to renew the alliance of their ancestors with them; to let them settle their differences with the French, and to recall their young men who are with the latter.

"To enforce this proposition they told those Indians that they had closed the Canada river, consequently the French could not give them any assistance; that the King of France had already twice sued for peace, which had always been refused by the English; they requested the Indians to communicate their words to the nations who are in alliance with them.

"The Delawares have answered the English anew, that being allies of many different nations, a reply could not be given immediately to their speech; and that they should not become impatient if the answer was a long time coming, as their relations were at a distance.

"Moreover, if the English were desirous that their speech should be listened to, they must retire to the other side of the mouneains, and leave the Indians their lands free; otherwise no alliance would be entered into with them.

"At another council held with the same Indians at the Forks, by the English, the latter consented to retire home, not to make any settlement on the Beautiful river, and that they would all depart within eight days.

"M. de Ligneris placed no confidence in the promises which the English made the Indians.

"In fact, their language changes very fast. The Canaouagon Indians told M. de Ligneris, on their return from the English, that the latter were to come with a considerable force and attack him in the month of February.

"What gave rise to the suspicion that such was their design, was, the arrival of 120 men at their fort on the River Manangailée, where they were in immediate expectation of 300 more.

"Were M. de Ligneris in a situation to make a movement to drive away the English, the Nations on the Beautiful river would not oppose it directly; if they saw that we were in a condition to dispense with their services, I doubt not many would join him, notwithstanding their conferences with the English.

"The latter have been again summoned by those Indians to retire to their own country, but entirely forgetting their first language, the English have assured that they should not leave the Beautiful river; that it belonged to them from its source to its mouth.

"That positive answer from the English has rendered M. de Ligneris only more vigilant in observing their movements, more especially as some Indians have reported to him that the English are building a great many bateaux at the fort up the Mananguailée, and on the River Attiqué.

"These preparations having given offense to our Indians, they demanded an explanation thereof from the English; but the latter curtly answered, that they were preparing to go to Fort Machault, that they would have 6,000 men at the end of March, to drive off the French.

"M. de Ligneris has left nothing unsaid to persuade the Nations on the Beautiful river, that it was for their own interest to place limits to the ambition of the English; he has prevailed on the Loups to assemble again at Cachecacheki; the latter have assured him they were taking that course only to have a better opportunity of striking the English, if he organized any expedition and of more easily joining the French on the Beautiful river, supposing it were in the spring, in sufficient numbers to drive the English thence.

"I have written M. de Ligneris that the change of the English from extreme suavity to the greatest threats, must have naturally made the deepest impressions on the Indians of the Beautiful river, who must conclude therefrom that the principal object of the English is to deceive them, and that if they were not under the protection of the French, they would be very soon reduced to slavery, and probably to something worse; that therefore it is for their own interest to sovereignly despise all proposals of neutrality; to be inseparable from the French, and to be more ardent than ever to fight the English.

"I recommend him also to impress strongly on those Indians the critical position they would be placed in, abandoned to themselves, had they no help to expect, except from the English, who would not treat them any better than they had treated the Abenakis.

"As I am aware of the designs of the English against Niagara I write M. de Ligneris that, supposing that place to be really beseiged, M. Pouchot will retain under his orders 300 Canadians whom I had designed for the Beautiful river, and that, according as he will find it necessary, he will call to his assistance all the forces from Detroit and the other posts, whom I have ordered to rendezvous at Prisqu'isle.

"Under these circumstances, I recommended to him, in relation to the straits he should find himself reduced to, and in regard to his situation, to manœuvre so as to have the enemy continually before him, I observed to him that, if the Indians of the Beautiful river remain faithful to the French, and act in consequence, he will not fail to afford work to our enemies.

"That in other respects, he will fall back on the river au Bœuf and successively on Presqu'isle, paying attention to what position he will find himself in, to play with and to set snares for the enemies, according as they advance, to be, so that none of his bateaux fall into the hands of the English. I likewise notify him that M. Pouchot will, with pleasure, embrace the opportunity of corresponding with him, and that according as circumstances will be favorable, that is to say, if Niagara be not menaced, that he would reunite under his orders not only the forces and succors which will rendezvous at Prisqu'isle, the 300 Canadians that I have destined for him, but in addition, all the forces and other assistance M. Pouchot will have it in his power to forward to him.

"I am, with the most profound respect, my Lord,

"Your most humble and most obedient servant,

"Vaudreuil."

M. MALARTIC TO M. DE CREMILLE.

"Montreal, 9th April, 1759.

"Sir:—May I flatter myself that you will be pleased to permit me to have the honor of communicating to you the events which have transpired in the Colony since the end of autumn?

"We obtain some new advantages on the Beautiful river, at the close of the month of October. The English repaired in force, on the 23d of November, to within three leagues of Fort Duquesne, which was abandoned, after having marched out of, and burnt it; the artillery has been sent to Illinois, by descending the Beautiful river which empties into that of the Ouis, the latter flowing into the Mississippi, which is ascended thirty leagues to reach the Fort of the Illinois; and the garrison retreated to Fort Machault, where it still remained on the 8th of March, according to intelligence received on the day before yesterday; it has orders to continue there. Should the English march thither, as is probable, it will fall back on Niagara, always vacating and burning the posts, not one of which is tenable. M. Pouchot, who is going to command at the latter fort, and has already arrived at La Présentation, will have, for the defence of that frontier, as considerable a body of troops as the scantiness of our means and of our resources will permit. Scarcity of provisions and the bad position of Fort Duquesne have compelled its abandonment. The consequences may become unfortunate, if the Indians pronounce in favor of the English. Although they hesitate, they appear still attached to us; 'tis to be hoped that they will remain at least neutral. M. de Ligneris, commands at Fort Machault, writes that the English are constructing forts at Attique and Royal Hannon; that the Indians are become very familiar with them; he flatters himself however, that he will induce them to strike, if he receive reinforcements capable of controlling them; the greatest part of them are on the way.

"Various obstacles have prevented the reëstablishment, at Fort Frontenac. During the winter two sloops have been built three leagues above La Presentation—a work which might have been, and would have been essential to have done in the month of September in order to endeavor to retain possession of Lake Ontario, the loss of which is to be apprehended through the destruction of Frontenac and the reconstruction of Chouaguen, at which the English are, perhaps, already busy. They have a considerable force in that quarter, and threaten to come and burn our sloops and La Présentation. M. de Pouchot, who has set out on the ice to secure the post against a coup de main, writes that the sloops will be launched without delay, and that he is going to begin an intrenchment. Last week one hundred bateaux went to him with reinforcements, rigging and everything he may stand in need of; as soon as the sloops will be equipped and armed, he will embark with the troops destined for Niagara. He has two parties out in search of news of the enemy, whose designs are unknown to us.

"Our enemies have not made their appearance at Carillon in the beginning of the winter, but came there last month to the number of 350, surprised fifteen workmen who were in the woods, killed four and captured seven of them, after which they took a plan of the intrenchments and of the fort. Some Indians and volunteers went in pursuit, killed some of their men and took one prisoner, who says that troops are arriving daily at Fort Lydius, where immense preparations are making to come early and besiege Carillon; we on our part are expecting them there, and that they will attack us by the Beautiful river, Lake Onthorio and Quebec; we have but few troops to oppose them; such is our position. 'Tis to be hoped that the news from France will render it better, that we shall be as fortunate as in the last campaign, and that no mistakes will be made similar to that of having allowed Fort Frontenac to be taken, which with a little foresight, might easily have been preserved.

"Distress has been nigh as severe this winter as the last. Although the arrival last summer of provisions has been immense, the administration and management have been so bad, that the supply is not abundant. Not knowing the fate of my letter, your employment of which does not give me any uneasiness, I can not prudently inform you of what remains to be said. How many things to be related on this head, which I hope to have the honor of explaining to you viva voce.

"The winter has been one of the coldest; the river broke up some days ago and begins to be navigable; the ice has backed up to such an extraordinary degree and with such violence, as to throw down a house.

"Our destination for the campaign about to open is not yet decided. Our generals, who unfortunately, do not always determine it, and are not consulted on the measures to be adopted, cannot yet learn where they will require us; I believe they would wish to be able to multiply us and send us everywhere. There will be work to do for everybody apparently in more than one quarter. Nothing is wanting to the glory of the Marquis de Montcalm and the reputation of the troops, but the achieving of good business this year. Notwithstanding the critical state of the Colony, prudence and science on the part of the General, and good will on the part of the troops, are alone required; there is reason to expect that they will be forthcoming.

"You will find my letter long, sir; counting on the continuance of the indulgence with which you have frequently honored me, I have entered into all the details I thought you would be glad to be informed of. I greatly desire that they may have the good fortune of pleasing you, and that they will contribute to make me deserving of your protection, which constitutes all my ambition. I hope to have the honor of soliciting it personally this year. Though pretty well recovered from my wound, I require to go and take the baths, not being in a condition to do much on horseback or afoot. I propose demanding permission to leave at the end of the campaign, which I should regret not making, and hope that you will be pleased to grant me your approbation.

"I have the honor to be with respect, sir,

"Your most humble and

"Most obedient servant,

"Malartic."

The following letters of George Croghan and Colonel Hugh Mercer, to Governor Denny, of Pennsylvania, found in the archives, are documents of great interest on account of the intelligence they convey of the extent of the French preparations at Venango, during the summer of 1759, to make their contemplated attack on Fort Pitt, the number and character of the forces they had collected at Fort Machault for that purpose, and the nature of their efforts to retain the assistance of the Indians:

"GEO. CROGHAN TO GOV. DENNY, 1759.

Pittsburgh, July 15th, 1759.

"Honoured Sir,

"The 13th of this Inst, at 6 o'clock in the Evening, arrived here two Spies I had sent to Venango, to know the truth of the Intelligence we had received from several Indians, of the French being on their March from Priskisle to Venango with a large Body of Troops, composed of French and Indians, to attack this place, & that they had with them a Train of Artillery; they say, that when they arrived at Venango, they see there about Seven hundred French, & four hundred Indians; that on the 9th of this month there arrived there two hundred Indians, the next day about the same number, and the day following about One hundred and fifty more, then the Commandant told the Indians he would speak to them the next day, as fast as the Indians came, the French Officers were employed, Clothing and fitting them out for the Expedition, and by the 11th, at night, the whole were Cloathed; at 10 o'clock the next morning the whole met in Council, when the French Command't gave the Indians thanks for joining him, & desired them to prepare themselves for he intended to set off for to attack this place the next Day, then threw down the War Belt; there was two Six Nations Indians in the Council, who had came there the Night before, one of which got up and made a Speech to all the Indians, telling them their Father was in too great a hurry & desired them to consider some time on what they were going to do, & then delivered the Indians a large Bunch of String Wampum; this threw them into some confusion, and before they recovered out of it, two Indians arrived with a Packet of Letters, which, as soon as the Commander had opened & read, he spoke to the Indians, told them he had bad News, that a great Army of English and Sr Wm. Johnson, with the Six N'ns & a great number of other Indians were on their march to attack Niagara; that it was a place of great Consequence both to them and their Children; that he should lay by thoughts of going down the River till he had drove the English from Niagara, and desired them to be strong and support their Father, & then gave orders for the Battoes there to go up the River, and to turn the other Battoes back that was coming down. Our spies say they see but three Cannon; that the French expected in the Battoes that was to have been there that Night five more, and that about 30 Battoes set of while they were there, and a great many Indians were tying up their Bundles, and some set off; they are of opinion that the French will endeavor to divide them, leaving some of them behind to annoy the Road; that 19 Woyondotts, the whole that was with the French, had set of home; that the 13th, in the morning, some of the Party that had attacked Ligonier came there, that they had got neither Prisoners or Scalps, that they said they had one man killed and one wounded; that the Ind's the French had with them consisted of twelve different Nations.

"Our spies also say, that they had engaged three Shawnesse who had quit the French, to stay and see what they would do, and then set of for here with the News.

"I am sending of fresh spies to watch their motions. Coll. Mercer will send you a Copy of the Conference we held with the Indians at this place, by which your Honour will be able to judge of their dispositions towards us, which I think are as favourable as can be expected considering we have neither Troops or Provisions here, for these several days have had neither Flower, Meat or Salt, except some Milk Cows which some Country people brought here to sell their Milk; we have as many left as will serve us two days, and then we must begin upon our Horses, but we have some hopes of a Convoy's arriving here in a day or two, as we have intelligence from Venango that a large Body of Troops, with a great number of loaded Horses and Cattle, were seen by some of their spies five days agoe on this side the Allegheny Hill.

"I should be obliged to your Honour for sending me a draught of the boundary line settled with the Indians at the Treaty of Easton, that I may have it in my power to prevent any disputes from arrising hereafter, as the Indians here look upon their having a right with the Six Nations in these Lands.

"I am, with Esteem,

"Your Honour's Most obedient humble servt,

"Geo. Croghan."

[Vol. 3 Pennsylvania Archives.]

COL. HUGH MERCER TO GOV. DENNY, 1759.

Pittsburgh, 17th July 1759.

"Sir:

"My last to your Honor was of the 7th; in it I mention'd a Conference to be held with Indians; their impatience to return home urged it on contrary to my inclination, before the General's Arrival. The Minutes are inclos'd for your perusal. The Indians appear highly satisfied, and since have given proof of greater zeal and fidelity in our interests than I could have expected. The greatly superior force which the Enemy had unexpectedly collected at Venango, justly alarmed them, especially as they saw our low circumstances as to Men & Provisions; part of the Garrison being employ'd in escorts, and not a Days supply belonging to the Garrison when it was in the Enemies power to have invested us. The first Intelligence of the Enemies design we had from Priscile, the 11th, the next from the Delawares, above Venango, the 13th, both which I immediately communicated to the Genl.—the 15th, we had the following accounts from two Six Nation Indians sent to spy at Venango, who left this place the 7th. They found at Venango, 700 Franch & 400 Indians; the Commanding Officer told them he expected 600 more Indians, that as soon as they arrived he would come and drive us from this Place. Next day 200 Indians came to Venango, & the same number the next day, and the third. They were all fitted off for the Expedition by the 11th, at night, & 3 Pieces of Cannon brought from Le Beuff, the other's expected every hour, with a great many Battoes loaded with Provisions. In the morning of the 12th, a Grand Council was held, in which the Comm'r thanked the Indians for attending them, threw down the War Belt & told them he sett off next day. The Indians consented but were somewhat disconcerted by one of the Six Nations, who gave them Wampum, telling them to consider what they do, and not to be in too great a hurry; Soon after Messengers arrived with a Packet for the Officer who held the Council, at which he and the other Officers appeared much concerned, and at last he told the Indians: Children, I have received bad News, the English are gone against Niagara; we must give over thoughts of going down the River, till we have cleared that place of the Enemy. If it should be taken our Road to you is stopt up, and you must become poor.

"Orders were immediately given to proceed with the Artillery, Provisions, &c., up French Creek, which the spies saw set off, and the Indians making up their Bundles to follow.

"They reckon there were upwards of 1000 Indians, collected from different Nations at Venango.

"Half the Party that attack'd Ligonier was returned without Prisoner or Scalp; they had, by their own account, one Indian Killed & one Wounded.

"22 Wyandotts are just arrived, probably of those collected at Venango.

"Since the Conference we have, in conjunction with the Delawares, sent Messengers with Belts to all the Nations in the French Interest, to inform them of what their Chiefs had agreed to here; and this, with the Enemies embarrassed situation, we expect may Break off numbers from them.

"I am, Sir,

"Your Honors most

"Obedient humble Servt.,

"Hugh Mercer."

INTELLIGENCE ENCLOSED IN LETTERS FROM COL. MERCER TO GOV. DENNY, OF PENNSYLVANIA, ON THE SITUATION AT VENANGO.

"Pittsburgh, August 4th, 1759.

"By two of my Spies, who returned this Day from Venango, I am informed that the French at Venango are in the utmost Confusion, on account brought by some Indians, of the news from Niagara, who say the English landed in sight of the Fort, without much interruption, intrenched themselves, and raised Batteries; that the French and Indians made a Sally, and were repulsed, with the Loss of Twenty-Eght officers killed and taken; a great number of Soldiers killed and taken, and twelve Indians killed. Amongst the Prisoners is Mr. Delinery,* who Commanded at this Place, shot through the thick of the Thygh. What Number of the English and Six Nations were Killed, they could not tell; that the place had not surrendered when they came away; but is the Opinion of all the Indians, that the English are in Possession of it by this, as the Commanding Officer of Niagara sent Letters by these Indians, to the Commanding Officer at Presque Isle, to acquaint him that he should be obliged to deliver up the place in a few Days, and as Sir Wm. Johnson threatened to cross the Lakes with the Six Nations, and cut off the Settlements at Detroit, desired him to forward an Express to Detroit, with orders for all the Women and Children, with their Effects, to be removed to the Head of Scioto, that they might be ready, upon the first Notice of the Six Nations crossing the Lakes, to remove to their Settlements down the Mississippi.

"Forty-Five Indians arrived here this Day, amongst which were two Delawares sent from Tuskerawas to acquaint me that there was forty Indians of the Twightwees and Kushkuskee Nations on their way here, sent by their Chiefs to know in what manner the Peace was settled between us and the Western Indians, that they might know how to act. The two Messengers tell me I may expect them in two Days.

"The 5th. Two Shawanese came here from Presque Isle, and Confirm the Intelligence brought by my two Spies yesterday, with the addition that the Indians who brought the Intelligence from Niagara to Presque Isle, say the French attempted several times to drive our People out of the Trenches; that great numbers were killed on both Sides, but most of the French; that most of the French Officers that were on this river were killed or taken, particularly the blind Captain (called so by the Indians by his being blind in one Eye), who Commanded at Venango, killed, one Neverville, a great Partisan, who used to go frequently with the Indians from this Place, against the Frontier Settlements of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, killed; that when they left Presque Isle the French every moment expected to hear of the Surrender of Niagara to the English."

"Pittsburgh, the 12th August, 1759.

"Dear Sir:

"We have at last got rid of our neighbors at Venango, who to render their memory grateful among the Indians, made a virtue of necessity, and what they could not carry off, very liberally distributed among their Friends.

"Croghan's Letter contains all the particulars of our Conquest at Niagara come to hand as yet, and of the Enemies abandoning their Posts in the Ohio.

*De Ligneris went from Venango to join the French at Niagara.

"Like true Frenchmen they went off with a gasconade, telling the Indians, tho' they must run away at present, yet this River would be in their Possession before the End of the Year. We can now talk to our new Allies in a proper Stile, as their Services are not Necessary, tho' the Consistency of our Plan in bringing them entirely over to the British Interest, ought to be preserved by treating them with a great kindness, but suffering none of their insults."

"August 12th.—Two Shawonese came here from Meguck, and inform me that the Cherokess has lately sent three speeches to their Nation acquainting them that they intended to make War on the English, desiring them to assist them in the War, and to send the Speeches to all the Nations to the Sun Setting, inviting them to take up the Hatchet and join with them; but as their Nation had promised me at the Late Conference, whenever they heard any bad news, to acquaint me with it, before they determined upon anything, that they were sent to acquaint me with this, and to know how they would have me Act in regard to these Speeches.

"In the Evening, a Delaware Indian informed me that nine Indians of their Nation, from Venango, had been on the road below Ligonier, and taken an Englishman Prisoner, but that he had made his escape from them in the Night.

"13th.—By two Indians who have arrived here this morning from Niagara, I have the following intelligence: That on the fifth, the French made a Sally from the Fort, that all the Indians they had with them at the Fort deserted them, that the English drove the French back into the Fort and took possession of it. That during the Siege, Deliniery, who formerly commanded on this River, was shot through the thigh and taken Prisoner, the Officer that Commanded the Fort at Niagara taken. The Officer that Commanded the Troops from Di Troit killed, the Priest killed, all the rest of the officers killed and taken except four who run away during the action on the Fifth. That the French Indians often attempted to speak to the Six Nations, but as the Six Nations constantly kept hallooing to them, threatening to put every Indian they found with the French to Death, they were afraid to stay, so that they had no opportunity of speaking to them, for which reason they can give no account of what Number of the English and Six Nations were killed.

"That the French at Presque Isle had sent away all their Stores to Detroit, and was waiting when they came by for the French from Beuf River and Venango to join them, to set off for Detroit. That on an Indian Path leading from Presque Isle to a Delaware Town they met a Frenchman and some Indians, who informed them that the French set off from Venango the Day before, which is six days ago.

"Seven o'clock in the Evening those Indians came here from Venango, and Confirm the above Intelligence of the English taking Niagara the fifth Instant by Storm, and say the Indians from over the Lakes are very much displeased with the Six Nations, as they had a number of people killed at Niagara; That the French had burnt their Forts at Venango, Presque Isle, and La Beuf, and gone over the Lakes; that the French at Venango, before they set off, gave the Indians living nigh there Large Presents of goods, laced Coats and Hatts, and told them they were obliged to run away, but that they expected to be in Possession of this River before next Spring. They were obliged to Burn everything they had, and destroy their Battoes, as the Water was so low they could not get up the Creek with them."

It will be seen by Croghan's letter that the entire number of the forces concentrated at Venango consisted of about seven hundred French and nine hundred and fifty Indians. Col. Mercer's letter, based upon the information of his spies, reckoned there were "upwards of one thousand Indians, collected from the twelve different nations, at Venango."

Earlier in the spring, as some of the preceding documents show, the force was much smaller, but they had been farwarded to this point from Presque Isle, Le Boeuf, and even Detroit and other western garrisons then in the possession of French. From Kaskaskia, Illinois, which had been under the command of Monsieur D' Aubray, were brought a force and munitions comprising four hundred men and 200,000 pounds of flour. The difficult route by which these were brought, by the Commander is thus described: "Cut off from the route of the Ohio (or Allegheny) by the abandonment of Fort Duquesne, he proceeded with his force down the Mississippi and up the Ohio to the Wabash; thence up that river to the portage at Fort Miami, or Fort Wayne, and carried his stores over to the Maumee, passed down that river and along the shore of Lake Erie to Presque Isle, and carried again his stores to the portage of Le Bœuf; thence descended French Creek to Venango.

From orders issued to M. De Ligneris by M. De Vaudreuil, then Governor of Canada, we learn that it was the design of the French that the force at Fort Machault should be much larger, and that the accumulation at this point would have been effected much sooner, but for the straitened circumstances in which they found themselves throughout North America in the spring of 1759. As we have already stated, the English had sent over such large re-inforcements the year previous, and the united efforts of the Colonists had raised an army of such proportions, that the French were totally unable to put in the field a force of sufficient strength to cope with their adversaries. This, coupled with the disaffection of some of the Indian nations who had been in alliance with them, made their situation all along the line from Canada to the Mississippi indeed precarious. The Governor of Canada was calling for more troops from France, but the powerful English navy, then patroling every sea, rendered the transportation of French soldiers across the ocean an extremely hazardous undertaking. Yet, notwithstanding all these adverse circumstances, nothing could exceed the zeal, activity, boldness, and determination with which the French prosecuted their purpose to maintain their foothold and recover their lost ground. A formidable descent of the forces concentrated at Venango down the Allegheny was determined upon, and Fort Pitt was daily expecting the threatened attack. In addition to the force already gathered, Indians were arriving daily in considerable numbers. Artillery, military stores, and provisions were being brought forward from Le Bœuf, Presque Isle, and other places, and everything was nearly in readiness for a powerful attack upon the fort at the head of the Ohio, and eclipse the formidable expedition down the Allegheny of Contrecœur five years previous.

But the investment of Niagara by Sir William Johnson, the threatened prospect of which had for some time given the French great cause of uneasiness, put a sudden change upon the hostile array and warlike scenes at Venango. While Fort Machault was the most advanced post on the frontier, Niagara was the key to the French position, and its capture would jeopardize all their other possessions from Canada and the Upper Lakes to the Ohio. Consequently the scene at Venango was suddenly changed from that of martial display and sanguine preparations to the utmost confusion and abandon. In all haste they prepared to turn their forces toward Niagara precipitately rush to its relief, and desert Venango forever. "In consequence of the water in the stream being so low, they were unable to transport by boats the military stores, provisions, and other goods which they had accumulated, and to convey them by land in such haste was impossible. Hence the great mass of their effects had to be either destroyed or given to the Indians. In the language of Dr. Eaton, "presents were distributed with a lavish hand to the Indians. Grim warriors were seen strutting about in laced coats and hats, without other clothing, and dusky maidens, gorgeous in French calico, red blankets, worn shawlwise, and gaudy with immense strings of beads."

All the property that was of no use to the Indians, including the canoes and bateaux that were to convey the expedition in the contemplated assault on Fort Pitt, was gathered together in the Fort and set on fire. The artillery, and all that could not be reduced to ashes, was securely buried, and but little of it was ever afterward found of any value, save as relics. Bits of melted glass, burned iron, coarse glass beads that had been designed to trade to the Indians, curiously wrought scalping knives, and trinkets of a kindred nature which were frequently found on the spot by early settlers, bore evidence of the fort's destruction by fire. After the lapse of one hundred years an old gun was exhumed from its resting place, and it is generally supposed that an old well, within the limits of the fort, is still the slumbering place of a number of others.

Fort Machault was entirely destroyed, and all that existed of its strength and value was forever gone.

After holding sway along the borders of the Allegheny and its tributaries for a period extending over ten years, the French were forced to yield to the inevitable; their dream of extended empire was suddenly dispelled, and they abandoned their claim, never again to assert power in these hills and valleys. The wilderness that had been so quickly transformed into the pomp and parade of a European camp, no longer resounded with the echoes and shouts of French soldiers, but resumed its normal condition, after their retreating footsteps, and knew them no more forever.

CHAPTER XXIV.

EARLY REMINISCENCES OF DERRY TOWNSHIP, WESTMORELAND COUNTY — SKETCHES OF PUMROY AND WILSON, FIRST SETTLERS.*

IT was in the spring of 1762, some three years after the settlement of Ligonier Valley, that the first improvement, with a view to a permanent location in that part of Westmoreland county, now the highly cultivated township of Derry was made. Previous to that time all that part of Western Pennsylvania north of General Forbes' road, was in undisputed possession of the Indians, over which they roamed at will.

At the period we have reverted to, John Pumroy, a young, stout, brave and active man, who had been raised to agricultural pursuits in the Cumberland Valley, having heard flattering accounts of the western wilds, and the immense bodies of the best of lands, the ownership to which could be established by settlement, left his father's homestead to be the portion of some younger brothers and determined to make and merit his own fortune.

He came to the Ligonier settlement and stopped for a few days with acquaintances and relatives he had there, but disdaining to avail himself of the advantage to be had by joining in with them, after they had, as was then thought, encountered the most prominent difficulties, he crossed the mountain, made selection of a choice piece of land, erected a small cabin, and took possession of a wilderness of his own.

He had been here about three weeks, when his solitude was broken in upon by the appearance of a white man. Having, from his arrival till now, been entirely alone, except a visit he had from two Indians, who, in their excursion, had observed his camp or cabin, and had called to make a survey of the premises and an estimate of the intruder, and though they were apparently friendly, he could not but observe they scanned what they saw with an eye of jealousy, but having invited them to partake of his frugal fare, and having traded to them some trinkets he had, for some of their skins, they parted from him, professing themselves pleased. But that the state of their feelings and professions corresponded, Pumroy did not feel altogether certain.

It was a few days after this visit that the white man before alluded to, whose name was James Wilson,* also from one of the eastern counties of Pennsylvania, made his appearance at the camp of Pumroy. The meeting was to both a joyous one, that tended to a warm reciprocal friendship that lasted during life. Pumroy having previously marked out for himself as much of the forest as he wanted, assisted Wilson in selecting a tract adjoining his own, and erecting a cabin on it. Their cabins were about a mile apart, in which they spent the nights alternately together.

Their Indian neighbors made frequent visits to them, still professing friendship. A general treaty of amity and commerce, though unwritten, was understood to exist between the parties. During the summer our two pioneers had raised some corn, potatoes, etc., cleared each a small piece and sowed in fall grain, the seed for which they had to pack on their backs from Ligonier.

In the fall, after having killed some wild meat, and stowed it away for a spring supply, they together set out for their eastern homes to spend the winter, each with his former companions, astonishing them with a description of the backwoods, the Indians, and their manners and customs.

The winter over, in the spring they met according to tryst, at a time and place agreed upon, and set out again for their camp in Derry. They now had an acquisition to their number in the person of an Irishman by the name of Dunlap, who was more ambitious of acquiring wealth than fame as a pioneer, particularly as the latter could not be had without much toil and danger, and turned, when won, to no pecuniary advantage. Yet from the very flattering prospects by accounts given him of driving favorable bargains with the Indians, he determined to hazard the enterprise, in hopes of making a fortune.

His stock in trade consisted in part, of knives, brooches, beads and other trinkets. But what he more particularly relied on for a return, with a multiplied per centage, was a horse-load of rum. Our trio having made good their way to Ligonier (the inhabitants of which had been looking for their return with as much anxiety, as do the underwriters of New York for the arrival of a missing steamer), passed a day or two at this place, and to the satisfaction of their attentive hearers, disburthened themselves of all the news of the far east for the last year.

They crossed the mountain and were once more in their own dominion. Here they found their matters about as they had been left. Some tokens they found of Indians having been recently there. Watching for their return, Pomeroy and Wilson immediately commenced operations in furthering their improvements. Dunlap waited with anxiety for an opportunity to commence his mercantile bnsiness. A few days, and his suspense was relieved.

A party of twenty-five Indians made their appearance at Pumroy's camp, with their furs and peltry of the last winter's taking, and in good spirits for bartering; but a taste of the rum, and they determined to have one glorious frolic before other business. The price in skins, per canteen, agreed upon—at an exhorbitant profit that surprised even Dunlap himself—the Indians, true to their custom, selected their man, and swore him to sobriety; the rest joined in unsparing potations.

* R. B. McCabe.

* "Colonel (or Major) James Wilson was born in 1741, in Cumberland county, Pa., about three miles from where Mercerburg now stands. Whoever refers to Taylor's History of Ireland, will see that one of the worthiest stock of emigrants, probably, that ever left Europe for America, left the North of Ireland and settled in the Cumberland Valley prior to our revolution. Colonel Wilson's as well as Colonel Pumroy's ancestors were of this class. Amongst others, might be named as of the same emigration, the ancestors of the Butler's Brady's, Gibson's, Buchanan's, Porter's, Chambers', Findley's, Moorehead's, Johnston's, Speer's, Sterrett's, Duncan's, Kelly's, Boggs', Rodgers', Thompson's, McLenahan's, Smith's, and very many more of the most distinguished names in the State and Nation."

Canteen after canteen was filled from the keg and sacrificed at the shrine of Bacchus. Whilst Dunlap's store of skins was rapidly increasing, his keg was becoming lighter, the Indians drunker, and he more and more avaricious. As he thought the discriminating powers of his customers were failing from the effects of the liquor, he, regardless of the quality, kept up the quantity from Pumroy's spring, and for each canteen he filled from the spigot, he poured from a measure of the same capacity, its full of water in at the bung-hole. Here was a contending between fear and avarice for the preponderance, but the honest desire of turning a penny prevailed; but still as an opportunity offered, he would take a sample of the adulterated liquor to Pumroy and Wilson, who were enjoying his fears, and whom he relied on to defend him, if he got into difficulty, and get them to taste it, and tremblingly ask, if they thought it would bear any more water.

A large Indian, who perhaps from having a stronger constitution than his fellows, was long before midnight the only one of the party, (except he whose business it was to keep sober), that was able to come for the liquor. He would come to the cabin, pounce against the clap-board door, make it fly from its temporary hinges across the house, spring in with a fearful yell, face painted, ominous of his feelings, and with a long knife in one hand, and canteen in the other, confront poor, quaking Dunlap, saying at the top of his lungs: "My name is Ellick! Stronger and stronger—more lum!" With fear and trembling, Dunlap supplied his canteen, for which he threw an otter skin into his face, and made for his comrades, who were now nearly all prostrate. He, having this canteen mostly to himself, which watered as it was, was sufficient to take his heels from him, with all his boasted strength, soon with the other Indians, save the sober one, was sunk into a state of torpid stupidity, which continued till the next evening, before any more rum was wanted; and then in their sickened condition, the watered rum was more soothing to them, than it would have been with a greater proportion of alcohol. So the rum, water and all, was disposed of advantageously.

The next day and they were in a business condition. They disposed of the balance of their furs, purchased out the entire stock of our trader, and left for their homes in the more remote parts of the forest. It was not until the Indians had time to be some miles off, that Dunlap gave vent to his invectives against them. But when he could do it with safety, he declared "it was too base for a man who had been raised a Christian, as he had been, in one of the best families in Ireland, to trust himself among such a set of barbarous crators."

Dunlap, now through with his stock, carefully packed up his beaver and other skins, and prevailed on Pumroy and Wilson to escort him over the mountains to Ligonier, where he fell in with a safe convoy from Fort Pitt on their way to Philadelphia. He parted with our pioneers, saying: "he had now got what would be a good start in the world, and that he would go into business right, and forever after keep within the pale of civilized society." What became of him afterward we know not. There were others, subsequently, of the same name, worthy members of this community, but who were no connection of the trader.

Pumroy and Wilson, left now to themselves, pursued their purpose of improving their lands with vigor. In the course of this summer, a number of pioneers settled around them, who were congenial to themselves, and amongst whom were Barr, Guthrey, Mathews, Wallace and others. Some of these were accompanied by their families. An intercourse with them convinced Pumroy and Wilson that however much they were attached to each other there was still something wanting.

The second winter they returned again to their former homes and in the spring each brought with him a wife* to share with them their toil-earned heritage. In 1764 George Findley, Samuel Dickson and others arrived in the settlement. For years after, the improvement of this section, now Derry township, was rapid. The Government, to encourage the enterprise evinced in her citizens, in May, 1769, granted locations on improvement rights to the settler, to secure the legal as well as the equitable title to their homes. This had a salutary effect. In a few more years, there could be seen from the top of the mountain some fifty improvements, each a happy home. Each improvement had a comfortable cabin, from which might be seen high ascending the beautiful curling column of smoke, until lost to view in the expansive atmosphere—a sight that can only be appreciated by those who in their time, have been a wearied wilderness traveler.

Thus lived our hardy settlers, composing, as they did, a happy community. In the absence of rigid law, each feeling the dependence on the other, they wanted no other stimulant to urge them to the promotion of each other's comforts. They formed a harmonious society, such as municipal authority never produces, but such as can only be had by voluntary association.

CHAPTER XXV.

INDIAN DISCONTENT—PONTIAC'S CONSPIRACY—BOUQUET'S CAMPAIGN.

IN the spring of 1763, the famous Indian war, designated in history as Pontiac's Conspiracy, or, as it was known in Western Pennsylvania, as Guyasutha's war, broke out along the border and extended from Lake Superior to Virginia.

INDIAN DISCONTENT.

The fierce scenes that had taken place in the region of Venango during the period of the Seven Year's War had barely subsided, and the country scarcely transferred to the English, when smothered murmurs of discontent began to be audible among the Indian tribes. From the head of the Potomac to Lake Superior, and from the Alleghenies to the Mississippi, in every wigwam and hamlet of the forest, a deep-rooted hatred of the English increased with rapid growth. But when the accompanying circumstances that attach to this event in history are properly considered, the fact is not calculated to effect great surprise. We have seen with what sagacious policy the French had labored to ingratiate themselves with the Indians, and the effective alliance they had succeeded in creating with them, bore witness to the success of their efforts. The Delawares and Shawanese, once the faithful allies of William Penn, had been effectually seduced by French blandishments; and the Iroquois had been greatly alienated from their former friendship for the English, and well nigh taken part against the colonists. The remote nations of the west had also joined in war, descending in their canoes for hundreds of miles, to fight against the enemies of France. All these tribes entertained against the English that rancorous enmity which an Indian always feels against those to whom he has been opposed in war. Under these circumstances, it behooved the English to use the utmost care in their conduct towards the Indian tribes. During the conflict with France, the Indian policy of the English was one of comparative indifference, and when the war had ceased, the friendship of the tribes seemed a matter of no consequence. They were not only treated with neglect, but the intentions of the English soon became apparent to the aboriginal mind. The presents, which it had always been customary to give them at stated intervals, were in a great measure withheld, and many of the agents and officers of the government frequently appropriated the presents to themselves, and afterwards sold them to the Indians at exorbitant prices.

*Wilson's wife was Isabella Barr, the daughter of a neighbor in the Cumberland valley, who migrated subsequently to Derry township, as well as his brother-in-law, James Barr, Alexander Barr, William Guthrey, Richard Wallace and others. Mrs. Wilson and Pumroy are believed to have been the first white women to locate in western Pennsylvania, as well as the first, excepting those captured, to cross the Allegheny mountain. They did the cooking, and enough were dressed on one evening to last till the next. They rode out with the men whilst they traced the boundaries of their claims, for the Indians were numerous in the neighborhood, though quiet and peaceable.—K., in "Greensburg Herald."

When the French were in possession, they supplied the surrounding Indians with guns, ammunition, and clothing with a shrewd liberality. This occurred to such an extent as to cultivate among the tribe a taste for European goods, cause them to forget the garments and the use of the weapons of their forefathers, and to depend in a great degree on the whites for support. All along the Alleghenies to the Mississippi, they had become dependent upon the French posts for their arms and clothing. When these supplies were withheld a calamity overtook them for which they were illy prepared, and want, suffering and death followed as a natural consequence. To this grievance was added the general conduct of the English fur-traders, many of whom, with their employès, were men of the coarsest stamp, and guilty of numerous acts of rapacity, violence and unscrupulous conduct. They cheated, cursed, and plundered the Indians, outraged their families, and when compared with the French traders, whose conduct was more politic, they presented a most unfavorable example of the character of their nation.

But a still greater cause for the growing discontent of the tribes was the intrusion of settlers upon their lands, which was constantly producing and renewing Indian jealousy and hostility. The Delawares and Shawanese became aroused to the highest pitch of desperation. Their best lands had been invaded, and all remonstrances had been fruitless. They viewed with wrath and fear the steady progress of the white man, whose settlements had passed the Susquehanna, and were fast extending to the Alleghenies, eating away the forest like a spreading canker. The Senecas were likewise especially incensed at English intrusion, and by their contact with the French they were greatly stimulated in their prejudice and animosity.

PONTIAC'S CONSPIRACY.

Early in the spring of 1763, it appears to have been annouced to the tribes, that by the terms of peace between the two nations, the King of France had ceded all their country to the King of England, without even asking their consent or permission. This greatly increased their enmity, and at once excited a ferment of indignation among them. Within a few weeks a plot was matured, such as was never, before or since, conceived or executed by a North American Indian. The grand scheme was to attack all the forts upon the same day; then, having destroyed their garrisons, to turn upon the defenceless frontier, and ravage and lay waste the settlements, until, as many of the Indians fondly believed, the English should all be driven into the sea, and the country restored to its primitive owners.

It was difficult to determine which tribe was first to raise the cry of war; all the savages of the backwoods were ripe for an outbreak, and the movements seemed almost simultaneous. Pontiac, the great chief of the Ottawas, is credited as the author of the great plan of the simultaneous attack along the entire border, by which all the posts and garrisons were to be captured on the same day. Pontiac was one of the most famous chiefs known in Indian annals, and was pre-eminently endowed with all the attributes for a great leader among the tribes. He began preparing for his conspiracy before the close of 1762, and he sent messengers to the different nations for the purpose of concentrating all the western tribes in one great effort to drive out the English. The scheme was worthy the genius of a Napoleon, and had been arranged with accuracy to strike every English post at the same moment, giving no time for one to assist another, which was to be followed by a rapid and relentless war throughout the settlements. He reserved for himself the attack on Detroit, and made a regular siege of the place. He neglected no expedient that savage warfare could invent, and obtained food for his warriors from the Canadians by issuing promissory notes drawn upon birch bark and signed with the figure of an otter, which were all redeemed. Though the attack on Detroit resulted in a failure, by the garrison being apprised of the approaching danger, the plot was generally successful along the border.

The storm fell nearly simultaneously, like the simoon of the Sahara, upon all the English fortifications. Mackinaw, La Bay, and St. Joseph, on or near Lake Michigan; Miami, on the Maumee; Ouiatenon, on the Wabash; Sandusky, Presq' Isle, Le Bœuf, and Venango, all fell into the hands of the savages. Only Detroit, Fort Pitt, and Niagara escaped. Niagara was deemed too strong, and was not molested. Detroit very nearly fell by treachery, but an Indian girl revealed to Major Gladwin the plan of Pontiac and the fort was saved. Foiled in his attempt, Pontiac sat down before the place and deliberately besieged it for many months, and had it not been for its water communications, it would undoubtedly have fallen.

The Ottawas, Hurons, and Pottawattomies took the lead in the Northwest, and the Delawares, Shawnese, Senecas, and others bore the brunt in the region of Indiana.

Lee Bœuf was surrounded on the 18th of May by a great multitude of Indians. After a furious attack, the block-house was fired at night, and while they were waiting to murder the inmates as they escaped from the flames, Ensign Price and his seven remaining men escaped unperceived to the forest, and after enduring great hardships reached Fort Pitt. Passing by Venango, they found that place in ruins, and the garrison slaughtered. Long after its fate was revealed to Sir William Johnson, a large party of Senecas gained entrance on pretense of friendship, massacred the garrison, and tortured the commandant, Lieutenant Gordon, for several nights over a slow fire, and then burned the fort.

On the 27th of May bands of Indians, flushed with their victories, appeared before Fort Pitt, and after prowling around, scalping stragglers, and firing on the garrison, a delegation of their chiefs appeared and demanded the surrender of the fort. They were friends of the English, and they wanted to give them good advice. Six great nations had taken up the hatchet against the English; numerous bands were now coming to scalp them. They ought to leave the post and go to the settlements, where they would be safe. If they went now they would protect them. If they waited till their enemies came nothing could save them. Captain Ecuyer was not to be so easily outdone in politeness by his tawny friends. He was very well off in his fort, and meant to stay there. But they ought to take care of their women and children. There was a great army of six thousand coming to Fort Pitt. There was an army of three thousand going up the lakes. There was another with a great multitude of Cherokees, coming from the south. He wished them to hide, for he did not want them to get hurt, but he hoped they would not tell the hostile Indians, lest they might escape. The chiefs were beaten at their own game. The shadows of Ecuyer's three armies frightened them, and they abandoned the fort and fled down the river.

INDIANA COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY

SCENES AT THE ATTACK ON FORT PITT ON THE 26TH OF JULY.

On the 26th of July the Indians again appeared in considerable force around Fort Pitt. Thinghis, Turtle's Heart, and some other chiefs appeared and were admitted to a conference. They bitterly recounted the wrongs the English had inflicted upon their people. They recited a message they had received from the great Pontiac. His bands were coming to strike the English at the forks of the Ohio. If they would go home to their wives and children they would be safe; if they would not, they would be in danger. Ecuyer told them he had warriors and arms enough to defend himself three years against all the Indians in the woods. That was his home, and if they came about it, he would fire bagfulls of bullets at them. They had better go home, for he did not want to hurt them.

The Indians then, disappointed in obtaining possession of the fort by stratagem, commenced a general attack. On the next night they crawled along the banks of the rivers, and dug holes with their knives in the bank to shelter themselves from the fire of the garrison. From these a constant fire of many days was poured upon the fort, and it was often on fire from their arrows. A striking picture of the siege is furnished in the statement of one who was present.

"I tell you we had awful times when Fort Pitt was closely besieged by the Indians. You see, the yellow skins lay so close along the bank of the Allegheny river, that we could not get a shot at them, and we dare not venture outside. Any one who showed himself upon the rampart was sure to be a mark for an arrow or bullet. Yet even then they did not always get off scott free. Some of our fellows were more than a match for them in every way. One day, 'Brown Bill' procured some old clothes and straw, and stuffed a paddy with the greatest care. None of us could tell what was in the wind, and his only answer was that he was reinforcing the garrison. At night he told one of us to lift it up slowly above the stockade, and pull it down quickly whenever it was fired at. He then took his station a few feet from it, and when his eye became accustomed to the darkness, directed us to raise it up. We raised it slowly and a bullet passed through it, but instantly Bill, who could fire at a flash, put a bullet through the Indian's head. We all laughed at the result, which made Bill tremendously angry. 'If you had held your jaw,' said he, 'the paddy might have done some time again; now it is of no use, they will smell the rat.' At last we became weary of being cooped up, and the officers began to fear that Bill, and some other kindred spirits, would carry out some mad scheme to their own undoing. Who first planned what I am going to tell you of, I do not know, but the following plan relieved us from our close blockade, and chased the Indians from the bank of the river, the position which most annoyed us. We built, upon rollers, a large flatboat, with high sides; the rowers were secured and port-holes bored all around. When finished and ready, we rolled it into the Monongahela, and anchored it in such a position that we could fire up the Allegheny. The Indians were astonished; they were afraid to attack either the boat or the fort, which would have placed them between two fires. We raked them from the boat along the river bank; they set up the most diabolical yell I ever heard, retired up stream and never again ventured so close to us in daylight."

About the first of August a rumor reached them that an army was coming to relieve the fort; the assaliants abandoned the siege, to the great relief of the garrison, and penetrated further to the east.

CONDITION OF THE FRONTIERS.

Meanwhile the most terrible border war known to our history, was raging along the whole line of the western frontier. The western frontier was then the Blue Ridge and the Susquehanna. Cabins, clearings, hamlets, even villages, were scattered through the forest west of that border, but a fixed population had not passed beyond it. Along that whole line from Albany to Carolina, the border was attacked about the beginning of harvest. Everywhere were experienced the same horrible cruelties of savage warfare; the sudden surprise, the massacre, the scalping, the burning, everywhere were the ashes of cabins, mingled with the charred bones of their tenants; everywhere the ripe harvest stood without a reaper. Twenty thousand people in Virginia were driven from their homes. The borders of that province were protected by a line of stockade forts, and to these the inhabitants fled for protection. A thousand men were raised and put under the command of Major Lewis, and Colonel Stephen. That force was greatly augmented by the borderers who volunteered to protect their homes. The tide of savage war was stayed; the Indians could not stand their ground against the border riflemen, and security for the Virginia frontier was at length obtained by the prompt measures of her government and the bravery of her citizen soldiery.

The people of the Pennsylvania frontier were unprotected, and they were compelled to crowd into the towns in the interior for safety; and stripped of everything they possessed, were obliged to subsist as best they could in huts and tents on the charities of the people. The colonial government was divided by factions; its leaders were inimical to the borderers, and, to its everlasting dishonor, refused to furnish the many, adequate protection, and left the defense of the frontier to those who had lost all by its desolation.

MEASURES OF DEFENSE.

General Amherst was employed in the meantime in providing measures of defense. The colonial establishment had been exhausted by the French war, and further weakened by the removal of a great part of the troops on the conclusion of peace. Of the regiments that remained, reduced in numbers and weakened by disease, a small force was with difficulty collected and equipped for the service. All that could be immediately done was to provide for the defense of the boats. The fort at Niagara had been beseiged by a band of Senecas, and the first step was to send sufficient reinforements to that important post. The next was to send a reinforcement under Dalzell to Detroit.

The garrison at Fort Pitt consisted of three hundred and thirty men, besides more than two hundred women and children, who had taken refuge within it. The supply of provisions was too small to sustain a long siege, and it was necessary to afford it immediate relief. Orders were therefore sent to Col. Bouquet, at Philadelphia, to organize an expedition without delay, for the relief of that important post.

BOUQUET'S ARMY AND ITS CAREER.

Col. Henry Bouquet was a native of Switzerland, of the Canton of Berne. He first held a commission in the army of Sardinia, and afterwards entered the service of the States of Holland. When the corps of Royal Americans were organized in the French war, he entered the English service as Lieutenant-Colonel of that Regiment. In the provinces, great confidence was reposed in his bravery and skill. As a military man he was distinguished for activity of mind, a great facility of resource, and an unusual power of adaptation to the circumstances with which he was surrounded. And these qualities fitted him in an eminent degree for the practice of the new and often perplexing tactics of Indian warfare.

With much difficulty, Colonel Bouquet collected of the remains of the forty-second and seventy-seventh regiments, a force of about five-hundred men; brave, indeed, but enfeebled by disease, and unused to savage warfare. Sixty of these were so weak, that they were conveyed in baggage wagons, only for the relief of the garrison. Orders were dispatched to collect stores and provisions on the frontier, but when Bouquet reached Carlisle on the 1st of July, no provisions had been collected.

The whole settlement was in a panic. The country was deserted, and the wretched and famishing people had crowded into the town for protection. Instead of receiving supplies from them, Bouquet was obliged to share with them his own scanty stores. Eighteen days were spent in collecting stores and means of transportation, and the army commenced its perilous march, with the worst forebodings of the people, through the wilderness. The route lay through an unbroken forest for two hundred miles, infested with savages far more numerous and more determined than those that destroyed the ill-fated army of Braddock. The army of Bouquet was less than those who fell on that bloody day, and the people of the border, without hope of success, only waited for the defeat of the army to desert the country, and fly beyond the Susquehanna.

The army pursued the route opened by General Forbes, five years before, and on their march relieved Forts Bedford and Ligonier, both beleaguered by the Indians. Less than a day's march west of Ligonier, by the dangerous defile of Turtle creek, Bouquet determined to march to Bushy run, and rest there until night, and then pass Turtle creek under cover of the darkness. When within half a mile of Bushy run, the army was suddenly attacked in front; a charge was made and the enemy dispersed. Instantly the attack was renewed in the rear, and again the assailants were beaten off. Again and again the attack was made, and the Indians were driven back, only to renew their assault. Sheltered behind trees, the Indians poured a constant fire upon the army on all sides, and were so disposed as to assault the line the moment it wavered. To receive them, the troops were disposed in a circle around their baggage, exposed indeed to the constant fire of an invisible foe, but maintained their position with the steady valor of disciplined troops.

Thus the contest raged for seven hours; darkness suspended hostilities, and the troops maintained their position, and lay on their arms during the night. At the dawn of day, the attack was renewed with great fury, and continued without intermission until nearly noon. It was impossible for the army to move, and equally impossible to make any impression on the enemy, and there seemed to be no other prospect before the troops, than that of gradually melting away under the fire of an invisible foe. The genius of Bouquet was equal to the emergency. Two companies were ordered to fall within the circle and march backward, as if commencing the retreat; two other companies were detailed to lie in ambuscade in advance of the army. The thin line of troops took possession of the deserted space, and were drawn nearer to the centre. These movements were mistaken by the Indians for a retreat, and made a furious assault on the line. The two companies that had been ordered to the rear, suddenly wheeled and poured a volley on them in flank, and then charged them with the bayonet. The Indians were completely surprised and fled in disorder before them. Suddenly the ambuscade arose and poured their fire upon the crowd of savages, and joined the pursuit. The rout was complete and the remaining savages abandoned their positions and fled. About sixty Indians were slain. One hundred and sixteen privates and eight officers of the army were killed and a great number wounded.

After the battle, the army marched without interruption twenty-five miles to Fort Pitt, relieved the garrison and supplied the post with arms, ammunition and provisions, and secured it against the danger of a siege, or of falling into the hands of the savages.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Indian Barbarities at the Commencement of the Year 1764 — Col. Bradstreet's Expedition to the Upper Lakes —Col. Bouquet's Second Expedition — His Advance to the Indian Towns On the Muskingum — The Submission of the Savages — The Delivery of the Captives to the Whites — The Final Treaty of Peace.—Bouquet's Journal.

DURING the winter of 1764, there was a cessation of hostilities on the part of the Indians. Stricken with terror at the defeat and slaughter of their warriors at the battle of Bush creek, in Western Pennsylvania, by the army under Col. Bouquet, they retired farther into the forests and abandoned their usual haunts east of the Muskingum. But they retired only to prepare themselves for a renewal of hostilities in the ensuing year. The inhabitants on the frontiers being lulled into fancied security, by the stillness that reigned in the Indian camps during the winter, were awakened in the spring by the terrors of the war-whoop to all the horrors of savage barbarity. In several and distinct places they fell upon the border settlements, and wherever they went desolation and blood marked their trails. Alarm and suffering were again abroad among the inhabitants, and the whole frontier was the theatre of murdered families and burning dwellings.

It was therefore resolved that a decisive blow should be struck, and the merciless depredators be awed into silence and subjection. It was proposed to attack them at two different points, and "carry the war in the heart of their own country."

With this view, Col. Bradstreet was sent, with a body of troops, to act against the Wyandotts, Ottawas, Chippewas, and other nations living in the vicinity of the lakes; while Colonel Bouquet should pass an army through Pennsylvania into Ohio, and attack the Delawares, Shawanese, Mingoes, Mohicans and other nations between the Ohio and the Lakes.

These two divisions of the army were to act in concert. Col. Bradstreet was to proceed to Detroit, and Michilimackinac, in the first place, and on his return he was ordered to encamp and remain at Sandusky, to awe and hold in check the numerous north-western tribes, so as to prevent them from sending any assistance to the Ohio Indians, while Colonel Bouquet should march from Fort Pitt, and attack them in their settlements upon the Muskingum.

Active measures were taken to raise the requisite number of troops for the expedition of Colonel Bouquet. A part of two regiments of the regular army, to be joined by the troops of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and two hundred friendly Indians, were to compose the army under Colonel Bouquet.

The Indians never came, and the depredations of the savages upon the frontier of Virginia, employed all her troops for the defence of her own frontier. In Pennsylvania, the Assembly passed a bill for raising one thousand men, which received the sanction of the Governor on the thirtieth of May; but the complement of forces was not obtained until the beginning of August. On the fifth of that month, the troops assembled at Carlisle, under their officers, Colonel Reid, Lieutenant-Colonel Francis, and Lieutenant-Colonel Clayton. Colonel Bouquet, accompanied by Governor John Penn, having arrived and taken the command, the Governor addressed the Pennsylvania battallions, with a view to inspirit the soldiery, and to deter them from desertion. He adverted to the propriety of chastising the Indians, for their repeated and unprovoked barbarities on the inhabitants of the province: a just resentment of which, added to the courage of our provincial troops on former occasions, would, he did not doubt, animate them to do honor to their country. He told them that they were to be united to the same regular troops and under the same able commander, who had on that very day, the memorable fifth of August, in the preceding year, sustained the repeated attacks of the savages, and obtained over them a complete victory. He concluded by reminding them of the exemplary punishment that would be inflicted for desertion should any one, forgetting the duty which he owed the country and the solemn oath he had taken, be guilty of the crime.

The army then commenced its march, and on the thirteenth of August reached Fort Loudon. After all the precaution to prevent desertion, it was found that not less than three hundred of the Pennsylvania troops were missing. Application was immediately made to the Governor to replace the number by enlistment. The Governor gave the order, but the men were never raised. An application to the Governor of Virginia was more successful, and the requisite number joined Colonel Bouquet at Fort Pitt, in the latter end of September.

While at Fort Loudon, Colonel Bouquet received dispatches from Colonel Bradstreet, dated August fourteenth, informing him that a treaty of peace had been concluded by him with the Delawares and Shawanese; but as these savages continued their murders and depredations, Colonel Bouquet placed no confidence in their sincerity, and resolved to prosecute his enterprise, and to force, if possible, the savages from the frontiers. The propriety of his course was soon obvious. The express sent to Colonel Bradstreet, from Fort Pitt, with the answer to his communication, was murdered, and his head placed on a pole in the middle of the road.* The treaty entered into by the Indians was merely to gain time to remove their families.†

Colonel Bouquet arrived at Fort Pitt on the fifteenth day of September. Shortly afterwards ten Indians appeared on the opposite side of the Allegheny river, and desired a conference. It was apprehended that it was a stratagem to learn the strength of the fort. They were requested to come over the river, but seemed unwilling. Three of the party, at length, crossed over; but, giving no satisfactory reason for their visit, they were detained as spies, and their associates fled back to their towns.

On the twentieth of September, one of the Indians detained at the fort was sent to the towns on the Muskingum with the following message:

"I have received an account from Colonel Bradstreet that your nations had begged for peace, which he consented to grant, upon assurance that you had recalled all your warriors from the frontiers; and in consequence thereof, I would not proceed against your towns, if I had not heard that, in open violation of your engagements, you have since murdered several of our people. As soon as the rest of the army joins me, which I expect immediately, I was therefore determined to have attacked you, as a people whose promises can no more be relied upon. But I will put it once more in your power to save yourselves and your families from total destruction, by giving us satisfaction for the hostilities against us. And, first, you are to leave the path open for my expresses, from hence to Detroit; and as I am now to send two men with despatches to Colonel Bradstreet, who commands on the Lakes, I desire to know whether you will send two of your people with them to conduct them safe back with an answer? And if they receive any injury either going or coming, or if the letters are taken from them, I will immediately put the Indians now in my power to death, and will show no mercy in future to any of your nation that may fall into my hands. I allow you ten days to have my letters delivered at Detroit, and ten days to bring back an answer."

About this time two Indians, an Onondago and an Oneida, came to Fort Pitt, with many professions of ancient friendship for the English, and endeavored to persuade Colonel Bouquet to abandon his design of marching against the Ohio Indians. They represented the expedition as dangerous, on account of the powerful and numerous tribes living in that region that would be arrayed against him. They recommended the dismissal of the two Indians detained at the fort, and gave assurances that if no hostile movements were made, the Indians would come and make peace. But these assurances being looked upon as a scheme to delay the march of the troops, till the lateness of the season would prevent them from proceeding, Colonel Bouquet answered that dependence could no longer be placed upon their promises, and that he would proceed to Tuscarawas, and either meet them in battle, or have a treaty permanently ratified.

On the third day of October, Colonel Bouquet, with fifteen hundred men, departed from Fort Pitt, marched about a mile and a half over a rich level country and encamped for the night. The next morning the army proceeding about two miles, came to the Ohio, at the beginning of the narrows, and then followed the course of the river along the beach. The next day they passed through Logstown, seventeen miles and a half from Fort Pitt.

This place was noted for many years for the great trade carried on with the Indians, by the English and French. The Delawares and Shawanese abandoned it in 1750' and it was taken possession of by the Mingoes. It was deserted by the Mingoes after the battle of Brush Creek. The lower town extended about sixty perches over a rich bottom to the foot of a low steep ridge, on the summit of which, near the declivity, stood the upper town, commanding a most agreeable prospect over the lower town, and quite across the Ohio, which, by its majestic, easy current, added much to the beauty of the place.

The following day, the army passing over a steep ridge, crossed Big Beaver Creek, twenty perches in depth. It runs through a rich vale, with a strong current; its banks are high, and the upland adjoining it very good, covered with tall young timber.

About a mile lrom its confluence with the Ohio, stood formerly a large town on a steep bank, built by the French for some Shawanese, Delawares and Mingoes. The houses were constructed of square logs, with stone chimnies. It was abandoned in 1758, when the French were driven from Fort Duquesne. Near the fording of Beaver Creek, stood also several houses, which were deserted and destroyed by the Indians, after their defeat at Brush Creek.

Two miles before the army reached Beaver, a person who had escaped from the Indians, came in. He had been taken about a week before, near Fort Bedford, by six Delawares. He stated that the Indians had seen the army the day before, but kept aloof, being awed by its numbers.*

On the thirteenth of October, Colonel Bouquet, with his army, arrived at Tuscarawas, near the forks of the Muskingum. This place was found to be exceedingly beautiful, the lands rich on both sides of the river,—the country on the north-west side being a level plain for more than five miles in circumference.

While the army remained in camp here, the two men who had been sent by Colonel Bouquet to Colonel Bradstreet at Detroit, arrived. They reported that they had been made prisoners by the Delawares, within a few miles of this place, and taken about sixteen miles to one of their towns, where they were kept until the savages learning the arrival of the army, set them at liberty, ordering them to say to Colonel Bouquet that the Chiefs of the Delawares and Shawanese were coming to negotiate a peace.

The next day Colonel Bouquet proceeded two miles further down the Muskingum, and encamped on a high bank. The next day the Indians came to inform him, that all their chiefs were assembled about eight miles distant, and were ready to enter into a treaty with him, and were earnestly desirous of peace. He returned an answer, that he would meet them the next day in a bower at some distance from the camp. In the meantime he built a small stockade fort for the deposit of provisions, for the use of the troops on their return and to lighten the convoy.

*Gordon's History of Pennsylvania, p. 435. †Penn. Gazette, 1764.

*The facts in relation to the march of the army, are mostly taken from Hutchens' Historical Account of Bouquets Expedition, published in Craig's Olden Time, No. 6, pp. 241, 263; and Appendix, pp. 143, 166.

On the seventeenth of October, Colonel Bouquet, attended by a portion of the regular troops, the Virginia volunteers, and the light horse, repaired to the bower that had been erected for the conference. Shortly after the troops had been arranged so as to appear to the best advantage, the Indians arrived at the place appropriated for them. Of the Delawares, two tribes were present, numbering twenty warriors, with their respective chiefs, Custaloga and Beaver. Of the Shawanese, Keissinautchtha, a deputy from the chiefs, and six warriors. And of the Senecas, Kiyashuta, their chief Sachem, and fifteen warriors. Kiyashnta, Custaloga, Beaver and Turtle-Heart, were the chief speakers. Being seated, they first smoked the calumet of peace; after which, they laid them aside, and addressed Colonel Bouquet at length. The substance of what they had to offer consisted in excuses for their late treachery and misconduct, throwing the blame on the rashness of their young men, and the nations living to the westward of them; sueing for peace in an humble manner, and promising severally to deliver up all their prisoners. After they had concluded, the Colonel promised to give them an answer the next day, and after dismissing them returned with the army to camp.

On account of unfavorable weather, the next meeting did not take place until the twentieth, when Colonel Bouquet, replied, "that their pretances to palliate their guilt by throwing the blame on the Western nations, and the rashness of their young men, were weak and frivilous, as it was in the power of the English to have protected them against all these nations, if they had solicited assistance, and that it was their own duty to have chastised their young men when they did wrong, and not to suffer themselves to be directed by them.

He recapitulated to them many instances of their former perfidy; their killing or captivating the traders who had been sent among them, at their own request, and plundering their effects; their attacking Fort Pitt, which had been built with their express consent; their murdering four men that had been sent on a public message to them, thereby violating the customs held sacred among all nations, however barbarous; their attacking the English army at Brush creek, and after being defeated, falling upon the frontier and continuing to murder. He also referred to their treacherous violation of their late engagements with Colonel Bradstreet, in which they stipulated to deliver up all their prisoners by the tenth of September last, and to recall all their warriors from the frontiers. "You have," said he, "promised at every former treaty, as you do now, to deliver up all your prisoners, and have received at every time presents, but have never complied with the engagements. I am now to tell you, therefore, that the English will no longer be imposed upon by your promises. This army shall not leave your country, until you have fully complied with every condition that is to precede a treaty with you."

"I have brought with me, the relations of the people you have massacred, or taken prisoners. They are impatient for revenge; and it is with difficulty that I can protect you against their just resentment, which is only restrained by the assurances given them, that no peace shall ever be concluded till you have given full satisfaction."

"Your former allies, the Ottawas, Chippewas, Wyandotts, and others, have made peace with us. The Six Nations have joined us against you. We now surround you, having possession of all the waters of the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Lakes. All the French living in those parts are now subjects of Great Britain, and dare no longer assist you. It is therefore in our power totally to extirpate you from being a people. But the English are a merciful and generous nation, averse to shed the blood even of their most cruel enemies; and if it were possible that you could convince us that you sincerely repent of your past perfidy, and that we could depend on your good behavior for the future, you might yet hope for mercy and peace. If I find you faithfully execute the following preliminary conditions, I will not treat you with the severity you deserve. I give you twelve days to deliver into my hands all the prisoners in your possession, without any exception; Englishmen, Frenchmen, women and children, whether adopted in your tribes, married, or living amongst you under any denomination and pretence, whatsoever, together with all the negroes. And you are to furnish the said prisoners with clothing, provisions and horses, to carry them to Fort Pitt. When you have fully complied with these conditions, you shall then know on what terms you may obtain the peace you ask.*

The decided tone of this speech had the desired effect. The determined spirit in which it was delivered, the boldness of the army in penetrating into the wilderness, which they had deemed impassable by regular troops, and the vigilance of the commander who had signally defeated them at Bushy run, had the desired effect, and awed them into a desire for peace.

At the close of the former conference on the seventeenth, the two Delaware chiefs delivered eighteen white prisoners, and also eighty-three small sticks expressing the number of other prisoners in their possession, promising to release them as soon as possible. None of the Shawanese Sachems appeared at the conference, and their deputy, Keissinautchtha, declined speaking until Colonel Bouquet had answered the Delawares, and then with a dejected sulleness, he promised in behalf of his nation, to submit to the terms agreed upon by the other tribes.

As the presence of the army was the best security for the performance of the promises of the Indians, Colonel Bouquet determined to march further into the country, and required some of each nation to attend him on his march. And before they separated, Kiyashta, the leading sachem, addressed the chiefs and warriors of the several nations, desiring them "to be strong in complying with their engagements, that they might wipe away the reproach of their former breach of faith, and convince their brothers, the English, that they could speak the truth," adding "that he would conduct the army to the place appointed for receiving the prisoners."†

Colonel Bouquet declined shaking hands with the chiefs at the close of this meeting, and as they appeared dissatisfied, he told them that the English never took their enemies by the hand until peace was finally concluded.‡ The council then separated.

On the twenty-second day of October, the army began its march to the place appointed to receive the prisoners. But arriving at a place about a mile from the forks of the Muskingum, and thirty miles from the place of holding the late council, Colonel Bouquet concluded to encamp, it being in the midst of their towns and settlements. Four redoubts were built opposite the four angles of the camp; the ground in front was cleared, a store-house erected for provisions, and also a house to receive the Indians for the purpose of holding a council, upon their return with the prisoners.

Messengers now arrived in camp from the Delawares and Shawanese, with information that the prisoners were already on their way, in charge of the Indians; and a Caughnawaga

*Hutchins' Historical account of the expedition of Colonel Bouquet, against the Indians, in 1764, published in Craig's Olden Time, Vol. 1, No. 6, page 246, 248.

†Hutchens' Historical Account, in Craig's Olden Time, Vol. I. p. 248, 249.

‡Hutchens' Historical Account, in Craig's Olden Time, Vol. I. p. 249.

chief and twenty warriors presented themselves to Colonel Bouquet, with a letter from Colonel Bradstreet, in answer to the one which had been sent, by two Indians from Fort Pitt. The substance of this communication was, that Colonel Bradstreet had settled nothing with the several Indian tribes, and had recovered no prisoners—and that he found it impossible any longer to co-operate with Colonel Bouquet. It is impossible to say what would have been the effect of this determination, if Colonel Bouquet had not been in possession of the Indian territory with his army, and had the chiefs of the several tribes with him.

On Friday, the ninth of November, the Colonel, attended by most of the principal officers, went to the council-house. Most of the prisoners had now arrived, and were given up, amounting to two hundred and six. Almost one hundred were still in possession of the Shawanese, which were to be delivered up in the following spring. The conference was first opened with the Senecas and Delawares. Kiyashuta and ten warriors represented the former, Custaloga and twenty warriors the latter.

Kiyashuta, Sachem of the Senecas, arose and spoke as follows:

"With this string of wampum, we wipe away the tears from your eyes—we deliver you these three prisoners, which are the last of your flesh and blood that remained among the Senecas and Custaloga tribe of Delawares.* We gather together and bring with this belt,† all the bones of the people that have been killed during this unhappy war, which the evil spirit occasioned among us. We cover the bones that have been buried, that they may be never more remembered. We again cover their place with leaves, that it may be no more seen. As we have been long astray, and the path between you and us stopped, we extend this belt, that it may be again cleared, and we may travel in peace to see our brethren as our ancestors formerly did. While you hold it fast by one end, and we by the other, we shall always be able to discover anything that may disturb our friendship."

Colonel Bouquet replied, that he received the last prisoners, and heard with much gratification the speech of Kiyashuta. He was ready to join in burying the bones of the victims of this war, so that their places might be no more seen. The peace asked for should now be had. But as he was a warrior, other persons would be commissioned to make a treaty with them. He then required two hostages from each tribe, as a security against further hostilities, and that deputies should be sent fully empowered to treat for all the tribes, with Sir William Johnson, at Fort Pitt; and in that treaty everything should be settled to render the peace everlasting. This was done, when he took the chiefs by the hand for the first time which gave them great joy.

The next day Colonel Bouquet met King Beaver, chief of the two other tribes of the Delawares, with thirty warriors, when the same ceremonies took place between them as on the preceding day, with the other tribes. He presented six hostages, and five deputies, to treat for peace.

The Shawanese met Colonel Bouquet in council, on the twelfth of November. Although this nation saw themselves under the necessity of yielding to the same conditions with the other tribes, yet there appeared a reluctance and sullen haughtiness in their conduct, which rendered it very suspicious. Their chiefs and forty warriors were present, also about sixty warriors, and their chiefs, of the Senecas and Delawares.

The Red Hawk was their speaker, and he delivered himself with a strange mixture of pride and submission. The following extracts are specimens:

"BROTHER:—You will listen to us your younger brethren; and as we discover something in your eyes, that prevents you from being satisfied with us, we will wipe it away that you may clearly see. You have heard many bad stories of us. We clear your ears that you may hear. We remove every bad thing from your heart, that it may be like the heart of your ancestors when they thought nothing but good.

"When we saw you coming this road, you advanced towards us, with an uplifted tomahawk in your hand; but we take it out of your hands to throw it to the GOOD SPIRIT, to dispose of as he pleases. And now brother, who are yourself a warrior, we ask you to take hold of this chain of friendship, and receive it from us, who are also warriors, and let us think no more of war, in pity to our old men, women and children.

"Now, brother, I beg that we who are warriors may forget our disputes, and renew the friendship which appears by these papers, which I hold in my hand, to have subsisted between our fathers.

A number of prisoners were delivered up, and hostages given to Colonel Bouquet, as security for the promised treaty of peace. Red Hawk pledged himself in behalf of the rest of the nation, who were absent at a great distance, in hunting, that they certainly should come to Fort Pitt in the spring, and bring the remainder of the prisoners with them. This pledge was afterwards faithfully redeemed.

The basis of a treaty now being effected, the prisoners were brought into camp. Then occurred a scene of thrilling interest; where were to be seen fathers and mothers recognizing and clasping their once lost babes; husbands hanging around the necks of their newly recovered wives; sisters and brothers unexpectedly meeting together after long separations, scarce able to speak the same language, or for some time, to be sure they were children of the same parents! In all these interviews, joy and rapture inexpressible were seen, while feelings of a very different nature were painted in the looks of others, flying from place to place in eager enquiries after relations not found! trembling to receive an answer to their questions! distracted with doubts, hopes and fears, on obtaining no account of those they sought for! or stiffened into living monuments of horror or woe, on learning their unhappy fate. The Indians, too, as if wholly forgetting their usual savageness, bore a capital part in heightening these most affecting scenes. They delivered up their beloved captives with the utmost reluctance, shed torrents of tears over them, recommending them to the care and protection of the commanding officer, and continuing their regard to them all the time they remained in the camp. They visited them from day to day; brought them what corn, skins, horses, and other matters, they had bestowed on them while in their families; accompanied with other presents, and all the marks of the most sincere and tender affection. Nay, they did not stop here, but, when the army marched, some of the Indians solicited and obtained leave to accompany their former captives all the way to Fort Pitt, and employed themselves in hunting provisions for them on the road. A young Mingo went still further, and gave an instance of love which would make a figure even in romance. He had taken such a liking to a Virginia young woman, who was amongst the captives, as to call her his wife. Against all remonstrances of the imminent danger to which he exposed himself by approaching the frontiers, he persisted in following her at the risk of being killed by the surviving relations of many unfortunate persons, who had been captivated or scalped by those of his nation.

These qualities in savages challenge our just esteem. They should make us charitably consider their barbarities as the effects of wrong education and false notions of bravery and heroism; while we should look on their virtues as sure marks that nature has made them fit subjects of cultivation as well as us; and that we are called on by our superior advantages to yield them all the help we can in this way. Cruel and unmerciful as they are, by habit and long example in war, yet, whenever they come to give way to the native dictates of humanity they exercise virtues which christians need not blush to imitate. When they once determine to give life, they give everything with it, which, in their apprehension, belongs to it. From every inquiry that has been made, it appears that no woman thus saved is preserved for base motives, or need fear the violation of her honor. No child is otherwise treated by the persons adopting it, than the children of their own body. The perpetual slavery of those captivated in war is a notion which even their barbarity has not yet suggested to them. Every captive, whom their affection, their caprice, or whatever else, leads them to save, is soon incorporated with them, and fares alike with themselves.

*The others had been delivered up previously.

†The speaker always delivers a belt or string, at the time it is mentioned.

Among the captives, a woman was brought into the camp at Muskingum, with a babe about three months old at her breast. One of the Virginia volunteers soon knew her to be his wife, who had been taken by the Indians six months before. She was immediately delivered to her overjoyed husband. He flew with her to his tent, and clothed her and his child in proper apparel. But her joy, after the first transports were soon dampened by the reflection that another dear child of about two years old, captivated with the mother, and separated from her, was still missing, although many children had been brought in.

A few days afterward a number of other prisoners were brought in, and among them were several more children. The woman was sent for, and one supposed to be hers was produced to her. At first sight she was uncertain, but viewing the child with great earnestness, she soon recollected its features, and was so overcome with joy, that, literally forgetting her sucking child, she dropped it from her arms, and, catching up the new found child in an ecstasy, clasped it to her breast, and, bursting into tears, carried it off, unable to speak for joy. The father, seizing up the babe she had let fall, followed her in no less transport and affection.

Among the children who had been carried off, and had long lived with the Indians, it is not to be expected that marks of joy would appear on being restored to their parents or relations. Having been accustomed to look upon the Indians as the only connections they had, having been tenderly treated by them, and speaking their language, it is no wonder that they considered their new state in the light of a captivity, and parted from the savages with tears.

But it must not be denied that there were even some grown persons who showed an unwillingness to return. The Shawanese were obliged to bind several of their prisoners, and force them along to the camp; and some women, who had been delivered up, afterwards found means to escape and run back to the Indian towns. Some, who could not make their escape, clung to their savage acquaintances at parting, and continued many days in bitter lamentations, even refusing sustenance.

The following paragraph from the speech of the Shawanese chief, on delivering his prisoners, is a strong proof of what is before observed, concerning their tenderness and affection for the captives whom they have preserved:

"Father, says, he to the English, we have brought your flesh and blood to you; they have all been united to us by adoption, and although we now deliver them up to you, we will always look upon them as our relations, whenever the Great Spirit is pleased that we may visit them. We have taken as much care of them as if they were our own flesh and blood. They are now become acquainted with your customs and manners, and therefore we request you will use them tenderly and kindly, which will induce them to live contentedly with you."

Business now having been closed with the Indians, the army commenced its march on the 18th of November for Fort Pitt, and arrived there on the 28th.

A few days afterwards Colonel Bouquet proceeded to Philadelphia, and from thence returned to England.

In the ensuing spring, when the ninth of May, the time designated for holding the council for ratifying the treaty of peace, arrived, ten chiefs and about fifty warriors, accompanied by a large body of the Delaware, Seneca, Sandusky, and Muncy tribes, made their appearance at Fort Pitt, for the faithful fulfillment of their promises. They brought with them all the prisoners except a few, who they said were absent with their hunting parties—such as probably preferred a savage life.

The Shawanese now, as well as the other nations, expressed their entire satisfaction at the treaty of peace. Their tone was completely changed, and they seemed indeed rejoiced in perfectly brightening "the chain of friendship." Peace was ratified, and the Indians returned to their homes in the wilderness; and the deserted hearth stones of the white inhabitants, upon the frontiers, were again revisited, and the wave of population began to move on westward.

Thus closed the memorable Kiyashuta and Pontiac war—one of short duration, but nevertheless productive of more distracting disquietude, and serious injury to the frontier settlements, than had been experienced during years of previous hostility. The peace that now ensued lasted until a short time prior to the revolution, and gave confidence and security to the pioneers of the west. It was during this period of quietude that emigration to the valley west of the Alleghenies, was permanently commenced, when the foundations were laid of great and powerful States, now holding a controlling influence in the American Union.

Colonel Bouquet's Journal and Conferences with the Western Indians, &c., at Fort Pitt, Tuscarora and Muskingum, in 1764, Sept. 20, Nov. 12.

The speech of Colonel Bouquet, commanding the army upon the river Ohio, to Captain Jacobs and the Delaware chiefs with him, at Fort Pitt, 20th September, 1764.

"Sometime ago I received an account from Colonel Bradstreet, commanding the army upon the Lakes, that the Delawares and Shawanese had begged for peace, which he was willing to grant them, and as you assured them that you had recalled all your warriors from the frontiers. Sometime before he wrote me not to proceed against your towns. I therefore would not have proceeded, had I not have heard that in open violation of your engagement, your party killed a man at Raystown, and several men in Virginia, a long time after you had begged for peace; upon which I determined to march to Fort Pitt, and wait there for an answer to the letter I wrote to Colonel Bradstreet; but to my great astonishment upon my arrival at that place, I hear that one of our people has been murdered, and his head stuck upon a pole, in the path near Little Beaver creek, and that several of your parties are still on our frontiers. As I must consider you now as a people whose promise I can no more trust, I was determined to attack you, as soon as the rest of the army joined me, which I expect immediately; but I will put it once more in your power to prevent your total destruction and save yourselves and your families by giving us satisfaction for the hostilities committed against us.

And first, you are to leave the path open for my expresses from this fort to Detroit. And as I now intend to write to Col. Bradstreet, who commands the army upon the Lakes, I will send my letters by two of our men, and I desire to know from you whether you will engage to send two of your people with them to bring them safe back to me with an answer from Col. Bradstreet. If they receive any injury, either in going or returning, or if the letters are taken from them, I will immediately put Capt. Pipe, and the other Indians now in my power, to death; and will show no mercy for the future to any one of your nations that shall fall into my hands. I allow you ten days to have my letters delivered to Col. Bradstreet at Detroit, or to the commanding officer there, and the same number of days to bring me back an answer from him.

You must be sensible that during your stay here, I have had it in my power to put you all to death, and you deserved it, by refusing to speak with me when you pretended to have come as friends; but I have not done it, to show you that you have yet a door open to mercy, and I desire that you will now go to your towns (except the two men who are to proceed with the expresses.) and acquaint your chiefs of what I say, and that I expect they will immediately come to me, and deliver up all their prisoners, if they have not already delivered them to Col. Bradstreet, and give such other satisfaction for the murders committed by your nations, as I shall require of them. With this last part I send to the chiefs this belt of wampum to show them that I shall still be ready to hear them on their giving me proper satisfaction."—A belt.

Speech of an Onondago and an Oneida Indian to Col. Bouquet, at Fort Pitt, October 2, 1764.

Usual compliments, a string of wampum.

"Brothers: We are come to inform you that the Indians living upon this river, are now in a state of confusion. You do not see clearly what their intentions are; and we desire you to wait a little, and make yourselves easy till we are able to open your eyes, as we still see you keep some evil designs in your minds against them. We likewise, desire you may remove all this from your hearts, and that you will receive them civilly, should any of them come to see you; and they will treat you in the same manner."—A string.

"Brothers: We desire you will remember the ancient friendship which has so long subsisted between you and the Six Nations. We have been sent by Sir William Johnson, to speak to the different nations this way, to endeavor to make up matters between you and them; and beg you will hear them, and comply with their requests, as they are ready to do with yours. We now see you are going against those nations, who first disturbed the peace, who are the Senecas living down this river, the Wyandotts, the Delawares and Shawanese. They are all now sincerely sorry for what they have done, and are collecting all their prisoners from the lower Shawanese town in order to deliver them up at Sandusky. What we now tell you, on behalf of these nations, is the truth. You may depend upon every thing we say, as we have never deceived you, knowing that if we did, God would punish us for it."—A belt.

"Brother: As the officer who commands the army upon the lakes has taken the above nations by the hand, and kindled for them a council fire at Sandusky, where they are now going, they beg that you would likewise forgive them as they very much repent their past conduct, and they promise, as soon as they have complied with their engagements there, they will then come. I ask forgiveness of you, till which time. We desire you may not be uneasy. They have desired us to assure you, in their names, that they will be at Sandusky in a few days from this date, to deliver up all the prisoners, and we desire once more that you will wait a little, and not be uneasy till you hear further from them; but consider what we have said. And as you have detained two of the Delawares that came to see you, we give it as our opinion that it would be best to let them return home, giving them a letter to their chiefs, informing them of your intention." A belt.

"Brother: We beg once more that you will seriously consider what you are now going to do; and do nothing precipitably; but if you are determined to proceed with the army, it is our opinion it would be best for you to take the road leading to Sandusky, where you will meet with Col. Bradstreet and there settle everything with him. When the terms of peace are settled with the nations who desire it, should any of them refuse to comply with the terms agreed to, or break the peace afterwards, we will join with you to chastise them. We feel, as well as you, the misbehavior of the nations; but as they now repent, we forgive them and hope you will do the same." A belt.

Col. Bouquet's speech to the above, Fort Pitt, October 3, 1764.

"Brothers: You say that those nations are sorry for what they have done, and that they will make peace with us, and deliver all their prisoners at Sandusky.

"Brethren: The Delawares, Wyandotts and Shawanese are a false people, and they deceive you, as they have always done; if they are sincere, why don't their chiefs come to speak to me. They have in time of peace killed our traders in their towns; they have stole all their goods. They have attacked this fort, and when I came up last year, they attacked me in the woods,* and killed some of our people, and finding us too strong for them, they went to the settlements, where they murdered and carried off a great number of men, women and children. When the Chenceses, and all the western Indians have made peace with Sir Wm. Johnson, at Niagara, these people did go, but they wrote a letter to kill him; they despised us. At last you went to Col. Bradstreet at Presque Isle, and asked peace for them, and told him, they had recalled all their warriors from our frontiers, but a long time afterwards they killed a man at Bedford, and a great many more in Virginia, and they even kill now. When I saw their hearts were still so bad, I came here with the army to attack them, but I first sent to Sandusky to inform Col. Bradstreet, that they had again struck us. My messengers did not find him at Sandusky, and saw that the Delawares had killed another of our people and fixed his head upon a pole in the path, after you had asked peace for them. Now, that they see we know their perfidy and will chastise them, they say, they are are sorry for what they have done, and will make peace. But this is not sufficient satisfaction for us.

"Brother: The general has sent me with an army to take revenge for the murders committed by the Delawares and Shawanese, and not to make peace; but as you say they want to be friends with us, I will tell you what I intend to do. I will go (as you desire) by the road leading to Sandusky, and if the chiefs of the Delawares and Shawanese have anything to say to me, I will hear them at Tuscarawas; and if they are sincerely inclined for peace, I will tell them at that place what they are to do to obtain it; and in case they agree with me upon the preliminary terms, I will permit them to go to Sir William Johnson to conclude it. I have detained two Delawares, because they came here as spies without having anything to say from their chiefs; and at a time when the Delawares and Shawanese had broke the peace, and struck us again. I will, however, use them well, and when peace is concluded between us and the Delawares, I will send them home.

"Brothers: You told Colonel Bradstreet, and you now tell me, that if these nations broke the peace you had made for them, you would join us and strike them. You see they have broken the peace, and that their parties are still at our frontiers killing our people; they know this to be true, and have deceived you. I will write to Colonel Bradstreet and hear what has passed between him and those nations; and I ask you whether you will go with two of my people to Colonel Bradstreet and bring me an answer with my two men at Tuscarawas; and I declare to you that if the Delawares, Shawanese, and Wyandots do them any injury, I will put the two Delaware Indians to death, and march against them, which, if they oblige me to do, they must never expect peace from us. You may let the Delawares and Shawanese know that on my march to Tuscarawas, I will not kill any of their people unless they attack me first." A belt.

*Near Bush Run, August 6, 1763, where, in a desperate engagement, the Indian killed about fifty, and wounded about sixty of Bouquet's men.—I. D. R.

October 3d, 1764. The army left Fort Pitt and arrived the 6th at Beaver Creek, when John Pallmer, who had been taken prisoner the 28th September, came to the army, having made his escape from the Indians the night before.

13th. Arrived at Tuscarawas without any interruption from the enemy, who kept parties upon the road to observe the motions of the army.

Camp at Tuscarawas, October 15, 1764.

Received the following message, in writing, from the chief warriors of the Delawares:

"Brother, Colonel Bouquet—We are glad to hear the good speeches which you made, and also that our brothers, Captain Pipe and Captain John, are alive and salute us. We now salute you with a good heart, and shall be more glad when we meet you at Tuscarawas, if we see our brothers, Pipe and John, at a small distance; then we should think that you mean nothing but good. [Signed.]

Linechque,	Simon Girty,	Capt. Killbuck,
Winginum,	Capt. Will,	Jecasse, or
Neolan,	Capt. Jacobs,	Thos. Hickman,
Sunfish,	Neachaolan,	Welapachikin.

The above message was written by Mr. Gibson, a prisoner amongst them.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

Camp near Tuscarawas, October 15, 1764.

"Chiefs, Captains and warriors of the Delawares—I received your letter you sent me yesterday, by which I see you are coming to speak to me. I shall be glad to hear what you have to say, and I will wait for you to-morrow at this place. You may come without fear, for I will not hurt you, or detain any of you; but leave you at liberty to go where you please, not doubting but you will behave in a proper manner. You will give me notice a little before hand, at what time you intend to come, that I may send people to bring you to camp. Captain Pipe and Captain John are both well, and if any of their friends choose to see them, I will give them leave after I have heard what you have to say; and they shall be set at liberty as soon as peace is made, which will shortly happen, if you have well considered my message and determined to do what is right.

[Signed.] Henry Bouquet.

Camp near Tuscarawas, October 16, 1764.

Speech of four Senecas and two Delawares to Colonel Bouquet:

"Brother: We received your letter yesterday, by the white man you sent us, expressing you were glad. He returned to you, after being at our town, to acquaint you of our coming to meet you. We now thank God for giving us this opportunity of seeing one another, and speaking together; and our chief warriors, women and children return you their thanks for the message you sent them yesterday.

"Brother: We thank God for enabling us this day to wipe your eyes that you may clearly see our chiefs when they come to speak with you; and we clean your body with this string of wampum, that you may cheerfully receive to your heart the good speeches they will make to you." A string.

"Brother: As we have now wiped your eyes and cleaned your body in behalf of ourselves, the Senecas living on the Ohio, the Delawares and Shawanese, we inform you that the reason of our not coming sooner, is because the Shawanese are not yet come; but the chiefs of the other two nations are all present, and we expect the Shawanese to-morrow; when they shall have a meeting amongst themselves they will then come to speak to you.

"Brother: Another reason for not meeting you sooner, was because that beloved Colonel Bradstreet had invited us to the lakes at the same time that you expected us to meet you at Fort Pitt. In this case we were at a loss which way to go; but when you hear our chiefs you will be convinced that our delay was not through any bad designs against you." A string.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

"Brothers: I am glad to hear what you say; as peace is preferable to war, I shall be well pleased if we agree upon terms." A string.

"Brothers: You sent me a message yesterday, acquainting me that you would come and speak with me to-day. You tell me you cannot speak to me, because the Shawanese are not come, and that when the Shawanese do arrive you will consult together; but I now tell you it is not necessary to wait for the Shawanese, but will hear separately what each nation has to say; and I desire the Delaware chiefs to speak for the Delawares only, and not for the Senecas or Shawanese." A string.

Camp near Tuscarawas, October 17, 1764.

AT A CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE CHIEFS OF THE SENECAS LIVING ON THE OHIO, THE DELAWARES AND SHAWANESE.

Present—Colonel Henry Bouquet, commanding his Majesty's forces in the Southern District; Lieutenant Colonel Reed, Royal Highlanders; Lieutenant Colonel Francis, Pennsylvanians; Lieutenant Colonel Clayton, Pennsylvanians; Major Prevost, Royal Americans; Major Murray, Royal Highlanders; Major De Haas, Pennsylvanians; Major Field, Virginia Volunteers; Brigadier Major Small, Captain Stewart, Royal Highlanders; Captain Grant, Royal Highlanders; Captain Ourry, Deputy Quartermaster General; Captain Williams, Chief Engineer; Captain Lewis, Virginia Volunteers, with several other gentlemen of the army; Mr. Alex. McKee, Assistant Agent for Indian affairs; David Owens, Interpreter.

INDIANS.

Senecas.	Delawares.	Shawanese.
Keyashuta, Chief, with fifteen warriors.	Custaloga, Beaver, with twenty warriors.	Kussinutchtcha, Chief, with six warriors.

Keyashuta and Turtleheart, Speakers:

"Brother: In the name, and by order of the Chiefs of the several nations here, present with this string of wampum, we clean your ears that you may hear with all attention what they are now going to say to you.

"Brother: We have done our utmost to be ready to speak to-day as you desired; and we now inform you that it was owing to the nations who live to the westward of us, and to our foolish young men, that the war has happened between us, so that it is neither your fault nor ours; and as you desired us yesterday to be strong in doing good, we now throw away every thing bad so that none of it remains in our hearts, and we join our thoughts with yours that we may always be of one mind for the future." Two large belts.

"Brother: Now we have thrown away every thing bad; nothing remains bad in our hearts, but good. We take fast hold of this chain of friendship, and we, the Chiefs of the Delawares, Shawanese and Senecas, living upon the Ohio, who are related to the Six Nations, request you will do the same, as we cannot hold it fast without your help, and we must both look up to God, who now sees every thing that passes between us, for His assistance. Do not think that what we say comes from our lips only, it proceeds from the bottom of our hearts; therefore we again request that you will join both hands with ours to this belt of friendship." A belt.

"Brother: We have respectfully told you that we have thrown away every bad thing from our hearts; that you should hear nothing but good from us. Colonel Bradstreet has desired us to deliver up your flesh and blood; we now assure you it shall be done, as you have long desired to see them. Our reasons for not complying with this request sooner, was that Colonel Bradstreet held us by one hand and you by the other, so that we did not know which way to carry them. But we now desire that you will inform us at what place you choose to receive them; whether at Fort Pitt or the lakes. We have been very dilgent in collecting ourselves together, with the few prisoners you see, to meet you." A belt.

N. B. Here they delivered up eighteen white prisoners.

"This is all we are ordered to say by our Chiefs; you will listen to themselves."

Custaloga, Chief of the Delawares of the Wolf tribe, speaker.

"Brother: By this string I confirm every thing that has been said by our two young men." A string.

"Brother: I assure you that the intention of my tribe is good, and that we are determined to do what you desire, and deliver you up your flesh and blood."

"I now deliver you the number of prisoners amongst my people." Delivered forty-two small sticks.

Beaver, Chief of the Turkey tribes, speaker.

"Brother: You shall likewise soon see all your flesh and blood who are still prisoners among my tribe."

N. B. Delivered forty-one small sticks.

Keyashuta, speaker.

"Brethren: You have now heard all we have to say at present, and we think we have done every thing required of us by Col. Bradstreet, who sent me to their nations with these articles of peace."

Here he produced the original articles of peace signed by Colonel Bradstreet.

THE CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE SENECA CHIEFS LIVING UPON THE OHIO, THE DELAWARES AND SHAWANESE.

Present.—Col. Henry Bouquet, commanding his Majesty's forces in the southern district, and the officers mentioned at the conference of the 17th; also the same Indians, chiefs and warriors.

"Chiefs, captains and warriors: I wish that in your speeches you may have expressed the true sentiments of your nations; but we shall judge of your sincerity, not from your words, but from actions." A string.

"You say that it was not your fault that this war happened, but that it was owing to the Western Nations and your foolish young men. I answer that it is your fault, because we might have protected you against these nations had they attempted to force you to make war upon us. And as to your young men, it is your duty to chastise them when they do wrong, and not suffer yourselves to be directed by them." A string.

"I am glad to hear you have thrown every thing bad out of your hearts, and that you are now sincerely disposed to take fast hold of the chain of friendship, which, as soon as peace is made with you, we shall likewise hold fast." A string.

"You say the reason of not delivering your prisoners sooner was because Colonel Bradstreet had told you to deliver them to him at Sandusky, and I had told you to deliver them to me. You know by the treaty made with Colonel Bradstreet, and now in your hands, and to which I appeal, you promised expressly to deliver all the prisoners to him at Sandusky in twenty-five days after the fourteenth of August, when the said treaty was signed; and if you failed in the performance of that article, the peace was then broken from that moment. The day on which the prisoners ought to have been delivered was the eighth of September, and my first message to you in writing, and in your hands, is dated at Fort Pitt, on the 20th of September, twelve days after the time fixed was elapsed, and not being sent till the 22d you could not receive it in your towns before the 27th; therefore that message cannot, in any manner, excuse you for breaking the peace, in not delivering your prisoners, either to Col. Bradstreet or to me; from which it is very evident that, as usual, you never intended to deliver them!! Again, when you begged for peace, you assured Col. Bradstreet that you had recalled all your warriors from our frontiers, and you know, contrary to that declaration, they have continued to murder our people, and to take them prisoners to this day, which we can prove by an old man here present, who was taken on the 28th of September, forty-five days after the peace was made!

"I have, besides, certain information that you were determined to pay no regard to that peace; and had actually collected all the warriors of the Mingoes, Delawares and Shawanese to attack this army if you had found you had sufficient force for it!

"Having now answered and refuted every thing you have said in excuse for your breach of peace, I am commanded by the General to declare to you, that as you have broken the peace granted to you by Col. Bradstreet, he likewise breaks it on his side; and Sir William Johnson has already informed the Six Nations, and all the western Indians, of your perfidious behaviour to us." A belt.

"You must be sensible, that you deserve the severest chastisement, but the English are a merciful and generous people, averse from shedding the blood even of their most cruel enemies; and if it was possible that you could convince us, that you sincerely repent of your past conduct, and that we could depend on your good behavior for the future, you might yet hope for mercy and peace; but before I tell you the terms, I will recapitulate the many injuries from you, or your allies, which have at last occasioned the march of the King's army into your country." A belt.

"You have commenced this war without the least reason or provocation whatsoever. You have in time of profound peace, and without having received the least injury, murdered Capt. Clapham, who had been a friend and a father to many of you. You have killed, or captured all the traders sent to your towns, at your own repeated request, and plundered their effects. You have dared to attack the building, of which you expressly assented when in presence of George Crogham, deputy agent for Indian affairs. I made the first treaty with you upon the Ohio, after we had dispossessed the French at Fort Duquesne, and several of you now present assisted at that treaty. You murdered treacherously last year one of our men, sent in a canoe from Fort Pitt to bring over the Ohio some of your people, who pretended they had a message to deliver to the commanding officer; and you violated by that horrid crime, the custom held sacred by all nations, 'not to kill persons employed in public messages, even in time of war!!'

"You attacked soon after the King's troops in the woods, and being defeated in the attempt, you fell upon our frontiers, where you have continued to murder our people to this day!

"One of your party killed lately, in one day, eleven children at a school; and not satisfied with that infamous action, they massacred near the Little Beaver creek, the only boy they had spared, and had the impudence to fix his head upon a pole in the middle of the path; and this they did after they had begged peace from Col. Bradstreet. You have constantly declared that you would never make peace with the English; and when the Senecas and western Indians begged for peace, you alone have pretended to stand out, declaring that you despised all the efforts we could make against you, as appeared by an insolent letter you obliged Thomas Smallman to write, and sent to Sir William Johnson, at Niagara.

"Your conduct has always been equally perfidious. You promised at every former treaty, as you do now, that you would deliver up all your prisoners, and have received every time, on that account, considerable presents; but you never complied with that, nor any of your engagements. You know that all these things are true, and only a small part of the numberless murders, depredations and breaches of faith you have been guilty of. I am now to tell, that we will no longer be imposed upon by your promises, and that the army shall not leave this country until you have fully complied with every condition, that is to precede any treaty with you." A belt.

"I have brought with me the relations of those people you have massacred, or taken prisoners; they are impatient to take revenge of the bloody murders of their friends; and it is with the greatest difficulty that I can protect you against their resentment, by assuring them that no peace shall be granted till you have given us a proper satisfaction.

Your former allies, the Ottawas, Chippewas, Wyandotts, &c., have made their peace with us, and the Six Nations have joined us against you. We now surround you on every side, having possession of all the waters of the Ohio, Mississippi, the Miamis and the Lakes. All the French living in those parts, are now subjects of the King of Great Britain, and can no longer assist you. It is consequently in our power to destroy you, but if I find that you execute faithfully the conditions I shall require of you, I will not treat you with the severity you deserve. I give you twelve days from this day, to deliver up to me at Wackatamikie, all the prisoners in your possession, without any exception—Englishmen, Frenchmen, women and children—whether adopted in your tribes, married or living amongst you, under every denomination or pretense whatever, as also all negroes, and furnish all the said prisoners with clothing, provisions and horses, and carry them to Fort Pitt. When you shall have fully complied with this preliminary condition, I will then let you know on what terms you may obtain the peace you sue for." A belt.

October 20th, 1764—Col. Bouquet having required the chiefs to appoint a man of each nation, to attend him on his march to the place fixed, they named Keyashuta for the Senecas, Turtleheart and Custaloga's son for the Delawares, and James Smith for the Shawanese.

Keyashuta addressed himself to the nations present, desired them to be strong in performing everything required of them, and they having been accused of having told lies always before, to be now punctual in the execution of their promises, to convince their brethren that they could speak the truth. He adds, that he would conduct the army to the place appointed for delivering up the prisoners.

Keisiantcha, chief of the Shawanese, said, he would immediately go to inform his nation of everything he had heard; but as the distance was great, they could not be at Waghhatawmaky in ten days, where they would certainly meet us, and comply with everything required of them, and that he expected the Shawanese would be treated in some manner as the Delawares.

22d. The army proceeded, attended by a number of Senecas, Delawares and Shawanese, and arrived at the forks of Muskingum the 25th; this place having been fixed upon as more central than Wachatawmaha, to receive the prisoners.

27th. Col. Bouquet sent a Shawanese with a message to his nation. First desiring them to be punctual as to the day of delivering up their prisoners. Secondly, as they had expressed some uneasiness in our not shaking hands with them, to tell them that all the English took their friends by the hands, and that they could not be treated as such, till a peace was concluded with them. Thirdly, to bring the letters written for Col. Bouquet, by the French officers at Fort Chartiers, which were sent last winter by three Shawanese, but detained by their nation. Fourthly, to provide themselves with a sufficient quantity of provisions to subsist their people and their prisoners, during the time necessary to settle matters at this place.

28th. The above messengers returned, and informed Col. Bouquet that he did not proceed all the way with his message, but having delivered it at Waghatawmaky, the chief of that town proceeded himself with it, and desired him to return, and acquaint the Colonel that he had already collected all his own prisoners, who would arrive in two days; and that he was going to the Lower Shawanese, to hasten the people to bring their prisoners. A string.

29th. Custaloga arrived with his prisoners.

30th. Custaloga informed Col. Bouquet by a string of wampum, that as soon as his people were all come, which he expected to-morrow, he would then speak. A string.

Col. Bouquet informed him, he would have been glad to have heard him to-day, but as there were yet two days of time appointed to come, he would not hurry him.

31st. Arrived the Big Wolf, and seven other Shawanese, and delivered up eight white prisoners, and informed Col. Bouquet that they were sent by their chiefs to assure him, that he might depend upon seeing them with all their prisoners, at this place. A string.

Col. Bouquet's answer:

"I am glad to see you in so good a disposition, and that you have brought the prisoners before the time fixed in delivering the whole up, and I hope your chiefs will follow your example, and deliver every drop of white blood in your nation." A string.

November 1st. Custaloga and Keyashuta, with several Indians.

"Brothers: two days ago we appointed to meet you to-day, and we desire you will listen to us." A string.

"Brothers: on our first meeting you at Tuscarawas, you then desired to see your flesh and blood at this place, agreeable to which, we, the Delawares, now deliver you up thirty-two English prisoners, and the Senecas present, three. There are yet amongst them four more, whom they have sent for, and will be here to-morrow." A large string.

"Brothers: we have told you at Tuscarawas, and this place, that we would strictly comply with your desire in delivering all our prisoners; and, now, the four nations which this belt represents, join as one, and have agreed to follow your advice; and further, are determined to prevent and defeat any bad designs, that may be formed against you by any nation whatever. The Wyandotts have made peace with Col. Bradstreet, but notwithstanding, joined with us in delivering you this belt, to renew their friendship with you." A belt.

They then addressed themselves to the Cochnewagos present, in substance of the above speech, with a string.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

"I have heard with pleasure the good speeches you have made to me, and I receive these prisoners as a mark of sincerity of the promises you made at Tuscarawas, and I recommend to you to be always sincere in your transactions with us, as it is the only means to make us forget what is past, and to bring about a reconciliation. You must not forget that there is a number of prisoners amongst you—till the last of them is delivered up, I cannot proceed to the good work of peace." A string.

2d. We sent to Sandusky an officer and three men of the Virginians and two Cochnewago Indians, with a message to the Wyandotts, ordering them to deliver up all the prisoners they had. This day king Beaver arrived with his prisoners.

3d. Received a message from the Shawanese chiefs, acquainting Col. Bouquet that they were coming with all their prisoners. Col. Bouquet sent them an answer to hasten them, and a string of wampum to bring the four Frenchmen who lived amongst them. The same day, having intelligence that some French traders were arrived at the lower Shawanese town, Mitchell and two Cochnewago Indians were sent off with a message to the Red Hawk, chief of that nation, requiring him to have the said traders seized and brought to Col. Bouquet.

Custaloga and King Beaver with several others.

"Brother: It is now late and we can say little; but to-morrow you may be assured of hearing of everything we have to say." A string.

"Brother: We now deliver fifty-seven prisoners; our reasons for doing it to-night, is perhaps some of them may attempt to run away. You can take better care of them than we, and to-morrow we will speak to you." A belt.

4th. The Indians sent in a message that they were ready to speak. Colonel Bouquet sent them for answer that he would not admit them to speak, till they had delivered the remainder of the prisoners.

5th. King Beaver delivered up eight white prisoners, and Custaloga delivered up three prisoners.

Mr. Mitchell returned with the two Cochnewago Indians, having been stopped by Keissuntchatcha, the chief of the Shawanese at Waghatamagy, who informed him that the chiefs of the lower towns were all gone down to the French, and that he would do no business there if even he proceeded, and that all the people of the lower town were on their way with all their prisoners to meet Col. Bouquet.

6th. Owens, Turtleheart, a Delaware Indian, were sent to the Shawanese, to know whether they were coming, and as to the time they would be here. Owens returned from the Shawanese the 7th inst., and said that they would arrive with their prisoners the 9th inst. A soldier was found killed in the woods. The Indians were suspected, and the following message was delivered to their chiefs:

"Keyashuta: One of our soldiers has been killed, this morning, near the White Woman creek. As this murder has been committed in the country of the Delawares, I expect that they will find out, and deliver to me the murderer; and till they do it I shall make that nation answerable for the murder, therefore, acquaint, forthwith, the chiefs of the several tribes of the Delawares with this, that they may exert themselves towards the discovery of the murderer." A string.

The chiefs promised to deliver up the murderer, if they could discover him, immediately, and sent five Indians in pursuit of a Wyandott, whom they believed to be guilty of that crime.

8th. Sent a message to the Shawanese, to acquaint them with it, and to desire them to come in with their prisoners and not be afraid on account of that murder. The Shawanese sent Thomas Smallman, as a prisoner among them, to the camp, with some of the horses stolen by the Senecas; and also, sent word that they would come on the 10th inst., with their prisoners; and sent the following letter:

"WAGHATAWMAKA, Nov. 8th, 1764.

"Brother: We, the Shawanese, have thought proper to send our friend, Mr. Smallman, to acquaint you of our arrival at this place, and have, according to your desire, brought with us a great number of your flesh and blood, which should have been given up to you before now, had we not heard some evil report, that you had some bad designs against us. We now dispatch the Beaver with one of our young men, to know the truth of it, and shall, upon your invitation of writing, proceed with all the prisoners to your camp. We, the Shawanese, are come, with no other intent, than to ratify and confirm our ancient friendship, and make an everlasting peace with you, our brothers. I am, in behalf of the Shawanese,

"Your friend and brother,

"RED HAWK,

"or Mesquapamesque, Chief Captain."

AT A CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE SENECAS, LIVING UPON THE OHIO AND CUSTOLOGA (TRIBE OF DELAWARES), AT A CAMP UPON MUSKINGUM, NOVEMBER 9TH, 1764.

Present—Col. Henry Bouquet, commanding his Majesty's forces in the Southern district, and all the officers mentioned, and several gentlemen of the army, at the former conference. Mr. Alexander M'Kee, assistant agent for Indian affairs.

Indians—Keyashuta, chief, and ten warriors, Senecas; Custologo, chief, and twenty warriors.

Keyashuta, speaker: "Brother, the misfortune which has happened, of one of your people being murdered, the day before yesterday, gives us the same sorrow it gives you; and we beg, that this accident may be no hindrance to the friendship already begun between us." A string.

"Brother: By this string of wampum, we wipe the tears from your eyes, and remove from your heart the resentment which this murder has raised against us; and we hope that you will throw away everything bad that this may have occasioned, and hear us freely." A string.

"Brother: We have strictly complied with your desire, and now deliver you these prisoners, which are the last of your flesh and blood that remain among us. The Senecas and Custologa tribes are now gathered together, and bury, with this belt, all the bones of the people killed during this unhappy war, which the evil spirit occasioned among us. Brother, we cover the bones which have been buried, in such a manner, that they never more be remembered." A belt.

"Brother: We cover them again with leaves, that the place where they are buried may never more be seen." A string.

"Brother: As we have been a long time astray, and the path between us and you stopped, we hope the path will be again cleared; and we now extend this belt of wampum between you and us, that we may again travel in peace to see our brothers, as our ancestors formerly did; and as you will hold it by one end, and we by the other, and we hope we shall always be able to discover anything that may happen to disturb our friendship." A belt.

"Brother: As we have now extended a belt representing the road between you and us, we beg that you will take fast hold of it, that the path may always be kept open between us. This is all we have to say at present." A string.

Colonel Bouquet's answer to Keyashuta and Custologa, at the camp upon Muskingum, November 9th, 1764.

"I have heard with pleasure the speeches you have made, which I shall now answer." A string.

"Two days ago, one of our men was murdered. I do not charge you, personally, with that murder; but as it has been committed in your country, the blood must remain upon your heads, till the murderer be delivered up, to be punished capitally." A string.

"I received these last three prisoners, which you now deliver, and I bury the bones of the people who fell in the war, so that the place be no more seen." A string.

"Your readiness in complying with every condition I have already required of you, convinces me that your intentions are upright, and consequently I will now treat you as brethren, and speak to you as such." A string.

Brother: You ask peace. The King, my master, and your father, has appointed me to make war upon you; but he has other servants, who are employed in the work of peace; and his Majesty has been pleased to empower Sir William Johnson, to make peace with the Indians; it is to him, therefore, that you are to apply; but before I can give you leave to send to him, two things are necessary to be settled: The first is, that as peace is not yet made, you will deliver to me four officers as hostages, viz:—two for the Senecas, and two for the Custalogos tribe, who are to remain in our hands at Fort Pitt, till the peace is concluded with Sir William Johnson, as a security that you shall commit no hostilities, or violence against any of his Majesty's subjects or proprieties; and when the peace is made, they shall be delivered back to you." A belt.

The second is, that the deputies you are to send to Sir William Johnson, be fully empowered by you to treat for your tribes, and that you engage to abide by what they stipulate in the treaty. Sir William Johnson will settle everything concerning trades, or any other points, necessary to render the peace everlasting." A belt.

"Brother: The deputies you are to send to Sir William Johnson, as well as the hostages to be delivered in my hand, are to be named and presented to me for my approbation." A string.

"I will inform Sir William Johnson what has passed between us, and I speak to you now, on your own belts, that your deputies may repeat to Sir William Johnson all you have said to me." A belt.

"Brothers: I believe you have now delivered up all the prisoners you had in your tribes; but, if any should yet be discovered amongst you hereafter, you are to deliver them at Fort Pitt, as well as any of those now delivered up that might return to you." A string.

"Brother: You have not mentioned to me Captain Pipe and Captain John, who are both detained at Fort Pitt, but I have not forgotten them, but as you have now delivered to us all our people, I will return to you these two. There are still more of your people amongst us, but as they are not my prisoners, I can not dispose of them; but I will recommend it to the general to have them given to you, when the peace is concluded. The Colonel took then, for the first time, the chief by his hand, which occasioned great joy amongst them."

AT A CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE TURKEY AND TURTLE TRIBES OF THE DELAWARES, AT THE CAMP AFORESAID, NOVEMBER 10, 1764.

Present—Colonel Bouquet, with the officers, &c.

Indians—King Beaver, chief of the Turkey tribe, and twenty warriors; Kilepama, chief of the Turtle tribe, with twenty-five warriors; Custalogo, Keyashuta, with the Indians present on yesterday.

It gave us great satisfaction to hear the good speech you made yesterday to one of our tribes, and as you desired at Tuscarawas, to see your flesh and blood, I now deliver thirteen, who are the last we have remaining in our tribes; and it will likewise give us great pleasure, that you will take us once more by the hand as your brethren, that we may travel the road now open us, in peace to see you. A string.

"Brother: I return a great many thanks in behalf of the chiefs, warriors, women and children of our three tribes, who are all glad to embrace peace once more with their brethren; and we likewise return God thanks, for giving us the opportunity to take you by the hand in peace, which shall never more be broken on our side. Our young men shall now think of nothing but hunting, to exchange their skins and furs with their brethren for clothing." A belt.

"Brother: Should we at any time discover any of your people who are not now delivered to you, they shall immediately be sent you, as well as those who may attempt to return to us." A string.

Colonel Bouquet desired to know before he spoke to them, the reason there was no chief of the Turtle tribe. They answered, their chief was not present, but that his brother, Kalatama, acted for him. The Colonel then asked them whether they would choose to have the speech delivered yesterday to the Senecas and Custologa tribes, repeated to them; which they said they would be glad to hear from himself; upon which the same was repeated with the following addition, that an Englishman has been murdered by some of their people on the frontiers, and that they had brought the scalp to their nation, that they should be immediately delivered up, and that each tribe should deliver the same number of hostages and appoint the same number of deputies as has been stipulated to Sir William Johnson. A belt.

November 10th—In the evening, the officers and three men of the Virginia volunteers returned, who had been sent the 2d inst., with a message to the Wyandotts, and brought the following message to one of their chiefs:

To Colonel Bouquet:

"As I have received certain intelligence, that all our chiefs have left their towns, and gone some distance to the westward to hunt, I hope you may not take it amiss, that I do not proceed after them, being unacquainted with the places they may resort to. But I will send one of our young men this winter to deliver your message to them; their answers to which, you shall be acquainted with early in the spring, at which time we can conveniently carry all our prisoners to Fort Pitt.

[Signed] Oterunkque."

Written the 8th of November, 1764, near the head of Sciota.

The above officer was informed at a Delaware town, that the Wyandotts have passed that town with a number of horses, which they had stolen from the English.

AT A PRIVATE CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE CHIEFS OF THE DELAWARES, THE 11TH INSTANT.

Present—Colonel Bouquet, Colonel Reed, Captain Ourry, Mr. Alex M'Kee.

Indians—Custologa, King Beaver, the New-comen-bad.

King Beaver, speaker:

"Brother: Yesterday you desired that we would appoint and present to you, the hostages to be left in your hands. We have named six and also five, to go to Sir William Johnson. They are men of experience, on whom we can rely and proper to treat for us. Their names are:

Hostages.—Mondeaticker, Mendies, or Davis, Killachkpcher, or Andrew Taump, Katepa komen, or Simon Girty, Possquetonckena, or Jo. Compass, Waylskonowas.

Deputies.—Killbuck, Keyeveyaughing, Lahalapowhy, or Kitchen, Telapiskeva, Luquest, or Flour.

"Brother: You desire to know the deputies and hostages we should appoint; you have now their names, and these are the men. You also required of us the man who had killed one of your soldiers. It is not in our power to deliver him, but as soon as we can discover who he is, and of what nation, we shall inform you, and then you can demand him of his chief." A string.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

"Brothers: I am glad you have appointed the deputies and hostages required of you. I have no objection to the persons you mentioned; they shall be well treated, and we shall take the same care of them as of our own people.

"I am satisfied for the present with what you say in regard to the man who has struck us. As soon as I shall know of what nation, I shall demand of the chief, and you will then be clear of the blame. I think it not proper that any of your people should go to our settlements, the inhabitants not being yet reconciled with you; but if some of you are desirous of going to Fort Pitt, you may with safety." A string.

The Beaver spoke:

"Brother: We now have produced to you the deputies we intend to send to Sir William Johnson; as they cannot understand nor express themselves in English, we beg you will send an interpreter with them." A string.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

"Brother: You shall have from me all necessary assistance, and if you tell me what man you choose for an interpreter, I will appoint him." A string.

The Beaver's reply.

"As Owens speaks our language so well, and is accustomed to the words, we should be glad if he could accompany them.

Colonel Bouquet: They shall have him.

The Colonel then spoke to the chiefs:

"The chief of the Turtle tribe having given me great reason to be dissatisfied with his conduct, I depose him this moment, he is no more chief. That tribe is, therefore, to choose another chief, and present him to me, and I will confirm him, and he shall be king of the Turtle tribe, and acknowledged as such by the English.

"Richoumeack, or the Two Feathers, and Cockadanis, is to go with the captives to Fort Pitt."

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE SHAWANESE, NOV. 12, 1764, COL. BOUQUET, WITH THE OFFICERS AND SEVERAL GENTLEMEN, AS MENTIONED IN THE FORMER, HELD WITH THE DELAWARES.

Indians, Shawanese—Keissinaucthat and Nemicha, Chiefs, Red Hawk, Lawissimo, Bensiwasiua, Ervenceunwee, Keightughque, and forty warriors.

Senecas—Keyishuta, and ten warriors.

Cocknewagaas—Oshharrygowa, a Chief and twenty warriors.

Delawares—Custologa and King Beaver, Chiefs, and thirty warriors.

The Red Hawk, speaker:

"Brother: We have come to this place to see you, and thank God that we are here met together, which gives us all a great deal of pleasure.

"Brother: You will listen to us, who are your younger brothers, and as we discover something in your eyes which shows you are not satisfied with us; we now wipe away every thing bad between us that you may see clearly; and, as you have heard many bad stories, we likewise clean your ears that you may hear us speak, and remove every thing bad from your heart, that it may be like the heart of your ancestors of whom they thought nothing but good." A string.

"Brother: When you arrived at this place, and we were informed of your desire, we immediately set about gathering your flesh and blood; and accordingly all that could be collected by this time we have brought to you; but there remain more among us which you may assure yourself you may see in the spring.

"Brother: One year and a half ago we made a peace with you at Fort Pitt, which was soon after broken, but that was neither your fault nor ours; but the whole blame is to be laid on the Ottowas, who are a foolish people, and are the cause of this war. When we now saw you coming this road, you advanced towards us with a tomahawk in your hand, but we, your younger brothers, take it out of your hand and send it up to God to dispose of it as he pleases, by which means we hope never to see it any more. And now, brethren, we beg leave that you, who are a warrior, will take hold of this chain of friendship and receive it from us, who are always warriors, and let us think no more of war, but to take pity on our old men, women and children." A string.

"Brother: Since the peace we made at Fort Pitt many of our young men on both sides have been killed by this war occasioned by the Ottowas; but now I know we bury their bones so that they shall be seen no more.

"Brother: Now we have thrown away every thing bad out of our hearts. We hope you will hear favorably of our good men who are not now at home; but will surely come to speak with you in the spring at Fort Pitt, and then you shall hear nothing but good." A belt.

"This is all your younger brethren have to say to you at present."

They then produced the following messages, letters and treaties which were read:

A treaty held with them, April 23d, 1701.

A message from Governor Gordon, Dec. 4th, 1730.

A letter from Thomas Penn, Jan. 18th, 1732.

Another letter from Gov. Thomas, Aug. 15th, 1742.

After which he added:

"Now, brother, I beg that we, who are warriors, may forget our disputes, and renew the ancient friendship which appears by these papers to have subsisted between our ancestors."

Col. Bouquet answered:

"Captain and Warriors: I have heard your speaker, and have seen the papers you have laid before me. I shall take them into consideration, and to-morrow morning I will give you my answer at this place. In the meantime I will receive the few prisoners you have brought us."

They delivered thirty-six prisoners.

AT A CONFERENCE HELD WITH THE SHAWANESE AT MUSKINGUM, 14TH NOVEMBER, 1764.

Present—Colonel Bouquet, with the same Officers and Indians as at the Conference of the 12th.

Col. Bouquet's speech to the Shawanese:

"Captains and Warriors: The speech you delivered the day before yesterday, would have been agreeable to me, if your actions had corresponded with your words. You spoke much of your disposition of peace, but at the same time you neglected to comply with the only condition upon which you can obtain it. To set this matter in a clear light, I will repeat to you what has passed between me and your Chiefs. I received a message by two Indians, at Fort Pitt, of the Six Nations, who were empowered by the Senacas living upon the Ohio, the Delawares and Shawanese, to ask for peace. I told them if you were desirous of peace, your chiefs should come to Tuscarawas and speak themselves to me; accordingly Keissinanchtha met me at that place, a month ago, with some of your people, and having heard the condition presented to the Senecas and Delawares, he told me he accepted them likewise for the Shawanese, and that they would certainly come to me at this place in ten days, when they would deliver up all their prisoners; in consequence of that engagement, I did not attack you as I had intended, but have waited for you at this place ever since; you are come at last bringing only a small parcel of the prisoners, and you propose putting off the rest till spring. The Delawares have been equally concerned with you in the war. They have submitted to the conditions I required of them; fully complying with every part of your engagements with me, and have given me entire satisfaction by their conduct in the course of this transaction. What right have you to expect different terms? I shall cut this matter short with you, and before I explain myself further, I insist upon your giving me an immediate answer to the questions I shall ask you." A string.

"First. Will you immediately collect and deliver up all the prisoners in your possession, men, women and children, and the French living among you, with all the negroes you have taken from us, either in this or any other war, and that without any exception or evasion whatsoever?

"Secondly. Will you give six of your people as hostages to remain in my hands as security that the above prisoners shall be delivered without delay, and that your nation shall commit no hostilities against the persons or property of his Majesty's subjects?" A belt.

Their answer.

Benwisaker, speaker.

"Brother: What you now have required we agree to. Six of our people shall go with you as hostages, and I, myself, will immediately return to our lower town, and collect all your flesh and blood, that you may see them as soon as I can carry them to Fort Pitt. As to the Frenchmen you insist upon to be delivered up, we cannot do it; they are your prisoners, do with them what you please; but we believe they are returned before this time to their own country.

Here they named the following hostages:

Red Hawk, or Mesquapelathee, Ewukumuee, or Husstler, Keightighqua, or Tawmemabuck, or Cornblade.	Wecawakpa, or Whitelegs, Neightthakeina.

Colonel Bouquet's answer:

"Captains and Warriors: As you have consented to the terms I offered you, I will now treat you with the same indulgence shown to the Delawares, and put you in the way to renew the friendship which formerly subsisted between us." A string.

"I came here determined to strike you, with a tomahawk in my hand, but since you have submitted, it shall not fall upon your heads. I will let it drop, and it shall no more be seen. I bury the bones of all the people who have fallen in this war, and cover the place with leaves, so that it shall no more be perceived." A belt.

"Having now buried the dead, and seen that you have removed every thing bad from your hearts, I will again treat you as brothers, and speak to you as such." A string.

"Brother: As you are now going to collect all our flesh and blood remaining among you, to deliver them up as soon as possible at Fort Pitt, I desire you will use them with tenderness, and look upon them as brothers and no longer as captives; and as they have several relations who are anxious to see them, I intend to send some of them with you from this army, and I intend to send some to assist you in bringing them to Fort Pitt. I hope you will give them all the assistance in your power." A string.

"Brother: I have now settled with you, every thing as warriors, what remains concerning the peace, and will be settled with your chiefs."

Col. Bouquet's speech to the Chiefs of the Shawanese:

"Brothers: Every condition preliminary to a peace, having been agreed upon between us, I permit you to appoint deputies to go to Sir William Johnson to make peace. The same deputies are to have the same power to treat for your nations, and you are to promise to execute punctually what shall be stipulated to them at that treaty; as soon as you have appointed them, you will present them to me, and I will give them letters for Sir Wm. Jonnson, to inform him of what has passed between us at this place." A belt.

The Cachnewagas, addressing the Shawanese with a string of wampum, told them, they were glad to see them settle matters peaceably with their brethren, the English, and bade them be strong in doing good, and that their peace would last forever." A string.

King Beaver addressing the Shawanese:

"Grand Children: It gives me great pleasure to see you comply with everything required of you by our brethren, the English; and as they have desired to see all their flesh and blood, be strong, deliver them all up, as we have done, and then we may expect everlasting peace; and observe what our uncle, the Cachnewago Indians have said to you." A belt.

Keyashuta, addressing the Shawanese:

"Brothers: Be strong and perform everything you promised; and I desire you will appoint some of your wise men, with the deputies going from the Delawares and us.

Bennawisaker returned the Cochnowagas and Senecas thanks, for the good advice they gave them, and said, "His nation would hold fast by the friendship now settled, as it was what they long wished for." A string.

Then he told Col. Bouquet, that he would immediately go home to his town, to make his people acquainted with what had passed, as it would give them all a great deal of pleasure.

[Minutes of Provincial Council, December 5, 1764.]

Immediately on the conclusion of the several conferences, Col. Bouquet wrote the following letter to Governor John Penn:

Camp at the Forks of Muskingum, Nov. 15th, 1764.

Sir: I have the pleasure to inform you, that the Mingoes, the Delawares and the Shawanese, after a long struggle, have at last submitted to the terms prescribed to them, viz:

1st. To deliver all the prisoners without exception.

2nd. To give fourteen hostages, to remain in our hands as a security, for the strict performance of the first article; and that they shall commit no hostilities against his Majesty's subjects.

Upon those conditions, they are permitted to send deputies from each nation to Sir William Johnson, to make their peace.

The Mingoes have given two hostages; the Delawares six; the Shawanese six.

The enclosed copy of our proceedings with these nations, contains a minute account of the whole transaction. Therefore, I shall not trouble you with particulars.

I am only to request, that you will have a suspension of arms with these savages, published in your governments, and I may presume to assure you, from their present humble dispositions, that the troops stationed on your frontiers, may be discharged, and the inhabitants return with safety to their deserted plantations.

We have, already, upwards of two hundred captives delivered, and many of them have remained so many days amongst them, that they part from them with the greatest reluctance. We are obliged to keep guards, to prevent their escape; and unless they are treated with indulgence and tenderness by their relatives, they will certainly return to their savage masters.

The Delawares and Mingoes have not only delivered all their prisoners, but even their own children born from white women.

The Shawanese have been very obstinate, and nothing has prevented the chastisement they deserved, but the certainty, that if they were driven to despair, they would massacre one hundred and fifty prisoners then in their hands. However, their pride has been humbled, and they have been forced to submit to the same conditions as the other nations.

The troops of our government have carried on the service with great zeal and cheerfulness, and their conduct does them honor in every respect.

I shall immediately send them to Carlisle, with the prisoners belonging to the province; as several of them are not known, I beg you will appoint a person to receive them at that place, and provide them with the necessaries of life, till they are claimed.

I have the honor to be, with great regard, sir,
Your most obedient and most humble servant,
Henry Bouquet.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE FIRST WHITE SETTLER OF INDIANA COUNTY—WALLACE'S FORT—WALLACE'S MILL—NOTED PIONEERS—EXCITING SCENES—CAPTURE OF WALLACE—LAST ATTACK ON THE FORT.

THE first white settler of Indiana county was undoubtedly George Findley, who had migrated to the Pumroy and Wilson settlement, or what is now Derry township, Westmoreland county, in 1764. In 1765, he selected the tract now occupied by his grandson George Findley Matthews, in East Wheatfield township, where his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Matthews, is still living, though born on the 28th of January, 1784.

This selection was made by a tomahawk, but these tomahawk rights were as valid in those days as the more cumbersome surveys of later dates. His visits to his land were as frequent and his stay as long as the troublesome times would permit, and when the revolution began, he had a clearing of about ten acres, and a rude cabin for his bride whom he had married in Maryland, not far from Hagerstown, in 1776.

In 1784, he again returned to his improvement, and continued his residence there, though repeatedly forced to seek shelter at Fort Ligonier, or Palmer's Fort.

For further details, see history of East Wheatfield township, and Mrs. Elizabeth Matthews, of same township.

Wallace's Fort was erected in 1764 or 5.* This, Gilson's Fort near new Derry, and Craig's on the Loyalhanna, were the resort of the flying inhabitants when the alarm signal of three rapid shots told that the red face was nigh. Wallace's Fort stood immediately above the present site of the mill. It contained about half an acre of ground and had a fine block-house within the enclosure. In any case of actual attack by the Indians, the women and children were placed in the lower story, while the men proceeded above, and from the port-holes the trusty rifles made havoc with the brutal foe.

WALLACE'S MILL, THE FIRST WEST OF THE ALLEGHENIES.

Richard Wallace, soon after getting his farm in order, began what, at that time, was a great enterprise, the erection of a mill. This in the course of time, was completed. The site was a little below that of the present one, and may have been so chosen, in part at least, to secure the protection of the fort above. The first mill was small and had but one run of stones in it. This is supposed to have been the first mill west of the Alleghenies.

Before its erection here, the hardy settlers often crushed their corn by hand. The mill was resorted to from all the region, and many a weary traveler traversed the forest path from the country beyond Kitanning, distant forty miles, with his bag of corn on horseback, to be ground at Wallace's mill. The old mill witnessed many trying scenes when the red man spread terror through the forest and often the fear of the pale-face's rifle alone saved it from the torch of destruction.

It may be stated that after undergoing repairs at various times, it was rebuilt by Peter Wallace, his son, on its present site; that it has since been enlarged, and is still regarded as one of the best in the country.

Of the settlers who had located in the vicinity of New Derry, Col. John Pumroy, William Barr, Alexander Barr and William Guthrie were quite noted. But the most prominent man, the hero in their contests with the Indians, was Major James Wilson,† grandfather of Wilson Knott, deceased, late of Blairsville. He had a tall, manly form, and was possessed of remarkable activity and undaunted courage. These pioneers were exposed to constant peril from the Indians. Although they lived in times of comparative peace, the treachery of the red man was too well known to permit them to be caught unprepared for an attack.

The Indians generally made their incursions in the fall of the year. During harvest time also, they often became very troublesome. They often lurked in the woods, and cut off the unsuspecting settler when he least apprehended danger. They ploughed, they reaped, rifle in hand. Major Wilson used to relate how he stood with his rifle, in his cabin door, while his wife brought water from the spring.

On certain occasions, the "signs" of Indians had been seen in the woods, for several days, and it was supposed that Barr's Fort would be attacked the following morning. This fort stood about a mile north of New Derry. While they expected an attack there, they were much surprised to hear firing at Wallace's Fort, about five miles distant. Great anxiety was felt by those at Barr's Fort, for their friends at Wallace's. Major Wilson with forty others volunteered to go to their aid. Leaving therefore barely sufficient force at Barr's to protect the fort, and to keep the women in heart they started. The firing continued all the time as they approached.

When they reached Wallace's the little party within were engaged in hot conflict with about a hundred Indians, who had made an early attack on the fort. The enemy no sooner perceived Wilson and his company than they turned upon them. There was formerly a bridge over the ravine, which is about five hundred yards above the fort. Wilson, with a few of his party, had crossed this. Being compelled to retreat, he found the Indians had taken possession of the bridge. Here he was engaged hand-to-hand with them. He knocked several of them off, and thus prepared the way for himself and his friends.

He then took his position near a large oak, on the bank beyond, and plied his rifle with deadly effect on them. But the Indians were too numerous for the little band, and they were compelled to retreat. They kept up a retreating fire all the way to Barr's Fort. About a mile from Wallace's, Barr was killed. When they had nearly reached the fort, Robert Barr also fell. He was engaged with four Indians, fighting manfully with the butt of his gun. Major Wilson shot one of the Indians, who fell dead on Barr. The next instant a tomahawk was buried in Barr's skull. All the four Indians with whom he was fighting were killed.

Shortly after this an alarm was again given of the approach of Indians. All in the vicinity of Wallace's Fort fled to it. Major Wilson happened to be among them. A man named Reddick, when seeking the fort, was attacked by a party who had concealed themselves under the bridge aforementioned, but he was fortunate to make good his escape to the fort. It was supposed that the Indians were few in number, and Major Wilson, with characteristic bravery, proposed to attack them with a small party.

Taking some six or eight men he pursued, and in a short time came up with them. They were found lying in the grass, on the top of what is known as Culbertson's Hill, about a mile from the fort, on the farm now belonging to John Stouffer. The Indians immediately fired. The band of Indians was much larger than they supposed, and Wilson and his party, with about thirty or forty Indians in pursuit, made for the fort.

Loading and firing as they ran, they supposed they had killed several, but never certainly ascertained. These are a few of the many incidents which occurred around the old fort, and give us some idea of the scenes through which the settlers of the region were called to pass.

After the termination of the French and Indian war, in 1763, the Indians were not so hostile as when incited by the French. But when the Revolutionary war broke out, being urged by Great Britain, they attacked the settlers with ruthless and constant barbarity.

Wm. Findlay, author of a history of Western Pennsylvania, speaking of this period, says: "During the whole time of the Revolutionary war, and for some time after it ceased, the country was cruelly wasted by perpetual savage depredations. The whole of what is now Westmoreland and Allegheny counties was either actually laid waste, or the inhabitants obliged to shelter themselves in forts."

Yet in the intervals of these periods of special hostilitity, the Indians made frequent incursions into the settlements. In one of these which occurred just before the outbreak of the Revolutionary war, Richard Wallace was carried off prisoner, and taken up and down through Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio. He wandered with the Indians wherever they roamed, and made his company so agreeable to them that he became quite a favorite.

*Rev. William Cunningham, in History of Cunningham Family.

†Subsequently became Colonel.

All the time he was forming various plans of escape, but failed in effecting it. Months passed, when traveling northward, they brought him to the shores of Lake Erie. The war having broke out, the Indians passed their captive into the hands of the English. He was taken to Montreal, which was now in their possession, having been ceded to them at the close of the French and Indian war. But his situation there was but little better than when roaming with the savages. He was in reality as much a prisoner as before.

He found here quite a number of captives detained as himself. With one of them, a bold and hardy companion, he effected his escape. One dark, cold winter night they silently got over the walls of the fort. They now found themselves, in mid-winter, a heavy snow on the ground, without sufficient provisions, several hundred miles from home. They had a very small quantity of food, upon which they subsisted for a few days by living as lightly as possible. A small dog fell in with them, and accompanied them for a time, when they were compelled to slay it for food.

They steered their way as best they could through the Northern part of New York and the wilderness beyond, and after unnumbered privations and difficulties, Wallace reached home in the early summer. The joy of the family when they received him as one from the dead we will not attempt to describe. He is supposed to have been absent about eighteen months.

The summer of 1782 was a most sorrowful one to the frontier. The tomahawk and scalping knife did fearful work, and only smouldering heaps marked the situation of many a settler's happy home. Flying in despair from the most western settlements, the miserable inhabitants had gathered around and in Hannahstown and Sewickley. It was during that memorable summer that Hannahstown, the county seat of Westmoreland (situated about four miles from of Greensburg), was burned, and many living in the vicinity dragged away wretched prisoners.

It was in the following year (1783) that the last hostile demonstration was made against Wallace's Fort. The families had fled there on an alarm that the Indians were approaching. They had been in the fort but a short time when an officer was observed cautiously creeping up the mill race. It was known that the Indians were around. When he was nearly below the fort he waved a white flag as a symbol of peaceful intention. His object, doubtless, was to decoy some persons from the fort, who would be attacked by the Indians lying in ambush.

This was believed by those within, and while he stood waving his deceptive flag, a ball pierced his breast and he fell mortally wounded. Those who accompanied him, fearing the deadly rifle within the fort, did not dare to lift him, but beat a precipitate retreat. With that caution which they had learned from constant warfare with their wily foes, they remained within the walls of the fort the greater part of the day. Finally, when all supposed they had fled, they descended with loaded rifles and found the body.

A bundle of papers which they discovered in his breast, and which the bullet had pierced, fully confirmed all their suspicions of his character and designs. He was a British officer, half-breed Indian, employed by the British to conduct the savages to war. He was buried a short distance above the old mill. This was the last man killed at Wallace's Fort.

The fort was still used when circumstances demanded. After the peace of 1783 it was rarely resorted to. It fell gradually into decay until the stockade walls, the monuments of troublous times in which they were built, had finally disappeared. Not a vestige now remains.

In peace the rustic swain drives the plow over the spot, all-forgetful of the many thrilling associations, unless, perchance, some rust-eaten instrument of death, turned up by his ploughshare, carries him back to the conflicts of those perilous days.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ANECDOTES OF THE PIONEERS OF THE CONEMAUGH VALLEY,* BEING STORIES OF PUMROY, WILSON AND OTHERS FROM VARIOUS SOURCES—DIFFERENT VERSIONS OF FIGHTS AFORE MENTIONED—MAJOR WILSON.

ONE year when the hunting season commenced, the settlers missed horses, supposed to be stolen by the Indians. Blankets also were attractive objects, and the Indians also stole them. A horse and some blankets were stolen from Wilson. He followed the horse tracks through the woods about ten miles, and found him tied near an Indian wigwam, within a mile of where Hannastown was built, and three miles from the site of Greensburg. It being dark, the Indians had laid down with Wilson's blankets over them. He removed the horse to some distance, returned to the Indian camp, pulled the blankets off the Indians, who were five in number, and made for his horse.

One of the Indians, more active than the rest, pursued him so closely as to throw at and hit him with a tomahawk. Although Wilson tried to dodge the blow, it hit him on the shoulder and inflicted a wound, the mark of which he carried to the grave. But he knocked the Indian down with the muzzle of his gun, and mounting his horse made his escape.

When the hunting season had increased the number and insolence of the Indians, Wilson returned to his native valley, but came back in the spring following. The settlement had by this time became more extensive, and many fights with the Indians having occurred, in which the latter lost many men, and the settlers, several, it was deemed prudent by the settlers to form an organized force. Accordingly John Pumroy was appointed Colonel, and James Wilson, Major.†

Colonel Pumroy was a brave man, and the character he has left behind him is very respectable. But to Wilson is ascribed by tradition, the head to plan, and the hand to execute, for he was familiar with all manner of Indian strategy; a kind of knowledge he had no doubt acquired in his native valley before he crossed the mountains.

The contests with the Indians became frequent, but Wilson so well knew their places of concealment, their modes of attack and defence, and so frequently had he foiled them in skirmishes that, having so often been deliberately aimed at and missed by their best marksmen, he was considered "a great medicine," and they dreaded to encounter him.

For several weeks at one time, the "signs" of Indians were seen and a strict watch was kept, as they were known to be lurking in the woods, in all directions. Mrs. Wilson did not attempt to go to the spring-house in the morning, or to milk the cows without Wilson was ready at the house with his rifle, to guard and protect her.

Simon Girty said the Indians had watched three weeks to kill or capture Mrs. Wilson, when she came to the spring. They were hid in the hazel copse close to the spring, but were afraid of the tall man in the door with his rifle in hand. They said they could have reached her with their guns.

It now became necessary to erect defences against Indian hostility, and two forts, as they were called, were built; one at Barr's, called Barr's Fort, on the farm now occupied by William Gilson; the other at Wallace's, called Wallace's Fort. They were stockades similar to those ordinarily erected against the Indians and about —— miles apart. After their erection, guard was kept in each, and in prospect of danger, the women and children were placed there for protection.

On one occasion when Wilson was putting up his harvest, though no appearance of Indians had been noticed for some time, his horses becoming wild and unmanageable, he suspected there were Indians about, and kept a lookout for them. Finally the horses became entirely untractable and ran off with the sled to which they were hitched, partly loaded with hay.

*Greensburg Herald. †Afterward became a Colonel.

There were two opposite doors in the house, and the horses, sled and all entered at one and went out at the other. A feather bed having come in contact with the poles of the sled, accompanied it, and hay and feathers were strewn together by the wind.

Wilson let the horses run, and took up his rifle; the Indians saw him and ran, he pursuing for some distance until he came upon the head and scalp of one of his neighbors. The head had been cut off the body, within sight of where they had been making hay, and he averred that it gasped after he spied it.

He ascertained the party to consist of between thirty and forty Indians. Having taken his family to the fort, he raised a party of settlers, pursued, overtook and killed several of the Indians. Pursuit was kept up to the Allegheny river, where the Indians scattered and the trail was lost.

The settlers now united and kept guard at the harvest field, first of one neighbor, then another, until all were through.

During the fall of that year, the families had to remain in the forts.

Various attempts were made to intercept Wilson by the Indians. Sometimes they would gobble like a turkey, sometimes crow like a cock, to draw his attention, but he knew their tricks too well.

It had been ascertained that for fleetness he excelled any of them, and as to fear he had no acquaintance with it. He could keep ahead of them in a running fight, load his gun, turn and fire, and still keep out of their reach.

After harvest, he had his horses pasturing in the meadow, but all the inhabitants were in the fort, as the Indians were known to be in the neighborhood. On going for the horses they were not to be found. He had heard the rattle of the bells early in the morning, at the fort, and had said that the Indians were now taking his horses out of the meadow, and he would go and kill some of them.

There were but few men in the fort, and persuasion was used to deter him, but he went on, and found the fence laid down, the horses out and in sight. The Indians, seeing him, secreted themselves in the woods and bushes just at the gap through which the horses had passed, and before he knew, was surrounded by them. They sprang up to make him a prisoner, but he ran like a deer, and was soon out of their reach. They fired and gave chase, but he kept them at his own distance, knowing how far their pieces would carry, and fired with effect, until they ran him five miles, when they gave up the pursuit. He believed he had killed several.

The firing was heard at the fort, and all gave him up for lost. But taking a large circuit to avoid the Indians, to the great joy of his family and friends, he got into the fort that night.

Great apprehension now existed of an attack upon the fort by a large force of Indians. Tracks of many Indians were seen in the morning, but they seemed afraid to try the fort.

At the time of hay harvest the next season, the Indians again became quite troublesome. One day while in his meadow Wilson heard the firing of guns in the direction of Col. Pumroy's house, which was on the farm now occupied by John Cummings, about one mile off. He instantly directed his family to the fort, as he knew the Indians had attacked Pumroy, and would soon be there. While in the act of starting they saw a man running from Pumroy's, who had been in the meadow mowing where Pumroy was attacked. One man was killed in the meadow, the others, of whom this was one, ran for their lives to the fort. He said Pumroy and his family were in the house giving battle.

Wilson placed his wife and children on horse back, and rifle in hand, on foot, saw them safely taken in. The crack of rifles was still heard in the direction of Pumroy's. He proposed to go to the Colonel's relief, but not a man would venture with him. Mounting his horse, he said deliberately that he "would relieve Pumroy or die."

Seeing him inflexible, James Barr said he should not go alone, and the two started together. On getting to Pumroy's fields, they laid the fence down in several places, so that if pursued they could pass without interruption. From a small eminence near the house everything seemed quiet, and not knowing but Indians had possession, Wilson, in his customary loud voice, called out, "Pumroy, are you alive?" To his great gratification, Pumroy answered, "yes, come on and we will kill all the d—d rascals yet."

Wilson and Barr then went to the house. They saw some Indians at the barn, but could see they were cowed. In the house they found Col. Pumroy and Hannah, his wife, up stairs, the children being stowed away under the puncheon floor, with directions to keep quiet. The Colonel had fought the savages over three hours. He had two good rifles. Hannah loaded one while he was using the other to the best advantage, shooting through port holes, and hallooing to the Indians to come on, he was ready for them, inducing the Indians to suppose there were many men in the house. Hannah was a great snuffer, and the Colonel said she deliberately took a pinch between the loadings.

Much blood was seen around the house, and it was supposed several were killed and wounded. The party rode and walked through the Indians, placing Pumroy's family safely in the fort. When that was done, they raised a force and made an attack on the Indians at Pumroy's house, which they had entered as soon as the family left, and had taken everything out of it.

Their intention had been to take the house that night, and kill Pumroy and his family. But as soon as they saw the party from the fort, they gave three loud shouts and ran off. Pursuit was made, but without success. Next day traces of bodies dragged away were seen, and much blood.

The act of Wilson was considered a very daring one. Pumroy was often heard to say that "Wilson had saved him from the jaws of death and the gates of hell.

Shortly after this it was expected that the Indians would make an attack on Barr's fort, as it was ascertained they had been watching it for some time. But while on their guard against an attack there, one was made on Wallace's fort, six miles distant.

This fort was a stockade inclosing half an acre or more. It stood on the hill a little west of the brick house, now occupied by Samuel Dixon, and covered the mill and spring of water west of the brick house. The stockade on the side next the mill (for there was a flouring mill there then, about where the present one stands) was about sixty yards distant, and on the high ground above McGee's run, which propels the mill. The mill and spring were both within rifle range from the fort.

The following is a version (published in 1810) of the same battle mentioned in the previous article:

In the morning early, a party of Indians over one hundred strong, made an attack on this fort. The firing was distinctly heard at Barr's fort where Wilson was. Great alarm was felt for the safety of Wallace's fort, and a party of forty men volunteered to go to its relief, leaving only enough men to protect the women and children, and to keep them in heart.

Wilson took command of the party, and moved at full speed. The firing continued, and when the relief approached, the Indians turned on them, and being so much more numerous, a desperate fight ensued. Eventually the Indians surrounded them, and Wilson had to order a retreat.

His party had approached the fort over a bridge, crossing a ravine about forty yards west of the fort. The ravine must have been much deeper than now. Himself, with a portion of his men, had crossed the bridge, and closed in a hand to hand fight with the Indians; but, being out numbered as before observed, were ordered to retreat. By this time the Indians occupied the bridge in a dense force, so much so that Wilson, in opening a way for his men to retreat, threw several Indians over the bridge. He finally crossed in safety and placed himself behind a white oak tree, close to the ravine, which is now standing, where he plied his rifle on the Indian mass with deadly effect.

The whites retired across the bridge, and on the edge of the field (now belonging to Hardy Sloan) Barr, a brother to Wilson's wife, was killed. A retreating fire was kept up till they arrived at Barr's fort. The gate opened, and as the party rushed in, another brother of Mrs. Wilson was shot dead in the gate.

During the contest Wilson saw four Indians trying to tomahawk one of his brothers-in-law, Robert Barr, who was fighting them with the barrel of his gun. They were trying hard to kill him, and he was fighting nobly. He was still able to keep them off with the muzzle of his gun, which was all bent up. One of the Indians was in the act of priming his gun from his powder horn, when Wilson shot him through the horn and he fell dead. Just at that moment, a tomahawk was sunk into Barr's skull. All four of the Indians were killed before they could get up to the main body.

The Indians pursued all the way, but the orders of Wilson were strictly obeyed; he cheered them up, and it was long the subject of conversation in the settlement afterward that his words of command at Wallace's Fort were distinctly heard at Barr's, near six miles off.

A young man, Abraham Cahill, about fifteen years of age, anxious to see the fight, mounted Wilson's gray mare. She was one of those contrary animals that sometimes play the mule, and refused to stir. Before young Cahill was aware, the battle was all around him. The Indians probably intending to make him a prisoner, did not shoot, but his mare refused to budge.

While the Indians were in chase, he jumped off and took to his heels. In his way was a large log, which he did not know whether to jump over or go around. But looking back he saw two Indians close to him with drawn tomahawks, and thought no more of the log.

The Major saw the lad's danger, and being ahead of him loaded his rifle in great haste, out of his powder horn without measure, met Cahill, took the two Indians in line and actually killed both at one shot. Cahill got safe into the fort.

MAJOR WILSON.

Such are a few of the incidents in the life of Major Wilson. Many more might have been preserved had the attempt to collect them been made at an earlier period.

After the wars were over Major Wilson devoted himself to the business of his farm, which consisted of about eight hundred acres of beautiful and rich land, now in the occupancy of John Bell, Jr., near New Derry.

His house was the home of a true western hospitality, and no man possessed more local popularity. He was frequently offered respectable offices, but he uniformly refused.

His family consisted of three sons and four daughters, and till 1820 he resided on the same farm.

His death was sincerely regretted by his numerous friends and acquaintances, all of whom had more or less experienced his kindness, or learned the self-sacrificing loyalty of his nature, and the deep indebtedness of the early settlers to "the might that slumbered in a true man's arm."

Major Wilson was about six feet and one inch in height, well made in proportion, very straight and very active.

Like most men of his type, he cared little for money. To the poor he was a steadfast and reliable friend.

His remains, along with those of his wife, two unmarried sons and one unmarried daughter, and his married daughter, mother of the late Wilson Knott, Esq., of Blairsville, all repose on the farm of Gilson, formerly Barr's Fort, where the bodies of the two brothers of Mrs. Wilson, killed by the Indians, were buried in early days.

CHAPTER XXIX.

MINUTES OF CONFERENCES HELD AT FORT PITT IN 1768, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF GEORGE CROGHAN, DEPUTY AGENT FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS, WITH THE CHIEFS AND WARRIORS OF THE OHIO, AND OTHER WESTERN INDIANS.

SEVERAL causes conspired, threatening another Indian war. The whites had encroached upon Indian lands, on the Redstone creek, Youghiogheny and Monongahela rivers — several Indians were massacred — these grievous injuries were seriously felt by the Indians, and they at once resolved to avenge themselves; but no sooner had Sir William Johnson learned the designs of the Indians, he hastens to communicate them to the Governor of Pennsylvania, who immediately sent commissioners to Fort Pitt to treat with the Indians in reference to these matters, as appears more at large from the following:

At a conference held at Fort Pitt on Tuesday, April 26, 1768, with the chiefs and principal warriors of the Six Nations, Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies and Mohickons, residing on the waters of the Ohio.

Present — George Crophan, Esq., Deputy Agent; John Allen and Joseph Shippen, Esq., Commissioners from the Province of Pennsylvania; Alexander M'Kee, Commissary of Indian Affairs; Colonel John Reed, Commandant; Captains, Charles Edmonston and Pownall; Lieutenants, Thomas Ford, Alexander Maclellan, Jesse Wright, Samuel Steel, William Wood, Thomas Ball; Ensigns, Thomas Hutchins, Robert Hamilton, James Savage, Godfrey Tracy, and Henry Montour, Interpreter.

Indians — Chiefs of the Six Nations, viz: Keyashuta, White Mingo, Soneno, Allyondongo, Onaughkong, Gettyquaye, Onondagago, Cadedonago, Soggeyadentha, Thomissagarowa, Oyanay, Tocaughquotteto.

Chiefs of the Delawares, viz: Nettawatways, or Newcomer, Custellogo, Beaver, Latort, Spawgossa, Nessicuthethem, Cascatchou, Kekiwenum, Washawanon, Mahetsaughkong, Loyalaughland, Tugosso.

Chief warriors of the Six Nations, viz: Tocageda, Toedassaho, Kennissoen, Thagonneyesus, Dawatdehough, Awanneynatha, with two hundred and ninety-three warriors, besides women and children.

Chief warriors of the Delawares, viz: Chaplain Jacobs, Winganum, Captain Pike, Captain Jonny, Quequadagaytho, or Greg-Eyes, White Wolf, Theckoton, Opemalughim, Killaykhehon, Wiesahoxon, with three hundred and eleven warriors, besides women and children.

Shawanese chiefs, viz: Kaysinnaughtha, or The-Hord-Man, Etawakissaho, Maughkatethwa, Maykyppuckathey, Maughkateymawaywa, Mymwha, Bennoxcumma, Naynichtha, Wassaynametha, Wethawathocka, and their chief warriors, viz: Thethawgay, Waughcomme, Othawaydia, Mawaydia, Munnessa, Kawcomme, Shilleywathetha, Quighbya, with one hundred and forty-one warriors, besides women and children.

Chiefs of the Munsies, viz: Autlemaway, Kendasseong, Wassawayhim, Quekquahim, Waughellapo, with one hundred and ninety-six warriors, besides women and children.

Chiefs of the Mohickons, viz: Wennighjalis and Kelleigheon, with ninety warriors, besides women and children.

Seven Wyandotts were sent to attend the conference. The whole number of Indians, besides women and children, was 1,103.

The Indians, seated in order, Mr. Croghan opened the conference, as follows:

"Brethren of the Six Nations, Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies and Mohickons: I am glad to see so many of your different nations assembled at this council fire; and with this string of wampum I clear your eyes and wipe away your tears that you may see and look at your brethren, the English, with pleasure." A string.

"Brethren: With this string I clean the sweat off your bodies, and remove all evil thoughts from your minds, and clean the passage to your hearts, that everything which may be said to you from your brethren, the English, may rest easy there." A string.

"Brothers: With this string I clear your ears, that you may hear and consider well what is going to be said to you at this general meeting of your several tribes." A string.

"Brothers: I take this first opportunity of our meeting in council to introduce to you the Commissioners of Pennsylvania, appointed by your brother Onas and the wise men of that government, and desire you will give particular attention to the several messages those gentlemen are charged with." A belt.

After the above speeches were explained to the different nations, Mr. M'Kee delivered to them the message which Governor Penn sent to his care in February last, having had no opportunity till now of meeting with the chiefs of the several tribes together, though he had dispatched messengers to inform them of his having such a message to communicate to them. The message reads:

"By the Hon. John Penn, Esq., Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania, and counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex, on Delaware, &c., a message to the chiefs and warriors of the Six Nations, Delawares and Shawanese, at Ohio.

"Brethren: I am sorry to acquaint you that one Frederick Stump and John Ironcutter, some time ago, having sold some rum to a few Indians of your nations, they all got drunk at Stump's house, on Middle creek, and in their liquor threatened to kill him and his family, as he says, on which those two wicked men murdered several of your people.

"Brethren: You must be all sensible that there are bad and foolish people of all nations, whom, at times, the evil spirit gets the better of, and tempts to murder their most intimate friends, and even relations, in order to disturb the peace and tranquility of their neighbors. These accidents often happen amongst yourselves as well as among us; but the imprudent act of a few foolish people, should not disturb the peace of the many wise and innocent amongst us. The Great Giver of life has given us a good heart, and Congress to speak the sentiments of our hearts to each other; and, when any misfortune happens of this kind to either of us, we should consider well the consequences, and meet under the tree of peace and smoke together, as our forefathers formerly did, and endeavor to adjust, and settle any disputes that might happen, that so no black clouds might rise over our heads to prevent us from seeing the sun rise and set over us in the strictest friendship. This is the method I propose to take on this unlucky occasion, and recommend to you my brethren, and desire you may rest easy and satisfied till you hear from me again. The strictest justice shall be done you, and I make no doubt, but you will be satisfied with my conduct.

"On first hearing of this unfortunate affair, I issued a proclamation, and had those two men apprehended and put into prison, and make no doubt but to bring them to that punishment so heinous a crime deserves by the laws of the country. I have written to Sir William Johnson, and informed him of this accident; and as soon as my express returns you may be sure to hear from him further on this matter; and more to your satisfaction, as you will be convinced of the justice and upright intentions of all his Majesty's subjects towards your several nations." A belt.

Given under my hand, and the lesser seal of the said province of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, the 22d February, [L. S.] A. D. 1768.

JOHN PENN.

By his Honor's command,
JOHN SHIPPEN, Jr., Secretary.

"Wednesday, 27th April.—Mr. Croghan and the commissioners of Pennsylvania had a meeting with the chiefs of the several tribes, and explained to them the heads of the several speeches to be delivered to them from the Governor of Pennsylvania. After the above chiefs had considered what had been told them, the Delawares and Shawanese, on a belt and string of wampum, expressed their satisfaction at seeing commissioners from Pennsylvania at their council fire; and returned Mr. Croghan thanks for introducing them to their several nations, assuring him they would pay due attention to what those gentlemen should say to them from their brother Onas, and their brethren of the province." A belt and string.

"Friday, 29th April, 1768.—Present, the same as before. Mr. Croghan addressed himself to all the different tribes, and spoke as follows:

"Brethren: The other day I introduced you to the commissioners from Pennsylvania, and informed you they had several messages to you from the Governor, and good people of that province. They are now going to speak to you, and I desire you will pay due attention to what they shall say."

The commissioners then, in the name of the Governor of Pennsylvania, delivered the following messages to the Indians:

THE HON. JOHN PENN, ESQ., LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, &C., TO THE SEVERAL TRIBES OF INDIANS LIVING ON, AND BEYOND THE OHIO, VIZ: SIX NATIONS, SHAWANESE, DELAWARES, &C.

"Brethren: It is not long since I sent a message to you, to be delivered to you by Mr. Alexander McKee. You will see that that message was sent on purpose to acquaint you, that two of our inhabitants had murdered some of our Indian brethren, at Middle creek, near Susquehanna, and that I was taking all the pains in my power to have the murderers apprehended, and brought to the punishment they justly deserve. Ever since I sent that message to you, my heart has been so deeply afflicted with sorrow, for the loss you have sustained by that barbarous act, that I could not rest or sleep quiet in my bed; as well as I knew it was a great breach of the solemn engagements we had entered into, of preserving the strictest friendship between us, in not suffering the least link of the chain to be broken, or any way hurt.

"I have longed much to come myself to the Ohio, to take you by the hand, and sit down and condole with you on so melancholy an occasion, in the losses you have sustained in the death of some of our good brethren, the Indians; but I must let you know that the great affairs I have to manage in the government, necessarily detain me at this time in Philadelphia. I have therefore appointed my good brothers, John Allen, Esq., and the provincial secretary, Joseph Shippen, Esq., commissioners to meet you on this occasion, and to speak and condole with you in my stead. They will deliver this message to you in my name, and whatsoever they shall say to you, you may hear and believe in the same manner as if I was present among you, and spoke to you myself; for you may depend on it, they will say nothing to you but the real truth, and what are the sincere sentiments of my heart." A string.

"Brethren: I told you also in that message, that I had communicated this melancholy news to Sir William Johnson, and promised you that as soon as I should receive his answer, you should hear from me again, and I hoped in such a manner as would be to your satisfaction.

"Brethren: I am now to inform you that I have since received Sir William Johnson's answer, and am pleased to hear that he has laid this matter before a large number of Indians, as well as the Six Nations, as of several other northern tribes of Indians, with whom he has lately held friendly conferences at his house; and Mr. Croghan will relate to you whatever was done at that treaty." A string.

"Brethren: The unhappy accidents which have happened to some of your people in my government, have given me great concern, as I have already told you. I, with this string of wampum, gather up the bones of all our dead friends, and bury them in the earth, that they may be no more seen." A string.

"Brethren: As I have buried the bones of all our deceased friends, I condole with you for the loss you have sustained in them, and cover their graves with these few goods." Delivered the condolence presents.

"Brethren: With this belt of wampum I clear the blood off the leaves and earth, wherever it was sprinkled, that the sweet herbs which come through the earth may have their usual verdure, and that we may all forget the unhappy accidents that have happened." A large white belt.

"Brethren: Hearken now to what I have to say further to you, in behalf of myself and all the good people of this province. I am informed that some wicked and ill-disposed people have told you lies; endeavored to make you believe that the good people of my province are not well affected towards you, but intend you some mischief, and are not desirous of preserving the chain of friendship bright and entire between us. You may depend on it, that all such representations are false, and without the least foundation, and are made with no other view than to make a breach between us; and the authors must be looked upon as our greatest enemies. To assure you that I am desirous and sincere in my intentions, to live always in the strictest harmony with you; and to remove every uneasiness that may be lodged in your breasts, I have empowered and instructed my commissioners to confer with you on any matters which may immediately relate to my government, and to hear what you may have to say to me, with regard to all such things as may contribute to preserve the peace, and strengthen that bond of friendship in which you are united with the good people of this province; and I make no doubt but you have the same good dispositions that I have, to promote that end; and that all things will be freely communicated to one another in these conferences. I desire, therefore, that you will fully inform my commissioners of everything that gives you the least uneasiness, that I may know it, and endeavor to remove all cause of discontent among you." A belt.

"Brethren: I have told you everything that I had to say to you relative to the unhappy murder committed by two of our wicked people, on some of your brethren; and as I am, and have been doing everything in my power, to bring those offenders to justice, I cannot help reminding you of the number of people I have lost in the Indian country, by some of your foolish young men; and as I am determined that the strictest justice shall be done you, I must let you know that I expect the same justice from you for the loss of his Majesty's subjects intrusted to my care. This is agreeable to the treaties of friendship long subsisting between your several nations and us; and if we both unite in attending strictly to those treaties, we shall be able to preserve the chain of friendship bright, and without rust. It was likewise agreed at those treaties, that whenever any accident should happen that might give the least uneasiness, or in any manner endanger the friendship subsisting between us, we should immediately inform each other of it. Now you see that I have not forgotten those ancient treaties; for as soon as I had knowledge of those unlucky accidents which happened in my province, I immediately sent you notice of them by a speech and belt, to be delivered to you by Mr. McKee, and I now send my two commissioners to condole with you on that melancholy occurrence. I must now inform you of such English subjects belonging to my province as have been murdered in the Indian country, and have come to my knowledge, viz: Henry O'Brien, Peter Brown, and eight other men, in proceeding down the Ohio last August (1767), with two large batteaux loaded with goods, were murdered by the Indians, and part of the goods taken away, near the falls of that river. Thomas Mitchell, a trader, was likewise murdered in one of the Shawanese villages last fall. John McDonald was also murdered near Fort Pitt, in December last, by a Delaware Indian." A belt.

"Brethren: With this belt I renew, brighter and more strong, the chain of friendship that subsists between us; I have still fast hold of one end of it, and I desire you will also keep fast hold of the other end; and let us both forever hold it fast, that we may hereafter continue as one man, and act together in all matters relating to our mutual welfare, as brothers who have the same interests and concern for each other's peace and happiness."

A belt representing a chain held by a hand at each end, of eleven rows.

John Penn.

By his commissioners, } John Allen, [Seal.]
Joseph Shippen, Jr. [Seal.]

Dated at Fort Pitt, April 29, 1768.

The commissioners having delivered the Governor's messages in council, Mr. Croghan addressed the Indians as follows:

"Brethren: You have now heard what the Governor of Pennsylvania hath said to you, by his commissioners, and you see that he and the wise men of that province have not forgotten the former friendship which subsisted between your forefathers and theirs. They have now condoled with you for your lost friends, agreeable to your ancient customs, and spoke their minds freely on every subject that has caused their meeting you at this time, and have called upon you to do the same on your parts. They have brightened the chain of friendship, have done everything in their power to preserve that friendship, which was made between your forefathers and the first settlers of this province, who came over with your ancient brother Onas.

"Brethren: I now desire you will assemble all the wise men of your several tribes together, and call to mind your former treaties with the good people of Pennsylvania, and consider what has been said to you, and speak your mind freely and openly to the Governor's commissioners that everything which gives you uneasiness or discontent, may be fully known to your brother Onas, as he has desired."

After the above speeches were interpreted to the different nations, one of the chiefs spoke and said they would take them into consideration, and let us know when they should be ready to answer them.

Then a deputy sent from the Six Nation country got up, and delivered the following message to the several nations present:

"Brethren: I am sent from the Six Nation council with this speech to inform you that they have considered well the past conduct of their warriors, in going through this country to and from war, who have made a practice of stealing horses, and behaving otherwise very ill to their brethren, the English, and have forbidden them their doing any mischief for the future; and do now desire you the Shawanese, Delawares and Wyandotts to do the same, and throw all evil thoughts out of your minds and hearts; and to think of nothing but promoting a lasting friendship with your brethren, the English, as we your older brothers, the Six Nations have determined to do." A belt.

After the Six Nation deputy had finished the foregoing speech, and it was interpreted to the Indians, Mr. Croghan informed them of the Congress Sir William Johnson held with the Six Nations, Canada Indians, and other northern tribes, of the business transacted with them, and the peace settled between those several nations and the Cherokees; and that the deputies of the latter with a number of the Six Nations were to return home by the way of Fort Pitt, and recommended it to the different tribes present to behave in a friendly manner to them, and see that they passed safe through their country, on which Mr. Croghan gave them a belt.

Sunday, May 1st, 1768—Present, same as before. Quequedagaytho, speaker for the Delawares, rose up and made the following answer to the message from the Governor of Pennsylvania:

"Brother: We return you thanks for your kindness in sending commissioners to condole with us on account of the unhappy accidents which have happened between us; as also for the friendly messages they have delivered to us in your name, and you may be assured we shall pay due regard to everything you have therein said to us."

He then requested the several nations present to attend to what he was about to say farther to their brother, the Governor of Pennsylvania, and proceeded:

"Brother: The grief and concern which you have expressed to us on account of the late mischiefs committed on our people, we believe to be very sincere, and that they were caused by the evil spirit. You have also mentioned in a particular manner several losses which you have sustained in the Indian country. We are heartily sorry for them, but must acquaint you that as to the murder of the ten men in the batteaux down this river, we have heard of it as well as you, but it was committed by another nation, and not by any of the tribes here present, so shat we have not had the least concern in this unhappy affair. It is too true that one of your people was killed by the Shawanese, and we are also very sorry for that accident. As to the man who you say was killed near Fort Pitt, by a Delaware Indian, we tell you that the person who committed that act was half a white man and the other half an Indian; so you see brothers, that you are equally concerned with us in that breach of friendship; but I hope brother, all these misfortunes are now buried in oblivion, and that our children may never think of them more, and that we may continue in the strictest friendship." A belt.

"Brother: I shall in the next place speak to you concerning the friendship that subsists between us. I hope we shall always be firm in it; and we shall endeavor on our parts to keep the chain as bright and strong as our forefathers did at their first councils, which were held by wise men." A string.

He then repeated the same ceremonies that we had used in burying the bones, and said:

"Brother: I now gather all the bones of your deceased friends and bury them in the ground in the same place with ours so deep that none of our young people may ever know that misfortunes have happened between us; and it gives us great satisfaction that our brother Onas has not forgotten this ancient custom of condoling with our losses." A belt.

"Brother: By this belt I also wipe away the blood, as you have done from the earth, and make your bodies quite clean, that you may appear to have as good hearts as those of our wise forefathers; and we hope what passes in this council will never be forgotten." A belt.

After repeating what had been said to them relating to the chain of friendship, he concluded.

"Brethren: We are much obliged to the Governor for speaking so freely and openly to us from his heart, and as he has recommended to us to take fast hold of the chain of friendship, we assure him we shall take his advice, and will do it; and that we shall likewise speak to him from our hearts; for we look upon this as the only way to preserve our friendship; and we shall take care to guide and direct our young people, to behave as they ought to do, in promoting the peace and cultivating the strictest harmony between us." A belt.

The Beaver, a chief of the Delawares, then rising up desired all present to pay attention to what he should say to his brother, the Governor of Pennsylvania:

"Brother: We, the old men of the different nations present, are much rejoiced that the chain of friendship is now brightened by our brother, the Governor of Pennsylvania, and we return him thanks for putting it into our minds in the manner he has done, which convinces us of his good intentions.

We, the Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies, Mohickons, Wyandotts and our uncles, the Six Nations, will keep fast hold of the chain of friendship, in the manner you desire us. We now desire the Governor will also take hold of the end of this belt, which we stretch along the road between him and us, in order to clear it of the briars and brush that have grown up in it, that we may all travel it in peace and safety.

"Brethren; We make the road smooth and pleasant for your commissioners to travel home, and make a report to you at our ancient council fire in Philadelphia, of what they now hear from us; and when you consider our speeches, you will find that our hearts are good, and that we are determined to preserve the road of peace free from any interruption on our parts. We desire that you will take the same care on your parts; for if logs shall be laid across it by any of your people, it will be undoing everything that is now agreed on between our several nations and you, at this meeting." A belt.

Then Quequedagatho rose and said that they had spoken everything they had to say at this time, to their brother Onas, and addressing himself to Mr. Croghan, spoke as follows:

"Brother: We have been long acquainted with you, and we are well pleased with your behavior toward us; and at this time are the more obliged to you, for introducing to us the commissioners from the government of Pennsylvania; as it has given us a good opportunity of renewing our peace with the good people of that province, with whom our forefathers always lived in the most perfect friendship. You spoke to us the other day, and recommended to us to take into our most serious consideration, the several matters we have heard from the Governor of Pennsylvania by his commissioners; and to weigh them well in our minds, before we give our answers to them.

"Brother: We have taken your advice, and you may be convinced of this, by what we have just now said in behalf of the Delawares, Munsies and Mohickons." A belt.

The speaker of the Delawares then observed, that they had finished what they had to say at this time. Then the chief of the Six Nations rose up, and addressing himself to the commissioners of Pennsylvania, said:

"Brother: We have heard, with attention, what the Delawares have now said to you, and we shall speak to you to-morrow; and so will our younger brothers, the Shawanese."

Monday, May 2, 1768. Present—The same as before.

Thonissahgarona, a chief of the Six Nations, got up and addressing himself to the several nations present, said:

"Brother: The Great Giver of life has brought us all together at this council fire, in order to promote the good work of peace; and we have heard what our brother Onas has said to us by his commissioners; and you will now hearken attentively to what the Six Nations are about to say to him, in answer to his message." A string.

Then addressing himself to the commissioners of Pennsylvania, he said:

"Brothers: You have already heard what our nephews, the Delawares have said to you. They have spoken freely and openly to you from their hearts; and we hope it has made a proper impression on you. We are now, in like manner, going to open our hearts to you freely, and we also hope, that what we shall deliver, will be received by you in a friendly manner." A string.

Brother Onas: In your several speeches, you have desired us to open our minds freely, and to speak before you every thing that gives us uneasiness. We are obliged to you for this advice, which we shall follow, and are glad of an opportunity to speak to you in council.

"Brother. It is not without grief that we see our country settled by you, without our knowledge or consent; and it is a long time since we first complained to you of this grievance, which we find has not yet been redressed; but settlements are still extending farther into our country. Some of them are made directly on our war path leading to our enemies country, and we don't like it.

"Brothers: You have laws amongst you to govern your people by, and it will be the strongest proof of the sincerity of your friendship, to let us see that you remove the people from our land; as we look upon it, it will be time enough for you, when you have purchased them, and the country becomes yours." A belt.

"Brother: We have heard with pleasure what you have said to us; you have made our hearts easy with respect to the losses we have suffered by you; and therefore, we shall not take notice of any past misfortunes. We are glad to find our nephews, the Delawares, has fast hold of the chain of friendship with you; and by this belt, we join our hands with you and them, in holding it fast. We speak now in behalf of the Six Nations residing in this country, as there are some of every tribe present; and we wish, brethren, that you may be strong and well disposed to preserve that friendship, as we are." A belt.

"Brother: I have now done speaking, and have told you every thing that remains in our hearts, which gives us, and the several nations in this country any uneasiness."

Tuesday, May 3d, 1768. Present—The same as before.

Nymwha, a speaker of the Shawanese, addressed himself to all the Indians, desired they should attend to what he was going to say to the commissioners of Pennsylvania, and all the English brethren present, and spoke as follows:

"Brethren: When you talked of peace to us at the time we were struggling in war, we did not hearken to you at first. You mentioned it a second time to us; we still refused to attend to you, but after repeating it to us several times, we consented to hear you. We then looked at you, and saw you holding instruments of war in your hands, which we took from you and cast them into the air out of our sight. We afterwards desired you to destroy your forts, as that would be the way to make all nations of Indians believe you were sincere in your friendship; and we now repeat the same argument to you again. We also desired you not to go down this river in the way of the warriors belonging to the foolish nations to the westward; and told you that the waters of this river, a great way below this, were colored with blood. You did not pay any regard to this, but asked us to accompany you in going down, which we did, and we felt the smart of our rashness, and with difficulty returned to our friends. We see you now about making batteaux, and we make no doubt you intend going down the river again, which we now tell you is disagreeable to all nations of Indians, and we now again desire you to sit still at this place. They are also uneasy to see that you think yourselves masters of this country, because you have taken it from the French, who, you know, had no right to it, as it is the property of us Indians. We often hear that you intend to fight with the French again. If you do, we desire you will remove your quarrel out of this country, and carry it over the great waters where you used to fight, and where we shall neither see nor know anything of it. All we desire is to enjoy a quiet peace with you both, and that we should be strong in talking of peace. We have now spoken to you from our hearts, and hope we shall exert ourselves in promoting a lasting friendship. All we have to say to you now is to be strong, and let us agree to what we desire of each other. When you first talked of peace to us, you desired of us to sit over the river quietly at our fires; but our women and children were frightened away by the noise you made in repairing your fort; but if you do as we desired you, they will return without fear." A belt.

"Brethren: You have heard what we have desired in our last speech, and we hope you will comply with our request, and not attempt to go down this river again, as the nations who live that way are surprised to see you make a practice of this at the same time you are making professions of friendship to us. We, therefore, desire you will put a stop to your people going down this river till we have spoken to the nations living in that country, which we intend to do with the assistance of our brothers, the Six Nations, and our good fathers, the Delawares." A string.

"Brethren: The reason of our mentioning this matter at this time is because we hope you will take pity on us, and do as we have desired you."

Then Kissonauchtha, a chief of the Shawanese, rose up and said:

"Brethren: We are glad to see you here, and that you are sent by the Governor of Pennsylvania to confer with us at this council. It much rejoiced our hearts to take you by the hand on your arrival, and we assure you that the several nations now present are equally rejoiced with us on this account." A string.

"Brethren: You have informed us that you are sent by the Governor and wise men of Pennsylvania to hear what may pass at this council. We are glad to hear you say you had made the road clear and smooth as you came along, and that you had brought to us the chain of friendship in your hands, from our brethren, the wise men of Pennsylvania. This has dispersed the dark cloud of night which hung over our heads on account of many late misfortunes which have happened and brought to us the light of the clear day. You have no doubt heard of many bad reports of mischief, which may have made ill impressions on your mind against us; we now remove them quite away, and make your hearts easy on our parts, that when you set off you may travel it back with pleasure to your council house at Philadelphia, which I likewise sweep clean, that your wise men, when you return, may sit down in it with satisfaction and comfort, and look back upon us, their brethren, remembering that we have not forgotten our ancient friendship.

"Brethren: We have now, on all sides, cleared and made smooth the road between you and us; and we desire you, on your parts, to be strong, and not suffer any of your soldiers to travel it who carry sharp edged weapons with them, as that may injure the friendship existing between us." A belt.

Mr. Croghan then acquainted the Indians that the Commissioners of Pennsylvania would take the above speech into consideration, and answer them to-morrow.

This afternoon fourteen canoes arrived here, containing thirty-eight Munsies and Mohickons, exclusive of women and children, who reside on the head of the West Branch of the Susquehanna.

Wednesday, May 4, 1768. P. M.—Present, the same as before.

Thonissahgarawa, a chief of the Six Nations, rose up and addressed himself to the gentlemen and the several nations present, apologised for some difference which happened this morning among themselves, as it was the means of preventing our meeting them in the forenoon, and desired that their brethren, the English, and the tribes of Indians present, would take no notice of it." A string.

The same chief then spoke as follows: "Brethren: I am sorry to hear what our brethren, the Shawanese, said to you yesterday of your keeping possession of the forts you have taken from the French, for it was agreed upon by the Six Nations, as well as all other Indians, that the French should be driven out of this country, and the possession of all their forts and towns put into the hands of our brethren, the English; and the road of peace was opened from the sun-rising to the sun-setting for all nations to travel in." A string.

Then Kayashuta, a chief of the Senecas, got up, and, laying down a copy of the treaty of peace made by Col. Bradstreet with the Indians in the year 1764, spoke as follows:

"Brethren: What our chief has just now mentioned to you is very true, and you will see by this paper that during the late unhappy differences between us we held a treaty with Colonel Bradstreet, by which we agreed that you had a right to build forts and trading houses where you pleased, and to travel the road at peace from the sun-rising to the sun-setting. At that treaty the Shawanese and Delawares were with me, and know all this well; and I am much surprised that the Shawanese should speak to you in the manner they did yesterday."

The Commissioners then addressed themselves to the Six Nations, and spoke as follows:

"Brethren of the Six Nations: It gives us great pleasure to hear what you said the other day to your brother Onas, and we thank you in his name for the readiness you discovered in brightening and making strong our ancient chain of friendship; this will be very agreeable to him, as we know he is sincerely determined to continue to do the same on his part.

"Brethren: Esteem it a strong mark of the sincerity and goodness of your hearts, that you have opened them to us so freely and so fully, as your brother Onas earnestly desired you, that he might know whatever lay still concealed within your breasts, which gave you any uneasiness.

"Brethren: You have candidly and publicly told us that you are now easy with respect to all former losses you have suffered by our means and that you will take no further notice of such things. This entirely corresponds with your strong professions of friendship." A string.

"Brother: You have also freely, and without reserve, informed us, that the only grievance which you now have reason to complain of, is the settlements made on your lands. We are glad, brothers, we have now so good an opportunity of acquainting you, as well as the several nations present, with the mind of your brother Onas, and the endeavors which have been made to do you justice in this respect.

"Brother: We can assure you that nothing has given more concern than to find a number of foolish people should dare to seat themselves on lands within this province, which your good friends, the proprietaries, have not as yet purchased from your Governor Penn; therefore, as well from his own desire and earnest inclination to remove this injury done you, as by the express commands of our great King George, issued proclamations, near two years ago, ordering all persons whatsoever, who had settled on your lands, to remove without delay, and forbidden others from taking the least possession of any, under the severest penalty of the law.

"Brother: As the people who have settled your lands, came chiefly from Virginia, the government of that province likewise, issued proclamations and orders to the same purpose. The King's General, too (His Excellency General Gage), has twice sent up parties of soldiers to the people living on Red Stone creek and the Monongahela, to warn them off your lands, and threatened them with seizing their persons and effects, if they refused to move away. But, brother, we are sorry to tell you, that none of these measures had the desired effect; and therefore, Governor Penn and his Assembly, having still your interest greatly at heart, passed a law in February last, inflicting the penalty of death on all persons who should continue on your lands, after the first day of June next. And in order that the people who were settled on them, might have timely and proper notice of that law, Governor Penn, near two months ago, sent to them four prudent and honest men to distribute copies of it among them, with a number of proclamations, commanding them to obey it strictly, under the penalty of death; and also, to read and explain them fully to all those people.

"Brother: These four men have lately returned home, and reported to the Governor of Pennsylvania that they had executed his orders, but that they were told by the people settled at and near Red Stone creek, that they had been encouraged by the Indians themselves to continue on those lands; that, however, they were determined to obey the law and move off without delay. But, brethren, we are sorry to tell you, that as soon as the men sent by the Governor had prevailed on the settlers to consent to a compliance with the law, there came eight Indians, who lived at the Mingo town, down this river, and desired the people not to leave their settlements, but sit quiet on them till the present treaty at this place should be concluded." The people on receiving this advice and encouragement, suddenly changed their minds, and determined not to quit their places, till they should hear farther from the Indians.

The Indians then delivered to the men sent by the Governor, a string of wampum, and a speech which they desired them to carry to the Governor. The speech was this: "You are sent here by your great men to tell these people to go away from the lands which you say is ours, and our great men have sent us, and we are glad to meet here the same day. We tell you the white people must stop, and we stop them till the treaty; and when George Croghan, and our great men shall speak together, we shall tell them what to do."

"Now, brethren, we cannot help expressing to you our great concern at this behavior of those Indians, as it has absolutely frustrated the steps the Governor was taking to do you justice by the immediate removal of those people from your lands. And we must tell you, brethren, that the conduct of those Indians appears to us very astonishing, and we are much at a loss to account for the reason of it at this time, when the Six Nations are complaining of encroachments being made on their lands. You, yourselves, brethren, must be very sensible that, while any of the Indians encourage the people to stay on your lands, it will inevitably defeat all our measures to defeat them. But, brethren, all that we have now to desire of you is that you will immediately send off some of your prudent and wise men with a message to the people settled at Redstone, Youghiogheny and Monongahela, to contradict the advice of the eight Indians from the Mingo town, and to acquaint them that you very much disapprove of their continuing any longer on their settlements, and that you expect they will quit them without delay. If you agree to this, we will send an honest, discreet white man to accompany your messengers. And, brethren, if, after receiving such notice from you, they shall refuse to remove by the time limited them, you may depend upon it, the government will not fail to put the law into immediate execution against them." A string.

The commissioners then addressed the Shawanese.

"Brother: In the first part of your speeches, yesterday, you acquainted us that it was very disagreeable to you to see a fort continued at this place, contrary to your expectations, and that you were very sorry to find a number of batteaux building here in order to go down the river. With regard to these things, we can only say, it is not a little surprising to us that you should mention them at this time, as we have always understood that this matter was settled with the Six Nations, and all other Indians several years ago; and their full consent obtained for keeping forts in your country, as well as for going down this river to trade. But, brethren, as we came here to confer with you on subjects which only relate to the province of Pennsylvania, we have no concern in this business. It is an affair of our great King of England, and as such we must refer you for a more particular answer to Mr. Croghan, who you know is appointed by his Majesty to transact his affairs with the Indians in this country.

The commissioners then spoke to the Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies, Mohickons and Wyandotts.

"Brethren: We now return you thanks in the name of the Governor of Pennsylvania, and in behalf of the good people of that province, for the kind manner in which you have received his messages by us. We assure you it gave us great satisfaction to hear you declare in this public council your hearts concurrence with him in keeping fast hold of the chain of friendship, and your determination to preserve it bright, and not to suffer any little accidents to make a breach in it.

"Brethren: It is a strong proof of sincerity of your hearts, that you have resolved to forget entirely all the past mischiefs and injuries which have been committed by the folly of our wicked and rash young men; and we now hope these things will never interrupt our future peace and happiness. Brethren: We also thank you for making the road smooth between you and the people of Pennsylvania, by removing all the obstructions that were in it, in such a manner that it may be traveled by all people with ease and safety. Brethren: It will give us much pleasure when we return to Philadelphia, to communicate to the Governor all that has passed between us in these conferees, and to assure him of your friendly dispositions and upright intentions, which you may depend on we shall faithfully do." A belt.

The commissioners having finished what they had to say to the Indians, Mr. Croghan made them the following speeches:

"Brethren, the Shawanese: When you spoke yesterday to the Governor of Pennsylvania, you desired him to destroy this fort, and not to pass down this river as it was blood; and said that our warriors passing through your country gave you and all other nations great uneasiness in your minds. You are the only nation that has mentioned this circumstance, and I must tell you that this fort was built by the King's orders, and that your brother, the Governor of Pennsylvania, has no concern in this matter."

"Brethren: I well remember when the French first built a fort here and passed up and down this river, you did not desire them to destroy their forts and leave your country. We were at war with your old fathers, the French, when we drove them away and took possession of this fort; after that we conquered them, which you well know; and when we came here the Six Nations agreed to it, and came with us and opened a road of peace through all this country from the sun-rising to the sun-setting, both by land and water, that we might talk in peace with all nations of Indians to the westward; and we thought the Six Nations had a right so to do, as we always understood they were the original proprietors of this country. Brethren: When I was first going down this river by order of his excellency, General Gage, and the Hon. Sir William Johnson, all the nations now present agreed to it, and sent deputies with me to promote the good works of peace with all nations of Indians to the westward, and to receive them into the chain of friendship, subsisting between the King's subjects, the Six Nations, and all others in alliance with them; and to take them under his Majesty's most gracious protection, which has been since done. It is very true, when we first went down, we met with a misfortune from some of the nations we were going to speak to, through the instigation of the French, who then had an influence with those people to pursuade them to do mischief, but ever since that time those nations have behaved well to their brethren, the English; and after that unhappy accident by which we were sufferers, Captain Murray and Mr. McKee, condoled with your nation for your losses, agreeable to the ancient customs of your forefathers, and buried the bones of our deceased friends, whose loss gave me great pain of mind; and I did not expect to find their bones raked out of the ground and brought into council at this time; especially as you must know that we were struck by the very hatchet you yourselves put into their hands to strike the English with."

"Brethren: By the late treaty* of peace between the King of Britain and the French King the latter gave us possession of all their forts and towns as we had conquered them. You likewise took notice yesterday of our building boats and making repairs to this fort. I must tell you that the King, my master, never made war on any Indian Nation in this country; on the contrary, he has always promoted peace among you, an instance of which you see in the peace brought about between the Six Nations and Cherokees. But you all well know that the French acted on different principles, by setting one nation at war against another. This conduct of theirs was not pleasing to the Six Nations. They therefore requested the English to go with them to Sir William Johnson to drive the French from Niagara and put it into the possession of the English, which you all well know they did, and since that time our warriors have passed through from fort to fort, and back again, and no difference has happened between them and your people. I am therefore surprised, brethren, to hear you want to stop the road of peace that has been so long open for all nations, from the sun-rising to the sun-setting." A belt.

"Brethren of the Six Nations, Shawanese, Delawares, Wyandotts, Munsies, and Mohickons, give attention to what I am going to say to you: It gives me great satisfaction to find that the measures taken by the Governor of Pennsylvania, and the wise people of that province, have proved so effectual and agreeable to your several nations as to remove all uneasiness from your minds on account of many accidents that have happened between your people and the King's subjects in that province; and that you have buried them so deep in the earth that neither you nor your children yet unborn may ever call them to remembrance.

"Brethren: Your forefathers lived in the strictest friendship with the worthy founder of that province and the good people that came with him; and you have now renewed and brightened that ancient chain of friendship with the Governor's Commissioners, in behalf of the King's subjects in that Government. I now recommend it to your several nations to hold fast by that chain, and act on the same principles your wise forefathers formerly did." A string.

"Brethren: You have all heard what the Six Nations said to you by their deputies, that they heartily repented of their own past ill conduct towards their brethren, the English, in stealing horses and committing other abuses; and they have desired you, brethren, to cast out all evil thoughts from your minds, and return any stolen horses you may have amongst you, and think of nothing for the future, but promoting the good work of peace between you and your good brethren, the English.

*On the 10th of February, 1763, a definitive treaty of peace was signed at Paris, and soon after ratified. Nova Scotia, Canada, Cape Brenton, and the other French possessions in the north, were confirmed to Great Britain. The boundary between the English and French possessions was fixed by a line drawn along the middle of the river Mississippi, from its source as far as the river Iberville, (an outlet of the Mississippi river, which it leaves fourteen miles below Baton Rouge,) and thence by a line drawn along the middle of the river, and of the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the sea. The river and port of Mobile were ceded to Great Britain, except the Island and town of New Orleans.

"Brethren: The King of Great Britain, your father and my master, takes delight in promoting peace among all nations of Indians in this country and his own subjects, which you must be well acquainted with. You all daily experience his love towards you, and his pity for your necessities, by the favors you constantly receive from his officers here and elsewhere; and I am sorry to say that your past conduct shows a want of gratitude in you to his subjects. Whenever the King makes peace with any nation, he never violates his engagements, though he always has it in his power to chastise any people that dare be so hardy as to disturb the tranquility of their neighbors. But I now trust, brethren, that your future conduct will be such as may merit his Majesty's esteem and protection.

"By this belt I now clear the road of peace and make it smooth and easy to travel from the sun-rising to the sun-setting, that your brethren, the English, and all nations of Indians, may travel it with pleasure as one people, united in the strongest chain of friendship, that our women and children yet unborn may mutually enjoy the blessings of a lasting peace.

"Brethren of the Six Nations who are settled at the two creeks: I am sorry to hear from some of your brethren, the English, that whenever any of them pass by your village, you take rum and other things from them. You must be sensible this conduct is very wrong and a breach of your engagements to us. I hope I shall hear no more of it. You have been desired three years ago, by the Six Nation Council, to remove up this river nearer their country; and I now desire you will take that message into your most serious consideration, and do as they have directed you, which will be very agreeable to all your brethren, the English." A string.

Mr. Croghan having finished what he had to say to the Indians, the commissioners addressed themselves to all the nations present:

"Brethren: We are now to acquaint you that by order of the government of Pennsylvania, we deliver to you a present of goods to be distributed among the several tribes present, to clothe your women and children; and we desire you will receive them as a testimony of the affection and regard which the Governor and good people of this province have for you."

The commissioners then delivered the presents to the different tribes, amounting to one thousand and fifty pounds, Pennsylvania currency, including the several private presents made to the chiefs and principal warriors.

This evening arrived here twenty-five Six Nation warriors, on their return from the Cherokee country, and brought with them two prisoners.

At a private conference held at Fort Pitt, on Friday, May 6th, 1768, with all the chiefs and principal warriors of the Delawares, Munsies and Mohickons. Present, Mr. Croghan and the commissioners.

The Beaver rose up and spoke as follows, in behalf of the Delawares, Munsies and Mohickons:

"Brethren: It gives us great pleasure that the conferences are now ended, that the ancient chain of friendship is now renewed, and the road made smooth between our several tribes and our brother, the Governor of Pennsylvania. Every thing you have said respecting the folly of our young people in stealing your horses, and committing other abuses, we have laid to our hearts, and will take care to prevent such misconduct in them in future; and we desire brethren, you will take care that none of your young people steal any horses from us, which they have frequently done." A belt.

He then addressed the commissioners and said:

"Brethren: We now speak to you on account of trade. The traders who supply us with goods come from your province, and we do not take upon us to judge whether the goods they sell to us are dear or not, as we are ignorant of what they cost them; but we are certain from our own knowledge, that they do not allow us the same price for our skins and furs as they did formerly, and hope you will speak to them to allow us a sufficient price for our peltry." A belt.

"Brethren: The country lying between this river and the Allegheny mountains, has always been our hunting ground; but the white people, who have scattered themselves over it, have, by their hunting, deprived us of the game, which we look upon ourselves to have the only right to; and we desire you will acquaint our brother, the Governor of this, and prevent their hunting there for the future." A string.

"Brethren: We have now done speaking on business, and every thing has been settled at this conference to our satisfaction; and we have agreed that two of our principal warriors, named Quequedaguedo and Killbuck, shall accompany you to Philadelphia, in order to see the Governor, and bring us such answers as he shall think proper to send us respecting our trade and hunting country." A belt.

To which the commissioners replied:

"Brethren: We have already communicated to you and the other nations, the several steps taken by the government to do you all justice with respect to the encroachments on your lands; and we shall carefully report to the Governor every thing you have now said to us on this head, that he may take such measures as may be judged most expedient to satisfy you, and you may expect to receive his answer as soon as a convenient opportunity offers."

Saturday, May 7, 1768.—With the chiefs and principal warriors of the Shawanese. Croghan and Commissioners present.

Kissenaughtha, a chief of the Shawanese, spoke to the commissioners:

"Brethren: When you spoke to us from the Governor, you desired us to speak from our hearts, and tell you what gave any uneasiness of mind. We considered your speeches, and did so, which we find by your answer was not agreeable to you. You tell us what we spoke to you did not belong to the Governor of Pennsylvania, but to the King.

"Brethren: We assure you that we are as well disposed to live in friendship with our brethren, the English, as any other nation in this country, and will hold fast to the chain of friendship, now renewed and brightened by our brother Onas, as long as the grass grows or waters run, with all our brethren, the English." A string.

The same speaker addressed Mr. Croghan:

"Brother: We are all very sorry that we should have said anything the other day to our brother Onas that should give you, or his commissioners, any offence, or our brethren, the Six Nations. But as the Governor of Pennsylvania in his speeches desired us to open our minds, and tell every thing that gives us any uneasiness, we are determined to do so.

"Brother: When you spoke to us the next day you told us every thing that passed in the time of war, as well as since, which is very true, and we acknowledged we were wrong, though we did not expect you would do as we requested; and, from what you have told us, we know that is not in the power of any other person than the King, our father. And though you say we are the only nation that has mentioned this to you, we know that all other nations of Indians wish, as well as we, that there were no forts in this country. As to what we said about the boats going down the river, we do not mean that they should not go, but desired you would not send them till we had time to go and counsel with the nations in that country, as we have heard bad news from thence. And as to what we said about our people that were killed when you were taken prisoners, we only mentioned it to show you what a foolish people the Indians there are. It is very true, brother, we did send a hatchet to those nations in the time of war, but it was sent to us from the Senecas to carry to them.

"Brother: We now desire that you may forget what we first spoke to you about those things, and help us to some council wampum, as we are very poor; and we will immediately set out to talk to all the nations in that country, and take back from them all the belts we sent them, and do every thing in our power to make the road smooth and easy to travel, and convince you that we are much disposed to hold fast the chain of friendship as any nation in this country." A belt.

Monday, May 9, 1768, a meeting with the Chiefs and principal Warriors of the Six Nations—Croghan and Commissioners present.

It was agreed upon by them to comply with the request of the commissioners in sending messengers to the people settled at Red Stone, Youghiogheny and Monongahela, to signify to them the great displeasure of the Six Nations at their taking possession of the lands there, and making settlements on them; and, also, that it is expected they will, with their families, remove without further notice. They accordingly appointed the White Mingo, and the three deputies sent from the Six Nations, country, to carry a message to that effect, and the commissioners agreed to send Mr. John Frazier and Mr. William Thompson to accompany them, with written instructions on behalf of the goverment of Pennsylvania.

Monday, May 9th, 1768, P. M.

The Indian Messengers having agreed to set out for Red Stone creek to-morrow, the commissioners, as an encouragement to them, for the trouble of their journey, made them a present of some black wampum.

They then desired Mr. Frazier and Captain Thompson to hold themselves prepared for accompanying the Indian messengers in the morning, and wrote them a letter of instructions, which follows in these words, viz:

Fort Pitt, May 9th, 1768.

Gentlemen: The Six Nations, at the public conference held last week with them, and other tribes of Indians at this place, resumed their complaints of encroachments being made on their lands, and they have agreed, at our instance, to send four messengers to the people settled on the waters of the Monongahela and Youghiogheny, to express their great disapprobation of their continuing still there; and, also, to let them know that it is expected by the whole confederacy of the Six Nations, that they will remove from the lands they have unjustly taken possession of without further delay. But, as it is necessary, in order to enforce the message from the Indians, and to see that it is properly and effectually communicated to the people, that some prudent person should accompany the Indian messengers, we request you will do us the favor to undertake this business.

As soon as you arrive in the midst of the settlements near Red Stone creek, it will be proper to convene as many of the settlers as possible, to whom the Indians may then deliver their message, which shall be given to you in writing; and we desire you will leave a few copies of it with the principal people, that they may communicate the same to those who live at any considerable distance from them. We herewith furnish you with a copy of the speech delivered to us at this treaty, by the Six Nations, respecting the settlement of their lands, which you will be pleased to read to the settlers for their information.

You may then acquaint them that they must now be convinced by this message, and the speech of the Six Nations, that they have hitherto been grossly deceived by a few straggling Indians of no consequence, who may have encouraged them to continue on their settlements, and that they will now be left without the least pretense or excuse for staying on them any longer. However, we make no doubt but before you reach Red Stone many of the families will have removed, in obedience to the late law passed in this province, which has been read and fully explained to them by the Rev. Mr. Steel, and the other gentlemen, whom the Governor sent up to them in March last.

But should you find any of those inconsiderate people, still actuated by a lawless and obstinate spirit, to bid defiance to the civil authority, you may let them know that we were under no necessity of sending, in the name of the Governor, any further notice to them, or of being at any pains of making them acquainted with the real minds of the Indians, to induce them to quit their settlements, for that the powers of government are sufficient to compel them to pay due obedience to the laws, and they may depend upon it they will be effectually exerted if they persist in their obstinacy.

You may likewise assure them that they need not attempt to make an offer of terms with the government respecting their removal, as we hear some of them have vainly proposed to do, by saying they would go off the lands immediately on condition that they should be secured to them as soon as the proprietory purchase is made. It is a high insult on the government, for those people even to hint such things.

The only motives, therefore, which excite us to make use of the present expedient of sending you with messengers from the Indians on this occasion, is the compassionate concern we have for the dangerous situation and distress of those unhappy people, and the hopes we have, that by this means, they may be convinced it is their true and best interest to pay a due submission to the laws, by relinquishing their settlements without delay.

If any of them should talk of petitioning the Governor for a preference in taking up the lands they have improved, you may assure them from us that it will be to no manner of purpose till they have first complied with the law.

We depend greatly upon your prudence in executing this business to our satisfaction, and recommend it to you to be particularly careful that the Indian messengers are treated with the greatest civility and kindness. When you return to Fort Bedford, we beg you will write us an account of your proceedings. We wish you a safe return to your families, and are with great regard, gentlemen, your humble and obedient servants,

John Allen,
Joseph Shippen, Jr.

To Messrs. John Frazier and William Thompson.

Messrs. Frazier and Thompson being in readiness with their horses and provisions for their journey to Redstone creek, the commissioners sent several times for the Indian messengers, who at last came to them at the fort, and acquainted them that they had been seriously considering the business they were going to be sent on, and it now appeared to them so disagreeable that they could by no means consent to undertake it, and immediately returned the wampum which had been given them. Upon being interrogated as to the reasons of their declining to perform what they had consented to, they answered that three of them were sent as deputies by the Six Nations council to attend the treaty here, and having received no directions from them to proceed any further, they chose to return home in order to make report of what they had seen and heard at this place. They further added that the driving white people away from their settlements was a matter which no Indians could, with any satisfaction, be concerned in, and they thought it most proper for the English themselves to compel their own people to remove from the Indian lands.

After this refusal of the Indians who had been appointed to carry the message from the Six Nations, the commissioners in vain attempted to persuade or procure others to execute the business, though they used great endeavors for that purpose, and they thought it both useless and imprudent to continue to press a matter on the Indians, which they found they were generally much averse to, and therefore concluded to set out on their return to Philadelphia without further delay. But in a short time afterwards Kyashuta came with Arroas (a principal warrior of the Six Nations) to the commissioners at their lodgings, where the former addressed himself to them in effect as follows, viz:

"Brethren: I am very sorry to find that you have been disappointed in your expectations of the Indian messengers going to Redstone according to your desire and our agreement, and I am much afraid that you are now going away from us with a discontented mind on this account. Believe me, brethren, this thought fills my heart with the deepest grief, and I could not suffer you to leave us without speaking to you on this subject, and endeavoring to make your minds easy. We were all of us much disposed to comply with your request, and expected it could have been done without any difficulty, but I now find that not only the Indians appointed by us, but all our other young men, are very unwilling to carry a message from us to the white people ordering them to remove from our lands. They say they would not choose to incur the ill will of those people, for if they should be now removed, they will hereafter return to their settlements, when the English have purchased the country from us, and we shall be very unhappy if, by our conduct towards them at this time, we should give them reason to dislike us, and treat us in an unkind manner, when they again become our neighbors. We therefore hope, brethren, you will not be displeased with us for not performing our agreement with you, for you may be assured that we have good hearts towards all our brethren, the English."

The commissioners returned Kyashuta many thanks for his friendly behavior on this occasion, and assured him that they greatly approved of the conduct of all the Indians during the treaty, and that they were now returning home with very easy and contented minds. They further acquainted him that the reason for urging them to send a message to the Redstone settlers, proceeded entirely from the great anxiety they had of contributing everything in their power that might expedite that measure taken by the government to do them justice and redress every injury they complained of. Yet as they found the compliance of their request was disagreeable to the Indians, they should not press the matter on them any further, though it appeared to be a step very necessary to be taken at this time.

They then took leave of the Indians in a most friendly manner, and set out on their return to Philadelphia.

CHAPTER XXX.

THE APPLICATIONS OF 1769, SHOWING SOME OF THE TRAILS OR PATHS — A WARRANT BY THE PROPRIETARIES OF 1773 — A WARRANT UNDER THE COMMONWEALTH.

THESE applications were the first method of obtaining lands in Western Pennsylvania. They would read similarly to the following:

"No. 2,390.—George Brown hath made application for Three Hundred Acres of Land, on the Black Lick, to the left hand of the old Indian Path leading from Ligonier to Kittanning.

Dated at Philadelphia, this third day of April, 1769.

To J. Elder, Deputy Surveyor:

You are to to survey the Land mentioned in this Application, and make Return thereof into the Surveyor-General's Office within Six Months from the above Date.

And thereof fail not. JNO. LUKENS, S. G."

OTHER APPLICATIONS.

April 3d, 1769—George McConnell. On a run on the West side of Black Lick creek, below where the path leading from the Kittanning to Ligonier crosses said creek.

April 3d, 1769—George Fendler. Near Wipsey's cabin, near Conemaugh river.

April 3d, 1769—Wm. Longane. At or near the mouth of Connemach, or Yow Lick Creek, near Kiskonetas.*

April 7th, 1769—Benjamin Austin. On Kiskomenetas creek, including Warren's sleeping place, about fifteen miles below Blacklegs Town,† Cumberland county.

14th April, 1769.—Moses Moore, son of John Moore.† Between crooked creek and Plumb creek, on Kittanny Road.

3d April, 1769—Robert Smith, Jr. On crooked creek, about two miles below the old Kittanian town, on Allegheny, joining or near Sam Findley.

3d April, 1769—James Dunn. On crooked creek, about two miles below the old Kittontinien town, beginning at the mouth of said creek, where it empties itself into the Allegheny, or above the mouth of it and running up said crooked creek.

7th April, 1769—Æneas McCallaster. On the Allegheny Mountain, on both sides of Buffalo run, bounded on the northeast by Michael Higgins' land, Cumberland county.

3d April, 1769—George Franklin. On the south side of Allegheny river, near the mouth of Kiskcaminites.

7th April, 1769—James Campbell. On the Allegheny Mountain, on both sides of Buffalo run, bounded on the northeast by Oliver Ormsby's land, Cumberland county.

3d April, 1769—Francis Silvers—On the north side of Kiskiminites, including, or near Warns' sleeping ground, about or near three miles from Kiskiminites' old town.

3d April, 1769—George Campbell, Att'y. Upon Plumb creek, known by the name of Jaems Litart's town, an Indian.

3d April, 1769—Jeremiah Warden, Jr. At Black lick, on black lick creek, between Ligonier and Kittanning.

3d April, 1769—John Gottor.‡ On the waters of Connemach, on the west side of the hill.

3d April, 1769—Rev. J. Elder. Near the Two Licks.

7th April, 1769—Thomas Austin. Joining and below his brother Benjamin Austin, of Kiskiminites' creek, Cumberland county.

3d April, 1769—Susannah Knox. North side of Black lick, adjoining Samuel Dickison on the north side, and Joseph Dickison on the northeast.

3d April, 1769—Jane Silvers. On Kiskiomeanity creek, and near to Warren's Sleeping Groves.

26th May, 1769—David Hall. Adjoining on the southside to a survey made on Kiskaminetas river, at Warren's sleeping place on the south side, Cumberland county.

3d April, 1769—William Roberts. On the south side of crooked creek, near Allegheny river.

---

*Evidently an error in names. Probable location was near the site of Leechburg, Armstrong county. †Near site of Saltsburg.

†"The applicant described the land he wished to have surveyed, and paid one dollar for the order of survey; and within six months after the survey was returned to the Surveyor General, the owner or applicant was to pay at the rate of five pounds per hundred acres and procure his patent; which sum was subsequently increased to ten pounds, payable on application for a warrant."—(McCabe.)

"In the course of 1769, several thousand locations were applied for at the Land Office, and the settlements ware rapidly extended from the Monongahela northward, unto what is now Indiana county."—(Row.)

‡Up to the applications noted, one was addressed to T. Smith, D. S., one to R. McCrea, D. S., and the remainder to J. Elder, D. S.

A WARRANT BY THE PROPRIETARIES OF 1773*.

BY THE PROPRIETARIES.

[L. S.] Rich'd Penn.

Pennsylvania ss. Whereas, Thomas Dundass, of the County of Cumberland, hath requested that we would allow him to take up Three Hundred Acres of Land on the North branch of Black Legs Creek, including a small improvement at the head of a Spring in Westmoreland County. [Provided the same be purchased of the Indians and does not lie in or interfere with our Manor of Pittsburgh or any other of our Manors or Appropriated Tracts,] for which he agrees to pay to our Use, within the term of Six Months from the Date hereof, at the rate of five pounds sterling or Value in current Money of this Province, for every Hundred Acres; and also to pay the yearly Quit Rent of One Penny Sterling, for every Acre thereof, to us, our Heirs and Assigns forever, with Interest and Quit Rent, to commence from six months after date hereof.

To Joshua Elder, Deputy Surveyor, Execute this Warrant, and make Return of Survey as soon as possible unto the Surveyor General's Office.
For John Lukens, Esq., S. G.
Robert Dill.

These are therefore to authorize and require you to survey, or cause to (be) surveyed, unto the said Thomas Dundass, at the place aforesaid, according to the method of Townships appointed, the said quantity of three hundred acres, if not already surveyed or appropriated, and make return thereof into the Secretary's Office, in order for Confirmation; for which this shall be your sufficient warrant. Which warrant and survey, in case the said Thomas Dundass fulfill the above Agreement within Six Months from the Date hereof, shall be valid, or otherwise void.

Given under my Hand and the Seal of the Land Office, by Virtue of certain Powers from the said Proprietaries, at Philadelphia, this twenty-third Day of July Anno Domini, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-three.

To John Lukens, Surveyor-General.

A WARRANT UNDER THE COMMONWEALTH.†

[L. S.]

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ss. Whereas, Tench Love, of the county of ———, hath requested to take up four hundred acres of land adjoining land this day granted to Ludwig Campbell, in the county of Westmoreland.

(Provided the land is not within the last purchase made of the Indians), for which he agrees to pay, immediately, into the office of the Receiver General, for the use of this State, at the rate of fifty shillings per hundred acres, in gold, silver, paper money of this State, or certificates; agreeable to an act of Assembly, passed the first day of April, 1784; and to an act, passed the third day of April, 1792, entitled, "An act for the sale of vacant lands within this commonwealth." Interest to commence from the date hereof.

To Enneon Williams, Deputy Surveyor, Execute this Warrant, and make return thereof into the Surveyor-General's Office, according to law.
For Daniel Brodhead, Esq.
John Barrow, Jr.
Thos. Mifflin.
[Signed.]

These are, therefore, to authorize and require you to survey, or cause to be surveyed, unto the said Tench Love, at the place aforesaid, according to the method of townships appointed, the said quantity of acres, if not already surveyed or appropriated, and to make return thereof into the Secretary's Office, in order for confirmation; for which this shall be your warrant.

In witness, whereof, Thomas Mifflin, Governor of the said Commonwealth, hath hereunto set his hand, and caused the less seal of the Commonwealth to be affixed, the fifteenth day of January, in the year 1794.

To Daniel Brodhead, Esq., Surveyor-General.

*This form was the second method of obtaining land.

†The Commonwealth succeeded the Proprietaries in 1776, by the Revolution.

CHAPTER XXXI.

FERGUS MOORHEAD, THE PIONEER—PROSPECTS IN THE TWO LICK VALLEY, IN 1770—WITH SOME BROTHERS AND FRIENDS LOCATE IN INDIANA COUNTY IN 1772—HIS CAPTIVITY, &C.—SAMUEL MOORHEAD—JAMES KELLY.

IN the month of May, 1772,* Fergus Moorhead, his wife and three children, his two brothers, Samuel and Joseph, James Kelly, James Thompson and a few others, bid farewell to their friends and relatives in Franklin county, and set out on their journey to the "Indian country" west of the Allegheny. Though the prospects of acquiring extensive possessions and wealth for themselves and posterity, might buoy up the adventurous spirits of the three brothers, it may well be imagined that Mrs. Moorhead left home and all its endearments, with a heavy heart. But, being a woman possessing great energy of character, as is shown in the sequel, and touched, perhaps, with that romantic spirit peculiar to that period of which we are writing, she pressed forward with a firm step and a resolute heart, determined to share with her devoted husband the dangers and trials of the wilderness.

Fergus had a wagon in which he placed the provisions necessary for the journey, his farming utensils and household effects. This was drawn by three good horses. His other live stock consisted of a yoke of oxen, two milch cows, several head of sheep and hogs, and a lot of fowls. The progress of the party was necessarily slow. The military road, opened out some years previous from Cumberland to Fort Pitt, was the only one that led at that time across the mountains, and was in many places scarcely traceable, while it occasionally passed through swamps and ravines, and then again over rocks and along mountain slopes, so as to render it almost impassible. But even this road, bad as it was, had to be abandoned, as its course diverged considerably from the point which the adventurers wished to gain. Hence they had to make their way, as best they could, through the wilderness.

It would be a fruitless task to attempt a description of the toils, the hardships and the dangers, to which the party were daily and hourly exposed. Beasts of prey were roaming on all sides, seeking an opportunity to devour them. The rattle snake and copperhead lay coiled among the weeds and bushes, ready to strike the deadly blow. And, most dangerous of all, the war whoop which sounded from hill to hill, and echoed through the intervening valleys, gave warning of the proximity of the savage, thirsting for plunder and for blood.

In the night and in the day the party were continually exposed to danger. With naught but the heavens for a covering they laid down at night to rest themselves, and forget for a few hours the fatigue of the day in the lap of "nature's fond nurse, baemly sleep," while one of the party stood as sentinel, not knowing what moment they might be attacked by the wild beasts or the Indians. In the day they had often to halt, and cut away logs and remove other impediments, and as there were no bridges, they had frequently to cross streams at imminent peril.

At length, at the end of four weeks from the time they had left Franklin county, the party reached the point of their destination. Where the town of Indiana is now built, was the spot that had been selected for a settlement by Fergus Moorhead, who had made an excursion into this section in 1770. For reasons which to them were obvious, the party changed their determination, and located a few miles further west. Though they were now relieved from the fatigue incident to their journey, our pioneers were far from living at their ease. Having sat themselves down in the forest, without house or shelter, and remote from the nearest settlement, we may readily imagine that their situation was far from comfortable. But, "where there is a will there is a way," and this trite saying was abundantly verified in the case of the Moorheads.

*Jonathan Row, Indian Register, 1859.

The land now owned by Isaac A. Moorhead was that which they selected for their future residence. On the first day, they naturally looked around to find a spot of ground on which to erect buildings that would answer their immediate necessities, and selected the site of the Isaac Moorhead house. On the next morning, they commenced the work of building a cabin. After finishing their houses they built pens for their horses, cows, oxen, sheep, hogs and fowls.

When these were completed they were once more enabled to lie down, if not under their own "vine and fig tree," at least beneath their own roof, and enjoy the refreshing sweets of slumber. We next see them laying the "axe to the root" of the sturdy oaks of the forest and prostrating them with unsparing hands. They then planted some corn and potatoes, for which they have cleared and grubbed a small patch of ground, and after this put another one in order for the garden. When all this was accomplished, Joseph and Samuel left their brother and his family to return home. By this time the harvest was rapidly approaching, and it was necessary that Fergus should obtain provision for his stock. In this respect, he was very highly favored. The land subsequently owned by David Ralston, south of Indiana, was then partly clear of timber and brush, and clothed with a coat of luxuriant grass, of which he cut a sufficient quantity to supply his animals during the whole winter.

He then employed himself in clearing land for the purpose of raising grain. The difficulties of a pioneer's life can only be apprehended fully by those who have had such experience as this family had, and the hardships and annoyances are almost beyond human conception. They were buoyed up with the promise made far back in the days that are numbered with the past, that "the desert places should be made glad and the wilderness to blossom as the rose."

The greatest annoyance was the venomous reptiles and beasts of prey, with which the country abounded. It was almost miraculous if they could go beyond their cabin door without hearing the quick snap of the vice-like jaws of the wolf or seeing the subtle panther crouching on a neighboring tree, its fiercely brilliant eyes peering through the thick frontage, or the bloodshot eyes of the catamount glaring hideously from a neighboring thicket. It was nothing uncommon to be confronted by a huge bear or two, who were at all times ready to greet them with a friendly "hug."

The copper-head and rattle-snakes were so numerous that, attracted by the shelter of the house, they would steal into it and secrete themselves in the beds or any place that would afford them concealment. The cunning fox, too, could be seen loitering around in constant readiness to commit some petty depredation.

Their cattle were in imminent danger of the most ferocious of these animals, and not unfrequently Mr. Moorhead or his wife was placed under the necessity of taking the dogs and going to their relief, if they could not escape and get to the house. At night they were very much annoyed by their attacking the cattle or sheep in their pens, and Mr. Moorhead would frequently be forced to arise and assist the dogs in driving them away. This was always attended with the greatest danger, from the fact before mentioned, that the snakes were so numerous as to almost preclude the possibility of escaping unharmed. They were also in constant dread of the Indians, who when the attention of the dogs were drawn to the nocturnal depredators of the cattle and sheep pens, might seize the opportnnity to attack the family in their wild-wood home.

He had brought with him a sufficient quantity of flour to answer his wants till his potatoes and corn would be matured, and fit for use in the fall. The corn he had to carry to a mill on the Kiskimenitis, in what is now Westmoreland county, to be ground into meal. Here new difficulties had to be encountered, inasmuch as he had to go the intervening distance between his house and the mill, without the aid of a road, his course lying through the woods, up hill and down dale; through brake, bush and swamp, and his only guide, the bright sun that shone in the heavens above him. At night, he had to lie out-doors, and his horses had to content themselves with such sustenance as the woods afforded. The dangers of the day would only be supplanted by those of the night. We can imagine that his was "no very comforting condition," and the thought that his wife and three children, in the midst of the wild forests, was not calculated to add to his peace of mind.

The wild game which abounded in the woods, supplied him with all the animal food of which he was in need, but for salt, tobacco, iron, clothes, &c., he had to return to Franklin county, and these articles had also to be packed across the mountains, on horseback. This was no small undertaking for one man, nor was it unattended by great danger, for it required three or four weeks to make the journey. During all that time, he would travel day and night, halting only long enough to permit his horse to graze on the grass that grew in the woods, which was the only food upon which they had to subsist, not knowing at what moment he might be killed by the Indians, or devoured by some wild beast. The reflection that his small family might be at the mercy of the savages, and that on his return he might find them murdered, his home burned, and his goods destroyed, was a source of infinite concern to him, and but served to urge him along the more speedily.

Such were the difficulties and anxieties under which Mr. Moorhead lived for four years from the time he left his fireside and his home in Franklin county, and located in what is now Indiana county, till the ever memorable year of 1776.

Independence year was fraught with important national events and individual incidents. In that year the American colonies took active measures to shake off the "British Yoke," and, in the same year, several engagements, on land and on the sea, occurred. The British employed all the Indians that would engage on their side, to the number, as has been estimated, of about twelve thousand, but many small parties, acting as spies and marauders on the frontier, were not included in that estimate.

At this time of which we write, Samuel Moorehead, who had been elected, captain, was stationed, (in July, 1776), with a small company of backwoods militia, at Kittanning. Being attacked with the small pox, he was unable to perform his duty as an officer, and on this account went to his brother, Fergus, and prevailed on him to take command of the company, while he remained with Fergus' family until he had recovered from his illness. He then returned to Kittanning, and he and Fergus passed the evening together in talking about their family and friends, and planning how they should manage their business. It was agreed that Fergus should return to his home on the following morning, in company with a soldier named Simpson.

A party of Indians, who were lurking around the fort, happened to overhear the conversation of the Moorheads, and, being well acquainted with the road Moorhead and Simpson would take in the morning — it being what was then known as the "Kittanning Path"—they secreted themselves near it, on a hill, since called "Blanket Hill," about midway between Kittanning and Moorhead's, and there awaited the approach of their intended victims. Upon the arrival of Moorhead and Simpson, who, though on horseback and armed, did not suspect an attack, the Indians fired, killing Simpson and the two horses on the spot, and before Moorhead could extricate himself they seized him and made him a prisoner. After scalping Simpson, they stripped off his clothes and left his naked body lying at the side of the path, with the two dead horses.

The Indians ordered Moorhead to take off his boots, and loaded the two saddles and bridles on his back, and thus accoutred, started with him into the woods, so as to evade pursuit, marching in single file, and taking care not to tramp down the weeds, in order to leave their trail as indistinct as possible. In this way they proceeded rapidly all day, and in the evening came to a halt to take supper, which consisted of the remains of a deer killed some days previous, and of a ground hog, which one of the party shot during the evening.

Having regaled themselves with the food just mentioned, the party prepared for lodgings by gathering some dry leaves on which to sleep, and then made arrangements to secure Moorhead against escape during the night. They caused him to lay down, and drove a stake in the ground on each side of him, and passed a long rope over his body, on each end of which an Indian laid himself. In this way they confined him every night during his captivity.

On the following morning Moorhead was deprived of his clothes, and forced to put on an Indian dress. He was compelled as the day before, to carry the saddles and bridles, and to travel all that day and all the day following, without eating anything. They also took from him his tobacco, thus depriving him of what, under the circumstances, would have been to him a great luxury. After traveling about fifty miles, over hills and rocks, through swamps and thickets, and crossing streams and ravines, they reached an Indian camp. The Indian that had shot Simpson, and the one who first seized Moorhead, fired off their guns and raised the scalp hallo as they approached the encampment. This was a long yell for every scalp that was taken, followed by shrill, quick, piercing shrieks. These were answered from the camp by the discharge of rifles and whooping and cries of joy. All rushed out to meet the approaching party.

As the Indians crowded around him, Moorhead expected to be put to death at once, but they offered him no violence, and entertained the war party with great hospitality. Here they remained two nights and a day, and leaving only in the morning after the second night, traveled about forty miles, and in the evening reached an Indian village. Here he saw the Indians for the first time, perform several dances, one of which was the war dance, from which circumstance he inferred his hour was come, and that he was to be killed forthwith.

But his apprehensions were happily unfounded, though he was compelled to pass through a trying ceremony. After kindling a large fire, the whole company, men, women and children, danced around it for a long time, and then formed into two lines, armed with hatchets, ramrods and switches. Having thus arranged matters, Moorhead was called to run the gauntlet, but as he had never before heard of such a ceremony, he did not understand them. His captor endeavored to explain it to him, saying he was to pass through the two lines and receive a blow from each individual as he passed, and exhorted him to run his best, as the faster he ran the sooner the performance would be over.

Moorhead entered upon the chase with the feelings of a man who supposed he was running for his life, and was severely switched along the line, three-fourths of the way, when a tall chief, more devilish, if possible, than his companions, threw sand in his eyes, which added to his pain and completely blinded him. He tried, however, to proceed, but in his effort to grope along, he was pushed about from one to another, and struck and switched until two young warriors each took him by the hand, and ran with him into a wigwam, where he was quickly visited by his captor, who asked him if he felt sore? Moorhead replied that he felt very much hurt, and inquired what he had done to merit such usage? The Indian replied he had done no harm, but this was the customary treatment of their prisoners; that he had now seen all their ceremonies, and that in future he would receive better treatment.

Moorhead was taken by his captors to Quebec. On their way thither the party traveled leisurely, some days advancing but two or three miles. Relying entirely upon their success in hunting for the means of subsistence, it may readily be understood that they did not "fare sumptuously" every day, but of whatever they had, the prisoner now always got his share. After reaching Quebec, Moorhead was sold to the British, and there kept in confinement for eleven months. The treatment now received was worse, he said, than that which he received from the Indians.

His food was of the coarsest and most unhealthy sort, the bread being dry and mouldy and the meat sour and sometimes almost putrid. From the second day of his captivity till the close his garments were neither changed nor washed. During all of that time his hair was not cut nor combed nor his beard shaved. At the end of eleven months he was exchanged and sent to New York.

From New York, Moorhead set out immediately, on foot, for his former home in Franklin county. Though supplied with provisions, such was the reduced state of his health, in consequence of long confinement and ill-treatment, that he was able only to carry a small stock with him. He was obliged to halt often during the day to rest his weary limbs, and, as his route lay mostly through the wilderness, he had to sleep at night in the open air.

At length his stock of provisions became exhausted; he found himself compelled to kill a dog that followed him from New York, and to subsist upon its meat. Even this unpalatable food did not hold out, and he lived for some days upon frogs and fruits. So altered was his appearance that when he reached his father's, in Franklin county, no one knew him.

From the day on which he was taken prisoner until his arrival in Franklin county he had not heard a word of his family, neither did they know anything concerning his fate. Mrs. Moorhead had been left with three small children, and soon after her husband's capture gave birth to a fourth, which was among the first, if not the first, white child born in this county, and was named by his mother, Fergus, after the father. In the meantime one of the children had died with the small-pox, and on Mrs. Moorhead devolved the melancholy duty, in the absence of any assistance, to close its eyes, make its coffin and deposit it in the silent grave. Shortly afterwards she was visited by her brother, who assisted her in boxing up and burying her provisions and effects, after which she accompanied him on horseback to her former home in Franklin county, where she remained till the unexpected return of her husband, for all had given him up for lost.

In 1781, Fergus Moorhead, with his wife and children, returned to his border home. What was remarkable was the articles which Mrs. Moorhead had buried in the ground were mostly in a state of preservation. The live stock was gone, having most probably been killed by the Indians. A number of families from the counties east of the mountains, came with Moorhead and settled in the vicinity.

Among this number were James Kelly, James Thompson,*

*See sketch of James Thompson.

Moses Chambers, Colonel Sharp, S. and W. Hall, his brothers, Samuel and Joseph, the Walkers, Dixons, Dotys, and others.

The first thing that was accomplished was the erection of a fort or block house near Moorhead's cabin (near the present site of the stone house), large enough to contain all the families and their effects. Here they remained at night and also during the ensuing winter, considering it unsafe to sleep in their cabins. They next betook themselves to clearing out farms, and would work alternately on each tract, so as to give each individual an equal chance with the others, to have his ground prepared for seeding in the fall.

While the party was at work felling timber and clearing the ground, two or three men would stand guard with loaded rifles so as to give timely notice of the approach of danger, and be ready to resist an attack from the enemy. But the Indians did not assail them, probably on account of the precautionary measures lastly mentioned.

In the course of a few years, the settlers became comfortably situated. They raised live stock and grain in abundance, engaged in domestic manufactures, and erected saw and grist mills, and soon became a thrifty community. Their children grew up and settled on lands around them, and each year brought arrivals of new families from the east.

As the settlements increased, the Indians withdrew, and in a little over twenty years from the period of Moorhead's return, this section had been organized into a county, its seat of justice had been located, and its public buildings were erected.

Mr. Moorhead died at the age of eighty-nine, and has left a numerous and respectable progeny, many of whom are yet residents of this county. Some of them occupy the very spot which was the theatre of so many trials and hardships in days of yore.

SAMUEL MOORHEAD*

"About the year 1774, commenced building a mill on Stony Run, where Andrew Dixon's saw mill was afterwaed situated, but before it was completed, the settlers were driven off by the Indians. They fled to what was then called 'Sewickly settlement.' This was called Dunmore's war; by some of the old settlers, it was called the civil war.

"They lost their cattle and their crops. However they returned in the fall to their improvements, and many years later, Msorhead completed the mill.

"The Indians were living on the Allegheny at this time but roved in bodies through all Western Pennsylvania. They had a town called Hickory town, another called Mahoning, also Punxsutawney. At their leisure, they stole the white men's horses, and showed symptoms of no doubtful character towards their new neighbors.

JAMES KELLY.

"Kelly's cabin stood within the limits that afterwards enclosed his son, Meek Kelly's cabin. Later the Alex. Barclay farm. (See his will of 1803, among the early records of the county, and the sketch of the Kelly family in Armstrong Tp.") In common with the other pioneers† he had a 'hard road to travel.' His cabin was constructed of round logs or poles, leaving large cracks between, which it was customary on the approach of winter to close up, so as to render the building more comfortable."

"It is highly probable that Kelly, then in the vigor of manhood, with a small family around him, took an active part in the affairs of the border, but as few of the records of that period are within reach, we can only indulge in conjecture. We have several authenticated facts, however, concerning him, that are not without interest."

"One one occasion he was out in search of his horses which had strayed several miles. When he came up to them he espied two Indians a short distance off trying to conceal themselves. They might have shot him, as he was unarmed, but their cowardice made them suspect there were more Indians in the vicinity, hence they dare not venture to fire. Kelly quickly mounted one of the animals and sped away, the other following close in the rear. Arrived at his cabin, he placed his wife and children on the horses and proceeded with them in the direction of Wallace's Fort, which they reached in the course of the ensuing night. They returned soon afterwards."

"When it became known that Moorhead was taken prisoner and Simpson killed, and that Indians were prowling through the neighborhood, Kelly, with his family, fled to the Conococheague, in Franklin county, where he entered the regular service as a private in Colonel McGaw's regiment. He participated in the battles of Brandywine and Monmouth, and subsequently served in Sullivan's expeditions against the Indians on the Mohawk."

"After the war he returned to Indiana county, where he died in 1803."

*R. B. McCabe in Rupp's History of Dauphin and other counties. †Jonathan Row.

CHAPTER XXXII.

LORD DUNMORE'S WAR—DUNMORE'S ATTEMPT TO SEIZE A PORTION OF PENNSYLVANIA—MASSACRE OF THE INDIANS—COMMENCEMENT OF HOSTILITIES ON THE PART OF THE NATIVES—PETITIONS OF THE INHABITANTS OF WESTMORELAND AND OTHER COUNTIES—PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN—BATTLE OF PLEASANT POINT—TREATY OF PEACE—ACTIVE MEASURES TO ASSERT THE CLAIM OF VIRGINIA OVER A PORTION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

EARLY in 1774, Lord Dunmore, prompted very probably by Colonel Croghan, and his nephew, Dr. John Connally, who had lived at Fort Pitt, and was an intriguing and ambitious man, determined by strong measures to assert the claims of Virginia upon Pittsburgh and its vicinity, and dispatched Connolly, with a Captain's commission, and with power to take possession of the country upon the Monongahela, in the name of the King.

The doctor issued his proclamation to the people in the neighborhood of Redstone and Pittsburgh, calling upon them to meet on the 24th or 25th of January, 1774, in order to be embodied as Virginia militia. Arthur St. Clair, who then represented the proprietors of Pennsylvania in the west, was at Pittsburgh at the time, and arrested Connolly before the meeting took place.

The people who had seen the proclamation, however, came together, and though they were dispersed without attempting any outbreak in favor of the Virginia side of the dispute, which it was very much feared they would do,—they did not break up without drunkenness and riot, and among other things fired their guns at the town occupied by friendly Indians across the river, hurting no one, but exciting the fear and suspicion of the red men. Connolly was soon after released on bail. He then went to Staunton and was sworn as a justice of the peace of Augusta county, Virginia. During the latter part of March,* he returned to Pittsburgh, with civil and military authority to execute the laws of Virginia. On the 5th of April, the court assembled at Hannahstown, the seat of justice for Westmoreland county. Soon after Connolly, with about one hundred and fifty men, all armed and with colors flying, appeared there, placed sentinels at the door of the court house, who refused to admit the magistrates unless with the consent of their commander.

*Craig's History of Pittsburgh, p. 113

A meeting then took place between Connolly and the magistrates. He averred that he had come in fulfillment of his promise to the sheriff, but denied the jurisdiction of the court. They affirmed that they "acted under the legislative authority of Pennsylvania, and would continue so to act; but that they would do all they could to preserve the public tranquility, and the State of Pennsylvania was ready to agree to a temporary boundary, till the true one could be ascertained."

Connolly refused to accede to any terms but in Lord Dunmore's name, and by his authority took and kept possession of Fort Pitt; and as it had been dismantled and nearly destroyed by royal orders, rebuilt it, and named it Fort Dunmore. Meantime, in a most unjustifiable and tyrannical manner, he arrested both private men and magistrates, and kept some of them in confinement until Lord Dunmore ordered their release. Knowing that such conduct was calculated to lead to active and violent measures against himself by the Pennsylvanians, he took great precautions, and went to considerable expense to protect his own party from surprise.

MASSACRES OF THE INDIANS.

These expenses, it is not improbable, "he feared the Virginia General Assembly would object to, although his noble patron might allow them; and it is not impossible that he intentionally fostered," as St. Clair distinctly intimated in his letters to the Pennsylvania authorities, "the growing jealousy between the whites and natives, in order to make their quarrels serve as a color to his profuse expenditures."

On the 21st of April, Connolly wrote to the settlers along the Ohio, "that the Shawanese were not to be trusted, and that they (the whites) ought to be prepared to revenge any wrong done them." This letter came into the hands of Capt. Michael Cresap, who was examing the lands near Wheeling, and who appears to have possessed the "true frontier Indian hatred." Five days before its date a canoe belonging to William Butler, a leading Pittsburgh trader, had been attacked by three Cherokees, and one white man had been killed. This happened not far from Wheeling, and soon became known there, while about the same time the report was general that the Indians were stealing the traders' horses.

When, therefore, immediately after Connolly's letter had been circulated, the news came to that settlement that some Indians were coming down the Ohio in a boat. Cresap, in revenge for the murder by the Cherokees, and, as he afterward said, in obedience to the direction of the commandant at Pittsburgh, contained in the letter referred to, determined to attack them. They were, as it happened, two friendly Indians, who, with two whites, had been dispatched by William Butler, when he heard that his first messengers were stopped, to attend to his peltries down the river, "in the Shawanee country."*

"The project of Cresap, says Dr. Doddridge, was vehemently opposed by Colonel Zane, proprietor of the place. He stated to the Captain that the killing of these Indians would inevitably bring on a war, in which much innocent blood would be shed, and that the act in itself would be an atrocious murder, and a disgrace to his name forever. His good counsel was lost. Cresap and his party went up the river. On being asked, at their return, what had became of the Indians, they cooly answered that 'they had fallen overboard into the river.' Their canoe, on being examined, was found bloody and pierced with bullets. This was the first blood which was shed in this war, and terrible was the vengeance which followed."

"In the evening of the same day, the party hearing that there was an encampment of the Indians at the mouth of Captina, went down the river to the place, attacked the Indians and killed several of them. In this affair, one of Cresap's party was severely wounded."

"The massacre at Captina and that which took place at Baker's, about forty miles above Wheeling, a few days after that at Captina, were undoubtedly the sole causes of the war of 1774, which continued till the Revolution. The last was perpetrated by thirty-two men, under the command of Daniel Greathouse. The whole number killed at this place and on the river opposite to it, was twelve, besides several wounded. This horrid massacre was effected by a hypocritical stratagem, which reflects the deepest dishonor on the memory of those who were agents in it."

"The report of the murders committed on the Indians near Wheeling induced a belief that they would immediately commence hostilities, and this apprehension furnished the pretext for the murder above related. The ostensible object for raising the party under Greathouse, was that of defending the family of Baker, whose house was opposite to a large encampment of Indians, at the mouth of Big Yellow creek. The party were concealed in ambuscade, while the commander went over the river, under the mask of friendship, to the Indian camp to ascertain their number; while there, an Indian woman advised him to return home speedily, saying that the Indians were drinking and angry on account of the murder of their people down the river, and might do him some mischief.

"On his return to his party he reported that the Indians were too strong for an open attack. He went to Baker and requested him to give any Indians who might come over in the course of the day as much rum as they might call for, and get as many of them drunk as he possibly could. The plan succeeded. Several Indian men, with two women, came over the river to Baker's, who had previously been in the habit of selling rum to the Indians. The men drank freely, and became intoxicated. In this state they were all killed by Greathouse and a few of his party. I say a few of his party, for it is but justice to state that not more than five or six of the whole party had any participation in the slaughter at the house. The rest protested against it as an atrocious murder. From their number, being by far the majority, they might have prevented the deed; but, alas! they did not. A little Indian girl alone was saved from the slaughter by the humanity of some one of the party, whose name is not known.

"The Indians in the camps hearing the firing at the house, sent a canoe with two men in it to inquire what had happened. These two Indians were both shot down as they landed on the beach. A second and larger canoe was then manned with a number of Indians in arms, but in attempting to reach the shore some distance below the house were received by a well directed fire from the party, which killed the greater number of them, and compelled the survivors to return. A great number of shots were exchanged across the river, but without damage to the whites, not one of whom was even wounded. The Indian men who were murdered were all scalped. The woman who gave the friendly advice to the commander of the party when in the Indian camp was among the slain at Baker's house.

"The massacre of the Indians at Captina and Yellow creek comprehended the whole of the family of the famous, but unfortunate Logan."*

THE COMMENCEMENT OF HOSTILITIES ON THE PART OF THE NATIVES.

The Earl of Dunmore at once took the needful steps to organize forces, and meanwhile in June sent Daniel Boone and Michael Stoner to conduct into the settlements the surveyors and others who were lingering on the banks of the Kentucky and Elkhorn, a duty which was ably and quickly performed. The unfortunate traders among the Indians, however, could not

*American Archives, Fourth series.

*Doddridge's notes. For different statements concerning Cresap, see Jacob's Life of Cresap and a Letter of Gen. George Rogers Clark, in Western Annals. For Greathouse see Dr. Hildreth's Article in Sellman's Journal, January, 1837.

thus be rescued from the dangers which beset them. Some of them fell the first victims to the vengeance of the natives. One near the "town of White Eyes, the Peace Chief of the Delawares," was murdered, cut to pieces, and the fragments of his body hung upon the bushes. The kindly chief, according to Heckwelder, gathered them together and buried them. The hatred of the murderers, however, led them to disinter and disperse the remains of the victims anew. But the kindness of the Delaware was as persevering as the hatred of his brethren, and again he collected the scattered limbs and in a secret place hid them.

The Delawares were anxious for peace. Sir William Johnson sent out to all his copper-colored flock order to keep still; and even the Shawanese were prevailed on by their wiser leader, Cornstalk, to do all they could to preserve friendly relations; indeed, they went so far as to secure some wandering traders from the vengeance of the Mingoes, whose relatives had been slain at Yellow creek and Captina, and sent them with their property safe to Pittsburgh. But Logan, who had been turned by the murderers on the Ohio from a friend to a deadly foe of the whites, came suddenly upon the Monongahela settlements, and while the other Indians were hesitating as to their course, took his thirteen scalps in retaliation for the murder of his family and friends, and returning home expressed himself satisfied and ready to listen to the Long-Knives.

But it was not, apparently, the wish of Dunmore or Connelly to meet the friendly spirit of the natives, and when, about the tenth of June, three of the Shawanese conducted the traders who had been among them safely to Pitttsburgh, Connelly had even the meanness to attempt, first, to seize them, and when foiled in this by Colonel Croghan, his uncle, who had been alienated by his tyranny, he sent men to watch, waylay and kill them, and one account says that one of the three was slain. Indeed, the character developed by this man while commandant at Fort Dunmore, was such as to excite universal detestation, and at last to draw down upon his patron the reproof of Lord Dartmouth. He seized property and imprisoned white men without warrant or propriety, and we may be assured, in many cases beside that just mentioned, treated the natives with an utter disregard of justice. It is not surprising that Indian attacks occurred along the frontiers, nor, on the other hand, that the people against whom the war was carried on, became more and more excited and eager to repay the injuries received.

PETITIONS OF THE INHABITANTS OF WESTMORELAND AND OHIO COUNTIES.

The people of the border counties assembled and petitioned Governor John Penn, setting forth "that there was great reason to apprehend that the country would again be immediately involved in all the horrors of an Indian war; that their circumstances, at that critical time, were truly alarming; deserted by the greater part of our neighbors and fellow-subjects, unprotected with places of strength to resort to with ammunition, provisions, and with almost every other necessary store. Our houses abandoned to pillage; labor and industry entirely at a stand; our crops destroyed by cattle; our flocks dispersed; the minds of our people distracted with the terrors of falling, along with the helpless and unprotected families, the immediate victims of savage barbarity. In the midst of these scenes of desolation and ruin, next to the Almighty, we look to your Honor, hoping, from your known benevolence and humanity, such protection and relief as your Honor shall see meet."

A number of petitions of this kind were signed and sent to Governor Penn, one dated 1774, Fort Shippen, at Captain John Proctor's.

Signed by Lot Darling, Andrew Woolf, George Helbingbar, Samuel Sloan, William Caldwell, Robert Roulston, William Allison, William Cortny, John Patrick, Benjamin Cochran, David Maxwill, Wm. Hughs, Elias Pellet, James Gammel, James Forsyth, Robert Taylor, John Leslie, William Anderson, Joseph Campbell, John McKee, George Moore, William Perry, Charles Mitchell, James Wallace, John Scott, Knight Scott, Robert Stevenson, Andrew Allison, John Cox, William Michel, Joseph Man, George Henry, James Campbell, Josias Campbell, Paul Wag, John Lam, Joseph Saphut, Isaac Parr, John Moore, Robert Beislein, John Lydick, Philip Couze, William McCall, George Smiele, Ferguson Moorhead, Richard Jarvis, David Killgour, John Proctor, Samuel Moorhead, William Lochry, James Hamilton, Arthur Harvey, Patrick Archbold, William Mount, John Davis, John Harry, John Pugan, Robert Marshall, John Campbell, Henry Zane, Robert Caldwell, George Leasure, James Stevenson, Thomas Stevenson, Robert Cochran, John Taylor, William Slone, William Martin, Robert Caldwell, Andrew Mitchell, David Sloan, James Fulton, Francis McGinnis, James Carnahan, William Thompson, Allen Sloan, Moses Dickie, Nathaniel Bryan.

Similar one headed Fort Allen, Hempfield township, between Wendel Ourys and Christopher Trubee (no date).

Wendel Oury, Christopher Trubee, Frantz Raupp, Nicholas Scheuer, John Lafferty, John Bendeary, Conrad Houck, James Waterms, John Redeck, Adam George, Nicholas Allimang, Adam Uhrig, Stofel Urich, John Golden, Peter Urich, Martin Hunts, Michael Konel, Henrich Kleyn, Conrad Hister, Hans Gunckee, Peter Kasner, Peter Uber, John Kransher, Henrich Schmit, Jacob Schmit, Jacob Kuemel, John Moffey, Adam Bricker, Peter Wannemacher, Philip Klingelschmit, Peter Klingelschmit, Peter Altman, Andoni Altman, Joseph Pankkek, Brent Reis, Baltzer Moyer, Jacob Hauser, Peter Altman, Christian Baum, George Crier, Peter Rosch, Joseph Kutz, Adam Meire, Daniel Wilers, Thomas Williams, Michel Hatz, George Mondarf, William Hanson, William Altman, Marx Breinig, Johannes Breinig, Samuel Lewisch, Andony Walter, Jacob Welcker, George Bender, Nicholas Junt, Michel Hann, David Marshal, Heinrich Sil, Richard Archbold, Conrad Linck, Friedrich Marschal, Hannes Breynig, Kasper Mickendorf, Jacob Schraber, Daniel Matiss, Henrich Schram, Peter Schelhammer, Jacob Meylin, Dewalt Macklin, Hannes Kostwitz, Jacob Schram, Lutwig Aterman, Hans Sil, Jacob Stroh, Christopher Herolt, Gerhart Tames.

Similar one from the same county—signed:

Robert Hanna, Alex. Thomson, William Jack, Joseph Kinkead, Manuel Galloher, William Shaw, William Dawson, J. Donne, Joshua Archer, John Gothery, Joseph McGarraugh, William McCutchin, James McCutchen, Jeremiah Lochrey, Joseph Brownlee, Robert Taylor, John Ould, Wm. Riddle, Hugh Brownlee, James Leech, David Crutchlow, James Crutchlow, Peter Castner, David Crutchlow, jr., John Cristy, Joseph Shaw, Wm. Nelson, John Guthery, James Dunlap, Robert Riddle, John Riddle, William Guthery, Charles Wilson, Joseph Studybaker, Wm. Darraugh, James Darraugh, Wm. Thompson, David Dickie, Wm. Dickie, George Dickie, Moses Dickie, John Thompson, John Glass, John Holmes, Charles Foreman, Samuel Miller, John Shields, Thomas Paton, John Taylor, Samuel Parr, James Case, Adam Maxwell, Wm. Maxwell, Wm. Barnes, James Moore, John Moore, Thomas Burbridge, Martin Cavanaugh, Arthur Denworthy, David Larimor, Thomas Freeman, Wm. Freeman, James Blain, Alex. McClean, John Moore, John Nolder, Wm. Moore, Wm. Hamilton, Thomas Ellis, Mark Ellis, John Ellis, John Adam, Andrew McClain, Robert Bell, Wm. Bell, Wm. Kerr, Samuel Craig, John Craig, Alex. Craig, John Cochran, James Willis, Henry McBride, Isaac McBride, James Bently, Jacob Round, Barnabas Brant, Wm. Brant, Edward Brant, Samuel Leetch, Matthew Miller, Alex. Mers, George Kean, Charles McGinnis, Wm. Kindsey, Thomas Jack, John

*American Archives. I. 252 to 258.

McAllister, Alex. Thomas, Samuel Couper, John Gourla, Samuel Gourla, James Beatty, Samuel Henderson, John Bryson, Robert Crawford, Alex. Simeall, James McClelland, James White, Thomas Dennis, John Shrimpley, Richard Jones, Wm. Moore, Adam Oury, John Cunningham, John Muckmolon, Peter Stot, Wm. McCord, Andrew Gordin, John Muppin, John Christy, Patrick Colgan, P. Russell, James Neilson, Abraham Pyatt, B. McGeehan, Joseph Thorn, Robert Frier, William Powel, William Carr, Joseph Erwin, John Brownlee, Thomas Lyon, George Findley, William Smith, David Shaw, Wm. Jenkins, Samuel Whiteside.

A similar Petition was sent to Governor Penn from a number of persons of Westmoreland county, who had assembled at the house of a certain John Shields, near to or within five or six miles of Hanna's town, and on the Loyalhanna, where, as a defense for their wives and families, they erected a small fort, and by the direction of the gentlemen of the association took up arms for the general defence. Your petitioners, say they, thought themselves extremely happy and secure, when your honor and the Assembly were pleased to order a number of troops to be raised for our general assistance and protection; but we are now rendered very uneasy by the removal of these troops, their arms and ammunition, on which our greatest dependence lay, and which we understand are ordered to Kitanning, a place at least twenty-five miles distant from any of the settlements. Your petitioner being left thus exposed without arms, ammunition, or the protection of these removed troops, humbly conceive themselves to be in danger from the ememy, and are sorry to observe to your honor that it is ours, as well as the general opinion that removing the troops to so distant and uninhabited a part of the province as Kitanning is, cannot answer the good purposes intended, but seems to serve the purposes of some who regard not the public welfare.

They then conclude by asking protection. The petition is signed by John Shields, John Nodler, William Moore, James Moore, John McIntire, David Henan, Henry Heathly, Manuel Gallahan, Isaac Parr, Jas. Parr, Samuel Parr, Arthur Denniston, Archibald Trimble, John Denniston, Lorance Irwin, John Moore, Isaac Youngsee, Daniel McManame, Patrick Butler, Daniel McBride, James Bain, John Thompson, James Wills, Andrew Wills, Robert Bell, William Bell, Alexander McClain, Charles McClain, Andrew McClain, Thomas Burbridge, William Brant, Samuel Craig, John Craig, Alexander Craig, James Burns, John Cochran, David Shields, Thomas Freeman, Barnabas Brant, Edward Brant, James Bently, Jacob Round, John Moore, William Barns, William Cooper, William Hamilton, James Hall, David Loramer, John Loramer, Alexander Barr, James Thompson, James Kelly.

Another of a similar import, of persons who had assembled at Hanna's town, where at their own expense they erected a small fortification, as a shelter for their wives and families during the troublesome times. The petition is signed by:

William Danaugh, Samuel Beatty, James Walker, David Shield, Joseph McGanaugh, William Brown, William McGlaughen, John Brownlee, Joseph Brownlee, Samuel McKee, John McDowell, David Kee, Robert McKee, James Paul, William McKee, William Samson, John Brown, Adam Morrow, John Giffen, Isaac Keeth, Dennis McConnel, George Nelson, James King, John Canan, William Shaw, Archibald Leach, James Boveard, Robert Haslet, Joseph Shaw, James Westley, John Gourla, Samuel Gourla, John Calhoun, John Lent, Stephen Groves, John Adams, John Hays, Charles Sterret, Robert Hays, John Gothery, jr., John Gothery, sen'r, Adam Soot, George Dickie, John Crisby, Andrew McIntire, Patrick Callan, Charles Foreman, John Holmes, Joseph Winlice, William Thomas, Joseph Caldwell, Wendel Oury, Philip Smith, Jacob Smith, Peter Hill, Frantz Rub, Jared Thomas, Samuel Lewis, Jacob Kimmel, John Moffly, Henrich Keyn, John Erolt, John Breinig, John Painter, George Painter, Michael Bayerlay, Christopher Kertruby, Adam Bury, Christopher Uhrig, Conrad Enck, Peter Uprick, Abraham Dunkelberger, Jacob Hauser, Peter Halsumer, Adam George, Conrad Hack, George Hack, Johannes Gransher, Joseph Ras, Ernest Reis, Daniel Wilhelm, Nicholas Schaver, Henry Smith, Michael Doels, Michael Gundel, John Scott, Martin Onserle, Ludwig Miller, Andrew Walter, John Gonkel, James Waterson.

"During the whole time of the wars, and for some time after it ceased," says Findley, "the country was cruelly wasted by perpetual savage depredations. The frontier was equally exposed on all sides, round the whole extent of the country, except, perhaps, a few miles on the east, near Youghiogeny river. The whole of Westmoreland county, except a very few townships, was actually laid waste, or the inhabitants obliged to shelter themselves in forts.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

To put a stop to these devastations, two large bodies of troops were gathered in Virginia; the one from the southern and western part of the State, under General Andrew Lewis, met at Camp Union, now Lewisburg, Greenbrier county, near the far famed White Sulphur Springs; the other from the northern and eastern counties, was to be under the command of Dunmore himself, and descending the Ohio from Fort Pitt, was to meet Lewis' army at the mouth of the Great Kanawha. The force under Lewis, amounting to eleven hundred men, commenced its march upon the 6th and 12th of September, and upon the 6th of October reached the spot agreed upon. As Lord Dunmore was not there, and as other troops were to follow down the Kanawha under Colonel Christian, General Lewis dispatched runners toward Pittsburgh to inform the commander-in-chief of his arrival, and proceeded to encamp at the point where the two rivers meet. Here he remained until the 9th of October, when dispatches from the governor reached him, informing him that the plan of the campaign was altered; that he (Dunmore) meant to proceed directly against the Shawanese towns of the Scioto, and Lewis was ordered at once to cross the Ohio and meet the army before those towns.

THE BATTLE OF PLEASANT POINT.

But on the very day when this movement should have been executed, (October 10th), the Indians in force, headed by the able and brave chief of the Shawanese, Cornstalk, appeared before the army, determined then and there to avenge past wrongs and cripple vitally the power of the invaders. Delawares, Iroquois, Wyandotts and Shawanese,* under their most noted chiefs, among whom was Logan, formed the army opposed to that of Lewis, and with both the struggle of that day was one of life or death. Soon after sunrise, the presence of the savages was discovered; General Lewis ordered out his brother, Col. Charles Lewis, and Col. Fleming to reconnoitre the ground where they had been seen; this at once brought on the engagement. In a short time Col. Lewis was killed and Col. Fleming disabled; the troops, thus left without commanders, wavered, but Col. Field with his regiment coming to the rescue, they again stood firm; about noon Col. Field was killed, and Capt. Evan Shelby took the command, and the battle still continued. It was now drawing toward evening, and yet the contest raged without decided success for either party, when General Lewis ordered a body of men to gain the flank of the enemy by means of Crooked creek, a small stream which runs into the Kanawha about four hundred yards above its mouth. This was successfully done, and the result was the retreat of the Indians across the Ohio.†

*These Indians were formerly mainly from western Pennsylvainia, having been driven from their lands by the settlers, or the purchases spoken of in Land Titles.

†American Pioneer, American Archives, Border Wars.

The loss on the part of the whites in this battle, was seventy-five men killed and one hundred and forty wounded, about one-fifth of their entire number. The loss of the enemy could not be fully ascertained, as, until they are driven from the field they carry off their dead. Next morning, Colonel Christian explored the battle field, and found twenty-one Indians lying dead, and subsequently twelve others concealed by brush and logs.

TREATY OF PEACE.

Lord Dunmore, in the meanwhile had descended the river from Fort Pitt, and was, at the time he sent word to Lewis, of his change of plans, at the mouth of the Hocking, where he built a block house called Fort Gower, and remained till after the battle of the Point. Thence he marched on toward the Scioto, while Lewis and the remains of the army under his command, strengthened by the troops under Colonel Christian, pressed forward in the same direction, elated by the hope of anihilating the Indian towns, and punishing the inhabitants for all they had done. But before reaching the enemy's country, Dunmore was visited by the chiefs, asking for peace. He listened to their request and appointing a place where a treaty should be held, sent orders to Lewis to stop his march against the Shawanese towns, which orders, however, that officer did not obey; nor was it till the Governor visited his camp on Congo creek, near Westfal, that he would agree to give up an attempt upon the village of Old Chillicothe, which stood where Westfall now is. After this visit by Dunmore, Gen. Lewis felt himself bound, though unwillingly, to prepare for a bloodless retreat.

The commander-in-chief, however, remained for a time at camp Charlotte, upon Sippo creek, about eight miles from the town of Westfall on the Scioto.* There he met Cornstalk, who, being satisfied of the futility of any further struggle, was determined to make peace, and arranged with the Governor, the preliminaries of a treaty; and from this point, Crawford was sent against a town of the Mingoes, who still continued hostile and took several prisoners, who were carried to Virginia, and were still in confinement in February, 1775.†

When Lord Dunmore retired from the West, he left one hundred men at the mouth of the Great Kanawha, a few more at Pittsburgh, and another corps at Wheeling, then called Fort Fincastle. These were dismissed as the prospect of the war ceased. Lord Dunmore agreed to return to Pittsburgh in the spring, meet the Indians and form a definite peace, but the commencement of the revolt of the colonies prevented. The Mingoes were not parties to the treaty at Camp Charlotte. The Shawanese agreed not to hunt south of the Ohio river, nor molest travelers. The frontier men were much incensed against Lord Dunmore for this treaty, but not the inhabitants of Virginia.

ACTIVE MEASURES TO ASSERT THE CLAIM OF VIRGINIA OVER A PORTION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

About the same time, and most probably after the treaty with the Indians, Lord Dunmore opened several offices for the sale of land in the West, some of which were in the limits claimed by Pennsylvania. Land warrants were granted on the payment of two shillings and six pence fees. The purchase money was trifling, being only ten shillings per hundred acres, and even that was not demanded. The proprietary of Pennsylvania had previously purchased the land as far west as the Ohio and Allegheny, and opened an office for the sale of these lands. But the price demanded was much higher than the Virginia warrants, and this was an effectual inducement to buyers to prefer the Virginia office, and of consequence to favor the Virginia claim to jurisdiction over the country.

Accordingly, Dunmore established three courts: two south of the Monongahela and one at the Redstone, all within the limits of Western Pennsylvania, and thus extended the Virginia laws over that region. His scheme for weakening both colonies by embroiling them in a contest about their boundaries, however, failed; the breaking out of the war of the Revolution in the next year suspended the discussion of the question and drove Dunmore from Virginia.

*American Pioneer, P. 331.
†American Archives, Fourth Series, I. 1212. Border warfare, 137.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

RANDAL LAUGHLIN—CAPTURE OF LAUGHLIN—CHARLES CAMPBELL, DICKSON, GIBSON AND OTHERS—CAMPBELL'S JOURNAL OF HIS CAPTIVITY.*

RANDALL LAUGHLIN came to this country from Ireland when a young man, probably about the year 1770. He arrived in this country prior to the Revolutionary war, and purchased the improvement right to a large tract of land lying part in Blacklick and part in Centre township, on which a small quantity of ground had been cleared.

He remained some time, built a small cabin and otherwise increased his improvement; after which he returned to Franklin county where he had formerly lived a short time.

Sometime in the winter of 1777, he was married, and the next spring came back to his farm, intending to remain here permanently. But he was sadly disappointed. Sometime in the spring or summer, owing to the presence of hostile Indians in the neighborhood who were prowling about in all directions, but more especially in the north, he with his wife went to Wallace's fort, a short distance south of Blairsville, where a number of persons were congregated.

During their stay at Wallaces, the farmers went out occasionally to the different farms in small parties, always armed with their rifles, and prepared to meet the savage foe. His horses having strayed away from the fort, and supposing that they had returned to the farm, Laughlin, accompanied by Chas. Campbell, Dickson, John Gibson and his brother went in search of them.

While the party were in Laughlin's cabin preparing some dinner, they were surrounded by a number of Indians, led by a Frenchman, and summoned to surrender, the leader telling them if they would submit none of them should be injured, but in case they resisted, their bodies should be burned up with the cabin. After consultation, it was resolved to surrender. They were permitted to write a statement on the cabin door of what had happened, and assure their friends that they all expected to escape death, and return home again.

The captives were next marched off, well guarded by the Indians, and the first station of any importance they reached, was Kitanning, then an Indian village on the Allegheny, and at present the seat of justice of Armstrong county.

Here the party remained several days, and the prisoners had to run the gauntlet and undergo drill, to the great amusement of the savages. For the first day they suffered for want of food, and a roasted ground-hog, served up in Indian style, was devoured with great relish.

From Kitanning the captives were taken to Detroit, where they were delivered to the British, and thence conveyed to Quebec. At this place they passed a severe winter, and were exchanged in the ensuing autumn.

*Jonathan Row, Indiana Register, 1859.

In the meantime, Mrs. Laughlin had made her way to Franklin county as best she could, and in eighteen months after his capture, Laughlin returned to the same place and found her in good health and well cared for, with their first born son over a year old.

Charles Campbell and John Gibson likewise returned to their homes, but two of their companions died on the way.

Laughlin remained in Franklin county until after the close of the war, when he returned to his farm in this county. He, with others of that period, suffered much from the depredations of the Indians, and for want of mills, churches and other comforts and conveniences. He subsequently took an active part in public affairs and died at a good old age. For more data in relation to his personal history, see sketch of Laughlin family.

Charles Campbell, who is spoken of above, was subsequently well known as Gen. Campbell. The public positions he occupied are noted in the sketch of the Campbell family.

We have in our possession the original journal kept by him during the period of his captivity, which we transcribe and insert here verbatim. It must be borne in mind, that this journal was subjected daily to the inspection of the British officers, after they had got control over Campbell and his comrades; and this fact will account for the meagreness of its statements, and the want of minute details.

A JOURNAL OF TRAVELS OF CHARLES CAMPBELL, OF PENNSYLVANIA, WESTMORELAND COUNTY.

Began his journey on Thursday, the 25th of September, 1777; marched two miles over Crooked creek, 12 miles on his journey.

On Friday, 26th, crossed the Alleganea, 13 miles the said day.

Saturday, 27th, marched to Salt creek, 20 miles.*

Sunday, 28th, marched to a small branch of Cuskuskey creek, twenty-six miles.

Monday, 29th, marched to the Munsey or Crooked Mouth town, 28 miles.

Tuesday, 30th, stayed here.

Wednesday, the 1st of October, marched to within four miles of the Salt lick, twenty-five miles.†

Thursday, 2d, marched to a camp, about six miles past Mahon's town, 25 miles.‡

Friday, 3d, marched to Chiahoga, 30 miles.§

Saturday, 4th, stayed there.

Sunday, 5th, marched to Black creek, 15 miles.

Monday, 6th, marched to Thos. McCarty's, on the Grand river, 8 miles. Stayed there 7th. 8th and 9th.

Friday, 10th, marched to the Frenchman's camp, 15 miles.

Saturday, 11th, stayed there.

Sunday, 12th, sailed in a bark canoe, to Rock river, 18 miles. 9 miles on Lake are.||

Monday, 13th, it was so stormy I stayed there.

Tuesday, 14th, sailed 27 miles and put into the mouth of a small creek, and stayed there that night.

Wednesday, 15th, sailed to Sandusky Island, 20 miles.

Thursday, 16th, sailed to Cunningham's Island, 20 miles.

Friday, 17th, sailed to the main land, 20 miles.

Saturday, 18th, sailed to the French settlement, 20 miles.

Sunday, 19th, sailed to Detroit, 10 miles where I stayed in the guard house till the 28th.

Tuesday, 28th, I went on board the ship Dunmore, commanded by Capt. Andrews, and sailed to Cunningham's Island.

Wednesday, 29th, they hoisted their sails; but the wind was so contrary that they were obliged to come to anchor again.

Thursday, 30th, the wind proved fair. We sailed till ten o'clock, at night.

Friday, 31st, it being so calm we could make no way.

Saturday, 1st of November, we came near Bresked.

Sunday, 2d, we made to Fort Eary.

Monday, 3d, we left the ship and got below and sailed to Fort Slosher, and marched to Fort Niagara, 500 miles from Detroit, commanded by Col. Bolton, and there remained in the guard till 14th.

Friday, 14th, I went on board the Sincere.

Saturday, 15th, we arrived at Buck Island, 150 miles.

Sunday, 16th, I left the Island in a boat, and encamped that night on an Island in the River St. Lawrence.

Monday, 17th, we lost our way by taking the wrong river till we came to an Indian camp and got them for pilots.

Tuesday, 18th, we came to Swygotchy, 90 miles from Buck Island, and went to the guard house.

Wednesday, 19th, we left that and encamped that night on an Island.

Thursday, 20th, we came to an Indian camp on a small lake.

Friday, 21, I came to the Isle of Peru.

Saturday, 22, I sailed to Le Sheen, and then I marched to Montreal, 70 miles from Swygotcy, and went to the guard house till the 4th of December, 1777.

Thursday, the 4th of December, I left Montreal and came to Point Atramble.

Friday, 5th, we came to a captain of militia and got billets* for the night.

Saturday, 6th, we marched to another captain of militia.

Saturday, 7th, we marched to Barkers, 45 miles from Montreal.

Monday, 8th, we got 2 trains, one cariall and rode to a Sergeant of militia and got billets.

Tuesday, 9th, we marched to a Captain of militia and got billets.

Wednesday, 10th, we marched to a captain of militia and got billets.

Thursday, 11th, we came to Three Rivers, 45 miles from Barke.

Friday, 12th, I marched 5 leagues.

Saturday, 13th, I marched to San's 5 leagues.

Sunday, 14th, I marched 6 leagues.

Monday, 15th, marched 5 leagues.

Tuesday, 16th, marched 7 leagues.

Wednesday, 17th, marched into Quebec, ninety miles from Three Rivers, and went to the main guard and stayed there about one hour, till the Provo Master came and took me to the Provo Guard, where I stayed to Saturday, 20th, then marched to Beauport, 5 miles from Quebec.

Sunday, 21st, I got my billet and drew three weeks provisions, and took it to my landlord. His friends came that night to see him, and they ate, drank and sang to eleven o'clock at night and then broke up company.

Wednesday, 24th, I went to chapel at twelve o'clock at night.

Thursday, 25th, I went to chapel to see how affairs were carried on, for I could not understand by hearing.

Saturday, 27th, my landlord called his children together to sup with him. They ate and drank wine. I sat with them till almost midnight, and then I left them singing and drinking.

Thursday, 2nd of January, 1778, my landlord's friends came for to breakfast with him, and it is the fashion for all, both men and women of this country, to kiss on that day.

Saturday, 10th, we got orders to be ready to go to the Isle of Orleans.

*Laughlin spoke of having stopped at Kittanning, and there being subjected to the gauntlet whilst Campbell makes no mention of the circumstances, or even of having been at the place; whence we may reasonably conclude, either the prisoners had at that time, been temporarily separated, or Campbell purposely omitted the account in his Journal, to escape censure from the British officers.

†Probably where "Mussy Harbison" resided at a later period, several miles north of the town of Butler, in Butler county.

‡Whether this was an Indian town on the Mahoning river, or the old French village at the mouth of Beaver, we have no means of determining.

§Probably a branch of the Cuyahoga.

||Lake Erie.

*Cards to secure lodgings.

Sunday, 11th, there was carialls for to take us to the Island, to a captain of militia, six leagues from Beaufort—and there we were billetted, two in a house.

Monday, 12th, we drew provisions for thirty days where I remained, and drew provisions for what time I stayed at the place.

Monday, 23d of February, 1778. His Excellency, General Carleton, came out for to visit the Priest, and gave orders for but one to be in a house.

Thursday, 26th, I was removed to another house and there remained till April 7th, when I went into the woods where they were making sugar, and the day getting warm so that the crust of the snow got soft—the snow was three feet deep—I was forced to stay to the next morning, and then I came to my billet.

Tuesday, 26th of May, we got orders to be in readiness to march to Quebec.

Wednesday, 27th, we marched to the end of the Island and then went in a batteaux to the ship Maria, commanded by Captain Mase, and went on board and there remained until June 27th. General Haldeman arrived at Quebec and relieved General Carleton. July 30, the Montreal sailed home with Sir George Carleton.

Wednesday, August 12th, they fell down the river below Quebec.

Thursday, 13th, sailed to Patrick's Hole.

Friday, 14th, they fell down to the lower end of the Island of Orleans.

Thursday, 20th, came to the Island of Beck, and handed out the pilot on shore—came to anchor at Gapsey, and put an officer on shore to take command at that place.

Sunday, 23d, we came to Cancer, and lay at anchor till Friday, 28th, and then sailed and arrived on Saturday, 29th, at Halifax, eight hundred miles from Quebec, and lay there till the 11th of September, 1778, and then went to the Provo guard and remained there till the 7th of October; then went on board the ship Silver Eel, commanded by Capt. Moor.

The 9th we fell down the harbor and ran aground—lay there till tide rose, and then got clear.

The 10th we sailed out. The 14th, in the morning we came in sight of Cape Ann, and got into Boston Harbor that night.

(From Boston, Campbell traveled to Pennsylvania, sometimes afoot and sometimes riding in a vehicle, being about six weeks on the route).

CHAPTER XXXIV.

STANDING STONE, ANCIENT AND MODERN—THE BRADYS—MURDER OF FELIX DONNELLY AND HIS SON FRANCIS, &C.*

AS an Indian post of ancient date, none is more universally known than "Standing Stone," where Huntingdon now stands. The very earliest traders could never ascertain by Indian tradition how long it had been a village, but that it dated back to a very remote period may be judged from the fact that the land on the flat between Stone creek and Huntingdon was under cultivation one hundred and thirty years ago. It was used as one extensive cornfield, with the exception of that portion lying near the mouth of the creek, where the Indian town stood, and where also was a public ground, used on great occasions for councils or dances.

The Standing Stone—that is, the original stone—was, according to John Harris, fourteen feet high and six inches square. It stood on the right bank of Stone creek, near its mouth, and in such a position as to enable persons to see it at a considerable distance, either from up or down the river.

About this self-same Standing Stone, there still exists contradictory opinions. These we have endeavored to ascertain; and, after weighing them carefully, we have come to the conclusion that no person now living ever saw part or parcel of the original stone, notwithstanding Dr. Henderson delivered what some are disposed to believe a portion of it to the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

The original Standing Stone, we are induced to believe, in addition to serving in a similar capacity to that of a guide board at a cross-road, was the official record of the tribe. On it, no doubt, were engraved all the important epochs in its history, its wars, its mighty deeds, its prowess in battle, and its skill in the chase. It might, too, have served as a sacred tablet to the memory of many a noble chief who fell by the arrows of an enemy. These things, were, no doubt, in cabalistic character; and, although each inscription may have been small, its meaning may have taken in almost an unbounded scope, as Indian brevity generally does.

This stone was once the cause of a war. The Tuscaroras, residing some thirty or forty miles down the river—probably in Tuscarora valley—wished to declare war against the tribe at Standing Stone, for some real or fancied insult, and for this purpose sent them repeated war-messages, which the tribe at the Stone refused to give ear to, knowing as they did the strength and power of the enemy. Taking advantage of the absence of a large part of the tribe on a hunt, the Tuscaroras, in great force, came upon the village, captured the stone and carried it off. Immediately after the return of the warriors, the entire available war force was despatched after the depredators, who were soon overtaken. A bloody conflict ensued, and the trophy was recaptured and carried back in triumph.

Dr. Barton, it is said, discovered that the word Oneida, meant "Standing Stone," in the language of the Southern Indians.* The Oneida tribe of the Iroquois had a tradition that their forefathers came from the south; consequently the tribe at Standing Stone may have been part of the Oneida tribe, instead of Delawares, as was generally supposed. The Tuscaroras, according to history, came from the south, and became one of the Iroquois Confederation, in 1712. The language of the two tribes in question, although not identical, bore a strong affinity to each other. Hence we may surmise that the characters upon the stone were understood by the Tuscaroras, and that it possessed, in their eyes, sufficient value to move it some forty or fifty miles, under what we should call disadvantageous circumstances, especially when it is known that stones of a better finish could have been found anywhere along the Juniata river.

There is no doubt but what the original stone was removed by the Indians, and taken with them in 1754, or 1755, for it is a well ascertained fact, that the Indians in the valley, with some few exceptions, (Aughwick, for instance), joined the French in the above years.

The first survey of the land on which Huntingdon now stands, was made by Mr. Lukens, in behalf of a claimant named Crawford, in 1756. It is therein named as "George Crogan's improvement." It is not improbable that Crogan may have claimed the improved fields and site of the deserted village, but that he ever made any improvement beyond probably erecting a trading post there, is a matter of some doubt. His whole history proves that he was no improving man.

On the second stone erected were found the names of John and Chas. Lukens, Thomas Smith, and a number of others, with dates varying from 1768 to 1770, cut or chiselled. This stone was most unquestionably erected by some of the men whose names it bore,

*U. J. Jones in History of the Juniata Valley.

*Morgan, in his "League of the Iroquois," gives it a different interpretation.

on the same spot where the original stone stood, but was subsequently removed to or near where the old court house in Huntingdon formerly stood. This position it occupied for many years, and might still stand as a monument of the past, had not some vandal taken it into his head to destroy it. One piece of it still remains in the wall of the foundation of a house in Huntingdon.

The old Indian grave yard (and an extensive one it must have been) was on the high ground, near where the present Presbyterian church stands. To the credit of the Huntingdon folks be it said, they have never permitted a general exhumation of the bones of the Indians, to fill scientific cabinets, gratify the morbid appetites of the curious or even to satisfy the less objectionable zeal of the antiquarian.

The few white settlers who lived at the Stone in 1762, partially erected a stockade fort; but before the spring of 1763, they were forced to abandon it, as well as their houses, and fly to Carlisle for protection. When the settlers returned in 1770, the fort still stood, though partially decayed. Immediately on the breaking out of the war of the Revolution, the fort was rebuilt on a more extended scale, by the few inhabitants of the town and surrounding country. It was located near where the court house now stands, immediately on the bluff, and according to the traces of it, discovered by the present generation, must have covered ten acres of ground. It was strongly built; and when the savages were in the midst of their depredations, it was the only reliable refuge—before the erection of the Lead Mine fort, in Sinking Valley—for all the people residing as far west as the base of the Alleghany Mountains.

No actual attempt was ever made against Standing Stone fort; neither were there ever any Indians seen, except on two or three occasions, very close to it. A party of lurking savages was once surprised and shot at by a number of scouts on the hill, where the grave yard now stands; but they made good their escape, without any injury being done.

At another time, by a display of cool courage, as well as shrewdness, that would do any general credit, the commander of the fort unquestionably saved the place from total annihilation. One morning, a large body of savages appeared upon the ridge on the opposite side of the river, and by their manœuvering, it was clearly evident that they meditated an attack, which, under the circumstances, must have proved disastrous to the settlers, for not more than ten men, able to bear arms, were in the fort at the time—the majority having left on a scouting expetion. The commander, with judgment that did him infinite credit, marshalled his men, and paraded them for half an hour, in such a manner as to enable the Indians to see a constant moving of the middle column, but neither end of it, while the drums kept up a constant clatter. In addition to this, he ordered all the women out, armed them with frying-pans, brooms or whatever he could lay his hands upon, and marched them about the enclosure, after the same manner in which he did the men. The enemy could only make out the dim outlines of the people and hear the noise. The stratagem succeeded, and after a very short council of war, the Indians disappeared.

THE BRADYS.

Among those who figured about Standing Stone at the beginning of the Revolution, were the Bradys. Hugh Brady's name appears in some of the title-deeds, and the father of Sam Brady (rendered famous by the late R. B. McCabe, of Blairsville,) lived at the mouth of the little run opposite Huntingdon. Within the walls of Standing Stone Fort General Hugh Brady and a twin sister were born. All the Bradys went to the west branch of the Susquehanna during the Revolution. Hugh entered the army at an early age, and, step by step, rose from the ranks to the exalted position he occupied at the time of his death. A characteristic anecdote is related of him: At one time he was lying ill at Erie, and his physician told him he could not survive. "Let the drums beat," said he, "my knapsack is swung, and Hugh Brady is ready to march!" He recovered, however, and died many years later at Sunbury.

MURDER OF FELIX DONNELLY—HIS SON FRANCIS, &C.

The only massacre by Indians in the immediate vicinity of Standing Stone occurred on the 19th of June, 1777, at what was then known as the "Big Spring," two miles west of the fort. In consequence of hostile bands of Indians having been seen at a number of places in the neighborhood, and the general alarm which followed, people commenced flocking to the fort from every direction.

On the day above named, Felix Donnelly and his son Francis, and Bartholomew Maguire and his daughter, residing a short distance from the mouth of Shaver's creek, placed a number of their movable effects upon horses, and, with a cow, went down the river for the purpose of forting at Standing Stone. Jane Maguire was in advance, driving the cow, and the Donnellys and Maguire in the rear, on the horses. When nearly opposite the Big Spring, an Indian fired from ambuscade and killed young Donnelly. His father, who was close to him, caught him, for the purpose of keeping him upon the horse, Maguire urged the old man to fly, but he refused to leave his son. Maguire then rode to his side, and the two held the dead body of Francis. While in this position, three Indians rushed from their ambuscade with terrific yells, and fired a volley, one bullet striking Felix Donnelly, and the other grazing Maguire's ear, carrying away a portion of his hair. The bodies of both the Donnellys fell to the ground, and Maguire rode forward, passing (probably without noticing her) his daughter. The Indians, after scalping the murdered men, followed Jane, evidently with the purpose of making a prisoner of her. The fleetest of them overtook her, and grasped her by the dress, and with uplifted tomahawk, demanded her to surrender, but she struggled heroically. The strings of her short gowns gave way, and by an extraordinary effort, she freed herself, leaving the garment in the hand of the savage; then, seizing the cow's tail, she gave it a twist, which started the animal running, and gave her an impetus which soon enabled her to pass her father.

The savage still followed, but in the meantime Maguire had recovered from the consternation caused by the massacre, and immediately aimed his rifle at the Indian, when the latter took refuge behind a tree. At this juncture, a number of men who were pitching quoits at Cryder's mill, on the opposite side of the river, who had heard the firing and the whoops of the savages, put off in a canoe to engage the Indians, but they were soon discovered, and the Indian shaking Jane Maguire's short gown derisively at them, disappeared. The men, doubtful as to the number of the enemy, returned to the mill, to await the arrival of a greater force.

Maguire and his daughter reached the fort in a state better imagined than described. The garrison was soon alarmed, and a number of armed men started in pursuit of the savages. At the mill they were joined by the men previously mentioned, and, although every exertion was made in their power, they could not get upon their trail, and the pursuit was abandoned.

The dead bodies of the Donnellys were taken to Standing Stone, and buried upon what was then vacant ground, but the spot where they now rest is pointed out in a garden in the heart of the borough of Huntingdon.

Jane Maguire, who certainly exhibited a very fair share of the heroism of the day in her escape from the savage, afterward married a man named Dowling, and moved to Raystown Branch, where she reared a family of children, some of whom are still living.

COLONEL FEE.

Opposite the mouth of the Raystown Branch lived Colonel Fee, an active and energetic man during the Revolution. He was in Captain Blair's expedition against the tories, and for a while served as private in the army. His widow (a sister of the late Thomas Jackson, of Gaysport,) was still living in 1855 at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, and to her the historian is indebted for much valuable information in the construction of these pages.

THE CRYDERS.

The Cryders, too, are worthy of a special notice. They consisted of a father, mother and seven sons. They built a mill at the Big Spring, which served for the people of Standing Stone and the surrounding country. They were all men suitable for the times, rugged and daring. A majority of them were constantly in service during the war of the Revolution, either as frontier-men, scouts or fort guards. Michael Cryder, the father, used to spend his days at his mill and his nights at the fort during the troublesome times, and it was himself and five of his sons who accomplished the then extraordinary achievement of running the first ark-load of flour down the Juniata river.

The Standing Stone is frequently mentioned in the archives, but its name is mostly coupled with rumors, grossly exaggerated, of attacks by tories, &c. There is no doubt whatever but that great distress, principally arising from a want of provisions, prevailed there during the war.

When the alarms were most frequent, and the council had been importuned time and again to send provisions to Standing Stone, as well as men for its defence and munitions, a circular was issued to the county lieutenants, dated July 16, 1778, from which we extract the following:

"It is proper to acquaint you that Colonel Broadhead's regiment, now on a march to Pittsburgh, is ordered by the Board of War to the Standing Stone, and we have ordered three hundred militia from Cumberland and two hundred from York to join them."

This promise to the ear of the affrighted settlers was broken to the hope. Only seventy of the Cumberland militia were taken to the Standing Stone, and thirty of them soon after removed to garrison the Lead Mine fort.

Huntingdon was laid out previous to the commencement of hostilities—probably in 1775, but it retained the name of Stone-Town Fort for many years. On the formation of the county, in 1787, it received the same name. The county during the war of 1812, with Great Britain, furnished three full companies, and although it once was the stronghold of the tories, we can now safely say that it stands among the most patriotic in the State.

CHAPTER XXXV.

THE TORIES OF THE VALLEYS.—THEIR UNFORTUNATE EXPEDITION TO JOIN THE INDIANS AT KITTANNING.—CAPTAIN JOHN WESTON, THE TORY LEADER.—CAPTAIN THOMAS BLAIR.—CAPTURE OF THE BROTHERS, HICKS.—HANGING A TORY.—NARROW ESCAPE OF TWO OF WESTON'S MEN, &C.

TO some it may appear strange—nevertheless it is true—that in 1777, the upper end of the Juniata Valley contained nearly as many tories as it did patriots. This is not a very agreeable admission to make, by one who has his home in the Valley;* nevertheless, some of the acts of these tories form a part of the history of the time and section of which we write, and must be given with the rest. Let it be understood, however, that as some of the descendants of those men, who unfortunately embraced the wrong side are still alive, and in our midst, we suppress names, because we not only believe it to be unprincipled in the extreme to hold the sons responsible for the sins and errors of the fathers, but we think there is not a man in the valley now, who has not patriotic blood enough in his veins to march in his country's defence, at a moments warning, if occasion required it.

The great number of tories in what now constitutes Huntingdon county, may in a great measure be attributed to the fact, that living as they did upon the frontier, they had no idea of the strength or numbers composing the "rebel" army, as they called it. They knew the King's name to be a tower "of strength;" and they knew, too, the power and resources of England. Their leaders were shrewd men, who excited the fears of the King's followers, by assuring them that the rebels would soon be worsted, and all of them gibbeted.

The most of these tories, according to Edward Bell, resided in Aughwick, Hare's Valley, on the Raystone Branch, in Woodcock Valley, at Standing Stone, Shaver's Creek, Warrior's Mark and Canoe Creek. They held secret meetings, generally at the house of John Weston, who resided a mile and a half west of Water street, in Canoe Valley. All their business was transacted with the utmost secrecy; and those who participated in their meetings, did so under an oath of "allegiance to the King, and death to the rebels."

These meetings were frequently attended by tory emissaries from Detroit, who went there advised of all the movements of the British about the lakes; and it is thought that one of these men at length gave them a piece of intelligence that sealed the doom of a majority of them.

It appears that a general plan was formed to concentrate a large force of Indians and tories at Kitanning, then cross the mountain by the Indian path (Kitanning trail), and at Burgoon's Gap divide—one party to march through the Cove and Conococheague valleys, the other to follow the Juniata valley, and form a junction at Lancaster, killing all the inhabitants on their march. The tories were to have for their share in this general massacre, all the fine farms on the routes, and the movable property was to be divided among the Indians.

It would seem, however, that Providence frustrated their plans. They elected John Weston their Captain, and marched away in the dead of the night, without drums or colors, to join the savages in a general massacre of their neighbors, early in the spring of 1778—all being well armed with rifles furnished by the British emissaries, and abundance of ammunition. They took up the line of march—avoiding all settlements—around Brush mountain, and traveled through the path to Kitanning. When near the fort, Weston sent forward two men to announce their coming. The savages, to the number of ten or twelve, accompanied the messengers; and when they met the tories, Weston ordered his men to "present arms." The order proved a fatal one; for the Indians, ever suspecting treachery, thought they had been entrapped, and without any orders, fired a volley among the tories, and killed Weston and some eight or probably ten of his men, then turned and ran toward the town. The disheartened tories fled in every direction as soon as their leader fell.

Although these tories marched from the settlements under cover of night, and with the greatest possible caution, all their movements were watched by an Indian spy in the employ of Major Cluggage. This spy was a Cayuga Chief, known as Captain Logan, who resided in the Juniata valley at that time, subsequently at an Indian town called Checkalacamcose, where the village of Clearfield now stands. He knew the mission of the *History of the Juniata Valley.—U. J. Jones, Editor.

MONTHLY SALES OF THOROUGH-BRED AND GRADED STOCK. ORGANIZED JULY 1880. INCLUDING 30 ACRES.
BEST HALF MILE TRACK IN THE STATE. — GOOD HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS AS TO BE FOUND IN THE STATE.

PUNXSUTAWNEY FAIR GROUNDS AND DRIVING PARK.

tories, and he soon reported their departure through the settlements.

Of course the wildest and most exaggerated stories were soon set afloat in regard to the number constituting Weston's company, as well as those at Kittanning ready to march. Colonel Piper, of Yellow Creek, George Woods, of Bedford, and others, wrote to Philadelphia that two hundred and fifty tories had left Standing Stone to join the Indians for the purpose of making a descent upon the frontier, a formidable number to magnify out of thirty-four, yet such was the common rumor.

The greatest terror and alarm spread through the settlements, and all the families, with their most valuable effects, were taken to the best forts. General Roberdeau, who had the command of the forces in the neighborhood, had left Standing Stone a short time previous, leaving Major Cluggage in command.

The latter was appealed to for a force to march after Weston. This he could not do, because his command was small, and he was engaged in superintending the construction of the fort at Sinking Valley, the speedy completion of which was not only demanded to afford protection to the people, but to guard the miners, who were using their best exertions to fill the pressing orders of the Revolutionary army for lead.

Cluggage was extremely anxious to have Weston and his command overtaken and punished, and for this purpose he tendered to Captain Thomas Blair, of Path Valley, the command of all who wished to volunteer to fight the tories. The alarm was so general, that in forty-eight hours after Weston's departure, some thirty-five men were ready to march; twenty of them were from Path Valley, and the remainder were gathered up between Huntingdon—or Standing Stone, as it was then still called—and Frankstown.* At Canoe Valley, the company was joined by Gersham and Moses Hicks, who went to act in the double capacity of scouts and interpreters. They were brothers, and had—together with the entire family—been in captivity among the Indians for some six or seven years. They were deemed a valuable acquisition.

Captain Blair pushed on his men with great vigor over the mountain, by way of the Kittanning trail; and when he arrived where the path crosses the head-waters of Black-lick, they were suddenly confronted by two of Captain Weston's tories, well known to some of Blair's men, who, on the impulse of the moment would have shot them down, had it not been for the interference of Captain Blair, who evidently was a very humane man. These men begged for their lives most piteously, and declared that they had been grossly deceived by Weston, and then gave Captain Blair a true statement of what had occurred.

Finding that Providence had anticipated the object of their mission, by destroying and dispersing the tories, Captain Blair ordered his men to retrace their steps for home. Night coming upon them, they halted and encamped near where Loretto now stands. Here it was found that the provisions had nearly run out. The men, on the strength of the reported destruction of Weston, were in high spirits, built a large fire, and passed the night in hilarity, although it was raining and exceedingly disagreeable. At the dawn of day, Gersham and Moses Hicks, started out in search of game for breakfast, for some of the men were weak and disheartened for the want of food. These wood-rangers traveled three miles from the camp without anticipating any danger whatever, when Gersham shot a fine elk, which, in order to make the load as light as possible, the brothers skinned and disembowled, shouldered the hind quarters and were ready to return to the camp, when five Indians suddenly came upon them and took them prisoners. They were again captives, and taken to Detroit, from which place they did not return until after peace was declared. These men unquestionably saw and experienced enough of Indian life to fill an interesting volume.

In the mean time, the company becoming impatient at the continued absence of the Hicks', several small parties were formed to go in search of them. One of these parties fell in with three Indians, and several shots were exchanged without injuring any person. The Indians took to the woods, and the men returned to the camp. The other party found the place where the elk had been skinned, and took the remains to the camp; the meat was speedily roasted and divided among the men, and the line of march again taken up. The certain capture of the guides, and the Indians seen by the party in search of them, induced the belief that a larger body of them, than they wished to encounter in their half-famished condition, was in the neighborhood, and considerably accelerated their march.

The sufferings endured by these men, who were drenched by torrents of rain, and suffered the pangs of hunger until they reached the settlements on the east side of the mountain, were such as can be more readily imagined than described. But they all returned, and though a portion of them became sick, they all eventually recovered, and probably would have been ready at any time, to volunteer for another expedition, even with the terrors of starvation or the scalping knife staring them in the face.

The tories, who, through the clemency of Captain Blair, escaped shooting or hanging, did not, it seems, fare much better; for they, too, reached the settlements in an almost famished condition. Fearing to enter any of the houses occupied, they passed the Brush mountain into Canoe Valley, where they came to an untenanted cabin, the former occupants having fled to the nearest fort. They incautiously set their rifles against the cabin, entered it, and searched for food, finding nothing, however, but part of a pot of boiled mush and some lard. In their condition, anything bearing resemblance to food was a god-send, and they fell vigorously to work at it.

While engaged in appeasing their appetite, Samuel Moore and a companion,—probably Jacob Roller, Sr., if we mistake not,—who were on a hunting expedition, happening to pass the cabin, saw the rifles, and immediately secured them, when Mr. Moore walked in with his gun cocked, and called upon the tories to surrender; which peremptory order they cheerfully complied with, and were marched to Holliday's Fort. On the way thither, one of them became insolent, and informed Moore and his companion, that in a short time they would repent arresting them. This incensed Roller, and being an athletic man, when they arrived at the fort, he fixed a rope to the tory's neck, rove it over a beam, and drew him up. Moore, fortunately, was a more humane man, and persuaded his companion to desist. They were afterward taken to Bedford, but whether ever tried or not, we have not been able to ascertain.

Captain Blair's men, while passing through what is now known as Pleasant Valley, on the upper end of Tuckahoe, on their return, paid a visit to a tory named John Hess, who, it is said, was armed, and waiting the return of Weston, to join his company. They found Hess in his house, from which they took him to a neighboring wood, bent down a hickory sapling, fastened the branches of it around his neck, and, at a given signal, let him swing. The sight was so shocking, and his struggles, that the men soon repented, and cut him down before he was injured to any extent. It appears from that day he was a tory no longer, joined the rangers, and did good service for his country. His narrow escape must have wrought his conversion.

The tories who escaped the fatal errors of the Indians at

*It is to be regretted that Mr. Maguire, our informant, was so feeble when giving us an account of this expedition, that we feared to ask him for a repetition of the names of Captain Blair's command. He knew the names of all of them, but he mentioned them in such rapid succession that we only remember Brotherton, Jones, Moore, Smith, two brothers named Hicks, Nelson, Coleman, Wallack, Fee, Gano, Ricketts, Caldwell, Moore, Holliday, and one of the Rollers. (History of Juniata Valley.)

Kittanning, never returned to their former homes. It was probably as well that they did not, for their coming was anxiously looked for, and their greeting would unquestionably have been as warm a one as powder and ball could have been capable of giving. Most of them made their way to Fort Pitt, and from thence toward the south. They eventually all sent for their families, but "the land (of the Juniata Valley) that knew them once knew them no more forever!"

THE BLAIRS.

Captain Blair, soon after, or about the close, of the war, moved to what is known as the mouth of Blair's Gap, west of Hollidaysburg, where John Walker now lives. He was an energetic man, and, by his untiring exertions, succeeded in getting a pack-horse road cut through his gap at an early day.

His son, Captain John Blair, a prominent and useful citizen, flourished for many years at the same place. His usefulness and standing in the community made him probably the most conspicuous man of his day in this section, and when Huntingdon county was divided his old friends paid a tribute to his memory in giving the new county his name.*

CHAPTER XXXVI.

OLD INDIAN TOWN OF FRANKSTOWN—INDIAN BURIAL PLACES—MASSACRE OF THE BEDFORD SCOUT, ETC.

FRANKSTOWN is probably the oldest place on the Juniata river, Conrad Weiser having mentioned it as early as 1748; and in 1749 and 1750 it is spoken of by traders. The Indian town was located at the mouth of a small run, near where McCune's mill now stands, and at one time contained a considerable number of inhabitants. The Indian name of the place was Assunepachla, which signifies a meeting of many waters, or the place where the waters join. This would seem an appropriate name, since within a short distance of the place the river is formed by what was then known as the Frankstown Branch, the Beaver Dam Branch, Brush Run, and the small run near McCune's mill.

The name of Frankstown was given to it by the traders. Harris, in his report of the distances between the Susquehanna and the Allegheny, called it "Frank (Stephen's) Town." The general impression is that the town was named by the traders, in honor of an old chief named Frank. This, however, is an error. It was named after an old German Indian trader named Stephen Franks, who lived cotemporaneously with old Hart, and whose post was at this old Indian town. The truth of this becomes apparent, when we remember that the Indians could not pronounce the r in their language; hence no chief was likely to bear the name of Frank at that early day. Old Franks, being a great friend of the Indians, lived and died among them, and it was after his death that one of the chiefs took his name; hence arose the erroneous impression that the name was given to the town in honor of the chief.

How long Assunepachla was an Indian settlement cannot be conjectured, but, unquestionably, long before the Indians of the valley had any intercourse with the whites.† This is evidenced by the fact that where the town stood, as well as on the flat west of the town, relics of rudely-constructed pottery, stone arrow-heads, stone hatchets, &c., have repeatedly been found until within the last few years.

The use of stone edge-tools was abandoned as soon as the savages obtained a sight of a superior article—probably as early as 1730. The first were brought to the valley by Indians who had received them as presents from the proprietary family.

It is stated that the first brought to Assunepachla cost a special trip to Philadelphia. Three chiefs having seen hatchets and knives at Standing Stone, were so fascinated with their utility that they resolved to have some. Accordingly they went to work at trapping, and in the fall, each with an immense load of skins, started on foot for Philadelphia, where they arrived after a long and fatiguing march. They soon found what they wanted at the shop of an Englishman, but, being unable to talk English, they merely deposited their furs upon the counter, and pointed to the tomahawks and knives. This indicated trade, and the Englishman, after a critical examination of their skins, which he found would yield him not less than £100, threw them carelessly under the counter, and gave them a hatchet and a knife each. With these the savages were about to depart well satisfied, but the trader suddenly bethinking himself of the possibility of their falling in with the interpreters, and their ascertaining the manner in which they had been swindled, called them back, and very generously added three clasp knives and a quantity of brass jewelry.

With these they wended their way back, proud as emperors of their newly acquired weapons. Never did chiefs enter a place with more pomp and importance than our warriors. The very dogs barked a welcome, and the Indians came forth from their wigwams to greet the great eastern travelers. Their hatchets, knives and trinkets passed from hand to hand, and savage enconiums were lavished unsparingly upon them; but when their practicability was tested the climax of savage enthusiasm was reached. The envied possessors were lions; they cut, hued, and scored, just because they could.

But, alas for all things mutable! their glory was not destined to last long. The traders soon appeared with the same kind of articles and readily exchanged for half a dozen skins what the warriors had spent a season in trapping and a long journey to procure.

INDIAN BURIAL PLACES.

On the point of Chimney Ridge, near Wert's farm, below Hollidaysburg, was an Indian burial place, and another on the small piece of table-land near the mouth of Brush Run. At both places skeletons of mighty chiefs and all powerful warriors have been ruthlessly torn from their places of sepulture by the plough, and many other relics have been exhumed.

The greater portion of the warriors residing at Frankstown went to Ohio in 1755, and took up the hatchet for their "brothers," the French, and against Onas, or their father, Penn. This act, the colonial government persuaded itself to believe, was altogether mercenary on the part of the savages. The real cause, as we have already stated, was the dissatisfaction which followed the purchase of the Juniata Valley, by the Penns, for a few paltry pounds, from the Iroquois, at Albany, in 1754.

The town of Frankstown still continued to be a prominent Indian settlement until the army of General Forbes passed up the Raystown Branch, when the spies sent out brought such exaggerated reports of the warlike appearance and strength of the army, that the settlement was entirely broken up, and the warriors, with their squaws, pappooses, and movable effects, crossed the Alleghany by the "Kittanning War Path,"* and bade adieu to the valley which they were only too well convinced was no longer their own.

The remains of their bark huts, their old corn fields, and other indications of their presence, were in existence until after the beginning of the present century.

On the flat several white settlers erected their cabins at an

*See sketch of Blairsville.

†Some antiquarians ascribe its origin to the Mound Builders.

*It is supposed they then located in the Black Lick and Conemaugh Valleys.

early day, and a few near the old town, and others where the town of Frankstown now stands.

During the Revolution, a stable erected by Peter Titus was turned into a fortress. In summer the location of the fort can still be traced by the luxuriant growth of vegetation upon it. This fort was called Holliday's Fort. The fort at Fetter's, a mile west of Hollidaysburg, was known as the Frankstown Garrison. In those days there was no such place as Hollidaysburg, and the Frankstown district took in a scope of country which now serves for five or six very large townships; in short, every place was Frankstown within a radius of at least ten miles.

Holliday's Fort was a mere temporary affair, while the Frankstown Garrison was a substantial stockade, manned and provisioned in such a manner that a thousand savages could by no possible means have taken it. It never was assaulted except upon one occasion, and then the red-skins were right glad to beat a hasty retreat before they were able to fire a gun.

THE MASSACRE OF THE BEDFORD SCOUT.

Near this fort occurred the massacre of the Bedford Scout. This was unquestionably the most successful savage sortie made upon the whites in the valley during the Revolution, and as some of the bravest and best men of Bedford county fell in this massacre, it did not fail to create an excitement compared to which all other excitements that ever occurred in the valley were perfect calms.

We shall, in the first place, proceed to give the first report of the occurrence sent by George Ashman, one of the sub-lieutenants of the county, to Arthur Buchanan, at Kishicoquillas. Ashman says:

"Sir:—By an express this moment from Frankstown, we have the bad news. As a party of volunteers from Bedford was going to Frankstown, a party of Indians fell in with them this morning, and killed thirty of them. Only seven made their escape to the garrison of Frankstown. I hope that you'll exert yourself in getting men to go up to the Stone; and pray let the river people know, as they may turn out. I am in health.

Geo. Ashman."

Of course Colonel Ashman was not near the place, and his dispatch to Buchanan is, as a natural consequence, made up from the exaggerated reports that were carried to him at the instance of the affrighted people residing in the vicinity where the massacre occurred. The following is the official report transmitted by Ashman, to President Reed:

"Bedford County, June 12, 1781.

"Sir:—I have to inform you that on Sunday, the third of this instant, a party of the rangers under Captain Boyd, eight in number, with twenty-five volunteers, under Captain Moore and Lieutenant Smith, of the militia of this county, had an engagement with a party of Indians (said to be numerous) within three miles of Frankstown, where seventy-five of the Cumberland militia were stationed, commanded by Captain James Young. Some of the party running into the garrison, acquainting Captain Young of what had happened, he issued out a party immediately, and brought in seven more, five of whom are wounded, and two made their escape to Bedford—eight killed and scalped—Captain Boyd, Captain Moore and Captain Dunlap, missing. Captain Young, expecting from the enemy's numbers that his garrison would be surrounded, sent express to me immediately; but before I could collect as many volunteers as was sufficient to march to Frankstown with, the enemy had returned over the Alleghany hill. The waters being high, occasioned by heavy rains, they could not be pursued. This county, at this time, is in a deplorable situation. A number of families are flying away daily, ever since the late damage was done. I can assure your Excellency that if immediate assistance is not sent to this county, that the whole of the frontier inhabitants will move off in a few days. Colonel Abraham Smith, of Cumberland, has just informed me that he has no orders to send us any more militia from Cumberland county, to our assistance, which I am much surprised to hear. I shall move my family to Maryland in a few days, as I am convinced that not any one settlement is able to make any stand against such numbers of the enemy. If your Excellency should please to order us any assistance, less than three hundred will be of but little relief to this county. Ammunition we have not any; and the Cumberland militia will be discharged in two days. It is dreadful to think what the consequence of leaving such a number of helpless inhabitants may be to the cruelties of a savage enemy.

Please to send me by the first opportunity, three hundred pounds, as I cannot possibly do the business without money. You may depend that nothing shall be wanting in me, to serve my country as far as my abilities.

I have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's most ob't, humble serv't,

George Ashman, Lieut. Bedford County."

It would appear that even a man holding an official station, is liable to gross mistakes. In this instance, Ashman, who lived remote from the scene of the disaster, was evidently misled by the current rumors, and such he transmitted; for as late as 1855, there were persons alive, who lived at the time of the occurrence in the immediate vicinity, who pronounce Ashman's statement as erroneous, and who give an entirely different version of the affair.

The seventy Cumberland county militia, under strict military discipline, were sent first to Standing Stone, and afterward to Frankstown, early in the spring 1781. They were under the command of Colonel Albright and Captain Young, and were sent with a view to waylaying the gaps of the Alleghany mountains, and preventing any savages from coming into the valley. Instead of doing so, however, they proved themselves an inefficient body of men, with dilatory officers, who chose rather the idle life of the fort than scouting to intercept the savages. In fact, these men, in the service and pay of the Supreme Executive Council of the State, to protect the frontier, were never one solitary cent's worth of advantage to the inhabitants. Such a force, one would suppose, would have inspired the people with confidence, and been fully able to cope with or repel the largest war-party of savages that ever trod the Kitanning war path during the Revolutionary struggle.

Notwithstanding the presence of this large body of men, stationed as it were, almost at the mouth of the gap through which the Indians entered the valley, the depredations of the savages were almost of daily occurrence. The inefficiency of the Cumberland militia, who either could not or would not check the marauders, at length exasperated the settlers to such an extent, that they resolved to form themselves into a scouting party, and range through the county for two months.

This project was favored by Colonel Ashman, and he agreed to furnish a company of rangers to join them. The enrollment of volunteers by Captain Moore, of Scotch Valley, assisted by his lieutenant, a Mr. Smith, from the vicinity of Frankstown, proceeded, and on the Second of June, 1781, these men met at Holliday's fort, then abandoned for want of provisions. There they were joined by the rangers, under command of Captain Boyd and Lieutenant Harry Woods, of Bedford, but instead of there being a company, as the volunteers were led to expect, there were but eight men and the two officers above named.

From Holliday's fort they marched to Fetters, where they contemplated spending the Sabbath. It was their intention to march through the Kittanning Gap to an old State road (long since abandoned), from thence to Pittsburgh, and home by way of Bedford.

While debating the matter and making the necessary arrangements, two spies came in and reported that they had come upon an Indian encampment near "Hart's Sleeping Place," which had apparently been just abandoned, as the fire was still burning; that, from the number of bark huts, the savages must number from twenty-five to thirty.

This raised quite a stir in the camp, as the scouts evidently were eager for the fray. The officers, who were regular woodsmen, and knew that the Indians would not venture into the settlement until the day following, were confident of meeting them near the mouth of the gap and giving them battle. They at once tendered to Colonel Albright the command of the expedition, but he refused to accept it. They then importuned him to let a portion of his men, who were both anxious and willing, accompany them, but this, too, he refused.

Nothing daunted, however, the rangers and the volunteers arose by daybreak on Sunday morning, put their rifles in condition, ate their breakfast, and with five days' provisions in their knapsacks, started for the mountain.

We sincerely regret that the most strenuous effort on our part to procure a list of this scout proved futile. Here and there we picked up the names of a few who were in it; but nothing would have given us greater pleasure than to insert a full and correct list of these brave men. In addition to the officers named, we may mention the following privates: James Somerville, the two Colemans, two Hollidays, two brothers named Jones, a man named Grey, one of the Beattys, Michael Wallack and Edward Milligan.

The path led close along the river, and the men marched in Indian file, as the path was narrow. When they reached the flat above where the Temperance Mill now stands, and within thirty rods of the mouth of Sugar Run, the loud war whoop rang upon the stillness of the Sabbath morning; a band of savages rose from the bushes on the left-hand side of the road, firing a volley at the same time, by which fifteen of the brave scouts were stretched dead in the path. The remainder fled in consternation in every direction, some over the river in the direction of Frankstown, others toward Fetter's Fort. A man named Jones, one of the fleetest runners, reached the Fort first. To screen the scout from the odium of running, he reported the number of the enemy so large that Albright refused to let any of his command go to the relief of the unfortunate men.

As the Colemans were coming to the fort, they found the other Jones lying behind a log for the purpose of resting, as he said. Coleman advised him to push on to the fort, which he promised to do.

Captain Young at length started out with a party to bring in the wounded. The man Jones was found resting behind the log, but the rest was a lasting one—he was scalped and killed. Another man, who had been wounded, was also followed a short distance and killed and scalped, making, in all, seventeen persons who fell by this sad and unlooked for event. In addition to the seventeen killed, five were wounded, who were found concealed in various places in the woods and removed to the fort. Some reached the fort in safety, others were missing, among the latter, Harry Woods, James Somerville and Michael Wallack.

It appears that these three men started over the river, and ran up what is now known as O'Friel's Ridge, hotly pursued by a single savage. Woods and Wallack were in front and Somerville behind, when the moccasin of the latter became untied. He stooped down to fix it, as it was impossible to ascend the steep hill with the loose moccasin retarding his progress. While in this position the Indian, with uplifted tomahawk, was rapidly approaching him, when Woods turned suddenly and aimed with his empty rifle* at the Indian.

This caused the savage to jump behind a tree scarcely large enough to cover his body, from which he peered and recognized Woods.

"No hurt Woods!" yelled the Indian. "No hurt Woods!"

This Indian happened to be the son of the old Indian, Hutson, to whom George Woods, of Bedford, paid a small annual stipend in tobacco for delivering him from bondage. Hutson had frequently taken his son to Bedford, and it was by this means that he had become acquainted with Harry and readily recognized him. Woods, although he recognized Hutson, had been quite as close to Indians as he cared about getting, so the three continued their route over the ridge, and by a circuitous tramp reached the fort in the afternoon.

Many years afterward, long after the war, when Woods lived in Pittsburgh, he went down to the Allegheny river to see several canoe-loads of Indians that had just arrived from above. He had scarcely reached the landing when one of the chiefs jumped out, shook him warmly by the hand, and said:

"Woods, you run like debble up Juniata Hill."

It was Hutson, by this time a distinguished chief in his tribe.

The fate of the unfortunate scout was soon known all over the country, expresses having been sent in every direction.

On Monday morning Captain Young again went out with a small party to bury the dead, and many of them were interred near the spot where they fell; while others after the men got tired of digging graves were merely covered with bark and leaves and left on the spot to be food for the wolves, which some of the bodies unquestionably became as Jones sought for that of his brother on Tuesday, and found nothing but the crushed remains of some bones.

In 1852, a young man in the employ of Mr. Burns exhumed one of these skeletons with the plough. It was found near the surface of the earth, on the bank of the river. The skull was perforated, with a bullet-hole, and was in a remarkable state of preservation, although it had been in the ground uncoffined for a period of seventy-one years. It was placed in the earth again.

Immediately after the news of the massacre was spread, the people from Standing Stone and other places gathered at Fetter's, and on the Tuesday following a party of nearly one hundred men started in pursuit of the Indians. Colonel Albright was solicited to accompany this force with his command, and march until they overtook the enemy, but he refused. The men went as far as Hart's Sleeping Place, but they might just as well have remained at home, for the savages, with the scalps of the scout dangling from their belts, were then far on their way to Detroit.

When the firing took place, it was plainly heard at the fort, and some of the men, fully convinced that the scout had been attacked, asked Colonet Albright to go out with his command to their relief. He merely answered by saying that he "knew his own business."

For his part in the matter, he gained the ill will of the settlers, and it was very fortunate that his time expired when it did. The settlers were not much divided in opinion, as to whether he was a rigid discipilinarian or a coward. Men, arms, and ammunition followed this last outrage, but it was the last formidable and warlike incursion into the Juniata valley.†

*Woods shot an Indian. His rifle was the only one discharged in what Colonel Ashman termed an "engagement."

†History of the Juniata valley.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

COLONEL LOCHRY'S EXPEDITION TO JOIN GENERAL CLARK.—ORGANIZATION OF THE PARTY.—THEIR TRIP DOWN THE OHIO.—THE SURPRISE.—THE FATE OF THE CAPTIVES.—CAPTAIN ORR.

EARLY in the summer of 1781, General George Rogers Clark wrote to Colonel Archibald Lochry, the county lieutenant of Westmoreland county, desiring him to raise one hundred or more volunteers, and one company of cavalry, to join his expedition to the West.*

ORGANIZATION OF THE PARTY.

Colonel Lochry consulted Captain Orr, upon the propriety of such an enterprise, and the possibility of compliance with the request. "I believed," said he, "it was possible for such a force to be raised, and immediately volunteered to be one of the party." Holding a Captain's commission of militia, Orr had no power to order them from home, but by his own exertions, and mostly at his own expense, raised a company of volunteer riflemen. Captains Stokely and Shannon, commanded each a company of rangers, and Captain Campbell, a company of horse. The party amounted to about one hundred and twenty or twenty-five men. Colonel Lochry was the only field officer in command.

THEIR TRIP DOWN THE RIVER AND SURPRISE.

Their force was rendezvoused at Carnahan's block house, eleven miles west of Hannastown, on the 24th of July, and on the next day set out for Fort Henry, (Wheeling), by way of Pittsburgh, where it was arranged that they should join the army under Clark. Arriving there, they found that Clark had gone twelve miles down the river, leaving for them some provisions and a traveling boat, with directions to follow him thither.

After preparing some temporary boats for the transportation of the men and horses, which occupied ten days, they proceeded to join Clark. Arriving, they found he had gone down the river the day before, leaving a Major Craycraft, with a few men and a boat for the transportation of the horses, but without either provisions or ammunition, of which they had an inadequate supply. Clark had, however, promised to await their arrival at the mouth of the Kanawha, but on their reaching that point, they found that he had been obliged, in order to prevent the desertion of his men, to proceed down the river, leaving only a letter affixed to a pole, directing them to follow. Their provisions and forage were nearly exhausted; there was no source of supply but the stores conveyed by Clark; the river was low, they were unacquainted with the channel, and could not therefore hope to overtake him.

Under the embarrassing circumstances, Colonel Lochry dispatched Captain Shannon with four men, in a small boat, with the hope of overtaking the main army, and of securing supplies, leaving his company under the command of Lieutenant Isaac Anderson; but before they had proceeded far they were taken prisoners by the Indians, and with them was taken a letter to Clark, detailing the situation of Lochry's party. About the same time Lochry arrested a party of nineteen deserters from Clark's army, whom he afterwards released and they immediately joined the Indians.

THE SURPRISE.

The savages had been apprised of the expedition, but had previously supposed that Clark and Lochry were proceeding together, and through fear of the cannon which Clark carried, refused to make an attack. Informed now by the capture of Shannon and his men, and by the reports of the deserters, of the weakness of Lochry's party, they collected in force below the mouth of the Great Miami, with the determination to destroy them.

They placed their prisoners in a conspicuous position on the north shore of the river, near, it is said, the head of Lochry's Island, and promised to spare their lives on condition they would hail their companions as they passed, and induce them to surrender.

They, however, wearied with their slow progress, and in despair of reaching Clark's army, landed on the 25th of August, about ten o'clock, at a very attractive spot on the same shore, at an inlet which has since borne the name of Lochry's creek,* a short distance above the point where the Indians were waiting them. Here they removed their horses ashore, and turned them loose to enable them to feed sufficiently to keep them alive until they could be taken to the falls, about one hundred and twenty miles distant. One of the party had previously killed a buffalo, and all, except a few set to guard the horses, were engaged around the fires which they had kindled in preparing a meal from it.

Suddenly they were assailed by a volley of rifle balls from an overhanging bluff, covered with large trees, on which the Indians immediately appeared in great force. The men, thus surprised, seized their arms and defended themselves as long as their ammunition lasted, and then attempted to escape by means of their boats. But they were unwieldy, the water was low, and the force too much weakened to make them available, and the whole party, unable to escape or defend themselves, were compelled to surrender.

Immediately the Indians fell upon and massacred Colonel Lochry and several other prisoners, but were restrained by the arrival of the chief who commanded them, the celebrated Brant,† who afterwards apologized for the massacre. He did not approve, he declared, of such conduct, but it was impossible to entirely control the Indians; that the murder of Lochry and his men was perpetrated in revenge for the massacre of the Indian prisoners taken by Brodhead's army on the Muskingum a few months before.

At the time of their surrender Lochry's party consisted of only one hundred and six men. Of these, forty-two were killed and sixty-four were taken prisoners. The Indians engaged numbered three hundred or more, and consisted of various tribes. Among these the prisoners and plunder were divided in proportion to the number of warriors of each engaged.

THE FATE OF THE CAPTIVES.

The next day they started on their return to the Delaware towns. There they were met by a party of British and Indians, commanded by Colonel Caldwell, and accompanied by the two Girtys and McKee, who professed to be on their way to the falls to attack General Clark. They remained there two days. Brant, with the greater part of the Indians who had captured them, returned with Caldwell toward the Ohio. A few only remained to take charge of the prisoners and spoils. These they separated, and took to the towns to which they had been assigned. There they remained in captivity until the next year, which brought the Revolutionary war to a close.

After the preliminary articles were signed, on the 30th of November, 1782, they were ransomed by the British officers in command of the northern posts, to be exchanged for British prisoners, and sent to the St. Lawrence. A few of them had

*See account of Clark's Expedition in American Pioneer and American Archives.

*Lochry's creek empties into the Ohio between nine and ten miles below the mouth of the Miami, and Lochry's Island, near the head of which the prisoners were confined to decoy their friends, is three miles below the creek.

†It may be uncertain whether Brant was the leader of the Indians at this place. There is no other evidence that he was in the West at that time.

previously escaped, a few deserted from Montreal and the remainder, in the spring of 1783, sailed from Quebec to New York, and returned thence home by way of Philadelphia, having been absent twenty-two months. More than half of the number who left Westmoreland under Colonel Lochry never returned.

CAPTAIN ORR.

This article has been derived from a manuscript of General Orr, of Kittanning, written from the recollection of his father, Captain Orr, who was in the party, and is corrobated by a manuscript of Ensign Hunter, who was also a sharer in it. Capt. Orr was wounded, by having his arm broken in the engagement; was carried off a prisoner to Sandusky, where he remained for several months. At length, finding that they could not cure his wound, the Indians took him to the hospital at Detroit, whence he was transferred to Montreal, in the winter, and exchanged with other prisoners at the end of the war. Afterward, in 1805, he was appointed a judge of Armstrong county, which station he held till his death, in 1833, in his eighty-ninth year.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE BURNING OF HANNASTOWN.

STATE OF AFFAIRS IN 1782.—THE VILLAGE.—DESTRUCTION OF THE TOWN.—ATTACK ON MILLER'S STATION.—AN INCIDENT.—THRILLING SCENES.—FLIGHT OF THE SAVAGES.—STATE OF AFFAIRS IN 1782.

DURING 1782, the frontiers of Pennsylvania suffered greatly from the hostility of the Indians. In the summer, an expedition of three hundred British soldiers, and five hundred Indians, was sent from Canada to attack Fort Pitt. The detachment proceeded to Lake Chatauqua, and had actually embarked in canoes to descend the Allegheny, when information of the strength and repairs of that fort was received through their spies; and, in consequence, the enterprise was abandoned, and the British returned to Canada. Detached parties of the Indians were sent out, however, to harrass the settlements on the borders of Pennsylvania. One of these, under the command of the famous Seneca chief Guyasutha, attacked and burned Hannastown, the seat of justice for Westmoreland county.* A detailed account of that inroad is furnished in the Greensburg Argus, of 1836, from which we excerpt the following:

THE VILLAGE.

"About three miles from Greensburg, on the old road to New Alexandria, there stands two modern-built log tenements, to one of which a sign post and a sign is appended, giving due notice that at the Seven Yellow Stars, the wayfarer may partake of the good things of this world. Between the tavern and the Indian gallows hill on the west, once stood Hannastown, the first place west of the Alleghany mountains, where justice was dispensed, according to the legal forms, by the white man. The county of Westmoreland was established by the provincial legislature, on the 26th of February, 1773, and the courts directed to be held at Hannastown. It consisted of about thirty habitations, some of them cabins, but most of them aspiring to the name of houses having two stories, of hewed logs.

*Western Annals.

There was a wooden court-house, and a jail of the like construction. A fort, stockaded with logs, completed the civil and military arrangements of the town. The first prothonotary and clerk of the courts was Arthur St. Clair, Esq., afterwards general in the Revolutionary army. Robert Hanna, Esq., was the first presiding justice in the courts; and the first court of common pleas was held in April, 1773. Thomas Smith, Esq., afterwards one of the judges on the Supreme Bench, brought quarterly, from the east, the most obstruse learning of the profession, to puzzle the backwoods lawyer; and it was here that Hugh Henry Breckenridge, afterwards, also a judge on the Supreme Bench, made his debut in the profession which he afterwards illustrated and adorned by his genius and learning.

The road first opened to Fort Pitt by General Forbes and his army passed through the town. The periodical return of the court brought together a hardy, adventurous, frank and openhearted set of men from the Redstone, the Georges creek, the Youghiogheny, the Monongahela and the Catfish settlements, as well as from the region, still in its circumscribed limits, called "Old Westmoreland." It may well be supposed that on such occasions there was many an uproarious merry-making. Such men, when they occasionally met at courts, met joyously. But the plough has long since gone over the place of merry-making, and no log or mound of earth remains to tell where justice had her scales.

THE ATTACK ON THE TOWN.

On the 13th of July, 1782, a party of the townsfolk went to O'Conner's fields, about a mile and a half north of the village, to cut the harvest of Michael Huffnagle. The summer of 1782 was a sorrowful one to the frontier inhabitants. The blood of many a family had sprinkled their own fields. The frontier northwest of the town was almost deserted; the inhabitants had fled for safety and repose toward the Sewickley settlement. At this very time there were a number of families at Miller's Station, about two miles south of the town. There was, therefore, little impediment to the Indians, either by way of resistance, or even of giving warning of their approach.

When the reapers had cut down one field one of the number who had crossed to the side next to the woods, returned in great alarm, and reported that he had seen a number of Indians approaching. The whole reaping party ran for the town, each one intent upon his own safety. The scene which then presented itself may more readily be conceived than described. Fathers seeking for their wives and children, and children calling upon their parents and friends, and all hurrying in a state of consternation to the fort. Some criminals were confined in jail, the doors of which were thrown open. After some time it was proposed that some person should reconnoitre and relieve them from uncertainty. Four young men, David Shaw, James Brison and two others, with their rifles started on foot through the highlands, between that and Crabtree creek, pursuing a direct course toward O'Conner's fields, whilst Captain J., who happened to be in the town, pursued a more circuitous route on horseback.

The Captain was the first to arrive at the fields, and his eye was not long in doubt, for the whole force of the savages was there mustered. He turned his horse to fly, but was observed and pursued. When he had proceeded a short distance he met the four on foot, told them to fly for their lives, that the savages were coming in great force, that he would take a circuitous route and alarm the settlements. He went to Love's, where Frederick Beaver now lives, about a mile and a quarter east of the town, and assisted the family to fly, taking Mrs. Love on the horse behind him. The four made all speed for the town, but the foremost Indians obtained sight of them and gave them hot pursuit. By the time they had reached the Crabtree creek they could hear the distinct footfalls of their pursuers, and see the sunbeams glistening through the foliage of the trees upon their naked skins.

When, however, they got into the mouth of the ravine that led up from the creek to the town, they felt almost secure. The Indians, who knew nothing of the previous alarm given to the town, and supposed that they would take it by surprise, did not fire, lest that might give notice of their approach; this saved the lives of David Shaw and his companions. When they got to the top of the hill, the strong instinct of nature impelled Shaw to go first into the town, and see whether his kindred had gone into the fort, before he entered it himself. As he reached his father's threshold and saw all within desolate, he turned and saw the savages, with their tufts of hair flying in the wind, and their brandished tomahawks, for they had emerged into the open space around the town, and commenced the war whoop. He resolved to make one of them give his death halloo and raising his rifle to his eye, his bullet whizzed true, for the stout savage at whom he aimed, bounded into the air and fell upon his face. Then, with the speed of an arrow, he fled to the fort, which he entered in safety.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TOWN.

The Indians were exasperated when they found the town deserted, and after pillaging the houses, they set them on fire. Although a considerable part of the town was within rifle range of the fort, the whites did but little execution, being more intent on their own safety than solicitous about destroying the enemy. One savage, who had put on the military coat of one of the inhabitants, paraded himself so ostentatiously that he was shot down. Except this one and the one laid low by Shaw, there was no evidence of any other execution, but some human bones found among the ashes of one of the houses, where they, it was supposed burnt those that were killed.

There were not more than fourteen or fifteen rifles in the fort; and a company having marched from the town some time before, in Lochry's ill-fated campaign, many of the most efficient men were absent; not more than twenty or twenty-five remained. A maiden, Jennet Shaw, was killed in the fort; a child having run opposite the gate, in which there were some apertures through which a bullet from the Indians occasionally whistled, she followed it, and as she stooped to pick it up, a bullet entered her bosom—she thus fell a victim to her kindness of heart. The savages, with their wild yells and hideous jesticulations, exulted as the flames spread, and looked like demoniacs rejoicing over the lost hope of mortals.

THE ATTACK ON MILLER'S STATION.

Soon after the arrival of the marauders, a large body of them was observed to break off, by what seemed concerted signals, and march toward Miller's station. At that place there had been a wedding the day before. Love is a delicate plant, but will take root in the midst of perils in gentle bosoms. A young couple, fugitives from the frontier, fell in love and were married. Among those who visited the bridal festivity, were Mrs. H. and her two beautiful daughters, from the town, John Brownlee, who then owned what is now the fine farm of Frederick J. Cope, and his family, were also there. This individual was well known in frontier forage and scouting parties. His courage, activity, generosity, and manly form, won for him among his associates, as they win everywhere, confidence and attachment. Many of the Indians were acquainted with his character, some of them probably had seen his person. There were in addition to the mansion, a number of cabins, rudely constructed, in which those families who had been driven from their homes resided. The station was generally called Miller's town. The bridal party were enjoying themselves in the principal mansion without the least shadow of approaching danger. Some men were mowing in the meadows—people in the cabins were variously occupied—when suddenly the war whoop, like a clap of thunder from a cloudless sky, broke upon their astonished ears. The people in the cabins and those in the meadow mostly made their escape.

AN INCIDENT.

One incident always excites emotions in my bosom when I have heard it related. Many who fled took an east course, over the long, steep hills which ascend toward Peter George's farm. One man was carrying his child and assisting his mother in the flight, and when they got toward the top of the hill the mother exclaimed they would be murdered; that the savages were gaining space upon them. The son and father put down and abandoned his child that he might more effectually assist his mother. Let those disposed to condemn, keep silence until the same struggle of nature takes place in their own bosom. Perhaps he thought the savages would be more apt to spare the innocence of infancy than the weakness of age. But most likely it was the instinct of feeling, and even a brave man had hardly time to think under such circumstances. At all events, Providence seemed to smile on the act, for at the dawn of the next morning, when the father returned to the cabin, he found his little innocent curled upon his bed, sound asleep, the only human thing left amidst the desolation. Let fathers appreciate his feelings. Whether the Indians had found the child and took compassion on it, and carried it back, or whether the little creature had been unobserved, and when it became tired of its solitude, had wandered home through brush and over briers, will never be known. The latter supposition would seem most probable from being found in its own cabin and on its own bed.

THRILLING SCENES.

At the principal mansion, the party were so agitated by the cries of women and children, mingling with the yell of the savage, that all were for a moment irresolute, and that moment sealed their fate. One young man of powerful frame grasped a child near him, which happened to be Brownlee's and effected his escape. He was pursued by three or four savages. His strength enabled him to gain slightly upon his followers, and when he came to a rye-field, taking to a thick copse which by a sudden turn intervened between him and them, he got on the fence and leaped far into the rye, where he lay down with the child. He heard the quick tread of the savages as they passed, and their slower steps as they returned, muttering their guttural disappointment. That man lived to an honored old age, but is now (1836) no more.

Brownlee made his way to the door, having seized a rifle; he saw, however, that it was a desperate game, but made a rush at some Indians who were entering the gate. The shrill, clear voice of his wife, exclaiming "Jack, will you leave me?" instantly recalled him, and he sat down beside her at the door, yielding himself a willing victim. The party were made prisoners, including the bridegroom and bride, and several of the family of Miller.

At this point of time, Captain J. was seen coming up the lane in full gallop. The Indians were certain of their prey, and the prisoners were dismayed at his rashness. Fortunately he noticed the peril in which he was placed, in time to save himself. Eagerly bent upon giving warning to the people, his mind was so engrossed with that idea, that he did not see the enemy until he was within full gun shot. When he did see them and turned to fly several bullets whistled by him, one of which cut his bridle rein, but he escaped. When those of the marauders who had pursued the fugitives returned, and when they had safely secured their prisoners and loaded them with plunder, they commenced their retreat.

Heavy were the hearts of the women and maidens as they were led into captivity. Who can tell the bitterness of their sorrow? They looked, as they thought, for the last time upon the dear fields of their country and of civilized life. They thought of their fathers, their husbands, their brothers, and, as their eyes streamed with tears, the cruelty and uncertainty, which hung over their fate as prisoners of savages, overwhelmed them in despair. They had proceeded about half-a-mile, and four or five Indians near the group of prisoners, in which was Brownlee, were observed to exchange rapid sentences among each other, and look earnestly at him. Some of the prisoners had named him, and whether it was from that circumstance, or because some of the Indians had recognized his person, it was evident that he was a doomed man. He stooped slightly to adjust his child on his back, which he carried in addition to the luggage which they had put on him, and, as he did so, one of the Indians who had looked so earnestly at him, stepped to him hastily and buried a tomahawk in his head. When he fell, the child was quickly dispatched by the same individual. One of the women captives screamed at this butchery, and the same bloody instrument and ferocious hand immediately ended her agony of spirit "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," and he enabled Mrs. Brownlee to bear that scene in speechless agony of woe. Their bodies were found the next day by the settlers, and interred where they fell. The spot is marked to this day in Mechling's field. As the shades of evening began to fall, the marauders met again on the plains of Hannastown. They retired into the low grounds about the Crabtree creek, and there regaled themselves on what they had stolen. It was their intention to attack the fort the next morning, before the dawn of day.

FLIGHT OF THE SAVAGES.

At nightfall thirty yeomen, good and true, had assembled at George's farm, not far from Miller's, determined to give, that night, what succor they could to the people in the fort. They set off for the town, each with his trusty rifle, some on horseback and some on foot. As soon as they came near the fort the greatest caution and circumspection prevailed. Experienced woodsmen soon ascertained that the enemy was in the Crabtree bottom, and that they might enter the fort. Accordingly they all marched to the gate, and were most joyfully welcomed by those within. After some consultation, it was the general opinion that the Indians intended to make an attack the next morning, and as there were but about forty-five rifles in the fort, and about fifty-five or sixty men, the contest was considered extremely doubtful, considering the great superiority of numbers on the part of the savages.

It became, therefore, a matter of the first importance to impress the enemy with a belief that large reinforcements were arriving. For that purpose the horses were mounted by active men and brought full trot over the bridge of plank that was across the ditch which surrounded the stockading. This was frequently repeated. Two old drums were found in the fort, which were new braced, and music on the fife and drum was kept occasionally going during the night. While marching and countermarching, the bridge was frequently crossed on foot by the whole garrison. These measures had the desired effect. The military music from the fort, the trampling of the horses, and the marching over the bridge, were borne on the silence of the night over the low lands of the Crabtree, and the sounds carried terror into the bosoms of the cowardly savages. They feared the retribution which they deserved, and fled shortly after midnight in their stealthy and wolf-like habits. Three hundred Indians, and about sixty white savages, in the shape of refugees (as they were then called), crossed the Crabtree that day, with the intention of destroying Hannastown and Miller's Station.

The next day a number of the whites pursued the trail as far as the Kiskiminetas, without being able to overtake them. The little community, which had now no homes but what the fort supplied, looked out on the ruins of the town with the deepest sorrow. It had been to them the scene of heartfelt joys—embracing the intensity and tenderness of all which renders the domestic hearth and family altar sacred. By degrees they all sought themselves places where they might, like Noah's dove, find rest for the soles of their feet. The lots of the town, either by sale or abandonment, became merged in the adjoining farm, and the labors of the husbandman soon effaced what time might have spared. Many a tall harvest have I seen growing upon the ground, but never did I look upon its waving luxuriance, without thinking of the severe trials, the patient fortitude, the high courage which characterized the early settlers.

ATTACK ON RICE'S FORT.*

In September, a party of Indians invaded the settlements on Buffalo creek and appeared before Rice's fort, then containing only six men. The savages surrounded it, and demanded its surrender; but they were answered with defiance. Soon after dark they commenced an attack and set fire to some out buildings within thirty yards of the pickets. But the course of the wind saved the fort, and the Indians finding they could make no impression on it, gave up the attempt and left the place.

No other invasion of the Pennsylvania settlements occurred. Scalping parties, indeed, during the autumn, prowled around the block houses on the borders; the winter, as usual, was passed in quiet, and the peace of the next year abated the predatory war that had so long disturbed the frontier of Pennsylvania and Virginia.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

THE WHISKY INSURRECTION OF 1791 TO 1794.

THE province of Pennsylvania, as early as 1756, had looked to the excise on ardent spirits for the means of sustaining its bills of credit. The original law, passed to continue only ten years, was from time to time continued, as necessities pressed upon the treasury. During the Revolution, the law was generally evaded, in the west, by considering all spirits as for domestic use, such being excepted from excise; but when the debts of the Revolution began to press upon the states, they became more vigilant in the enforcement of the law. Opposition arose at once in the western counties. Liberty-poles were erected, and people, assembled in arms, chased off the officers appointed to enforce the laws, tarred and feathered some of them, singed their wigs, cut off the tails of their horses, put coals in their boots, and compelled others to resign. Their object was to compel a repeal of the law, but they had not the least idea of subverting the government.

The pioneers of this region, descended as they were from the people of North Britain and Ireland, had come very honestly by their love of whisky; and many of them had brought their hatred of an exciseman directly from the old country. The western insurgents followed, as they supposed, the recent example of the American Revolution. The first attempt of the British parliament—the very cause of the Revolution—had been an excise law. There was nothing at that day disreputable in either drinking or making whisky. No temperance societies then existed; to drink whisky was as common and honorable as to eat bread; and the fame of 'Old Monongahela' was proverbial, both at the east and the west. Distilling was then esteemed as moral and respectable as any other business. It was early commenced and extensively carried on in Western Pennsylvania. There was neither home or foreign market for rye, their principal crop; the grain would not bear packing across the mountains. A horse could carry but four bushels; but he could take the product of twenty-four bushels in the shape of alcohol. Whisky, therefore, was the most important item of remittance, to pay for their salt, sugar and iron. "The people had cultivated their land for years, at the peril of their lives, with little or no protection from the federal government; and when, by extraordinary efforts, they were enabled to raise a little more grain than their immediate wants required, they were met with a law restraining them in the liberty of doing what they pleased with the surplus. The people of Western Pennsylvania, therefore, regarded the tax on whisky in the same light as the citizens of Ohio would now regard a United States tax on lard, pork, or flour."

*Western Annals.

It should be remembered also in this connection, that the new federal government was but recently organized; its powers were but little understood in the west; and the people of that section generally, for the previous twenty years, had been much more in the habit of opposing a foreign government, than of sustaining one of their own.

The state excise law, after remaining for years a dead letter, was repealed, a circumstance not likely to incline the people to submit to a similar law passed by Congress on the 3d of March, 1791, at the suggestion of General Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury. This law laid an excise of four-pence per gallon on all distilled spirits. The members from Western Pennsylvania, Smiley, of Fayette, and Findley, of Westmoreland, stoutly opposed the passage of the law, and on their return among their constituents loudly and openly disapproved of it Albert Gallatin, then residing in Fayette county, also opposed the law by all constitutional methods. It was with some difficulty that any one could be found to accept the office of inspector in the western district on account of its unpopularity. In this inflammatory state of the public mind, all that was necessary to kindle a blaze, was to apply the torch.

The first public meeting was held at Redstone Old Fort, 27th July, 1791, where it was concerted that county committees should meet at the four county seats of Fayette, Alleghany, Westmoreland and Washington. On the 23d of August, the committee of Washington county passed resolutions, and published them in the Pittsburgh Gazette, to the effect that "any person who had accepted or might accept an office under Congress, in order to carry the law into effect, should be considered inimical to the interests of the country; and recommending to the citizens of Washington county to treat every person accepting such office with contempt, and absolutely to refuse all kind of communication or intercourse with him, and withhold from him all aid, support, or comfort." Delegates from the four counties met at Pittsburgh 7th of September, 1791, and passed severe resolutions against the law. These meetings, composed of influential citizens, served to give consistency to the opposition.

On the 6th of September, 1791, a party, armed and disguised, waylaid Robert Johnson, collector for Alleghany and Washington, near Pigeon creek, in Washington county, tarred and feathered him, cut off his hair, and took away his horse, leaving him to travel on foot in that mortifying condition. John Robertson, John Hamilton and Thomas McComb, were proceeded against for the outrage, but Joseph Fox, the deputy marshal, dared not serve the process; and "if he had attempted it, believes he should not have returned alive." Clement Biddle was the chief marshal. The man sent privately with the process, was seized, whipped, tarred and feathered, his money and horse taken from him—blindfolded, and tied in the woods, where he remained five hours.

In October, 1791, an unhappy person named Wilson, who was in some measure disordered in his intellects, and affected to be, perhaps thought he was an exciseman, and was making inquiry for distillers, was pursued by a party in disguise, taken out of his bed, and carried several miles to a blacksmith's shop. There they stripped off his clothes and burned them; and having burned him with a hot iron in several places, they tarred and feathered him, and dismissed him, naked and wounded. The unhappy man conceived himself to be a martyr to the discharge of an important duty. Not long afterward, one Roseberry was tarred and feathered for speaking in favor of the government.

In Congress, 8th of May, 1792, material modifications were made in the law, lightening the duty, allowing monthly payments, &c.

In August, 1792, government succeeded in getting the use of William Faulkner's house, a captain in the U. S. army, for an inspection office. He was threatened with scalping, tarring and feathering, and compelled to promise not to let his house for that purpose, and to publish his promise in the Pittsburgh Gazette. The Pittsburgh Gazette dared not refuse the publication of these notices.

The President issued a proclamation 15th of September, 1792, enjoining all persons to submit to the law, and desist from all unlawful proceedings. Government determined, 1st, to prosecute delinquents; 2d, to seize unexcised spirits on their way to market; and 3d, to make no purchases for the army except of such spirits as had paid duty.

In April, 1793, a party in disguise attacked in the night the house of Benjamin Wells, collector in Fayette county, (at Connellsville), but he being from home, they broke open his house threatened, terrified and abused his family. Warrants were issued against the offenders by Judge Isaac Meason and James Findlay, but the sheriff refused to execute them; whereupon he was indicted. On the 22d of November they again attacked the house of Benjamin Wells in the night. They compelled him to surrender his commission and books, and required him to publish a resignation of his office within two weeks in the papers, on pain of having his house burned.

Notwithstanding these excesses, the law appeared during the latter part of 1793 to be rather gaining ground. Several principal distillers complied, and others showed a disposition, but were restrained by fear.

In January, 1794, further violence commenced. William Richmond, who had informed in the affair of Wilson, (the maniac), had his barn, grain and hay burnt; and Robert Strawhan, a complying distiller, also had his barn burnt. James Kiddoe, a complying distiller, had his stillhouse broken open; balls were fired into the still, and parts of his grist mill carried away. William Coughran's still was destroyed; the saw of his saw mill stolen, and his grist mill greatly injured. He was threatened, in a figurative but expressive note, with having his property burned, if he did not himself publish in the Pittsburgh Gazette the wrongs already inflicted on him.

In June, 1794, John Wells, the collector for Westmoreland, opened his office at the house of Philip Reagan, in that county. The house was at different times attacked in the night by armed men, who frequently fired on it; but they were always repulsed by Reagan and Wells, and the office was maintained during the remainder of the month.

The office in Washington opened to receive the annual entries of stills, after repeated attempts was suppressed. At first the sign was pulled down. On the 6th of June, twelve men, armed and painted black, broke into the house of John Lynn, where the office was kept, and, beguiling him by a promise of safety to come down stairs, they seized and tied him, threatened to hang him, took him into the woods, cut off his hair, tarred and feathered him, and swore him never again to allow the use of his house for an office, never to disclose their names, and never again to aid the excise; having done this, they bound him, naked, to a tree, and left him. He extricated himself next morning. They afterwards pulled down part of his house, and compelled him to seek an asylum elsewhere.

A term had come into popular use to designate the opposition to the excise law; it was that of Tom the Tinker. It was not given by adversaries as a term of reproach, but assumed by the insurgents in disguise at an early period. "A certain John Holcroft," says Mr. Breckenridge, "was thought to have made the first application of it at the attack on William Coughran, whose still was cut to pieces. This was humorously called mending his still. The menders of course must be tinkers, and the name collectively became Tom the Tinker." Advertisements were put up on trees, and other conspicuous places, with the signature of Tom the Tinker, threatening individuals admonishing, or commanding them. Menacing letters with the same signature were sent to the Pittsburgh Gazette, with orders to publish them—and the editor did not dare refuse. "At Braddock's field the acclamation was, 'Hurrah for Tom the Tinker!'—'Are you a Tom Tinker's man?' Every man was willing to be thought so, and some had great trouble to wipe off imputations to the contrary." Mr. Findlay says, "it afterwards appeared that the letters did not originate with Holcroft, though the inventor of them has never been discovered."

In Congress, on the 5th June, 1794, the excise law was amended. Those, however, who desired not amendment, but absolute repeal, were thereby incited to push matters to a more violent crisis. It became indispensable for the government to meet the opposition with more decision. Process was issued against a number of non-complying distillers in Fayette and Alleghany. Indictments were found against Robert Smilie and John McCulloch, rioters, and process issued accordingly.

It was cause of great and just complaint in the western counties, that the Federal courts sat only on the eastern side of the mountains, and that individuals were subject to ruinous expenses when forced to attend them. The process, requiring the delinquent distillers to appear at Philadelphia, arrived in the west at the period of harvest, when small parties of men were likely to be assembled together in the fields. In Fayette county the marshal issued his process without interruption, though under discouraging circumstances. In that county the most influential citizens and distillers had, at a meeting in the winter or spring previous, agreed to promote submission to the laws, on condition that a change should be made in the officers.

In Alleghany the marshal had successfully served all the processes except the last, when, unfortunately, he went into Pittsburgh. The next day, 15th July, 1794, he went in company with General Neville, the inspector, to serve the last writ on a distiller named Miller, near Peter's creek. After the writ was served, a number of men from the harvest field pursued the officers and fired upon them. Miller afterwards told H. H. Breckenridge, "that he was mad with passion when he reflected that being obliged to pay $250, and the expense of going to Philadelphia, would ruin him; and his blood boiled at seeing General Neville along, to pilot the officer to his very door."

Early next morning John Holcroft, the reputed Tom the Tinker, and about thirty-six others, appeared at General Neville's house (about seven miles south-west of Pittsburgh). Their conduct was suspicious. They were fired on from the house, and returning the fire, they were fired on from the negro houses adjoining. They retired with six wounded—one, Oliver Miller, mortally. The family received no injury. General Neville was prepared, and had armed his negroes. The next morning not less than 500 men, mostly armed, attended at Couch's Fort, a few miles from General Neville's house; many of them, probably, because they had not sufficient firmness to refuse. Rev. Mr. Clark, a venerable clergyman, endeavored to dissuade them from their purpose, but in vain. From Couch's Fort they marched to General Neville's house. Major James McFarland, who had been an officer in the Revolution, of good standing and character, was appointed to command the attack.

On the other hand, Major Abraham Kirkpatrick, with a detachment of eleven men, from the garrison at Pittsburgh, had arrived that morning to assist General Neville. The latter, when informed of the force coming against him, had prudently withdrawn to a place of concealment, leaving his house in charge of his kinsman, Kirkpatrick. The females were permitted to retire before the attack was made. A deputation was sent from the insurgents to demand the commission of the inspector, they supposing that without the commission he would be compelled to cease from his official duties. The commission was refused. The attack commenced and continued but fifteen minutes, when it was thought a flag had been exhibited from the house, on which Mr. McFarland stepped out from behind a tree, with a white handkerchief on the end of a stick. He was mortally wounded by a shot from the house. The attack was renewed with fury, and the property burnt down and destroyed. Major Kirkpatrick was compelled by the fire to surrender, but no one was injured after the surrender. Judge Wilkeson says: "At about eight o'clock in the evening I witnessed the commencement of the fire at a distance of two miles, and saw the flames ascend from the burning houses, until the actors in the scene became visible in the increasing light. It was a painful sight, especially to those who had experienced the hospitality of the only fine mansion in the country, to see it destroyed by a lawless mob, and its inmates exposed to their fury. Even those who were opposed to the measures of the administration, and had countenanced resistance to the execution of the excise law, were overwhelmed by this appalling commencement of open insurrection."

A meeting was held in the latter part of July, by the insurgents, at the Mingo Creek meeting-house. At this meeting, Messrs. Bradford, Parkinson, Cook, Marshall and Breckenridge, whose names became so conspicuous afterwards, appeared on the scene publicly, for the first time. David Bradford was a rash and headstrong attorney, from Washington county. He openly advocated what had been done, and urged the necessity of unanimity. Breckenridge, whose object was to gain their confidence, that he might, under a disguise, eventually beguile them into moderation, seemed to countenance their conduct, but ventured to suggest that, though what they had done had been morally right, yet it was legally wrong; and suggested the propriety of consulting their fellow-citizens. A meeting of delegates from the four counties was, therefore, recommended at Parkinson's ferry (now Williamsport, or Monongahela City), on the 14th of August.

Soon after the Mingo meeting, Bradford and some of his hot-headed coadjutors caused the United States mail from Pittsburgh to be robbed near Greensburg, by a kinsman and namesake of Bradford, and a man named Mitchell, both of Washington county. They found therein letters from Gen. Gibson, Col. Presley Neville (son of the inspector), Mr. Bryson and Mr. Edward Day, which gave great offence to the insurgents. The letter-writers were, in consequence, obliged to leave Pittsburgh by some circuitous route, or conceal themselves, that it might be given out publicly that they were gone.

In the meantime Bradford and others, without semblance of authority, issued a circular, or order, to the colonels of militia in the western counties, requiring them to assemble in arms at Braddock's field, for the ostensible purpose of pulling down the inspector's office and banishing the traitors from Pittsburgh.

This order was signed I. Cannon, B. Parkinson, D. Bradford, A. Fulton, T. Spears, J. Lochry, J. Marshall. Strange to say, it was in many instances promptly obeyed: many who despised it at heart, did not dare to disobey it. Bradford afterwards denied that he gave such an order.

There were but three days between the date of the orders, and the time of the assemblage; yet a vast and excited multitude was brought together, many in companies, under arms. Some were well-disposed towards the government, but came for fear of being proscribed; others as mere spectators; others, such as Hugh H. Breckinridge, and several from Pittsburgh, to put themselves, if possible, under the mask of insurrection, at the head of the multitude, and restrain them, by organization and management, from proceeding to open outrage and rebellion. Great apprehension was entertained that the insurgents might proceed to Pittsburgh and burn the town. The obnoxious persons had been banished, as if by authority, in deference to the demands of the Tinker men; and the Pittsburgh delegation were careful to announce the fact at Braddock's field.

Probably the majority of those assembled were well disposed towards the government, but afraid to come out and avow it. Mr. Breckenridge thus describes the feeling that prevailed there, and throughout the western counties: "A breath in favor of the law was sufficient to ruin any man. It was considered as a badge of toryism. A clergyman was not thought orthodox in the pulpit unless against the law. A physician was not thought capable of administering medicine, unless his principles were right in this respect. A lawyer could have got no practice without at least concealing his sentiments, if for the law; nor could a merchant at a country store get custom. On the contrary, to talk against the law was the way to office and emolument. To go to the legislature or to congress, you must make a noise against it. It was the Shibboleth of safety, and the ladder of ambition."

It was proposed by Bradford to march and attack the garrison at Pittsburgh; but this was abandoned. Bradford now moved that the troops should go on to Pittsburgh. "Yes," said Breckenridge, "by all means; at least to give a proof that the strictest order can be observed, and no damage done. We will just march through, and, taking a turn, come out upon the plain, on the banks of the Monongahela; and after taking a little whisky with the inhabitants, the troops will embark, and cross the river." Officers having been appointed—Edward Cook and Bradford, generals, and Col. Blakenay officer of the day—the insurgents marched in a body, by the Monongahela road, to Pittsburgh. By the wily management of some of the Pittsburgh gentlemen, the greater part of the company, after being diverted by a treat, were got across the Monongahela. A few, however, remained; determined to burn Gen. Neville's house in town, and Gen. Gibson's, and others. By the influence of Col. Cook, Marshall, and others of the insurgent party, this outrage was prevented. Major Kirkpatrick's barn, across the river, was burned. If they had succeeded in burning two or three houses, the whole town must have been consumed. "The people," says Mr. Breckenridge, "were mad. It never came into my head to use force on the occasion. I thought it safest to give good words and good drink, rather than balls and powder. It cost me four barrels of old whisky that day; and I would rather spare that than a quart of blood."

The meeting at Parkinson's ferry was composed of 260 delegates from the four western counties—from Bedford, also, and from Ohio county, in Virginia. Many had been sent with a view to stem the current of disorder until it had time to cool down. This, however, was only to be accomplished, as some thought, not by open opposition, but by covert management. Col. Cook was appointed chairman and Albert Gallatin secretary. Gallatin, Breckenridge and Judge Edgar of Washington county, took a prominent part in the discussions. The intemperate resolutions and treasonable plans of Bradford and Marshall were gradually softened down or explained away. The organic force of the insurrection was condensed into a committee of sixty, one from each township; and this committee was again represented by a standing executive committee of twelve. The committee of sixty was to meet at Redstone Old Fort, on the 2d of September; and the standing committee were in the mean time to confer with the United States commissioners, whose arrival had been announced at Pittsburgh. To gain time and restore quietness was the great object with Mr. Gallatin and his friends. "Mr. Gallatin," says Judge Wilkeson, "although a foreigner, who could with difficulty make himself understood in English, yet presented with great force the folly of past resistance, and the ruinous consequences to the country of the continuance of the insurrection. He urged that the government was bound to vindicate the laws, and that it would surely send an overwhelming force against them. He placed the subject in a new light, and showed the insurrection to be a much more serious affair than it had before appeared."

"Breckenridge was actuated by the same motives, but he supported the measures in a different way—often appearing to act with Bradford's party, and oppose Gallatin. Yet he always contributed to bring the proceedings to the same issue with the latter.

"The commissioners of the government proposed an amnesty, and certain favorable methods for adjusting delinquencies, on condition that the meeting at Redstone should declare their determination to comply with the laws, and cease opposition and intimidation of others.

"On the 28th August, the committee of 60 met at Redstone. While they were collecting, the affair occurred with Samuel Jackson, the Quaker, which had been described. Notwithstanding violent threats and denunciations had been circulated by Tom the Tinker against the twelve conferees, (the standing committee,) they all, except Bradford, recommended the acceptance of the propositions of the commissioners. The meeting was opened by a long, sensible, and eloquent speech by Mr. Gallatin, in favor of law and order. Mr. Breckenridge now threw off his mask, and enforced and enlarged upon the arguments already advanced by Gallatin. Bradford, in opposition, let off a most intemperate harrangue; but when he found the vote 34 to 23, was against him, he retired in disgust. Afterwards, alleging that he was not supported by his friends, he signed the terms of submission, and advised others to do it. But this did not wipe out his offences. He was excepted from the amnesty, and when the army came he fled down the Mississippi into the Spanish territory. Judge Edgar summed up the argument for submission, and, by his pious and respectable character and his venerable appearance, won many over to his side.

"Such was the fear of the popular phrensy that it was with difficulty a vote could be had at this meeting. No one would vote by standing up. None would write a yea or nay, lest his hand-writing should be recognized. At last it was determined that yea and nay should be written by the secretary on the same pieces of paper, and be distributed, leaving each member to chew up or destroy one of the words, while he put the other in the box.

"This meeting virtually closed the insurrection. Although their propositions did not exactly meet the views of the commissioners, yet the existence of a decided majority on the side of law and order was here fully exposed.

"The commissioners—of whom Hon. James Ross, of Pittsburgh, was one—now put forth a test of submission, to be subscribed individually by the citizens throughout the country. Only six days remained for signing this promise over a country containing 70,000 people and nearly as large as the State of Connecticut. Many came forward readily and signed, encouraged others, and associated for their defence. Tom the Tinker, with his men, refused outright, and threatened the signers with death, by which many were intimidated. Some came forward after the time was expired, soliciting, with tears, the privilege of signing. Many refused to sign, conscious of having done no wrong. The people of Fayette were of this class—though, at a meeting of citizens collectively, they passed resolutions tantamount to the test.

"On the whole, however, there were enough malcontents left to render it necessary, in the opinion of the President, to send forward the army which had been collected at the east. This army consisted of 15,000 men, and was composed of troops and volunteers from Maryland, Virginia, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Gov. Lee, of Virginia, had the chief command of the army. The other generals were Gov. Mifflin, of Pennsylvania, Gov. Howell of New Jersey, Gen. Daniel Morgan, and Adj. Gen. Hand. Gen. Knox, Secretary of War, and Gen. Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, and Judge Peters, of the U. S. Court, also went out to Pittsburgh. The army arrived in November, but met with no opposition and shed no blood. At Pittsburgh, a kind of inquisitorial court was held at the quarters of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which testimony was taken against citizens denounced for treasonable acts or expressions. "Many of the informers, influenced by prejudice, implicated those who had been guilty of no offence against the government. After a few days spent in these "Star Chamber" proceedings, the dragoons were put in requisition, and officers sent with guides to arrest the offenders. Such of the proscribed as apprehended no danger were soon taken, and, without any intimation of the offence with which they stood charged, were carried to Pittsburgh. Here many found acquaintances or influential friends, who interposed in their behalf and obtained their release. Others less fortunate were sent to Philadelphia for trial, where they were imprisoned for ten or twelve months without even an indictment being found against them." Only two or three were tried and convicted, and these were afterwards pardoned.

"The peculiar course which Mr. Breckenridge had taken placed him, for a time, in a very akward predicament, as well as in personal danger. He was denounced to the government as having been one of the leaders of the insurrection. He had certainly taken an active part in the public meetings, and apparently acted with the insurgents. The turning point in his case was the quo animo, the motive for his peculiar conduct. Fortunately, his motives had been fully known, throughout his whole course, to Hon. James Ross, who explained his conduct to the Secretary of the Treasury. At the close of the examination, the Secretary, Gen. Hamilton, said to him, "In the course of yesterday I had uneasy feelings. I was concerned for you as for a man of talents. My impressions were unfavorable. You may have observed it. I now think it my duty to inform you that not a single one remains. Had we listened to some people, I do not know what might have been done. There is another side to your account. Your conduct has been horribly misrepresented, owing to misconception. I will announce you in this point to Gen. Lee, who represents the Executive. You are in no personal danger. You will not be troubled even by a simple inquisition by the judge. What may be due to yourself with the public, is another question."

"The army returned to their homes. Gen. Morgan was left with a few battalions to preserve quiet during the winter. In the spring the military was withdrawn, order had been fully restored, the law was acquiesced in, and business resumed its wonted course."

CHAPTER XL.

THE MASSACRE OF CAPTAIN SHARP, AS RELATED BY HIS DAUGHTER, MRS. HANNAH LEASON, TO HER GRAND-NEPHEW, WILLIAM MOORHEAD.—AN INCIDENT OF 1794.

SCRUBGRASS, PA., August 10, 1775.

ALL is well. With your request, I sit down to write some particulars about my father's death. He was a militia captain, and served under George Washington in the Revolutionary War.

My father, Andrew Sharp, was married to my mother, Ann Woods, in the year 1783, in their native place, in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, and, with a family of one child, moved to Crooked Creek, (what is now) Indiana county, Pennsylvania, this being a new county. There was no chance for schooling his children. My father, after settling there ten years, was determined on having them schooled. He swapt his place for one in Kentucky, where my mother's friends lived.

We moved to Blacklick river, and got into our boat. We started in the evening. The water was too low. We had to land over a day and night. We started the next day. We got two miles below the falls in the Kiskaminitis river. We landed. Father had a canoe tied to the side of the boat. It got loose going over the falls. Father went back for it. When he was away, there was a man came and told us the Indians were coming. Again that time father got back. All the women and children were in the boat.

The men went out to tie up the horses. The sun was an hour and a half high in the evening. They thought it best to go up to Mr. Hall's and stay to morning. When they went out to tie up the horses, seven Indians fired on them. They were hid behind a large tree that had fallen down, about fifteen steps off.

The first fire they shot off father's eye-brow. When he was cutting one end of the boat loose, he got a wound in the left side. When he was cutting the other end loose, they shot him in the other side.

Father got the boat away before they could get in. He saw an Indian among the trees. He called for his gun. Mother gave it to him. He shot him dead.

The boat got into a whirlpool and went round and round for awhile. When the open side went toward land, the Indians fired in at us. They followed us twevle miles down the river. They called for us to go out to them, or they would fire again.

Mrs. Conner and her son wanted to go out to them. They said the men were all killed and wounded. Father told him to desist or he would shoot him. The Indians shot him dead that minute. He fell across my mother's feet. There were two dead men and two wounded. One of them died the next morning. There was no woman or child hurt. There were twenty in all.

They took my father's horses. The others got their's. My mother worked the boat the whole night. We got within nine miles of Pittsburgh again daylight. There was a man came in a canoe to the boat to help us along. One man went on before us and had the doctors ready. When we got to Pittsburgh there were a great many kind neighbors came to us when we landed.

We lived awhile in the boat. We moved up to the city before his death. He lived forty days after he was wounded. He was willing to die. He said if it had been the will of Providence for him to live to see his children raised, he would have been satisfied. He left them to the care of Providence.

Many a time I went and covered myself up and wept, when I heard him moaning, when the doctor was dressing his wounds. He got better, and could sit upon the bed, and talked to people when they came to see him.

They shot the cannons the Fourth of July. The wound that was in his back began to run and mortify. There were three in him, one in both sides and one in his back.

He died the eighth day of July, in the forty-second year of his age, in the year one thousand, seven hundred and ninety-four. He is buried in Pittsburgh.

There were no friends to follow his remains to the grave, but a younger sister and myself. My mother was unable to go. The youngest child was only eleven days old. There were plenty of neighbors to go. It was a wet day. He was buried with the honors of war.

After mother got well I went with her to the grave yard and showed her where father was buried.

He went over the mountains to see his father and mother before we went away. He bought school books and bibles for all that were able to go to school. He did not live to see his children sent to school. He had a brother come to see him when he was lying on his death-bed. He went home after some time.

My father sold the boat himself. He knew he would not go down the river any farther. His brother came back again. He was dead before he got back.

My uncle stayed with us till there were wagons sent for us. We went over the mountains to Cumberland county, to where our friends lived, and stayed there three years. When we got there father had another brother come to see us.

The clothes that were on father when he was wounded, mother showed to him. He looked at every bullet hole that was in them. He wept like a child.

We lived in Cumberland county three years, and went to school. We were all good common scholars, but oh! it was at the expense of my father's life.

We got our old place back. We moved home, and we all lived together. We did not hire abroad. We got along very well. Providence was very kind to us. Oh! how thankful we ought to be God for preserving us through such danger.

It was a party of twelve that went to Pittsburgh to trade. The people would not trade with them. They got angry, and killed all they could that day.

There were three men went down the river in a canoe before us, one of whom was shot dead. The other two were wounded. One of them died. The other got well. He lay in a room next to father's room. He could come to see father. It was the last war that was in that part of the country. It was in the year 1794, when all these things happened.

I never had a spite at the Indians. They were very badly treated.

There were seven children living at the time of my father's death. They are all dead but myself. My mother lived fifteen years after father's death.

I was born in the year 1784, February 14th. I was married to my husband, Robert Leason, 1802. He departed this life Feb. 12th, 1863, aged eighty-seven.

Hannah Leason.*

[From Presbyterian Banner.]

*Mrs. Hannah Leason was born in Cumberland county on the 14th of Feb., 1784. Her father, Captain Andrew Sharp, served under General Washington until the close of the Revolutionary War. Her mother's name before marriage was Ann Woods. These parents were both of Scotch Irish Presbyterian families.

Hannah was married in 1803 to Robert Leason, and with her husband soon afterward connected herself with the church at Scrubgrass. Her marriage relation with Mr Leason existed for sixty years. His death occurred Feb. 12, 1863. It is not often that husband and wife share each others joys and sorrows so long.

Her husband was for many years an elder in the Scrubgrass Presbyterian Church, and also her son, Samuel. The only other surviving son, Rev. Thomas Sharp Leason, is a member of the Presbytery of Clarion.

At the age of eight she met with great loss in being deprived entirely of her hearing. Seventy-eight years is a long time to spend in this world without being able to hear. She never heard the voice of one of her sixteen children. Sight, however, supplied the place of hearing with her, in a great measure. She conversed with her family and neighbors quite readily by a close observance of the motions made by their organs of speech. It was truly wonderful with what exactness she could carry on a conversation in this way.

She retained the power of speech to the last, and was in the habit of making free use of the pen in correspondence with absent friends. She died in 1869, in the eighty-sixth year of her age.

An incident of 1794.

"In 1794 the Indians renewed their depredations upon some of the border settlements.* A report having reached Andrew Allison, one evening, that enemies were in the vicinity, he took his family, consisting of his wife and one child, and fled to his nearest neighbor, Gawin Adams, who had come from Ireland, and located where John McHenry now lives (1859.)

Mrs. Adams was sick and confined to her bed. During the night the Indians kept them in constant terror,—one whistling on his rifle charger on one side of the cabin, and another answering in like manner on the other side. The inmates were on their feet all the night, the men having their rifles in their hands, ready to repel an attack, and the others being engaged in stopping up the cracks between the logs, so as to prevent the assailants from taking aim at any one inside.

Dreading a warm reception, the Indians kept at a respectful distance, and finally withdrew. In the morning, Adams and Allison yoked the oxen and placed Mrs. Adams, with her infant daughter (now, 1859, Mrs. George McCartney, of White township), on a sled, and then proceeded with their families to Moorhead's Fort.

After remaining there several days, they returned to their farms, and Allison found his cabin and all the contents destroyed, the Indians having fired it the night he was at Adams'."

CHAPTER XLI.

PIONEER HISTORY.

INTRODUCTION—THE LOG CABIN—ITS CONSTRUCTION AND INTERNAL ARRANGEMENTS—HOW IT WAS LIGHTED—LIMITED ACCOMMODATIONS—CLEARING LAND—AXES—UNDERBRUSHING AND LOGGING—WILD ANIMALS—A WOLF HUNT—A BEAR HUNT—A BEAR STORY—A BEAR ENCOUNTER—HUNTING GAME—EARLY FARMING—HARVESTING—SLED CARS—FIRST WAGON—FIRST HARNESS—EARLY COOKING—KITCHEN FURNITURE—FOOD—HOUSEHOLD MANUFACTURES—DRESS—HOUSE WARMING—MANNERS AND CUSTOMS—STORES AND TRADE—REFLECTIONS ON PIONEER LIFE—LETTER FROM THE PEN OF A PIONEER MOTHER.

INTRODUCTION.

IT is profitable to reflect on the marvelous changes that are now taking place; to recall the past, and compare it with the present; but let us beware, lest we glorify ourselves and our achievements too much, at the risk of unjustly detracting from the merits of those who came before us.

"Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,"
"If mem'ry o'er their graves, no trophies raise," for in the active labors of the present, the past has almost been lost in clouds of forgetfulness.

The poverty, the labors and the sufferings of our forefathers form a striking contrast with the easy comforts and luxuries now enjoyed by their children, and to which they have become so thoroughly accustomed, that it seems almost impossible that they should exist without them.†

The settlement of a new country in the immediate neighborhood of an old one, is not attended with much difficulty, because supplies can be readily obtained from the latter; but the settlement of a country very remote from any cultivated region, is a very different thing, because at the outset, food, raiment, and the implements of husbandry are obtained only in small supplies and with great difficulty. The task of making new establishments in a remote wilderness, in a time of profound peace is sufficiently difficult; but when in addition to all the unavoidable hardships attendant on this business, those resulting from an extensive and furious warfare with savages are superadded, toil, privations and sufferings are then carried to the full extent of the capacity of men to endure them.*

*Jonathan Row in Indiana Register. †Rev. Dr. Joseph Doddridge.

Such was the wretched condition of our forefathers in making their settlements here. To all their difficulties and privations the Indian was a weighty addition. This destructive warfare they were compelled to sustain almost single-handed, because of the lack of easy communication between the West and East.† No aid was sent for lack of knowledge of the state of affairs.‡

The following history of the poverty, labors, suffering, manners and customs of our forefathers will appear like a collection of 'tales of olden times,' without any garnish of language to spoil the original portraits by giving them shade of coloring which they did not possess.

We shall speak of things as they were during the period of time subsequent to the Revolution,§ beginning with those rude accommodations with which our first adventurers into this country furnished themselves at the commencement of their establishments. It will be a homely narrative, yet valuable on the ground of its being real history:‖

THE LOG CABIN.

"Trees of uniform size, as nearly as may be, are selected, cut into pieces of the desired length, and carried or hauled to the site of the proposed building. There is, at each corner, an expert hand with an axe to saddle and notch the log. The saddling is done by so hewing the end of the log as to give the upper half the shape of the roof of a building. A notch is then cut into the next log to fit the saddle, and of such depth as to bring the logs together. The usual height was one story. The gable was laid up with logs gradually shortened up to the top or peak, giving the shape or pitch of the roof. On the logs which formed these gables were laid stout poles, reaching from one gable to the other, at suitable distances to hold the covering, which consisted of bark peeled from elm or basswood trees. The strips of bark were about four feet long, and about two or three feet wide, and laid in tiers, each lapping on the preceding one, after the manner of shingling. The bark was kept down by a heavy pole laid across each tier, and fastened at the ends. Sometimes, instead of bark, a kind of shingle was used, split from straight-rifted trees, and resembling undressed staves of flour or liquor barrels. These were by some called shakes. These were laid about two feet to the weather. They were then fastened down by heavy poles called weight-poles, as in the case of bark roofs.

"At one end of the building, a space about eight feet in length and five or six feet in height is cut out, and the space filled by a stone wall, laid in clay or mortar, for a fire-place. The chimney, resting on props made in various ways, was commenced at a proper height above the hearth, very wide, to correspond with the broad fire-place beneath it. It was built with split sticks of timber, resembling a common strip-lath, but being much larger. They were laid up in the manner of a cob-house, the chimney being gradually narrowed upward to the top, where its size was about the same as was that of any ordinary brick chimney of a frame house fifty years ago. The inside was plastered with clay, or mud and chopped straw, the latter answering the same purpose as hair used in the mortar in plastering the inside walls of the house. This "stick chimney," or "stick and clay chimney," was far from being fire-proof. Fire would sometimes be communicated to the sticks from soot, and alarm the family. A speedy application of water thrown up plentifully inside soon allayed all fear.

A doorway was cut through one side of the house, and split pieces for door posts, sometimes called "door cheeks," were pinned to the ends of the logs with wooden pins. For the want of boards to make doors, a blanket was used to close the door entrance until boards could be obtained. The hinges and the latch were both made of wood. The latch was raised from the outside by a string passing through the door and fastened to the latch inside. The safety of the family during the night was effected by drawing in the latch string. Floors were made of split slabs, hewed on one side, and were sometimes called puncheons. For a window, a hole was cut in the wall large enough to admit a sash of four or six panes of seven by nine glass.—When glass could not be had, the hole was sometimes closed with greased paper pasted over it. The interstices or cracks between the logs were filled with mud or clay. The larger cracks or chinks were partly closed with split pieces of wood before the mortar was applied.

Immigrants, as a rule, brought no bedsteads. A substitute was made by boring holes in the walls, in the corner of the house, into which the ends of poles were fitted. Three corners of the bedstead being thus fastened to the walls, it required but a single post. It now wanted only a cord, which was sometimes made of elm or basswood bark.

A view of the internal arrangements of one of these primitive dwellings would be interesting to those who are acquainted with pioneer life. On entering, (supposing it to be meal time,) the smaller children are seen standing or sitting around a large chest in which some of the more valuable articles had been brought, and which now serves as a table; the parents and older children sitting at a table made, perhaps of a wide puncheon plank, partaking of their plain meal, cooked by a log-heap fire. In one corner of the room are one or two small shelves on wooden pins, displaying the table ware, (when not in use,) consisting of a few tea-cups and saucers, a few blue-edged plates, with a goodly number of pewter plates, perhaps standing single, on their edges, leaning against the wall to render the display of table furniture more conspicuous. Underneath the cupboard are seen a few pots, a spider, and perhaps a bake-kettle. Not a sufficient number of chairs—perhaps none—having been brought, the deficiency has been supplied with three-legged stools made of puncheon boards. Over the doorway lies the indispensable rifle on two wooden hooks nailed to a log of the cabin. On the walls hang divers garments of female attire made of cotton and woolen fabric, some of which had done long service before their removal hither.

Log cabins were lighted in the night time in different ways. In the absence of candles and lamps light was, through the winter season, emitted from the fire-place, where huge logs were kept burning. A kind of substitute for candles was sometimes prepared by taking a wooden rod ten or twelve inches in length, wrapping around it a strip of cotton or linen cloth, and covering it with tallow pressed on with the hand. These "sluts," as they were sometimes called, afforded light for several nights. Lamps were prepared by dividing a large turnip in the middle, scraping out the inside quite down to the rind, and then inserting a stick about three inches in length in the centre so as to stand upright. A strip of linen or cotton cloth was then wrapped around it, and melted lard, or deer's tallow, was poured in till the turnip rind was full, when the lamp was full (lamps of this kind were only occasionally used); more often a dish of refuse grease was used, a rag being inserted and the latter being set on fire, and fed with the melted fat, would afford a sort of dismal light, and yet more disagreeable odor. By the light of these, and other rudely-constructed lamps, the women spun and sewed, and men read when books could be obtained, or worked at some implement of household or field use. When neither lard nor tallow was on hand the large, blazing fire supplied the needed light. By these great fire-places many skeins of thread have been spun, many a yard of linen woven and many a frock and pantaloons made.

*Dr. Doddridge. †Wilson. ‡Olden time. §Gordon. ‖Doddridge.

Living in houses like those described was attended with serious discomforts. A single room served the purposes of kitchen, dining-room, sitting-room, bed-room and parlor. In many families were six, eight or ten children, who were, with their parents, crowded into one room. In one corner was the father and mother's bed, and under it the trundle-bed for the smaller children. The larger ones lodged in the chamber which they entered by a ladder in another corner, and sometimes made tracks to and from their beds in the snow driven through the crevices by the wind. Nor did the roofs, made of bark or "shakes," protect them from rain in the summer. How visitors, who came to spend the night, were disposed of, the reader may not easily conceive. Some, as their families increased, added to their houses an additional room of the same size and manner of construction as the former. Such were some of the dwellings and conditions of many of the pioneers of this portion of the state. Many were in a condition which, for comfort and appearance, were far beneath that described in the foregoing. Imagine the state of those who, on foot and with packs on their backs, forced their way through the wilderness and tried to improve a piece of land.

CLEARING LAND.

The lands in this section were covered with a dense and heavy forest. To clear the soil of this timber, required an amount of hard labor of which many of its present occupants have no adequate conception. Many now living on the hard-earned fortunes of their pioneer fathers and grandfathers could not be induced to enter upon a similar course of labor.

AXES.

The early axes were rude and clumsy affairs, of twice and thrice the size, and double to quadruple the weight, of those in use now. The first improved were called Yankee axes by the early woodsmen, and were introduced into this country in 1815. Arnold Seale informed the writer that he "took a Yankee axe, in 1820 for a debt of six dollars, interest for six years and justice's costs, and was glad to secure it at that price. In about ten years after the introduction of the improved axes, the double bitted, came into use and are now the favorite weapon of the woodsman.

UNDERBRUSHING AND LOGGING.

The first part of the clearing process was "underbrushing." The bushes and smallest sapplings were cut down near the ground and piled in heaps. The trees were then felled, their bodies cut into lengths of from twelve to fifteen feet, and the brush and small limbs of the trees were thrown into heaps. After the brush had become thoroughly dry they were burned. As a "good burn" was desirable, a dry time was chosen. The old leaves being dry and covering the ground, the whole field would be burned over, and an abundant crop assured. The next part of the process was "logging," or log-rolling. This required the associated labor of a number of men, who would in turn assist each other. The neighbors, on invitation, would attend with their handspikes. These were strong poles, about six feet in length, and flattened at the larger end, in order to their being more easily forced under or between the logs. Logs too heavy to be carried were drawn to a pile by a team (generally oxen), and rolled up on the pile with skids, one end lying on the ground, the other on the heap. The heaps were then burned, and the soil was ready for seed. Most of the logging was done by "bees." A number of the neighbors would come with their teams, attended by a sufficient number of extra hands, and a whole field of several acres would be logged in an afternoon. At these logging bees, as at house and barn raisings, was generally a two-gallon jug, perhaps two, filled with whiskey. Most of the men were moderate drinkers; some, however, gave indications, by their many witty sayings, that they had overstepped the bounds of moderation. But there were also, thus early, a few teetotal temperance men, whose incredulity as to the magic power of strong drink, as an assistant to manual labor, had caused them to abandon its use.

The wild animals inhabiting this section at the time of the first settlers, were the deer, bear, wolf, wildcat, panther, or painter, fox, otter, porcupine or hedge-hog, raccoon, woodchuck or ground-hog, skunk, mink, muskrat, oppossum, rabbit, weasel and squirrel. None were much feared except the bear and wolf. The former was the most dangerous, the latter most destructive to property. The bear is generally ready to attack a person; the wolf seldom does so unless impelled by hunger, or in self-defense. For many years it was difficult to protect sheep from the ravages of the wolves. They had to be penned every night. Many were destroyed in the day time, near the house. It is the nature of the wolf to seize a sheep by the throat and suck its blood, and leave the carcass as food for other carniverous animals; provided the number of sheep is sufficient thus to satisfy the hunger of their destroyers. Pigs and calves also were sometimes victims to these pests of the early settlers. Persons were followed by them to the very doors of their dwellings, and the sleep of families was often disturbed during a great portion of the night by their howlings. "The noise made by these animals," as described by some of the old settlers, "was not, as some imagine, a coarse bass growl, but a strong crakely tenor. Seemingly a leader began the concert by a solo of a firm, prolonged sound, when the rest would pitch in with a grand chorus of the most terrible jargon of sounds, dying away at the place of beginning, as the reverberation sounded over the far off hills."

To effect the destruction of these animals, bounties for their scalps were offered by the public authorities, and these induced hunters and trappers to devote much time to the destruction of wolves.

As wolves hunt in the night, when they cannot be shot, most of them were probably caught in traps, of which there were several kinds. One was a pen built of small logs or heavy poles, six or seven feet high and narrowed upward. Into this pen a bait was thrown. A wolf could easily enter it at the top, but was unable to get out. Another was the steel trap, with jaws a foot or more in length. The clamps were notched like a cross-cut saw. It resembled in form, a common spring rat trap. Attached to it was a chain with hooks not to fasten it, but to make it difficult for the wolf to drag it. Caught, as he probably would be by the fore leg while trying to paw out the bait, if the trap were made fast, he would gnaw off his leg and be gone. There were other traps, but descriptions of these will not be attempted.

WOLF HUNT.

All the settled portion of this section of the state suffered severely from the depredations of wolves. The deep recesses of the ravines formed for them secure retreats, where, during the day time, they could quietly digest the mutton of the night before. Sixty and seventy years ago wolf hunts were common. The people became exasperated at the loss of their stock, and formed parties to exterminate the animals. Meetings were held at various points, and plans devised. A certain section of country, containing ravines, was determined upon, and a simultaneous attack was made upon all sides. The men, early in the forenoon, formed a continuous line and entirely encircled the section. The number of men on the lines were sufficient to be within easy speaking distance from each other. The signal for advance would be given by the leader, and as it was returned from man to man, the lines moved forward in splendid order, growing more compact as they advanced toward the ravine and descended its side. No man was to fire his gun until he received the command, and it was known that the lines were closed up. Finally the order to fire was given and the signal-gun was discharged. Instantly the firing became general. After the first discharge of fire-arms the deer and rabbits within the lines became frantic with fright, making the rounds and seeking an opening through which to escape. After all the game that could be seen had been dispatched, a committee was sent within the inclosure to search under old logs and fallen trees to ascertain if any game had fled to any of these places for safety. After the return of the committee, the men, by orders, moved towards the centre of the inclosure, bringing in the game, consisting, sometimes, of two to a dozen wolves, one or more bears, several deer, &c. If a ravine was too large it was sub-divided, and one division after another was "cleaned out." After a few years, it was only occasionally that wolves were troublesome, as they generally left for more secure quarters.

A BEAR STORY.

In 1805, three neighbors, residing on Two Lick, not far from the "Manor tract," started on a deer hunt, and one of the dogs discovered and attacked a bear. The outcry of the dog brought the hunters to the rescue. One of them advanced and made a pass at the bear with his axe, when bruin, with a dexterous movement with his paw, knocked the axe from his hands, dropped the dog, and with his strong jaws laid hold of the hunter's leg just above the ankle. Then came the "tug of war;" and the result was, for some time, doubtful. His comrades durst not shoot, as the position of the contestants was constantly changing; the bear still holding on to the leg with a grip of iron, and his friends undecided what to do. Evidently, they did not wish to hazard too much in the probability of becoming the chief party in the struggle for life with this shaggy and fearful monster. The dogs barked but durst not attack the bear. However, the hunters did what they could, looking well to every dangerous position. The brave man, notwithstanding his ankle was in a vice, soon gained the battle, by the aid of his jack-knife, cutting the bear's throat; but it was months before he was able to leave his house.

Among the materials of our early history is the following account of a bear encounter:

"In 1822 a hunter, returning through the woods to Indiana, treed a bear with three cubs, a few miles north of the village. He came to the place and rallied several men with guns to go and kill the bears. On arriving at the spot, two of the cubs were spied high up in a pine tree; and one of the hunters, a good marksman with a rifle, soon shot them both. The other cub and the old bear not being discovered, most of the party started for the village. A few remained to watch for the missing bears. They soon heard the cub in the top of a small hemlock, the limbs of which were so dense as to conceal the animal. Determined to capture it, one of them climbed the tree and shook the cub from one of the highest limbs, but in its fall it caught another limb. From this, too, it was shaken, and again caught a limb lower down. This being too stiff to admit of the cub's being shaken off, he cut the limb partly off with his jack knife, when it lopped down and the bear fell to the ground, and was so stunned by the fall that one of the parties caught it and tied its feet. When the cub made a noise the old bear was heard near by in the bushes. The man who held the cub found by biting its ear he could make it squeal. This brought the old bear near by, but not fully in sight. The marksman who killed the other cubs, stepped off a few rods into the woods, and, while watching the bear, Bruin again was rallied by the biting of the cub's ear, and was brought in sight of the hunter who sent a rifle ball into her head and neck. After taking out the entrails, she was brought into the village, while one of the party carried the cub to his home and subsequently tamed it.

Of the numerous instances of men's coming in contact with bears, wolves, and other ravenous beasts, it is believed there is not one in which a man was killed. Nearly all of the native animals of the forest have disappeared, and the wild and venturesome sports of the past seem like a dream to the present generation.

While the forest was infested with noxious animals, it was of no small value as a hunting ground. Deer hunting in the winter was a common business. Much of the meat was sometimes lost. The hunter, if alone and far from home, would shoulder the more valuable part—hams and skin—and leave the rest for the wolves; or he would hang it to a sapling or a large limb of a tree, which had been bent down for the purpose, and which, springing back, would raise the meat beyond the reach of the wolves. Having delivered his first load at the cabin, he would return, conducted by his tracks in the snow, and bring home the remainder. The opossum, raccoon, the rabbit and the squirrel were also a part of the pioneer's fare. To the variety of meats enumerated, may be added several of the feathered tribes, as pigeon, ducks, wild turkeys, partridges and several others. The forks of the Mahoning was in early days, the favorite roosting place of thousands of wild turkeys, and other birds. As such it was well known to the Senecas.

In a brief period game as a steady diet made way for pork and poultry. Beef was only occasionally used, cattle were too valuable to use for food. The common fowl furnished meat and eggs, geese were chiefly raised for the feathers, with which old beds were replenished, and new ones filled. Many still repose on beds made by their mothers or grandmothers half a century ago.

EARLY FARMING.

Agriculture is a term hardly applicable to pioneer farming. The implements used would, in this age of improvement, attract attention as great curiosities. The "virgin" soil, as has been observed, was ready for the seed when cleared of its timber. The principal instrument of tillage for several years, was the triangular harrow, usually called drag. This consisted of pieces of timber, (hewed before there were mills for sawing), about five inches square and six feet long, put together in the form of the letter A. The drag was sometimes made of a crotched tree, and needed no framing. The teeth made of wood were double and even treble the size of those now used, in order to stand the severe trial they were to undergo. The drag bounded along over stubs and roots and stones, up and down the hillsides, drawn generally by oxen often driven by boys.

When the roots had become sufficiently brittle to admit of the use of the plow, an instrument was used. When the first "Yankee improved plow" was brought into the country, one man said: "the critter is too darned small. It'll go to pieces sure." Another said: "Give me a plow with a twelve foot beam and a seven foot handle and I can handle it. The old plough was something resembling the present plow inasmuch as it was used for the same purpose. At first it was made entirely of wood; then an iron point was added; then an iron shoe, coulter, &c., and gradually, it was improved, till the advent of the Yankee cast iron plow superceded it. Late improvements in the plow and the harrow, and the invention of cultivators, cornplanters, drills, and other labor-saving implements, have wonderfully changed the aspect of farming, and increased the power of production.

In harvesting, the change is not less striking. Before the decay and removal of stumps permitted the use of the grain cradle, wheat was cut with the sickle, now a rare instrument. It was then a staple article of merchandise. In the old day-books and journals of the early merchants, could be found, under the names of scores of customers the charge, "To 1 Sickle," followed, in many cases by that other charge, "To 1 gallon Whisky," an article deemed by some, as necessary in the harvesting operation as the instrument itself. The cradle which superseded the sickle is now fast giving way—in many parts of the county has already entirely given place—to the reaper, an instrument then no more likely to be invented than the photographic art, or the means of hourly intercourse with the inhabitants of the opposite side of the globe. Imagine an Indiana farmer to-day, attempting to reap a wheat field of forty acres with a sickle! Then think of those western fields of one hundred to five hundred acres in extent! In this connection, we will speak of wagons. For several years there were extremely few wagons and roads on which to use them. A more simple vehicle was used. From a small tree, was taken a piece having at one end two prongs, the single end was put into the ring of the ox-yoke, the other resting on the ground. Across the prongs puncheon boards were laid and kept from sliding backwards by long wooden pins set perpendicularly in each prong. Sometimes the oxen or horses were attached to the fore end of a log trough, the bottom of which had been flattened, and the end hewed away from the under side to fit it, like a sled runner, for sliding over the rough ground. Some of the early settlers came into the country on "sled-cars," and used them for transportation purposes for several years. A sled car consisted of two poles, one on either side of the horse, one end of each being fastened to the hames and the other resting on the ground. On the parts resting on the ground, puncheon boards were laid, and were prevented from sliding backwards by long wooden pins fixed perpendicularly in each pole.

The pioneer's first harness was made of withes with crooked roots or pieces of limbs or trees for hames. It was not long before the tanning of hides was commenced, and then good, substantial home-made leather harness was used.

Grain was generally threshed with a flail, a day's work amounting to ten to twenty bushels a day. There were no fanning mills in the early times. (Ninian Irwin and a neighbor built the first fanning mill in 1824). Sometimes the grain was spread in shallow depths on the floor where it was threshed, or placed in a box perforated with holes, or in a riddle (a very coarse sieve), about thirty inches in diameter and five or six inches deep. To "raise the wind" a linen sheet, possibly taken from the bed, was held at the corners by two men, who gave it a semi-rotary motion or sudden swing. A man would shovel or stir up the wheat on the floor, or hold up and shake the box or riddle with its contents, and the wind caused by the motion of the sheet would blow away the chaff. In this way about ten bushels could be cleaned in half a day. The introduction of fanning mills was of great service, and soon came in general use.

The grass was first cut with sickle, but only for a brief period, as scythes were soon brought in by the imigrants, and the hay harvest became a matter of considerable importance. A lad of sufficient age to drive a team can now cut with a mower from fifty to one hundred acres in an ordinary haying season, and the hay may all be made during the same time by one person.

The husking of corn was generally done in the field, as at present. In some parts of the country the ears, when fully ripe, were broken from the stalk, thrown into heaps, and then hauled into the barn, and thrown into a long heap across the barn floor, ready for a corn-husking, in which the neighbors, old and young, were invited to participate on some evening. The anticipation of a "good time" secured a general attendance. A good supper, which several of the neighboring women had assisted in preparing, was served at eight or nine o'clock. The "old folks" would then leave, and in due time the boys would gallant the girls to their homes. The recreation afforded to the young people on the yearly recurrence of these festive occasions was as highly enjoyed, and quite as innocent as most of the amusements of the present boasted age of refinement.

EARLY COOKING.

To witness the several processes of cooking in pioneer times, would alike surprise and amuse those who have grown up since cook stoves came into use. The first thing likely to attract notice would be the wide fire-place, already described. Kettles were hung over the fire to a stout pole, sometimes called lug-pole, the ends of which were fastened into the sides of the chimney at such height as not to be likely to ignite from the heat or sparks. The kettles were suspended on trammels, which were pieces of iron rods with a hook on each end. The uppermost one reached nearly down to the fire, and with one or more shorter ones, the kettle was brought to the proper height above the fire. For the want of iron, wooden hooks were sometimes used for trammels. Being directly above the kettles, they were safe from fire.

The long handled frying pan became a common cooking utensil. It was held over the fire by hand; or, to save time, the handle was laid on a box or back of a chair, the pan resting on the fire, while the cook was "setting the table." The pan was also used for baking short cakes. It was placed in a nearly perpendicular position before the fire, leaning slightly backward, with coals under or back of it to bake the under side. A more convenient article was the cast iron, three legged, short handled spider which was set over coals on the hearth, for frying meat. Its legs were of such length and so adjusted, that, when used for baking cakes or bread, being turned up towards the fire, to the proper slope, handle upwards, it would keep its position.

An early mode of baking corn bread, (cast iron ware being scarce) was to put the dough on a smooth board, about two feet long and eight inches wide, placed on the hearth in a slanting position before the fire, when the upper side was baked, the bread was turned over for baking the other side. When lard was plenty, the bread was shortened, and called johnny cake. But a better article for baking bread than either the pan or spider, was the cast iron bake-kettle, in some places called "Dutch oven," with legs and a closely fitted cover. Standing on the hearth with coals under and over it, bread and biscuit were nicely baked. Bread for large families, was, in after years, usually baked in large out-door ovens built of brick or fire-proof stone. Turkeys and spare ribs were roasted before the fire, suspended by a string, a dish or pan being placed underneath to catch the drippings. Some of the inconveniences in cooking in these open fire-places will be readily imagined. Women's hair was singed, their hands were blistered and their dresses scorched. But framed houses with jamb fire-places measurably relieved the pioneer house-wives. In one of the jambs was fixed an iron crane, which could be drawn forward when kettles were to be put on or taken off. The invention of the cooking stove commenced a new era in cookery; and none, most averse to innovation, have intimated a desire to return to the "old way," which will hereafter be known only to history.

FARE OF THE EARLY SETTLERS.

Among the many hardships of pioneer life, not the least is the difficulty in procuring bread. For at least two years the settler in the woods must obtain his family supplies chiefly from other sources than his own land. This difficulty is enhanced by the remoteness of his residence from older settlements, where his supplies are to be obtained. Hence those who settled in this section within the first few years had a severer experience than those who came after a surplus of grain was produced and mills for grinding it were erected at accessible points. Rev. Dr. Woodend, in his centennial discourse, says:

"The people who settled this country when it was a wilderness are worthy of all honor and kind remembrance. A late writer has said: "A more intelligent, virtuous and resolute class of men never settled any country than the first settlers of western Pennsylvania; and the women who shared their sacrifices were no less worthy." They came here, many of them, in poverty. They found little but hardships for very many years. They found the land covered with timber. There were for many years neither mills nor factories. With their own strong arms they must cut down the forest and fence the field and build log cabins. Some of the first settlers lived on potatoes chiefly, the first year of their coming.

Upon fish and game the prisoners relied for subsistence until they could raise vegetables and grain. Whole families for many weeks, even months, tasted not a particle of bread, subsisting upon game and other products of the forest. "Ramps" or leeks, with which the woods abounded, furnished to some extent food for man and beast. The leaves, which were in some regions, far advanced before the disappearance of the winter snows, furnished for cattle a valuable pasture ground; and the bulbs, later in the season, were, in time of scarcity, used by settlers as a substitute for common articles of food. There are still living in this county persons who had eaten many a meal consisting in great part of cooked leeks. Families too, lived for weeks on hulled wheat and on meal from corn pounded out at home. For this purpose, one end of a large block was scooped out, making a cavity holding half a bushel or less of corn. A spring pole was fixed over the rafters, or to something else of proper height. On the end of the pole a wooden pestle was suspended by a rope. It will readily be imagined that the principal use of the pole was to assist in raising the pestle; and that a small quantity of grain was pounded at a time. The pestle was not in all cases hung to a pole, but was sometimes used wholly by the hand of the operator. A corn cracker or hominy block was attached to some of the first saw mills and to these the settlers would resort for many miles, and wait sometimes, two days, in order to get a chance at the hominy mill.

HOUSEHOLD MANUFACTURES.

Nearly all the clothing of the early settlers was made from cloth of home manufacture. Long after the country had passed its pioneer state, the "women carded, spun, wove, colored and fulled the fabric, and when this was done they made the clothing, without the aid of tailors or fashion-plates." When more spinning was to be done than the wife could do in addition to her ordinary house work, or where the daughters were too young to help, spinsters were employed to come into families to spin flax in the winter season, and wool in the summer. The price usually paid these itinerant spinsters was a shilling a day, the day's working ending at early bed time. Some will be surprised when told that many of these women had money to show at the year's end. It was the custom, to some extent, to count a certain number of "runs" as a day's work. This had a tendency to accelerate the motion of the wheel and lessen the hours of labor. The spinning exercise is one which the young women of modern times have never enjoyed. The wheel used for spinning flax was called the "little wheel," to distinguish it from the "big wheel," used for spinning wool. These "stringed instruments" furnished the principal music of the family, and was operated by our mothers and grandmothers with great skill, attained without expense, and by far less practice, than is necessary for our modern dames to acquire a skillful use of their elegant and costly instruments. They were indispensible household articles, and were to be found in nearly every family. The loom was not less necessary than the wheel. There were some houses, however, in which there was none. But there were always some who, besides doing their own weaving, did some for others. Woolen cloth was made in families. There being at first no carding machines, wool was carded and made into short rolls with hand cards. These rolls were spun on the "big wheel," which is still to be seen in the houses of some of the old families, being occasionally used for spinning and twisting cotton yarn. It was turned with one hand, and with such velocity as to give it sufficient momentum to enable the nimble mother, by her backward step, to draw out and twist a thread of nearly the length of the cabin. The same loom was used for both linen and woolen. A cloth was sometimes made called linsey, or linsey-woolsey, the warp being linen and the filling woolen. In the early part of the century, Archicald Matthews, a cloth dresser by trade, came to Wheatfield township. Woolen for men's outer garments was then generally sent to him to be fulled and dressed, if the parties lived within a convenient distance. He in a short time (date unknown), built a small woolen mill and carding machine. Much dyeing was done in the family. Butternuts were used to make brown, peach leaves for yellow, and myrtle for a red shade.

Woolen flannel was also made and worn by the mothers and daughters. Flannel for women's wear, after dyestuffs were to be had, were dyed such colors as the wearer fancied. It was sometimes a plaid made of yarn of various colors, home-dyed. To improve their appearance these flannels were sent to a cloth dresser's (after such a mechanic had come into the country) for a slight dressing. Dye woods and dye stuffs formed no small part of the early merchant's stock. Barrels of chipped Nicaragua log-wood, and other woods, kegs of madder, alum, copperas, vitriol, indigo, &c. formed a large part of the teamsters' loading for the store-keeper. Many can yet remember the old dye-tub standing in the chimney corner covered with a board, and used as a seat for children when the stools or home-made chairs were wanted for visitors.

Nearly all the coats, "warmuses," pants, &c., were made of home-spun goods. When a young man appeared in a suit of "boughten cloth" he was an object of envy to his associates. For many years few, except merchants, lawyers, doctors and some village mechanics, wore cloth that had not passed through the hands of the country cloth-dresser. Hence, the early merchant kept small stocks of broadcloths.

There were also itinerant tailoresses who came into families to make up men's and boys' winter clothing. The cutting was done by the village tailor, if a village was near. "Bad fits," which were not uncommon, were generally charged to the cutter. Hence the custom of tailors, when advertising, "cutting done on short notice, and warranted to fit," to append the very prudent proviso, "if properly made up." These seamstresses charged for their work two shillings per day. This was thought, by some, a little exorbitant, as the usual price of help at housework was but six shillings a week, Sundays not excepted.

For a while the pioneers wore moccasins, and then boots and shoes were made of tanned leather. Farmers subsequently got the hides of their slaughtered cattle tanned "on shares;" or, if their share was judged sufficient to shoe a whole family, for the tanning and dressing, other means of payment were provided. Then there was in the neighborhood a circulating shoemaker, who made his yearly autumnal circuit with his "kit." The children had a happy time during his sojourn, which lasted one, two or more weeks, according to the number of feet to be shod. The boys, who had doffed their old shoes, when the winter snows had scarcely disappeared, to enjoy the luxury of going barefoot, were now no less joyful in the anticipation of new ones to protect their feet from the frosts or early snows.

Large boys and girls, when leather was scarce and dear, have been known to go barefoot the greater part of the year. It was not a rare thing to see girls as well as boys, not of the poorer families, at Sunday meetings, with feet unshod. Some made shoes for themselves and their families. Boots were little worn, even by men, except in the winter season. Men's boots and shoes were usually made of coarse leather called cowhide. Occasionally a young man attained the enviable distinction of appearing in a pair of calf-skin boots, made by a skillful workman. Boots and shoes for both feet were made on one last. In those days "rights and lefts" were unknown. In this department of dress, as in others, in respect to style and cost, the past and the present exhibit a remarkable contrast.

We can only add, a general revolution in household labor has taken place within the last fifty years. The substitution of cotton for flax, and of the various kinds of labor-saving machinery for hand-cards and spinning wheels and looms has vastly lightened the labors of women. One of the results of these improvements is the opportunity they afford for mental and intellectual culture. Can we not affirm that the mass of American women duly improve these opportunities?

A HOUSE WARMING.

"I will proceed to state the usual manner of settling a young couple in the world. A spot was selected on a piece of land of one of the parents for their habitation. A day was appointed, shortly after the marriage, for commencing the work of building their cabin. The fatigue party consisted of choppers, whose business it was to fell the trees and cut them off at proper lengths. A man with a team for hauling them to the place, and arranging them, properly assorted, at the sides and ends of the building; a carpenter, if such he might be called, whose business it was to search the woods for a proper tree for making clap-boards for the roof. The tree for this purpose must be straight-grained, and from three to four feet in diameter. The boards were split four feet long, with a large furrow, and as wide as the timber would allow. They were used without shaving. Another division were employed in getting puncheons for the floor of the cabin; this was done by splitting trees about eighteen inches in diameter, and hewing the faces of them with a broad-axe. They were half the length of the floor they were intended to make.

"The materials for the cabin were mostly prepared on the first day, and sometimes the foundation laid in the evening. The second day was allotted for the raising.

"In the morning of the next day the neighbors collected for the raising. The first thing to be done was the election of four corner men, whose business it was to notch and place the logs. The rest of the company furnished them with the timbers. In the meantime the boards and puncheons were collecting for the floor and roof, so that by the time the cabin was a few rounds high the sleepers and floor began to be laid. The door was made by sawing or cutting the logs in on one side, so as to make an opening about three feet wide. This opening was secured by upright pieces of timber, about three inches thick, through which holes were bored into the ends of the logs for the purpose of pinning them fast. A similar opening, but wider, was made at the end for the chimney. This was built of logs, and made large to admit of a back and jams of stone. At the square two end logs projected a foot or eighteen inches beyond the wall to receive the butting poles, as they were called, against which the first row of clapboards was supported. The roof was formed by making the end logs shorter, until a single log formed the comb of the roof; on these logs the clapboards were placed, the ranges of them lapping some distance over those next below them, and kept in their places by logs placed at proper distances upon them.

"The roof, and sometimes the floor, were finished on the same day of the raising. A third day was commonly spent by a few carpenters in leveling off the floor, making a clapboard door and a table. This last was made of a split slab, and supported by four round legs set in auger holes. Some three-legged stools were made in the same manner. Some pins stuck in the logs at the back of the house supported some clapboards, which served for shelves for the table furniture. A single fork, placed with its lower end in a hole in the floor, and the upper end fastened to a joist, served for a bedstead by placing a pole in the fork, with one end through a crack between the logs of the wall. This front pole was crossed by a shorter one within the fork, with its outer end through another crack. From the front pole, through a crack between the logs of the end of the house, the boards were put on which formed the bottom of the bed. Sometimes other poles were pinned to the fork, a little distance above these, for the purpose of supporting the front and foot of the bed, while the walls were the supports of its back and its head. A few pegs around the walls, for a display of the coats of the women and hunting shirts of the men, and two small forks or buck-horns to a joist for the rifle and shot-pouch completed the carpenter's work.

"In the meantime the masons were at work. With the heart pieces of timber of which the clapboards were made they made billets for chunking up the cracks between the logs of the cabin and chimney; a large bed of mortar was made for daubing up those cracks; a few stones formed the back and jam of the chimney.

"The cabin being furnished, the ceremony of the house-warming took place before the young couple were permitted to move into it.

"The house-warming was a dance of a whole night's continuance, made up of the relations of the bride and groom, and their neighbors. On the day following the young couple took possession of their new mansion."

STORES AND TRADE.

A great inconvenience incident to pioneer life, is the want of the many articles essential to the comfort of a family, which the farm cannot supply. Therefore no immigrant is more welcome in a new settlement than the first merchant. Fortunately, there are seldom wanting those who are ready to establish a store when and where there is a population sufficient to sustain one. All of the early stores were kept in log buildings. The first stocks of goods were small, yet they comprised most of those articles which were needed by the settlers.

But the gratification of some at the advent of the early merchant, was greatly moderated by their inability to purchase his wares. The inhabitants generally were poor. They had expended nearly all their money in their removal; and the little they had left was wanted to buy absolute necessaries. Farmers who had been here long enough to raise a small surplus, obtained some money from new comers. But the majority were not so fortunate.

Goods were dear, having been transported, at great cost. They were first brought from Carlisle and Chambersburg, and sometimes four weeks were occupied in the round trip. After wagons were introduced, the round trip was usually made in about ten days, though on many occasions, double that time was used. But the high price of the merchant's goods was but half of the farmer's misfortune. While he had to pay a double price for nearly every article of store goods, he, much of the time, was obliged to sell the products of his farm at about half the cost in labor. Wheat sometimes sold as low as a shilling per bushel; corn, 6d per bushel; rye, 1s; buckwheat, 1s; oats, 6d per bushel; tallow, 2 cts. per pound; lard, 2 cts. per pound; pork, 4s per cwt.; beef, 1 to 2d per pound, and other products in proportion. Oft times the prices were double and even five times the foregoing, but the market as a rule was "weak and no buyers."

The earliest account book which we have been enabled to see, bears the date of 1794,* but as this only gives the aggregate amounts, the retail price cannot be gleaned. The old mode of reckoning was by pounds, shillings and pence, and until a comparatively late period, the prices of goods per yard or pound, both in buying and selling, at wholesale and retail, were given in shillings and pence. Between 1794 and 1800 some of the prices are: "Wool hat, 11s 3d; (1794) bandana handkf. 11s 3d; half a pound cut and dry tobacco, 1s 6d; (1795) 1 skillet, 12s; half a pound of lead, 11¼d; one-fourth bushel of salt, 6s 6½d; 8½ pounds of bacon, 8s 6d; pound of coffee, 3s 9d; 1 pair mockisins, 3s 9d; half a quire of paper, 1s 6d; two pipes, 11d; one-fourth pound of tobacco, 9d; half a bushel of potatoes, 3s 9d; half pound gun powder, 5s 7½d; two yards calico, 7s; one pound lead, 1s 10½d; one pair boots, 2£ 16s 3d; one-fourth yd. Corderoy, 4s 9½d; one-half a dozen knives and forks (1798), 12s 6d; two pounds soap, 2s 10½d; five tin cups, 4s 8d; five yards Durant (?), 1£ 2s 6d; one peck salt, 7s 6d; one crooked comb, 1s 10½d; (1794) one pen knife, 3s 6d; three-fourths yard Mersailles pattern, 14s ½d; two and one-half yards muslin, 9s 4½d; one yard muslin, 3s 9d; three and a half yards binding, 1s 7d; one and a fourth yards calico, 9s 4½d; one ounce indigo, 1s 6d; forty-seven pounds of iron, 1£ 19s 2d; one pair leggins, 7s 9d; One quart whisky, 1s 10½d; one pair cotton cords, 7s 6d; one-half a dozen spoons, 10s 1½d; one pair Rose Blankets, 2£ 12s 6d; one pair cotton hose, 15s; one quire paper, 3s; one mill saw file, 5s; one blanket, 19s 9d; one gimblet, 4s; two dozen screws, 1s 10½d; two hundred tacks, 3s 9d; two pounds coffee, 8s; one ounce indigo, 1s 6d; one-fourth pound (1796) of pepper, 2s; four skanes thread, 1s; five yards ribbon, 7s 6d; nails one pound, 3s; one nutmeg, 1s; factory muslin, one yard, 6s; Maccaboy snuff, one pound, 13s; three sticks twist, 3s; one pair shoes, 15s, one dozen buttons, 3s; one razor, 2s 6d; (1789) one yard scarlet cloth, 3s 6d; one-half a hundred quills, 8s; three yards Furstin (1797) 16s 9d; one yard swanskin, 7s 7½d; one-half a pound of lead, 1s; one quart salt, 1s 10½d; one paper of pins (1798), 3s; one pair sisars (1798), 4s.9d." Whisky, that staple article in those days, varied in price from 6 to 15s per gallon, but the books indicated no perceptible decrease in its consumption. On the 26th of December, 1798, Charles Campbell is credited with 1 barrel of salt, 7£ 10s.

But our surprise at these prices will be less when we consider the cost of transportation. With the products of their farms, at the prices they bore a few years later, farmers could hardly have paid for store goods, at the prices charged. Nor did farmers find permanent relief until the commencement of the canal and development of the furnace business.

In those early days, whisky was the article whose sale was never diminished on account of hard times. In 1797, we count, on five successive pages, sixty-nine separate and distinct charges for this article. During the war of 1812, flour rose to $19 per barrel; hollow castings ten cents per pound, and salt $12 per barrel. Maple sugar was exchanged at six cents per pound for goods; butter at six to eight cents; oats, ten to twelve cents per bushel; and other produce in proportion.

To facilitate the collection of debts, merchants, after cattle were plenty, received the same in payment from their customers and drove them to eastern markets, or sold them to drovers from the East. Pork also was taken on account at prices which contrast strikingly with the present. Well fatted pork, dressed, was sold for two dollars per hundred pounds. Lumber with its products, lath, shingles, &c., were received, and other things, such as furs, &c.

NATURE OF TRADE.

From what has been said in the previous paragraphs, the reader will readily infer that trade was greatly restricted by the scarcity of the usual circulating medium. Few goods were sold for cash. Business was done on the credit and barter system, not only by and with merchants, but between the people. Notes were made payable in grain, lumber, cattle, furs, &c., and sometimes contained the stipulation, "at cash prices." Almost everything had a cash and a barter, or a credit price. It was, however, not always easy to ascertain the cash price. Merchants often suffered great loss by this system of trade. Losses by bad debts, and losses on grain and other commodities, which it was almost impossible to sell for cash, rendered the business an unsafe one.

Most of the business was, for many years, transacted in the river towns, which were first settled, and possessed superior commercial advantages. Maple sugar, long an important article of trade, came in large quantities from the settlements. The inhabitants generally supplying themselves, the price is said to have been, at times, as low as four cents per pound. Almost the only store sugar for years, was the white, refined, put up in hard ball, solid loaves, of a conical form, and called loaf or lump sugar, and was wrapped in strong and coarse paper. It was sold chiefly for sweetening medicines and the liquors of tavern keepers.

REFLECTIONS ON PIONEER LIFE.

The history of pioneer life generally presents only the dark side of the picture. The toils and privations of the early settlers were not a series of unmitigated sufferings. The addition of each new acre to their "clearings" brought with it fresh enjoyment, and cheered them on in the pursuit of their ultimate object, an unincumbered and a happy home. They were happy also in their fraternal feelings; or, as one expressed it, "the feeling of brotherhood—the disposition to help one another;" or, in the language of another, "society was uncultivated; yet the people were very friendly to each other, quite as much so as relatives at the present day."

We could now hardly endure the thought of exchanging our comfortable and elegant carriages for the rude ones of our fathers and grandfathers, which served the various purposes of visiting, and of going to mill and to meeting; yet who doubts that families had a "good time" when they made a visit to a "neighbor" at a distance of several miles, through the woods, on an ox sled? Our mothers were clad in homespun of their own make; and not a few remember the glad surprise, when fathers, on their return from market, presented their faithful helpmeets with a six yards calico dress pattern for Sunday wear. And it is presumed that the wearer was in quite as devotional a frame of mind, and enjoyed Sabbath exercises quite as well as she who now flaunts her gorgeously trimmed silk of fifteen or twenty yards, made up into a style transforming the wearer into the "likeness" of something never before seen or known "above," or "on the earth beneath," and altered with every change of the moon.

People were happy in ther families. The boys, having labored hard during the day, sought rest at an early hour. Parents had the pleasure of seeing their sons acquiring habits of industry and frugality—a sure prognostic of success in life. The "higher civilization" had not yet introduced—

> "In every country village, where > Ten chimney smokes perfumed the air."

those popular modern institutions, the saloon and the billiard room, in which so many youth now receive their principal training. Fewer parents spent sleepless nights in anxious thought about their "prodigal sons," or had their slumbers broken by the noisy entrance of these sons on returning from their midnight revels. They saw no clouds rising to dim the prospect of a happy future to their children. Never were wives and mothers more cheerful than when, like the virtuous woman described by Solomon, "they laid their hands to the spindle, and their hands held the distaff;" or when, with their knitting work or sewing, and baby, too, they went—unbidden, as the custom was—to spend an afternoon with the "neighbor women," by whom they were received with a hearty, unceremonious welcome. The "latch-string was out" at all times; and even the formality of knocking was, by the more intimate neighbors, not observed.

*Johnston's, of Point Pleasant, opposite present site of Saltsburg.

Nor did they lack topics of conversation at these visits. Prominent among them were their domestic affairs—their manifold industrial enterprises and labors—and the anticipated reward of their privations and toils. Their conversation some may suppose, evinced no high degree of intellectual culture; yet, as an indication of such culture, surely it would not suffer in comparison with the gossip of many of our modern ladies at their social gatherings.

The following extract from the pen of a pioneer mother in another county, may be read with interest by some:

"The country around us was an entire wilderness, with here and there a small cabin, containing a small family. We were nearly all new beginners, and although we had to work almost day and night, we were not discouraged. There were many and serious trials in the beginning of this country, with those who settled amid the heavy timber, having nothing to depend upon for a living but their own industry. Such was our situation. However we were blessed with health and strength, and were able to accomplish all that was necessary to be done. Our husbands cleared the ground, and assisted each other in rolling the logs. We often went with them on these occasions, to assist in the way of cooking for the hands.

"We had first-rate times, just such as hard laboring men and women can appreciate. We were not what now would be called fashionable cooks; we had no pound cakes, preserves or jellies, but the substantials, prepared in plain, old-fashioned style. This is one reason why we were blessed with health; we had none of your dainties, knick-knacks, and fixings that are worse than nothing. There are many diseases that we had never even heard of forty to sixty years ago, such as dyspepsia, neuralgia, and many others too tedious to mention. It was not fashionable then to be weakly. We could take our spinning-wheels and walk two to four miles to a spinning frolic, do our day's work, and after a first rate supper, join in some innocent amusement for the evening. We did not take particular pains to keep our hands white; we knew they were made to use for our advantage; therefore, we never thought of having hands just to look at. Each settler had to go and assist his neighbors ten or fifteen days, in order to get help in return in log-rolling time; this was the only way to get assistance. I have thought proper to mention these matters, that people now may know what the early settlers had to undergo. We, however, did not complain half as much as people do now. Our diet was plain; our clothing we manufactured ourselves. We lived independent, and were all on an equality. How the scene has changed! Children of these same pioneers know nothing of hardship; they are spoiled by indulgence, and are generally planning ways and means to live without work."

It is, indeed, to many who have been brought up in the lap of ease, not a little surprising that a wife and mother should do the housework for a family in which were six, eight or more children, and occasionally some hired men, without extra help. Yet such instances were common.

But advancement in society is an American trait. Had we pursued the course of the greater number of the nations of the earth, we should have been, at this day, treading in the footsteps of our forefathers, from whose example in many respects we should have thought it criminal to depart.

The horse paths by which the early settlers made their laborious journeys over the mountains for salt, iron and other necessaries, were succeeded by wagon roads, and those again by turnpikes, which brought the distant region, once denominated as the backwoods, into close and lucrative connection with the great Atlantic cities. Then followed, in quick succession, as if by magic enchantment, canals, railroads and telegraphs. The duration of time for making the once perilous journey over the mountains, was successively reduced from weeks to days, and from days to hours.

The ruder sports of former times—the trials of muscular strength and activity—gave way to the more noble ambition for mental endowments, to the spread of education, and skill in the useful arts.

In the stead of the rude song, roughly and unskillfully sung, succeeded the psalm, the hymn, the quartette glee, and the swelling anthem.

The linsey and coarse linen of the early settlers were in time exchanged for the substantial and fine fabrics of Europe and Asia, and soon superinduced the spirit of American genius for manufacture, which we now see fairly rivaling the world's industries.

The hunting shirt gave place to a suit of broadcloth, and the feet that once trod in moccasins were enclosed in boots and shoes of tanned leather.

Our development in the useful arts, finally brought forth our great manufactories of iron and steel, crockery and glassware, implements and machinery, and the rude utensils of the pioneers are supplanted with articles of the most improved utility and beauty, fabricated at our very doors.

Instead of a blind imitation of the manners and customs of their forefathers, the people thought and acted for themselves; they changed themselves and everything around them. The changes gave new currents to public feeling and individual pursuit, causing the improvements in the dress of the people and the furniture of their houses. Had the hunting shirt, moccasin and leggins continued to be the dress of men—had the three-legged stool, the noggin, the trencher and wooden bowl remained as the furniture of their houses, progress towards science and civilization would have been much slower.

CHAPTER XLII.

LAND TITLES.—THE ORIGIN OF THE TITLES, AND PENN'S POLICY

IT is the editor's desire to lay before the public a* connected view of the land titles of Pennsylvania from its first settlement to the present time, an attempt of equal difficulty and interest. That it will be free from errors is perhaps rather to be wished than expected, as from the lapse of time some material documents, once known to have existed, can no longer be traced. Fortunately, however, much of what may be now considered as depending upon tradition, is more the subject of curiosity than real utility. The public records furnish ample materials of all that is of moment at the present time.

The royal charter from Charles the Second to William Penn bears date at Westminster, March 4th, 1681, in the thirty-third year of the reign of that king. The extent and limits of the territory of Pennsylvania may be seen in the charter itself, in the appendix of the laws of Pennsylvania, Bioren edition, 1810, and in the course of this article its present boundaries, as settled with the adjoining states, or enlarged by purchase, will distinctly appear.

*Laws of Pennsylvania, page 105, note b.

It were needless, at this time of day, to question the validity of royal charters. A principle had obtained among the European nations that a new discovered country belonged to the nation whose people first discovered it. Eugene the Fourth and Alexander the Sixth successively granted to Portugal and Spain all the countries possessed by Infidels, which should be discovered by the industry of their subjects and subdued by the force of their arms; and we are told that no person in the fifteenth century doubted that the Pope, in the plentitude of his apostolic power, had a right to confer it, and all christian princes were deterred from intruding into the countries those nations had discovered, or from interrupting the progress of their navigation and conquests. But William Penn, although clothed with powers as full and comprehensive as those possessed by the adventurers from Portugal and Spain, was influenced by a purer morality and sounder policy. His religious principles did not permit him to wrest the soil of Pennsylvania by force from the people to whom God and Nature gave it, nor to establish his title in blood; but under the shade of the lofty trees of the forest, his right was fixed by treaties with the natives, and sanctified, as it were, by incense smoking from the calumet of peace.

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE SWEDES AND DUTCH

on the lands near the river Delaware, and their subsequent subjection to the English government previous to the royal grant to William Penn, are the subjects of general history. The Indian deed for the purchase made by the Dutch of the lands between Bombay Hook and Cape Henlopen, is now the property, and in possession of the State of Delaware. The purchases made by William Penn and his successors are of no small importance in the consideration of the land-history of Pennsylvania.

A PECULIARITY OF THE GRANT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

It was a principle adopted in all new settlements that the laws of the mother country, at least so far as they are not inconsistent with the situation and circumstances of the infant colony, should have a binding force until altered by the authority of the new government. But that binding force arises only from the necessity which supposes that they receive those laws under which they lived before their settlements into their new plantations, and agree to be governed by them for want of another law. But in the instance of the grant of Pennsylvania, it was incorporated in the charter. That the laws for regulating and governing property within the said province, as well as for the descent and enjoyment of lands, as likewise for the enjoyment and succession of goods and chattels, &c., shall be and continue the same, as they shall be for the time being, by the general course of the law of England, until the said laws shall be altered by the said William Penn, his heirs or assigns, and by the freemen of the said province, their delegates or deputies, or the greater part of them." It is clear, therefore, that from the date of the charter, until acts of assembly were made to alter the same, lands within the province descended according to the course of the common law. Such is still the rule, as will be seen in the course of this work, in cases omitted by the intestate laws of Pennsylvania.†

THE FIRST PURCHASERS.

William Penn, being possessed of the absolute proprietoryship of all the lands in the province, so far as the charter, independent of his Indian purchases, could vest such right, and the consequent right, (defined in the 17th section of the charter) to parcel them out among purchasers, to be holden of himself, and his heirs, "by such services, customs and rents as to him or them should seem fit, and not immediately of the crown," sold large tracts of land to persons who were called first purchasers. These sales, it is believed, amounted to considerably more than three hundred thousand acres. The price for which these lands were sold, was forty shillings sterling for one hundred acres, and one shilling quit rent. These grants or sales, have been since denominated old rights, and had peculiar privileges annexed to them, which will be immediately detailed. They had no location, but were to be surveyed anywhere in the province. There were three lists of original purchasers, but only the two first were filed in the land office; and the authenticity of the third list, by reason of its not having been filed with the public records, was questioned before the revolution, by the proprietory officers.

THE CONDITIONS AND CONCESSIONS.

In the conditions and concessions agreed upon between the proprietor and first purchasers, (which may be seen in the appendex to the laws of Pennsylvania, edition 1810), it was stipulated that, "as soon as they should arrive, a certain quantity of land or ground plat, should be laid out for a large town or city, in the most convenient place upon the river for health and navigation, and that every purchaser should have, by lot, so much land therein, as should answer to the proportion which he had bought, or taken up upon rent. That the proportion of lands that shall be laid out in the first great town or city, should be after the proportion of ten acres for every five hundred acres purchased, if the place will allow it."

Accordingly, when the first colony sailed from England, in October, 1681, certain commissioners were appointed to execute the conditions on the part of Wm. Penn; that is to lay out the great town and proceed to survey the county lands. This commission remains in the office.

THE PLATTING OF THE CITY.

It is known that difficulties existed with respect to the construction of these conditions and concessions, and the great town was not fixed by these commissioners. No place could be found which would bear a town of six or seven thousand acres, the proportion to the lands already purchased, if such had been the construction of the concessions and conditions; and if the idea of a city of such extent had not been absurd and impracticable. Tradition tells us, therefore, that the commissioners did nothing but explore the country till William Penn's arrival. What knowledge they had gained of it they laid before him; and after deliberation, and, it must now be presumed, upon consultation with the settlers, he laid out a town of about two square miles, or twelve hundred and eighty acres, nearly as large as the city of Philadelphia now stands.* The whole construction of the great town was therefore altered. The city was divided into lots of different sizes, and a large tract adjoining it, was surveyed, and called the Liberties; and out of the city and Liberties, the first purchasers were to have their two per cent.

Not a single memorial can be found of this plan, nor any record of the alternations, or any written evidence of the consent of the inhabitants to the new arrangement; but a regular series of uniform facts upon the books of the Land Office, established it beyond a doubt.

THE LIBERTIES.

The river Schuylkill divided the Liberties into two parts; the lots beyond the Schuylkill were of less value than those on the town side; and it is remarkable, that the Liberty lands, without a single exception, laid out on the town side of the †See 4 Dallas, 64; 2 Binney, 279.

*Proud's History—1810 edition.

Schuylkill, were in proportion of eight acres to five hundred acres, and the warrants are uniformly for 492, as of country land, and eight acres in the Northern Liberties, and in the same proportion for larger purchasers; and those whose Liberty land lay beyond the Schuylkill in the western Liberties had their warrants for 490 acres of country land, and ten acres of liberty land. It is therefore presumed by those whose age and information give weight to the fact, that one-fifth part taken from the holders in the Northern Liberties, made up the city plat, and the superiority in value made up for the deficiency in quantity, and time has amply realized their foresight.

THE CITY.

The city of Philadelphia was laid out, according to Proud's assertion, in the end of the year 1682. But the most prevalent opinion is that the plan was not completed until the month of June, 1683. As the ground chosen for the "scite" of the city was claimed by some Swedes, the proprietor gave them in exchange for it, a larger quantity of land at a small distance from it.

William Penn, in a letter to the society of free traders, dated August 16th, 1683, writes thus (see his select works): "Philadelphia, the expectation of those that are concerned in this province, is at last out to the content, &c. I say little of the town itself, because a plat from it will be shown you by my agent, in which those who are purchasers of me, will find their names and interests, &c.

"For your particular concern, I might entirely refer you to the letters of the president of the society, but this I will venture to say, your provincial settlement, both within and without the town, for situation and soil, are without exception. Your city lot is a whole street, and one side of a street from river to river, containing near one hundred acres, not easily valued, which is beside your four hundred acres in the city Liberties, part of your twenty thousand acres in the country, &c."

"THE PLAN."

When the city plan was made out, two large lots were laid down for two purchasers of twenty thousand acres, others to suit the purchasers of ten thousand, five thousand, one thousand, five hundred, and less, and numbered on the draft, and some mode was devised for drawing the names of the purchasers, with the number of the size belonging to each. Thus William Penn, jr., drew No. 1, and the Societies of Free Traders drew No. 5.

There were but three purchasers of twenty thousand acres, viz: the society of Free Traders. William Penn, jr., and Letitia Penn. The lots of the two latter were disputed, and after several trials by jury, it is said they have obtained* but 224 feet in breadth from Delaware front street to Schuylkill. The lots of the purchasers of ten thousand acres, bore no manner of proportion to the foregoing. They had six lots of 102 feet in breadth, from second to third, and from third to fourth street on each front: that is Delaware front, second and third streets, and Schuylkill front, second and third streets, not amounting to more than six acres. Nicholas Moore and John Marsh, two of these great purchasers drew on Delaware front, Nos. 6 and 7.

Purchasers of five thousand acres had two lots, one on front street, 102 feet in breadth, extending from front to second street, and one on high street, 132 feet in breadth, and extending half the depth, northward towards Mulberry street, or southward to Chestnut street, or about 300 feet, being less than two acres.

Purchasers of one thousand acres had two lots, one of twenty or twenty-one feet in breadth on front street, extending to second street, and the other on high street, believed to be 32 feet, by half the depth to the next street.

Purchasers of five hundred acres had lots on the back streets, as all the streets were called, except front, or high streets, 49½ feet in breadth, by half the depth to the next street, or thereabouts.

This is a general outline, as far as it can now be ascertained, of the regulation of the city lots. Holmes' printed map, in a very mutilated state, from long use, is yet remaining in the Surveyor-General's office, and there is also there a correct copy on parchment. The names of the first purchasers, annexed to the map, which is the original used, and referred to by the commissioners of property, must soon disappear, if not copied. The editor has taken a correct copy, which was given in the appendix to the volume from which we quote. In this place, it is necessary to refer only to the following parts of the printed list, viz:

"The purchasers from one thousand acres and upwards, are placed in the front and high streets, and begin on Delaware front at the south end, with No. 1, and so proceed with the front to the north end, to No. 43."

Then follows the list of names who drew the 43 lots or numbers.

"The high street lots begin at No. 44, and so proceed on both sides of the high street, upwards to the centre square."

Then follow the names of the persons who drew the lots, amounting to 39 lots.

"Here follow the purchasers under one thousand acres, and placed in the back streets of the front of Delaware, and begin with No. 5, on the southern side, and proceed by numbers, as in the draft."

Then follow the names of the persons who drew the lots, the number of the lots being 192.

"Here follow the lots of Scuylkill front to the centre of the city, the purchasers from one thousand acres and upwards, are placed in the front and high streets, and begin on Schuylkill front at the south end with No. 1, and so proceed with the front to No. 43."

Here follow the names of the persons who drew the 43 lots, and it is to be remarked, that the first seven names on both lists are the same, viz.: William Penn, Jr., No. 1; William Lowther, No. 2; Lawrence Growdon, No. 3; Philip Ford, No. 4; the society, No. 5; Nicholas Moore, No. 6; and John Marsh, No. 7. And it is presumed these were the large lots appropriated to the purchasers of twenty and ten thousand acres.

"The high street lots begin at No. 44, and so proceed on both sides of that street to the centre square."

Then follow the names to the lots, in number 48, but some are blank and have no names annexed.

"Here follow the purchasers under one thousand acres, placed in the back of the front on Schuylkill, and begin on the southern side with No. 1, and so proceed by the numbers as in the draught."

Then follow the names annexed to the lots, the lots being 149 in number, but several are blank, without names annexed, and several names are in manuscript where the printed list has been worn. The whole is thus headed: "Directions of reference in the city draught of Philadelphia, to the lots of the purchasers, &c., by way of numbers, being too small to insert their names, so that by the number the lots may be known." "It is to be assumed as a principle, of which the evidence is abundant and conclusive." That liberty lands were always considered as part of the quantity purchased, and were taken out of it when the warrant issued for the country land; but the city lots were considered as appurtenant to the purchase, but no part of it; and in the "Lessee of Hill vs. West, and Lessee of Moore vs. West, in Supreme Court, December term, 1804, it was held that the right to city lots was so connected with the first purchase, that by a general deed, made in 1704, by first purchasers of 5000 acres, with the appurtenances, city lots, incident thereto, though previously surveyed, will pass together with the liberty lands, unless a contrary intention can be shown.*

*Proud—Edition 1810.

That this was the course of the Land Office, is evident, from innumerable records; but it is ascertained only from such evidence and from tradition; as it has been already stated, that no trace can be found of any written documents to show when and in what manner these important transactions were settled between the proprietor and the purchasers.

CERTAIN PRIVILEGES CLAIMED, AND PENN'S ANSWER.

Upon the second coming of William Penn, after Governor Fletcher's time, viz: in the year 1701 the assembly, in an address to the proprietor, claimed certain privileges in the city, which, they alleged, had been violated. The eighth and ninth articles are as follows:

"8th. That, whereas, the proprietary formerly gave the purchasers an expectation of a certain tract of land, which is since laid out, about two miles long and one mile broad, whereon to build the town of Philadelphia, and that the same should be a free gift, which since has been clogged with divers rents and reservations, contrary to the first design and grant, and to the great dissatisfaction of the inhabitants. We desire the Governor to take it into consideration, and make them easy therein."

"9th. That the land lying back of that part of the town already built, remain for common, and that no leases be granted for the future to make inclosures to the damage of the public, until such time as the respective owners shall be ready to build or improve thereon."†

The proprietor, in his answer, ten days afterwards, says: "You are under a mistake in fact; I have tied you to nothing in the allotment of the city, which the first purchasers, then present, did not readily seem to comply with, and I am sorry to find their names to such an address as that presented to you, who have got double lots, by my re-allotment of the city, from fifty to one hundred and two feet front lots; and if they are willing to refund the fifty-two feet, I shall, as you desire, be easy in the quit rents; although this matter solely rejers to the first purchasers, and to me as proprietary."

"You are under a misapprehension, to think that a fourth part of the land laid out for a city, belongs to any body but myself, it being reserved for such as were not first purchasers, who might want to build in future time; and when I reflect on the great abuse done me in my absence, by destroying of my timber and wood, and how the land is overrun with brush, to the injury and discredit of the town, it is small encouragement to grant your request. However, I am content that some land be laid out for the accommodation of the town, till inhabitants present themselves to settle it, under regulations that shall be thought most conducing to the end desired; about which I shall consult with those persons chiefly concerned therein.‡

This subject has become more a matter of curiosity than utility. Yet it is necessary to observe that under the commonwealth, the state paid great regard to these ancient claims of original purchasers to city lots, and provided a mode to ascertain these claims, and to grant patents for the lots, or an indemnification for them, in case they had been sold or appropriated; but limited the time in which such claims should be made, which is now expired, and the remaining lots appropriated by the state."§

THE INDIAN PURCHASES.

Before we proceed to consider the mode of granting and settling lands in Pennsylvania, it will be useful to ascertain the Indian purchases, and to give a comprehensive and connected view of the deeds, and boundaries, as far as they can be ascertained. The Dutch and Swedes, as has been already observed, were peaceably settled on the Delaware, and after their subjection by the English, were under the government of New York, and had acquired rights under the government. And several instances occur in the minute books, in which the commissioners of property confirmed by patent, lands derived from grants and promises from Sir Edmund Andross, the governor of New York.

One of the first acts of William Penn was to naturalize all the settlers who had seated themselves previous to, and had remained after his arrival, and it appears to have been his earnest desire, to extinguish every kind of title, or claim to the lands necessary for the accommodation of his colony, and to live on terms of friendship with the Indian natives.

The early Indian deeds are vague and undefined as to their boundaries, and the stations cannot be precisely ascertained at this day; but these circumstances have long ceased to be of any importance, and the deed of September 17th, 1718, seems to define pretty clearly the extent and limits of the lands acquired by the several purchases, to that period.

THE FIRST PURCHASE.

We will begin with the deed of July 15th, 1682, procured at a treaty held with the Indians by Wm. Markham, the deputy governor, a short time previous to the first arrival of Wm. Penn, from Idquahon, Iannottowe, Idquoqucywon, Sahoppe, for himself and Okonichon, Merkekown, Oreekton, for Nannamsey, Shaurwacighon, Swanpisse, Nahoosey, Yomackhickon, Weskekitt, and Talawsis, Idian Shackamakers, for the following lands, for themselves and their people:

"Beginning at a certain white oak, in the land now in the tenure of John Woods, and by him called the Gray stones, over against the falls of Delaware river, and so from thence up the said river side to a corner marked Spruce tree, with the letter P standing by the Indian path that leads to an Indian town called Playwisky, and near the head of a creek called Towissinon, and from thence westward to the creek called Neshammonys creek unto the river Delaware, alias Makerisk-kitton; and so bounded by the said river to the said first mentioned white oak, in John Wood's land, and all those islands called or known by the several names of Matiniounsk island, Sapassineks island and Oreskons island, lying or being in the said river Delaware, &c."

By an indorsement on this deed, dated August 1st, 1682, sundry Indian chiefs, not present at the execution of the deed in July, and who styled themselves the right owners of the land called Sapassineks, and the Island of the same name, ratify and approve it; signed, Idquoqueynon, Swanpisse, Filerappomond, Essexamarthake, Nanneshessham, Pyserhay.* Those deeds are not recorded. This purchase was of inconsiderable extent.

DEED OF JUNE 23D, 1683.

The deed of June 23d, 1683, is in these words: "We, Essepenaike, Swanpees, Okettarickon and Wessapoak, for us, our heirs and assigns, do dispose of all lands lying betwixt Pemmapecka and Neshemineh creeks, and all along upon Neshemineh creek, and backward of the same, and to run two days journey with a horse up into the country, as the said river doth go, to William Penn, proprietor and governor of the province of Pennsylvania, &c., his heirs and assigns forever, for the consideration of so much wampum, and so many guns, shoes, stockings, looking glasses, blankets and other goods, as he, the said

*MSS reports. †Votes of Assembly, Vol. 1, Part 1, page 145. ‡Ibid, 148.
§ Vol. 1, Chap. 931, page 533, and the note thereto subjoined of Cooks of Commissiontrs of Property.

*In a duplicate of this deed, the river Delaware is called Makerisk-Kiskon.

William Penn, hath pleased to give unto us, hereby for us, our heirs and assigns, renouncing all claims or demands of anything, in or for the premises, for the future, from him, his heirs or assigns.

By another deed of the same date: Tamanen and Metamequan, release to William Penn the same territory, omitting the two days journey.

The extent of this purchase would be considerable, and greatly beyond the limits of the subsequent deed of September, 1718. Neither of these deeds is recorded.

June 25th, 1683. An Indian called Wingebone conveys in the following terms, viz: "For me, my heirs and assigns, do freely grant and dispose of all my lands lying on the west side of the Schuylkill river, beginning from the first falls of the same, all along upon the said river, and backward of the same, so far as my right goeth, to William Penn, &c., for so much wampum and other things as he shall please to give us, &c.

July 14th, 1683. Secane and Icquoqushan, Indian Shackamakers and right owners of the lands lying between Manaiunk, alias Schuylkill, and Macopanackhan, alias Chester river, grant and sell all their right and title in the said lands lying between the said rivers, beginning on the west side of Manaiunk, [ ] called Consohockan (here an obliteration), and from thence by a westerly line to the said river Macopanackhan.

And, on the same day, Neneshickhen, Malebore, alias Pendanoughhah, Neshanocke [and Oserereon, but not signed by him], Shackamakers and right owners of all the lands lying between Manaiunk, alias Schuylkill, and Pemmapeckha creeks, grant all their right, title and interest, in their lands betwixt Manaiunk and Pemmapeckha, so far as the hill called Consohockan, on the said river Manaiunk, and from thence by a northwest line to the river Pemmapeckha. None of these deeds are recorded.

September 10th, 1683. Grant from Keketappan of Opasiskunk, for his half of all his land betwixt Susquehanna and Delaware, which lieth on the Susquehana side, with a promise to sell at the next spring, on his return from hunting, his right to the other half of said lands. This deed is not recorded.

October 18th, 1683. Machaloha, calling himself owner of the lands from Delaware river to Chesapeake bay, and up to the falls of the Susquehanna, conveys his right to William Penn, to said lands, to enjoy them, live upon and quietly. (This deed is signed in the presenee of many Indians, whose names are partly eaten off by the mice, as is also a small part of the deed, where the blank is. It is not recorded).

June 3d, 1684. Deed from Manghougsin, for all his land upon Pahkehoma. (Perkeomink, now Perkioming. This deed is not recorded).

June 7th, 1684. Richard Mettamicont, calling himself owner of the land on both sides of Pemmapeckha creek, on the river Delaware, releases to William Penn. Not recorded.

July 30th, 1685. Deed from Shakhoppoh, Secane, Malibore, Tangoras, Indian Shackamakers, and right owners of the lands lying between Macopanackan, alias Upland, now called Chester creek, and the river or creek called Pemmapeckha, now called Dublin creek (Pennypack), for all the land, beginning at the hill called Conshohockon, on the river Mainaiunk, alias Schuylkill, from thence extending a parallel line to the said Macopanackan, by a south-westerly course, and from the said Conshohocken hill to the aforesaid Pemmapecka, by the said parallel line north-casterly, and so up along the said Pemmapecka creek, as far as the creek extends, and so from thence northwesterly, back into the woods, to make up two full days journey, as far as a man can go in two days, from the said station of the parallel line, at Pemmapecka; as also beginning at the said parallel at Macopanackan, and so from thence up said creek as it extends, and from thence north-westerly back into the woods to make up two full days' journey as far as a man can go in two days from the said station of the said parallel line, at the said Macopanackan. (This deed is not recorded.)

October 2d, 1685. Deed from Pare, Packenah, Tareekhan, Lichias, Pitquassit, Towis, Esepenaick, Peskoy, Kekelappaw, Eomus, Machaloha, Mesheconga, Wissapowey, Indian kings, Shackamakers, right owners of all the lands from Quing Quingus, called Duck creek, unto Upland, called Chester creek, all along by the west side of Delaware river, and so between the said creeks, backwards as far as a man could ride in two days with a horse, which they convey to William Penn. Recorded at Philadelphia, in book F, vol. 8, page 121.

THE WALKING PURCHASE OF AUGUST 20TH, 1686.

In this place should follow a deed alleged to have existed, dated August 20th, 1686, for the walking purchase, and which occasioned much controversy and dissatisfaction among the Indians, it is, however, referred to, included in, and confirmed by the deed of August, 1737. It is certain no such original deed was in existence at the treaty of Easton, in 1757. It will be further noticed at the proper place.

June 15, 1692. King Taminent, King Tangorus, King Swampes and King Hickoqueon, by deed, acknowledge satisfaction for all that tract of land belonging to Taminent and others, "which they parted with unto William Penn, &c., the said tract lying between Neshamena and Poquessing, upon the river Delaware, and extending backwards to the utmost bounds of the province." This deed is not recorded.

These limits on the Delaware are precisely defined. The Poquessing, a name still retained, (as is Neshaminey), is the original boundary between the counties of Philadelphia and Bucks, as ascertained in April, 1685. And tradition informs us that near the lower side of the Poquessing, on the Delaware, on an elevated piece of ground, the city of Philadelphia was first intended to be built.

THE DONGAN PURCHASE.

January 15th, 1696. Thomas Dongan, afterward Earl of Limerick, in the kingdom of Ireland, late governor of New York, by deed, conveys to Wm. Penn "all that tract of land lying on both sides of the river Susquehanna and the lakes adjacent. in or near the province of Pennsylvania, in consideration of one hundred pounds sterling,—beginning at the mountains, or head of the said river, and running as far as, and into the bay of Chesapeake, which the said Thomas lately purchased of, or had given hereinby the Susquehanna Indians, with warranty from the Susquehanna Indians.

The Indian deed to Colonel Dongan is not known now to exist, nor is there any trace of it in the public offices. It is known, however, that he was the agent of William Penn, to make the purchase.

This deed was confirmed in 1700, yet we find the Conestogoe Indians complaining of it, at the treaty of Sir William Keith, in 1722, and "alleging that William Penn, forty years before, got some person at New York to purchase the lands on the Susquehanna, from the Five Nations who pretended a right to them, having conquered the people formerly settled there, and when the Conestogoes understood it they were sorry; and that William Penn took the parchment and laid it upon the ground, saying to them, it should be in common amongst them, viz.: the English and the Indians, &c." The governor answered: "I am very glad to find that you remember so perfectly the wise and kind expressions of the great and good William Penn towards you; and I know that the purchase which he made of the lands on both sides of the Susquehanna, is exactly true as you tell it, only I have heard further, that when he was so good to tell your people, that notwithstanding that purchase, the lands should still be in common between his people and them, you answered, that a very little land would serve you, and thereupon you fully confirmed his right by your own consent and good will, &c."

The curious inquirer who wishes to be further informed of these transactions, now very important, may consult the treaties of 1722 and 1727, in the council books.

July 5th, 1697. The deed from the great Sachem Taminy, his brother and sons, is in these words: "We, Taminy, Sathimack and Weheeland, my brother, and Wehequeekhon, alias Andrew, who is to be king after my death, Yaqueekhon, alias Nicholas, and Quenamsckquid, alias Charles, my sons, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, &c., all the lands, woods, meadows, rivers, rivulets, mines, minerals and royalties whatsoever, situate, lying and being between the creek called Pemmopeck, and the creek called Neshaminy, extending in length from the river Delaware, so far as a horse can travel in two summer days and to carry its breadth according as the several courses of the said two creeks will admit, and when the said creeks do so branch, that the main branches, or bodies thereof cannot be discovered, then the tract of land hereby granted, shall stretch forth upon a direct course, on each side, and so carry on the full breadth, to the extent of the length thereof."

"Acknowledged in open court, at Philadelphia, 6th July, 1697, recorded in the Rolls Office, 7th of the 12th month, 1698, in book E. 3, vol. 5, page 57, &c."

September 13th, 1700. Widgah and Andaggy—Junkquagh, Kings or Sachems of the Susquehanna Indians, and of the river under that name, and lands lying on both sides thereof. "Deed to William Penn, for all the said river Susquehanna, and all the islands therein, and all the lands situate, lying and being upon both sides of the said river, and next adjoining to the same, to the utmost confines of the lands which are, or formerly were, the right of the people or nation, called the Susquehannah Indians, or by what name soever they were called, as fully and amply as we, or any of our ancestors, have, could, might, or ought to have had, held or enjoyed, and also confirm the bargain and sale of the said lands, made unto Col. Thomas Dongan, now Earl of Limerick, and formerly Governor of New York, whose deed of sale to said Governor Penn, we have seen." Recorded in Book F. Vol. 8, page 242.

The above is the deed referred to by Sir William Keith, at the treaty with the Conestogoes, in 1722. It is remarkable that the Indian deed to Col. Dongan, was not produced, and it seemed to have been conceded, that the purchase was from the Five Nations, who pretended right to the lands by conquest; and the words in italics appear to have been intended to embrace and confirm the title however derived. Nor did the purchase include any extent of land. It is true, it is left indefinite, being for lands on both sides of the river, and next adjoining to the same; but the great object of William Penn, was to secure the river through the whole extent of the province; and although it was not designed for immediate settlement, the great foresight of the proprietor would not permit him to relinquish this important grant, which was to secure the whole of the Susquehanna, from the pretensions of the adjoining colonies, and at this time the charter bounds were not distinctly known, but for a long time afterwards they were considered as extending, at least, to the Owegy, and including a considerable part of the river, now unquestionably known to be within the limits of New York. No opportunity was therefore lost to bring this title to the view of the Indians. Accordingly, in articles of agreement between William Penn, and the Susquehanna, Shatwona, Potowmack and Conestoga Indians, dated April 23d, 1701, among other things, they ratify and confirm Governor Dongan's deed of January, 1696, and the above deed of the Susquehanna Indians, of September, 1700.*

*Recorded in Book F. Vol. 8, page 43.

And notwithstanding the limits defined in the deed of September 1718, which will shortly follow, we find Dongan's deed insisted on, and acquiesced in, at Susquehanna, in 1722; and again, at a treaty held at Philadelphia, in July, 1727, between Governor Gordon, and the Deputies of the Five Nations; in answer to the deputies, who said the Governor had at divers times sent for them, and they had therefore come to know his pleasure, and make an offer to sell lands, the governor tells them, "that he is glad to see them, that he takes their visit very kindly at this time, but that they were misinformed when they supposed the Governor had sent for them; that Governor Penn, had by means of Col. Dongan, already bought of the Five Nations, the lands on Susquehanna; that the chiefs of the Five Nations, when Sir William Keith was at Albany, had of themselves confirmed the former grant, and absolutely released all pretensions to these lands." The release here stated to have been made at Albany in 1722, is however, not to be now found.

PENN'S SYSTEM.

"About this period the Indian purchases became more important, and the boundaries more certain and defined, and principles were established and acquired the force of settled law, of deep interest to land holders, and which have since been uniformly recognized, and at this moment govern and control our judicial tribunals." To live in peace and friendship with the natives, was a part of the benevolent system of the venerable and virtuous founder of Pennsylvania. To a people averse to warfare, from conscientious motives, everything which would tend to provoke their warlike neighbors and irritate them to lift the tomahawk, was most carefully to be avoided; and we find no common attention bestowed upon this momentous subject by the government. When the natives sold their lands, it was understood distinctly that the white people should not settle nor encroach upon their hunting grounds and lands reserved by them, nor was a single attempt thus to settle unattended by complaints and uneasiness. The Indians observed their treaties with fidelity, and the boundaries appear to have been accurately understood by them.

DEED OF RELEASE FROM SUNDRY DELAWARE CHIEFS.

On the 17th of September, 1718, there is a deed of release from sundry Delaware Indian chiefs, viz: Sassoonah, Meetashechay, Ghettypeneeman, Pokehais, Ayamackan, Opekasset, and Pepawmamam, for all the lands situate between the two rivers, Delaware and Susquehanna, from Duck creek to the mountains on this side Lechay, with an acknowledgement, that they had seen and heard divers deeds of sale read unto them, under the hands and seals of former kings and chiefs of the Delaware Indians, their ancestors and predecessors, who were owners of said lands, by which they had granted the said lands to William Penn, for which they were satisfied and content, which, for a further consideration of goods delivered them they then confirmed. (This deed is recorded May 13th, 1728, in Book A, vol. 6, page 59.)

It is therefore to be observed that the undefined limits of all the preceding deeds, westward, two days journey with a horse, &c., which would have extended far beyond the Lehigh hills, are here restricted to those hills, which so far as related to the purchases from the Delawares, were the boundaries of the purchased lands.

The settlers, notwithstanding, encroached on the Indian lands beyond this boundary, which occasioned great anxiety and uneasiness among the Delawares. The complaints of the aged Sassoonan were eloquent and pathetic. Violence had ensued and blood had flowed. Preparations had been made, alliances were forming for war, but by prudence and skill the danger was turned aside.

TREATY OF 1728.

At the treaty of Philadelphia, in 1728, Sassoonan, addressing himself to Mr. James Logan, the proprietary secretary and principal commissioner for land affairs, said: "That he was grown old and was troubled to see the Christians settle on lands that the Indians had never been paid for; they had settled on his lands, for which he had never received anything; that he was now an old man, and must soon die; that his children may wonder to see all their father's lands gone from them, without his receiving anything for them; that the Christians made their settlements very near them, and they would have no place of their own left to live on; that this might occasion a difference between their children hereafter, and he would willingly prevent any misunderstanding that might happen."

Mr. Logan, with the leave of the governor, answered: "That he was not otherwise concerned in the lands of the province than as he was entrusted with other commissioners, by the proprietor, to manage his affairs of property, in his absence; that William Penn had made it a rule never to suffer any lands to be settled by his people till they were first purchased from the Indians; that his commissioners had followed the same rule, and how little reason there was for any complaint against him or the commissioners, he would make appear." He then proceeded to relate to them the circumstances connected with the release of 1718, for the lands from Duck creek to near the forks of Delaware, and that the Indians were then entirely satisfied with it; and the instrument of release was then read to them.

Sassoonan and Opekasset, both acknowledged this deed to be true, and that they had been paid for all the lands therein mentioned, but Sassoonan said the lands beyond these bounds had never been paid for; that these reached no farther than a few miles beyond Oley, but that their lands on Tulpyhockin were seated by the Christians.

Mr. Logan, answered, "that he understood at the time that deed was drawn, and ever since, that the Lechay hills or mountains stretched away from a little below Lechay, or the forks of the Delaware to those hills on the Susquehanna, that lie about ten miles above Pexton; Mr. Farmer said those hills passed from Lechay, a few miles above Oley, and reached no farther, and that Tulpyhockin lands lay beyond them."

"Whether," continued Mr. Logan, "those lands of Tulpyhockin were within or without the bounds mentioned in the deed, he well knew that the Indians some years since were seated on them, and that he, with the other commissioners, would never consent that any settlement should be made on lands where the Indians were seated; that these lands were settled wholly against their minds, and even without their knowledge; but he desired of the Indians, that though these people had seated themselves on the Tulpyhockin lands without the commissioners leave or consent, yet that they would not offer them any violence, or injure them, but wait till such time that the matter could be ajusted."

In this the Indians acquiesced, and having waited some time without receiving any satisfaction for their land, and the encroachments still increasing, they renewed their complaints. The French at Montreal were likewise endeavoring to gain them over to their interest, and it was seen both by the assembly and governor, that it was but just and reasonable, and that it concerned the peace of the country, that the Indians should be made easy respecting their lands and their complaints removed. This state of affairs gave rise to the treaty of 1732, shortly after the arrival of Thomas Penn, who was present at it.*

Previous, however, to this treaty, there appears to have been a release, but not recorded, from sundry Indians, for all the lands on both sides of the Brandywine creek, from the mouth thereof, where it enters the river Delaware up to a certain rock in the said creek, near the upper line of Abraham Marshall's land. It is unimportant to inquire at what point this purchase ended. It could have been intended merely to extinguish some claims, probably not well founded; and the same land was included in the release of 1718. This release is dated May 31st, 1726.

September 7th, 1732. "Sassoonan, alias Allummapis, Sachem of the Schuylkill Indians, Elalapis, Ohopamen, Pesquetomen, Mayemoe, Partridge, Tepakoaset, alias Joe, grant all those tract of land or lands, lying on or near the river Schuylkill, or any of the branches, streams, fountains, or springs thereof, eastward or westward, and all the lands lying in or near any swamps, marshes, fens or meadows, the waters or streams of which flow into or toward the river Schuylkill, situate, lying and being between those hills called Lechay hills, and those called Kekachtanemin hills, which cross the said river Schuylkill, about thirty miles above the said Lechay hills, and all lands whatsoever lying within the said bounds, and between the branches of the Delaware river on the eastern side of the said lands, and the branches or streams running into the river Susquehhnna on the western side of the said land. That is to say, all those lands situate, lying and being on the same river Schuylkill and the branches thereof, between the mountains called Lechay to the south, and the hills or mountains called Kekachtonemin on the north, and between the branches of the Delaware river on the east, and the waters falling into the Susquehanna river on the west."

Ratified by Lingahonoa, a Schuylkill Indian, who was not present at signing the foregoing deed, 12th July, 1742.

Confirmed by deed of release, 20th of August, 1733, which is in fact a release for the consideration of said land received by them. This release is also confirmed by Lingahonoa, 12th July, 1742, acknowledging that he had received his portion of the consideration.*

LOGAN'S LETTER IN RELATION TO THE FORKS OF THE DELAWARE.

The lands at Tulpehocken, were quited by this deed; but as it embraced none of the lands on the Delaware, or branches leading into it, the discontent of the Indians still continued with regard to the settlements at the Minissinks, near forty miles above the Lochay hills, which was the northern boundary, according to the deed of 1718. Although considerable obscurity rests upon the deed of 1686, yet presuming its existence, the purchase had never been walked out. And if any reliance can be placed in the authenticity of a letter from James Logan, dated 20th November, 1727, and printed in London, in the year 1759, and said to have been compared with the original then in being, any claim under the deed of 1686, would appear to have been abandoned.

The letter is in these words: "Friend Thomas Watson, this morning I wrote to thee by Joe Taylor, concerning warrants that may be offered thee to be laid out on the Minissink lands, and was then of opinion, that the bearer hereof, Joseph Wheeler, proposed to lay his there. Having since seen him, he tells me he has no such thought, but would have it laid three or four miles above Durham, on a spot of pretty good land there amongst the hills, and I think, at some distance from the river, proposing, as he says, to live there himself with his kinsman, who was here with him; pray take the first opportinity to mention it to I. Langhorne, for if he has no considerable objection to it, (that is, if he has laid no right on it,) I cannot see that we should make any other than that it is not purchased of the Indians, which is so material an one, that without their previous engagement to part with it very reasonably, it cannot be surveyed there. But of this, they themselves, I mean Jos. Wheeler, &c.,

*Votes of Assembly, Vol. 3, Page 158.

*These deeds and releases have never been recorded propose to take care. This is what offers on this head, from thy loving friend,

JAMES LOGAN."

The forks of Delaware, were notwithstanding settled; and to this, among other sources, was attributed by the writers of the day, the alienation of the Delawares and the Shawanese, from the British interests.

THE DEED OF 1733.

After several ineffectual attempts to compose the clamours of the Delawares, it is said the proprietor complained of them to the Five Nations. In 1736, the deputies of the Five Nations arrived, and a treaty was held with them, at which Conrad Weiser was an important agent. The deed of 1736, is as follows:

"October 11th, 1736. Whereas, the late proprietary of the province of Pennsylvania, William Penn, Esq., soon after his first arrival in the said province, took measures to have the river Susquehanna, with all the lands lying on both sides of the same, purchased for him and his heirs, of those Indians of the Five Nations, inhabiting in the province of New York, who claimed the property thereof and accordingly did purchase them of Col. Thomas Dungan, formerly Governor of New York, and pay for the same: notwithstanding which the Indians of the Five Fations aforesaid, have continued to claim a right in and to the said river and lands, nor have those claims been hitherto adjusted; whereupon the said sachems or chiefs having, with all the others of said Nations, met the last summer at their great council, held in the country of the said Onondagoes, did resolve and conclude that a final period and conclusion should be put to all disputes that might possibly arise on that occasion, and having appointed the aforesaid sachems or chiefs, as plenipotentiaries of all those nations to repair to Philadelphia, in order to confirm the several treaties of peace, which hath hitherto been concluded between them and the said province, and also to settle and adjust all demands and claims that have been hitherto made, or hereafter may be made, touching or concerning the aforesaid river Susquehanna, and the lands lying on both sides thereof; and the said sachems or chiefs of the Five Nations aforesaid, having for themselves and on behalf of the said nations, renewed and ratified the treaties of friendship and peace subsisting between them and the said province, did afterward proceed to treat and agree with the honorable the proprietaries thereof about the said river and lands. Now know ye, &c., grant, &c., to John Penn, Thomas Penn, and Richard Penn, their heirs, successors and assigns, all the said river Susquehanna, with the lands lying on both sides thereof, to extend eastward as far as the heads of the branches or springs which run into the said Susquehanna, and all the lands lying on the west side of the said river, to the setting of the sun, and to extend from the mouth of the said river, northward, up the same to the hills or mountains called in the language of the said nations, Tayamentasachta, and by the Delaware Indians, the Kekachtanamin hills. Signed by 23 Indian chiefs of the Onondago, Seneca, Oneida and Tuscarora nations.*

DEED OF OCTOBER 25, 1736.

What is remarkable about this period is that the Indian chiefs on their return, staid several days with Conrad Weiser, at Tulpehocken, and there executed the following deed, dated October 25th, 1736, which is proved and recorded in Book C, vol. 2, page 350, May 22d, 1741.

"We the chiefs of the Six Nations of Indians, the Onondagoes, Isanundowans or Sennekas, Cayoogoes, Oncydas, Tuscaroroes (in behalf of the Canyingoes or Mohacks), who have lately, at Philadelphia, by our deed of writing, dated the 11th day of this instant, October, released to John Penn, Thomas Penn, and Richard Penn, proprietors of Pennsylvania, and to their heirs and successors, all our right, claim, and pretensions to all the lands on both sides of the river Susquehanna, from the mouth thereof as far northward, or up the said river as that ridge of hills called the Tyoninhasachta, or endless mountains, westward to the setting of the sun, and eastward to the farthest springs of the waters running into the said river, do hereby further declare, that our true intent and meaning by the said writing, was and is to release, and we do hereby more expressly release to the said proprietors, &c., all the lands lying within the bounds and limits of the government of Pennsylvania, beginning eastward on the river Delaware, as far northward as the said ridge, or chain of endless mountains, as they cross the country of Pennsylvania, from the eastward to the west; and they further engage never to sell any of their lands to any but the proprietors, children of William Penn."

There is an indorsement of ratification on this deed, dated 9th of July, 1754, signed by nine Indians.

THE WALKING PURCHASE.

But, notwithstanding this latter deed, it was earnestly contended by those who were unfriendly to the proprietary proceedings, and probably from an apprehension or foresight of the disasters which ensued, that the right of the Five Nations lay only on the waters which run into the Susquehanna, and as they claimed no lands on the Delaware, they could by that instrument convey none. However this fact may have been, we find, about eight months afterward, the proprietors procured a release from the Delawares for at least part of these lands, or a confirmation of the supposed deed of 1686, or the walking purchase. This singular release is in the following words:

"August 25th, 1737. We, Teshakomen, alias Tishekunk, and Nootamis, alias Nutimus, two of the sachemas, or chiefs of the Delaware Indians, having almost three years ago, at Durham, begun a treaty with our honourable brethren, John and Thomas Penn, and from thence another meeting was appointed to be at Pennsburg, the next spring following, to which we repaired, with Lappawinzoe, and several others of the Delaware Indians, at which treaty several deeds were produced and showed to us by our said brethren, concerning several tracts of land, which our forefathers had more than fifty years ago, bargained and sold unto our good friend and brother, William Penn, the father of the said John and Thomas Penn, and in particular one deed from Maykeerickkisho, Sayhoppy and Taughhaughsey, the chiefs or kings of the Northern Indians, on the Delaware, who for, &c., did grant, &c., all those lands lying and being in the province of Pennsylvania, beginning upon a line formerly laid out from a corner spruce tree by the river Delaware (Makeerikkitton), and from thence running along the ledge or foot of the mountains, west-north-west to a corner white oak, marked with the letter P, standing by the Indian path that leadeth to an Indian town called Playwickey, and from thence extending westward to Neshameny creek, from which said line, the said tract or tracts thereby granted doth extend itself back into the woods, as far as a man can go in one day and an half, and bounded on the westerly side with the creek called Neshamony, or the most westerly branch thereof, and from thence by a line to the utmost extent of the said one day and a half's journey, and from thence to the aforesaid river Delaware, and from thence down the several courses of the said river to the first mentioned spruce tree, &c.

But some of our old men being absent, we requested more time to consult with our people, which request being granted, we have, after more than two years from the treaty at Pennsburg, now come to Philadelphia, together with our chief sachema, Monockykichan, and several of our old men." They then acknowledge that they were satisfied that the above described tract was granted by the persons above mentioned, and agree to release to the proprietors all right to that tract, and desire it may be walked, travelled or gone over by persons appointed for that purpose."

*Recorded in Book C, vol. 1, page 277, May 7th, 1741.

[Signed] Manockykichon, Lappawinzoe,
Teshacomin,
Nootamis.

And witnessed by twelve other Indians, is taken of full and free consent, besides other witnesses.*

The walk was accordingly made, but it tended only to increase the dissatisfaction of the Indians. In giving this summary of the cause and effects of the Indian treaties, it is not designed nor is it calculated to encroach upon the province of general history, which embraces a broader ground; but merely to connect them together, and show how intimately they depend on each other. Nor will it escape the observation of the reader, how materially the frequent recurrence to, and confirmation of. Col. Dongan's deed, bears upon the deed of the 11th of July, 1854, from the Indians to Connecticut claimants, whether that deed were real or fictitious.†

This walk extended, it is said, about thirty miles beyond the Lehigh hills, over the Kittanning mountains; and a draught of it was made by Surveyor General Eastburn, including the best of the lands in the forks of the Delaware and the Minissinks. The walkers were experts, and the Indians who could not keep up with them, complained that they ran; and moreover it would appear that their expectation was that the walk was to be made up the river by its courses.

TROUBLE WITH THE DELAWARES.

It is not intended to enter further into the controversy than to exhibit the general grounds, which are said to have estrayed the Delawares from our interest, and drove them into that of the French, who were always ready in those times to increase their dissatisfaction with the English. Nutimus and others who signed the release of 1737, were not willing to quit the lands, nor give quiet possession to the people who came to take up lands and settle in the forks. They remonstrated freely, and declared their resolution of maintaining possesion by force of arms. In the year 1741, therefore, a message was sent to the Six Nations, who, it was well known, had great authority over the Delawares, to press them to come down and force the Delawares to quit the forks.

They accordingly came in the summer of 1742, to the number of two hundred and thirty. Governor Thomas, in his message to the assembly of the 24th of July, in that year, among other things, tells them: "That their coming down was not only necessary for the present peace of the province, in regard to some Indians who had threatened to maintain by force their possession of lands which had been long ago purchased of them, and since conveyed by the proprietaries to some of our own inhabitants, but for its future security; likewise in case of a rupture with the French, who will leave no methods unestrayed to corrupt their fidelity, and to persuade them to turn their arms against us."

TREATY WITH THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE SIX NATIONS—THE GOVERNOR'S ADDRESS.

At this treaty, at Philadelphia, the Governor informed the deputies of the "conduct of their cousins, a branch of the Delawares, who gave the province some disturbance about the lands the proprietors purchased of them, and for which their ancestors had received a valuable consideration about fifty-five years ago, (alluding to the deed of 1686, confirmed by the deed of 1737). That they continued their former disturbances, and had the insolence to write letters to some of the magistrates of this government, wherein they had abused the worthy proprietaries, and treated them with the utmost rudeness and ill manners; that being both out of regard to the Six Nations, to punish the Delewares as they deserved, he had sent two messages to inform them the Six Nation deputies were expected here, and should be acquainted with their behavior. That as the Six Nations, on all occasions, apply to this government to remove all white people that are settled on lands before they are purchased from them, and as the government use their endeavors to turn such people off, so now he expects from them that they will cause these Indians to remove from the lands in the forks of the Delaware, and not give any further disturbance to the persons who are now in possession."

The deed and letters were then read, and the draught exhibited.

CANASSATEGO'S REPLY.

Canassatego, in the name of the deputies, told the Governor: "That they saw that the Delawares had been an unruly people, and were altogether in the wrong; that they had concluded to remove them, and oblige them to go over the river Delaware, and quit all claim to any lands on this side for the future, since they had received pay for them, and it is gone through their guts long ago."

Then addressing himself to the Delawares, in a violent and singular strain of invective, he said:

"They deserved to be taken by the hair of the head, and shaked severely, till they recovered their senses and became sober; that he had seen with his eyes, a deed signed by nine of their ancestors, above fifty years ago, for this very land (1686), and a release signed not many years since (1737), by some of themselves, and chiefs, yet living (Sassoonan and Nutimus were present), to the number of fifteen and upwards." "But how come you," he continued to the Delawares, "to take upon you to sell lands at all? We conquered you; we made women of you; you know you are women, and can no more sell land than women; nor is it fit you should have the power of selling lands, since you would abuse it. The land that you claim, is gone through your guts. You have been furnished with clothes, meat and drink, by the goods paid you for it, and now you want it again, like children, as you are.

But what makes you sell lands in the dark? Did you ever tell us that you had sold this land? Did we ever receive any part, even the value of a pipe shank, from you for it? You have told us a blind story, that you sent a messenger to us to inform us of the sale, but he never came amongst us, nor we ever heard anything about it. This is acting in the dark, and very different from the conduct our Six Nations observe in the sales of land. On such occasions they give public notice, and invite all the Indians of their united nations, and give them all a share of the present they receive for their lands. But we find you are none of our blood; you act a dishonest part, not only in this, but in other matters; your ears are ever open to slanderous reports about your brethren.

For all these reasons, we charge you to remove instantly; we don't give you any liberty to think about it. You are women. Take the advice of a wise man, and remove instantly. You may return to the other side of the Delaware, where you came from; but we do not know whether, considering how you have demeaned yourselves, you will be permitted to live there, or whether you have not swallowed that land down your throats, as well as the land on this side. We, therefore, assign you two places to go to, either to Wyomen or Shamoken. You may go to either of these places, and then we shall have you more under our eye, and shall see how you behave. Don't deliberate, but remove away, and take this belt of wampum."

*Recorded May 8, 1741, in book G, vol. 1, page 282. †Grosvenor's letter.

He then "forbid them ever to intermeddle in land affairs, or ever hereafter to sell any land, and commanded them, as he had something to transact with the English, immediately to depart the council."

The Delawares dared not to disobey this peremptory command. They immediately left the council, and soon after removed from the forks; some, it is said, went to Wyoming and Shamoken, and some to the Ohio. Thus strangely was terminated the purchase of 1686, admitting the deed to have once existed. But even at this treaty with the Six Nations, it was not admitted that the proprietary right extended beyond the Kittochtinny hills, and the deputies complained that they were not well used with respect to the land still unsold by them.

COMPLAINT OF THE DEPUTIES.

"Your people (they said) daily settle on these lands, and spoil our hunting. We must insist on your removing them, as you know they have no right to settle to the northward of the Kittochtinny hills. In particular, we renew our complaints against some people who are settled on Juniata, a branch of the Susquehanna, and along that river as far as Mahaniay, and desire they may forthwith be made to go off the land, for they do great damage to our cousins, the Delawares."

With respect to the people settled at Juniata, the Governor replied: "That some magistrates were sent expressly to remove them, and he thought no persons would presume to stay after that." Here they interrupted the Governor, and said: "These persons who were sent, do not do their duty; so far from removing the people, they made surveys for themselves, and they are in league with the trespassers. We desire that more effectual measures may be used, and honester men be employed," which the Governor promised should be done.

We shall have occasion again to refer to this point. It is necessary only to add, at this time, the strong expressions of the speaker to the Governor.

We have given the river Juniata for a hunting place to our cousins, the Delaware Indians, and our brethren, the Shawnese, and we ourselves hunt there sometimes. We therefore desire you will immediately, by force remove all those that live on the river Juniata." And what less could be demanded after the expulsion of the Delawares from the forts?

Soon after this, it appeared that the Shawnese were endeavoring to draw the Delawares from Shamekin to the Ohio, and that there were some heart-burnings between the Delawares and the Six Nations, and that the former only waited a favorable opportunity to throw off the yoke, which they afterwards did, and to revenge the insults that had been offered to them at Philadelphia, in 1742.*

THE TREATY AND PURCHASE OF 1749.

We shall now proceed to the causes and circumstances which produced the treaty and purchase of 1749.

A meeting of the deputies from each of the Six Nations, had been appointed by the Grand Council at Onondaga, to go to Philadelphia, on business of importance. The Senecas first arrived there. "One of the most considerable points," (said their speaker to the Governor), "which induced the council to send deputies at this time, was, that they had heard the white people had begun to settle on their side of the Blue Mountains. And we, the deputies of the Senecas, staying so long at Wyomen, had an opportunity of enquiring into the truth of this information, and to our surprise found the story confirmed; with the addition that even this spring, since the Governor's arrival, numbers of families were beginning to make settlements.

As our boundaries are so well known, and so remarkably distinguished by a range of high mountains, we could not suppose this could be done by mistake, but either it must be done wickedly by bad people, without the knowledge of the Governor, or that the new Governor has brought some instructions from the King or the proprietaries relating to this affair, whereby we are like to be much hurt. The Governor will be pleased to tell us whether he has brought any orders from the King or the proprietaries for these people to settle on our lands, and if not we earnestly desire that they may be made to remove instantly with all their effects, to prevent the sad consequences which will otherwise ensue.

The Governor acknowledges, in answer: "That the people's settling on Juniata was contrary to the engagements of this government to the Indians; that he had received no orders in favor of them; that they had no countenance from the government, and that no endeavors should be wanting on his part to bring the offenders to justice, and to prevent all future cause of complaint." Nothing else was done at this meeting, and the Senecas departed; but on their return they met the other deputies, and after considerable deliberations, and notwithstanding the opposition of Conrad Weiser, they all came to Philadelphia, accompanied by some Mohickans, Tutelas, Delawares, and Nanticokes, in number two hundred and eighty, about the 14th of August, 1749.

Canassatego was again the speaker. They renewed the complaints about the settlements on the unpurchased lands; that by treaties all white people were to have been hindered from settling the lands not purchased of them, and if they did, the government engaged to remove them when discovered; but since it might be attended with a great deal of trouble, and having observed the people's settlements, they were willing to give up the lands on the east side of Susquehanna, from the Blue hills to where Thomas Magee, the Indian trader lived, and leave it to the government to assign the worth of them. But as to the hunting grounds of their cousins the Nanticokes, and other Indians, living on the waters of Juniatd, they must use more vigorous measures and forcibly remove them.

On consultation and their agreement to extend the purchase so as to carry its breadth to the Delaware, the following deed was executed on the 22d day of August, 1749:

"We, Canasatago, Sataganachly, Kanalshyiacayou and Conechuadeeron, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Onontagers; Cayanockea, Kanatsany, Agash, Yass, Caruchianachaqui, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Sinickers; Peter Ontachsax, and Christian Diaryhogon, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Modocks; Saristagnoah, Watshatuhon and Anuchnaxqua, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Oneyders; Tawis Tawis, Kachnoaraaseha and Takachquontas, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Cayiukers; Tyierox, Balichwanonach-shy, sachems and chiefs of the Indian nation called the Tuscorroron; Iachnechdorus, Sagoguchiathon and Cochnoora-katack-ke, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Shomoken Indians; Nutimue and Qualpaghach, sachems or chiefs of the Indian nation called the Delawares; and Bachsinosa, sachem or chief of the Indian nation called the Shawanese, in consideration of £500, grant, sell, &c., all that tract or parcel of land lying and being within the following limits and bounds, and thus described:

Beginning at the hills or mountains called in the language of the Five Nation Indians, Tyanuntasachta, or endless hills, and by the Delaware Indians, Kekactany hills, on the east side of the river Susquehanna, being in the northwest line or boundary of the tract of land formerly purchased by the said proprietaries from the said Indian nations, by their deed of the 11th of October, 1736; and from thence running up the said river by the several courses thereof, to the first or nearest mountain to the north side or mouth of the creek, called in the language of the said Five Nation Indians, Cantaguy, and in the language of the Delaware Indians, Maghonioy, and from thence extending by a direct or straight line to be run from the said mountain on the north side of the said creek, to the main branch of the Delaware river, at the north side of the mouth of the creek called Lechawachsein, and from thence to return across Lechawachsein creek aforesaid, down the river Delaware, by the several courses thereof, to the Kekachtany hills aforesaid, and from thence by the range of said hills to the place of beginning, as more fully appears by a map annexed; and also all the parts of the rivers Susquehanna and Delaware from shore to shore, which are opposite to said lands, and all the islands in said rivers, &c."*

*See Votes of Assembly, Vol. 3 page 555.

This purchase is distinctly marked by natural boundaries, so not to be mistaken. And at this treaty the engagement was renewed, that the white people should be removed from the Juniata. Proclamations were accordingly issued, but disregarded by the settlers on the unpurchased lands. In May, 1750, Richard Peters, then Secretary of the Land Office, with some magistrates, was sent to remove them, but these proceedings appear to have had little effect. Numbers were spirited up to stay and others went and settled by them, so that in a few years, the settlements in the Indian country were more numerous and farther extended than ever.

CHAPTER XLIII.

ACTS OF THE GOVERNMENT TOWARDS THE INDIANS AND SETTLERS.—STRINGENT LAWS PASSED.

HAVING thus given a connected view of the Indian purchases, and some notices of the discontent occasioned by encroachments on the Indian lands, it is material to state the acts of the government, legislative and executive, to restrain those illegal proceedings and restore harmony between the province and the Indian tribes, and finally to show their operations upon a certain class of land titles.

The proprietors professed not to sell any lands beyond the boundaries of the purchases. If surveys were made over them, without their consent, they were illegal and void. To have departed from this principle, would have occasioned wars of the most fatal kind to the interests of the province, and would have been a violation of the most solemn engagements with the natives. The line of duty was therefore plain, and every moral and political obligation commanded them to pursue it.

By an act passed in 1700, (Chap. 30), it was enacted: "That if any person presume to buy any land of the natives, within the limits of this province and territories, without leave from the proprietaries thereof, every such bargain or purchase shall be void and of no effect." To this act there was a supplement passed, February 14th, 1729-30. (Chap. 312.)

By an act passed February 3d, 1768, (Chap. 570)—after the preamble in these words: "Whereas, many disorderly people, in violation of his Majesty's proclamation, have presumed to settle upon lands not yet purchased from the Indians, to their damage and great dissatisfaction, which may be attended with dangerous and fatal consequences to the peace and safety of this province," it was enacted, "that if any person settled on the unpurchased lands, neglected or refused to remove from the same within thirty days after they were required so to do, by persons to be appointed for that purpose by the Governor, or by his proclamation, or being so removed, should return to such settlement, or the settlement of any other person, with or without a family to remain and settle on such lands, or if any person, after such notice, resided and settled on such lands, every such person, so neglecting or refusing to remove, or returning to settle as aforesaid, or that should settle after the requisition or notice aforesaid, being legally convicted, was to be punished with death without benefit of clergy."

"But this act was not to extend to persons then, or thereafter, settled on the main roads, or communications, leading through the province to Fort Pitt, with the approbation and permission of the commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces, &c., or in the neighborhood of Fort Pitt, under such permission, or to a settlement made by George Croghan, deputy superintendent of Indian affairs, under Sir William Johnson, on the Ohio, above the said fort.

"And if any person or persons, singly or in companies, presumed to enter on any such unpurchased lands, to make surveys thereof, mark or cut down trees thereon, and should be convicted thereof, was or were to be punished by a fine of fifty pounds and three months' imprisonment."

This act was limited to one year and to the end of the next session of Assembly. On the 17th of February, 1768, an act was passed appropriating a sum of money to be applied to removing the discontent of the Indians, &c. (Chap. 571.)

And on the 18th of February, 1769, an act was passed with a similar preamble, "to punish by a fine of five hundred pounds and twelve months' imprisonment, any person or persons who, singly or in companies, should presume to settle upon any lands within the boundaries of the province, not purchased of the Indians, or who should make or cause any survey to be made of any part thereof, or mark or cut down trees thereon, with design to settle or appropriate the same to his own, or to the use of any other person," &c.

This act, being without limitation, expired on the extinguishment of all the Indian titles.

CONTROVERSY RESPECTING THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE PROVINCE OF PENNSYLVANIA AND MARYLAND.*

This controversy was of early and long standing. It was not rendered less difficult and tedious by the situation of the parties, and even after an agreement by the respective proprietaries, to adjust their limits, nearly thirty years were passed in expensive litigation before the controversy could be terminated. The history of this dispute, and the papers and records respecting it, could not be brought within the compass of this article. They would of themselves form a "considerable" volume. Extracts are, however, here furnished, sufficient to give an understanding of the border titles. In any other point of view than as they affect the landed interest of the country, they have, from the lapse of time, and a settled boundary, become unimportant.

By the charter, Mr. Penn's grant was to be bounded on the north by the beginning of the three and fortieth degree of northern latitude, and on the south by a circle drawn at twelve miles distance from Newcastle northward, and westward unto the beginning of the fortieth degree of northern latitude, and then by a straight line westward, &c.

The Lord Baltimore insisted that the whole fortieth degree of north latitude was included in his charter, which was prior in point of time. Mr. Penn insisted that Lord Baltimore was precluded by a recital in his charter that the lands was uncultivated and possessed by barbarians; whereas it was not so, but possessed by Dutch and Swedes, and therefore the King was deceived in his grant. The early part of this controversy, especially respecting the three lower counties, now the State of

*This deed is recorded May 6th, 1752, in book H, vol. 2, p. 204.

*Laws of Pennsylvania, Bioren edition, 1810.

Delaware, may be seen in the beginning of the first volume of the votes of assembly. A principal difficulty was also made concerning the circle of twelve miles to be drawn about New Castle and the true situation of Cape Henlopen.

In order to bring this dispute, which had been then depending nearly fifty years, an agreement was entered into between Charles Lord Baltimore and John Penn, Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, Esquires, May 10th, 1732, which recited several matters as introductory to the stipulation between the parties, particularly the respective charters, and the title derived from James, Duke of York, to the three lower counties by two feoffments, dated 24th of August. That several controversies had been between the parties concerning the boundaries and limits of the two provinces and three lower counties. They then make a particular provision for settling them by drawing part of a circle about the town of Newcastle, and a line to ascertain the boundaries, &c., and a provision, in what manner, that circle and line should be run and be drawn. Commissioners were to be appointed for that purpose, who were to begin work in the month of October following, and complete the same on or before the 25th of December, 1733.

On the 24th of November, 1733, the commissioners on both sides reported, that having used their endeavors towards the execution of the articles of agreement, they had respectively broken up, as they differed in running the circle from Newcastle, the Pennsylvania commissioners insisting that the circle should begin twelve English statute miles from Newcastle, and the Maryland commissioners insisting that the periphery of the circle to be run should be twelve miles, whose diameter would be somewhat less than four miles from Newcastle.

On the 25th of May, 1738, the royal order issued, founded on the agreement of the proprietaries of Pennsylvania and Maryland before the committee of council. It recites the first royal order made on the 18th of August, 1737, that "the respective Governor's should not make grants of any parts of the lands in contest, nor permit any person to settle there, or even attempt to make a settlement, until his Majesty's pleasure should be signified.

In the third section of the agreement previous to the royal order of 25th of May, 1738, there is this clause: "All lands in contest between the said proprietors now possessed by, or under either of them, shall remain in possession as they now are, although beyond the temporary limits hereinafter mentioned. The respective jurisdiction to continue over such lands, until the final boundaries shall be settled, and the tenants of either side not to attorn to each other, nor the respective proprietaries to accept of such attornments."

The king took the report of the committee council into consideration, and approved of the agreement of the proprietaries, and by the advice of the privy council, ordered the same to be carried into execution.

In the year 1739, the temporary line was run between the two provinces.

Mason and Dixon's line was run in the years 1767 and 1768, and the agreement and proceedings therein were approved and ratified by the King, by his order in council, on the 11th day of January, 1769, and the proclamations of the respective proprietaries to quiet the settlers, &c., were issued in 1774. That of Pennsylvania bears date the 15th of September, 1774, (council books, U. page 466).

The agreement of 1760 which provided for the specific execution of the agreement of 1732, &c., was enrolled in chancery in England. The original is now on file with the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

CHAPTER XLIV.

HON. JOHN MOORE, THE FIRST PRESIDENT JUDGE OF WESTMORELAND COUNTY—DELEGATES FROM WESTMORELAND COUNTY TO FORM THE CONSTITUTION OF PENNSYLVANIA IN 1776—JOHN MOORE SERVES AS A MEMBER OF THE COMMITTE OF PUBLIC SAFETY—A BRIEF SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND FAMILY.

AT the commencement of the colonial rebellion, John Moore was engaged in clearing out and cultivating a farm of four hundred and fifty acres, on the Crabtree run, a branch of the Loyalhanna, two miles southeast of New Alexandria. A comfortable stone dwelling, still in pretty good condition, marked the place of his residence, and indicated a man in advance of the rude civilization of that day.

His wife was a daughter of Isaac Parr, of the State of New Jersey. They had one child. These, together with several colored servants, constituted his household at that time. He was at that period, about thirty-seven years of age.

His first appearance in public life was as a delegate from the county of Westmoreland to the convention which met at Philadelphia on the 15th of July, 1776, to form a constitution and frame a government for the State of Pennsylvania. A committee of conference, of eminent citizens of the State, met at Carpenter's Hall, in Philadelphia, on the 18th of June, 1776, to make the necessary arrangements for calling a convention to form a constitution and frame of government upon the separation of the colonies from England. The people were invoked, by the committee of conference, "to choose such persons only to act for them in the ensuing convention as are distinguished for wisdom, integrity, and a firm attachment to the liberties of this province."

In pursuance of the recommendation of the committee, delegates were chosen on the 8th of July, 1776, and the eight delegates to the convention elected for Westmoreland county were John Moore, Edward Cook, James Perry, James Barr, James Smith, John Carmichael, John McClellan, and Christopher Lavingair.

In the convention, John Moore was placed on the committee to draw up a declaration or bill of rights, and also on the committee to report a plan or constitution of government.

The convention selected "a Council of Safety to exercise the whole of the executive powers of government, so far as relates to the military defence and safety of the province," which consisted of the following persons: David Rittenhouse, John Moore, Owen Biddle, James Cannon, Joseph Blewor, Frederick Kuhl, Col. John Bull, Timothy Matlick, Samuel Morris, B. Bartholomew, Thomas Wharton, Henry Kepples, John Weitzel, John Hubly, Henry Wyncoop, George Gray, John Bayard, Francis Gurney, Joseph Donaldson and William Lyon.

On the 30th of September, John Moore returned to Westmoreland. During the time he was in session with the Council of Safety, he procured for the defence of Westmoreland county, about four hundred pounds sterling, half a ton of rifle powder, one ton of lead and four thousand flints. In 1777, he was commissioned a justice of the peace, and about the same time was appointed Surveyer of the Public Lands in Westmoreland county.

In 1779 he was commissioned one of the judges of the several courts of Westmoreland county, and in 1785, appointed President Judge of the same county. No appointment was made for Westmoreland county until the 24th of October of that year. Col. Rec. Vol. XIV, p. 516. His commission bore date on the day following, and is recorded in the Register's Office, in Book A, p. 544. He was succeeded in the fall of 1791 by the Hon. Alexander Addison.

After Judge Moore retired from the bench, he was elected for two terms to the State Senate from the Senatorial district of Allegheny and Westmoreland.

He was born in Lancaster county. His father, Wm. Moore, died when he was but a boy; and afterwards his mother, Jeannette Moore, and her son, in company with her brothers, Charles Wilson, Esq., and John Wilson, removed to the district of Westmoreland county.

What his opportunities for an education were are not known. He wrote a good hand, and in language and orthography, his composition indicated a man of strong, vigorous, and clear intellect. After his mother had removed to Westmoreland county, she was again married to James Guthrie, of Greensburg, by whom she had several children, one of whom, named James, was afterwards Sheriff of Westmoreland county.

John Moore had four daughters and two sons, all of whom are now deceased. One of his sons was afterwards county surveyor. The other died in Kentucky, while engaged as principal civil engineer in the location of a railroad. His daughters, who were all ladies of fine personal appearance and intelligence, were respectively married to Major John Kirkpatrick, a merchant of Greensburg; John M. Snowden, editor of the Farmer's Register, in Greensburg, afterwards editor of the Pittsburgh Mercury, and later in life, Mayor of the City of Pittsburgh, one of the associate judges of Allegheny county, and at one time, the nominee of the democratic party for Congress, in the Allegheny district. Another was married to the Rev. Frencis Laird, D. D., and the last to James McJunkin, a respectable farmer.

All these ladies lived until they were over eighty years old, in the enjoyment of perfect health and sound constitutions, and were, throughout a long life, worthy examples of the highest standard of female propriety.

John Moore, in personal appearance, was a man full six feet high, very straight and erect; had large brown eyes, brown hair, and nose rather aquiline. A gentleman who met him in his own house for the first time in 1798, has left the following description of his appearance, and the impression he made on his mind at first sight and afterwards: "A tall gentleman, of erect and manly form, whose intelligent countenance and strikingly expressive eye, indicated a man of more than ordinary ability. He was then about sixty years old, and the rough buffeting of a frontier life, had left a slight shade of sternness over a countenance at all times dignified. He was extremely correct in his habits, unbending in his course, stern in his commands, but remarkable for his affection to his children; and although generally mild, was notwithstanding possessed of a great deal of temper, being deeply sensitive, and having a high sense of honor."

John Moore died in 1811, in the seventy-third year of his age, honored and respected by all good men who knew him, and his body was buried at Congruity Church. His widow survived him for many years.

For many years he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, at Congruity, and was acting in such capacity when chosen a delegate to the Convention which framed the first Constitution.

By his will, he set free the older of his colored servants, and allowed the younger ones to serve an apprenticeship with any of his children they might choose.

CHAPTER XLV.

THE LOSS OF HENRY SHRYOCK IN THE YEAR 1818.*

WE shall now notice an extraordinary incident which at the time of its occurrence, excited the deepest interest in the community.

The reader no doubt remembers that in a preceding chapter the name of Henry Shryock was mentioned in connection with the first improvements of the site whereon the borough of Indiana is now built, and that he stood conspicuous among the enterprising men of that period. Upon the organization of the county and location of the seat of justice, emigration was attracted hither from the more populous communities of the State, and during the ensuing ten or twelve years quite a number of improvements were made at different points in the new county.

But eastward from the county town, the settlers were "few and far between," and beyond them lay an unbroken forest, extending to the banks of the Susquehanna, into which only the most fearless and experienced hunters would occasionally penetrate, when in quest of valuable game, such as elk, deer, bears and panthers. The less experienced and persons unused to the woods, seldom ventured away from the few paths and streams with which they were familiar, and then only when two or more went out together.

On the 27th of June, 1818, Henry Shryock and Joseph Parker started from Indiana to the Susquehanna river, on a hunting excursion, and were joined on their way by Peter Gordon, who resided in what is now Cherryhill township. After the party had reached the hunting grounds near the river, they erected a camp, and then Parker and Gordon started for a lick to watch for deer, leaving Shyrock at the encampment, to take care of the horses and prepare breakfast the next morning, after which he was to follow them to the lick, when they would determine upon their movements for the ensuing day.

Shryock, in pursuance of this arrangement, left the camp in the morning and proceeded in the direction of the lick. In crossing a small ravine, the horse on which he rode made a leap, by which a blanket which had been placed on the saddle, was thrown off without being noticed at the time. Discovering the loss of the blanket after having proceeded some distance from the ravine, Shryock tied his horses by their bridles and started back on foot in search of the missing article. The path by which he had come not being very distinct, he lost it, but soon found it again as he supposed.

After walking a considerable distance he discovered that he was in a wrong path, and in trying to regain the one from which he had diverged, he came to a large fallen tree elevated several feet from the ground. Being considerably excited and anxious to make up for lost time, he pressed forward in great haste, without regard to obstacles that came in his way. In crossing the fallen tree, he found himself suddenly among a number of rattle-snakes that were lying on a broken-off limb, one of which hissed so near his ear that he thought at first it had bitten him. By the time he had recovered from the alarm caused by the rattle-snakes, Shryock was completely bewildered, and instead of taking the direction he should have done, unfortunately took a course that led him still farther from the path he was trying to regain.

Parker and Gordon waited at the lick a long time, and then started toward the camp to see what was detaining their comrade. Coming to where the horses were tied, and discovering that a blanket was missing, they conjectured at once that Shryock had turned back in search of it. Following his trail until they come upon the rattlesnakes, several of which they shot, and perceiving from the trail through the grass and weeds that Shryock was still pursuing a wrong course, Parker and Gordon followed after until they came to the river, where they lost all trace of him.

After searching two or three days without success, they returned to Indiana with the intelligence that Shryock had lost himself in the woods. This intelligence spread rapidly through the town and country, and a large number of the citizens immediately turned out in search of the missing man. After scouring the woods for nine days without success, a consultation was had, at which it was determined to form the men into two companies, who were to go in different directions.

*Jonathan Row, Indiana Register, January 24th, 1860.

It was agreed that if either party came up with Shryock they should signal to the others by discharging their rifles in rapid succession. Captain Meek Kelly and John Evans, Esq., however, separated from the rest, thinking they might make more progress in that way. The several parties prosecuted the search during the day without making any discoveries until toward evening, when Kelly and Evans came upon a trail that had been made through the weeds, but whether it was the trail of a man or some wild beast they could not tell. Following it, however, they at length espied the lost man, who was moving slowly, having a staff in each hand.

They stepped behind a tree so as not to alarm him by their sudden appearance, but he saw them, and called on them to come to him. They promptly advanced to his assistance, and after exchanging a few words, one of them commenced firing his gun in pursuance of the agreement entered into with the other parties in the morning, while the other engaged in building a fire. On hearing the signal, the other parties all came in that evening. Shryock, after being rested a little, and having taken some nourishment, recognized all the men, naming each one as he came up. The spot where he was first discovered by Kelly and Evans was near a small stream that enters the Susquehanna, some distance below the cherry tree, in Montgomery township, which is still known as "Shryock's run."

In crossing a run on the morning of the day on which he was found, Shryock fell and broke two of his ribs, which caused him great pain. His shoes had been worn out, and in his feet were a number of thorns, the points of some coming out on the upper side. He stated that some of the dogs belonging to the companies in search, had come to him several times, but always left again, though he tried to retain them; and at another time he heard the dogs not far off, and thought they were wolves. One day he came across a mare and foal, and tried to catch the mare, but the foal being very wild, both ran away. In pursuing them he took off his coat and hung it up at a hunter's camp, but was unable to find it again. The day after Shryock was found, the company took him to Robert McKissick's, about ten miles from here, and supplied him with clothing; and in the course of the afternoon he reached his home, on horseback,* one of the party having furnished a horse for him to ride.

From a paper called the American, published in this borough, by James McCahan, we copy the following paragraph under date of July 13th, 1818:

"THE LOST MAN FOUND.—We have great pleasure in announcing that Mr. Henry Shryock was found, alive, on Thursday evening last, about four miles from the Cherry Tree. His appearance, when found, was wretched and frightful in the extreme; he was crawling along, with a stick in each hand, in a state of mental derangement, his body and limbs entirely destitute of clothing, except a small remnant of his shirt, which hung round his shoulders, and had neither hat, shoes or stockings on; his feet and legs were dreadfully lacerated and swollen.

"From his great debility of body, having been in the wilderness eleven days and eleven nights, without any subsistence but that obtained from berries, he could not have survived much longer. He reached his own house, in this borough, on Friday evening, perfectly sane in mind and in good spirits, and we have no doubt but that in a few days he will be entirely recovered.

"Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the citizens of this borough generally, and on Captain Meek Kelly and John Evans, Esq, for the lively interest which they took in the fate of this man, and the great bodily fatigue they underwent in their endeavors to find him, many of them being out five, six, seven and nine days, and as many nights, in that inhospitable country."

Notwithstanding his great sufferings in his wanderings and his exhausted condition when he was found, Shryock soon recovered his wonted health and activity, and lived to the age of seventy. He died January 30th, 1836.

Though sixty-two years have elapsed since that remarkable occurrence, there are still living many individuals who then resided in this borough or vicinity.

*They improvised a flag out of blankets, &c., on this occasion.

CHAPTER XLVI.

A HISTORY OF THE MEDICAL PROFESSION OF INDIANA COUNTY—THE COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY—A REPORT TO THE STATE MEDICAL SOCIETY, EMBRACING LOCALITY, HYDROGRAPHY, TOPOGRAPHY, GEOLOGY, METEREOLOGY, PREVALENT DISEASES, &C.

IN attempting to give a history of the Medical Profession of Indiana County, from its organization to the present time, I cannot but feel conscious of obstacles. Apart from the feelings of diffidence, I am aware of the many difficulties connected with an undertaking of this kind in a county like Indiana, stretched over three-fourths of a century. Without a history or any permanent records of the names of the physicians; and, as a rule, not the most permanently settled class of men. I am also fully conscious of the caution which the historian should assume, and with all his pains to make a list complete, and to do justice to all the members of the profession, his best efforts will be severely criticised, and will be charged with many omissions.

In examining the history of the medical profession of Indiana county, I observed that a number of them practiced their profession in different parts of the country. In order to make my historical sketches more convenient, I will give the principal part of each one's history, his first place of settlement, and as I pass on through the towns and villages alphabetically, will only mention date of location at that place.

Dr. Samuel Talmage, or, as the early assessors spelled the name, Tamage, was the first physician of whom we have any history, to practice medicine in the territory, that now belongs to Indiana county. He resided at Newport when the county was laid out, and owned property in that place. His practice extended over a large field on both sides of the Conemaugh river. Sometimes he visited the scattered families that lived near where the town of Indiana now stands, before the county was organized or the county seat located. We have very little knowledge of his early history or education. He moved from Newport into Westmoreland county, where he spent the last part of his life.

Dr. Reed, of Westmoreland county, occasionally visited families on the north side of the Conemaugh river, before there were permanently settled physicians in the county. His visits were mostly in the neighborhood where Blairsville now stands.

Dr. George Hays, a native of New England, where he received his education, literary and medical, located in the county of Indiana about the time of its organization. He boarded with General Campbell, near Campbell's Mills, on Blacklick creek, for a number of years, and with a Mr. Repine, in the same neighborhood, and at a later date with Joseph Turner, two miles east of Jacksonville.

His practice extended over a large and sparsely settled territory, from Cambria county on the south-east to Armstrong on the west. He moved to the neighborhood of Greensburg, Westmoreland county, and remained there till his death.

ARMAGH.

We have very little history of the first Physicians in Armagh. Dr. John Young, was the first. Dr. Vanhorn and Dr. Andrew Getty, succeeded Young. As to their early history or date of their location, we have no data.

Dr. Samuel F. Devlin, a native of Ireland, came to this country at an early age; was educated partly by private tutors; studied Medicine with Dr. Emerson, and located in Armagh, over sixty years ago, and practiced his profession until a short time before his death. He died in the vicinity of Armagh, about 1842 or 1843.

Dr. Frank Young, a son of the Hon. John Young, of Greensburg, Westmoreland county, after a thorough preparatory education, studied medicine and settled in Armagh, shortly after Dr. Devlin located there, and practiced there for several years. He then went to Scotland, where he remained till his death. Dr. Young was a man of more than ordinary literary attainments. After he settled in Scotland, he became a member of a number of the most learned scientific societies in that country.

Dr. —— Hay, a native of York, Pennsylvania, where he was educated and studied medicine. He located in Armagh over fifty years ago, and practiced medicine there for a number of years. He removed to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1837 or 1838, and practiced his profession till his death.

Dr. George W. Gettys, settled in Armagh in 1838, and practiced there about one year, and moved back to Indiana. (See Indiana.)

Dr. Wm. G. Stewart, was born in Brush valley township, Indiana county, Pennsylvania, in 1826—received his preparatory education at Indiana Academy—studied medicine with Dr. Jas. M. Stuart, of Indiana; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and located in Armagh, in 1840, and practiced medicine there till his death in 1851.

Dr. William Altman, was raised in Indiana, and educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Stuart of Indiana—graduted at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia—located in Armagh, in 1847 and remained there about one year; moved to Punxutawney, Jefferson county, Pennsylvania; practiced there till 1853, when he moved to Indiana, and practiced there till the early part of the year 1854, when he returned to Punxutawney, where he continues to practice his profession. He was Surgeon of the 28th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, during the late rebillion.

Dr. Crawford Irvin, a native of Blair county, Pa., graduated at Jefferson College, Cononsburg, Pa., studied medicine with Dr. Landis, in Hollidaysburg, Blair county, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, 1847, located at Davidsville, Blair county, remained there a short time, moved to Armagh, Indiana county, Pa., 1848, and practiced there till the spring of 1849, then he spent a few months in Johnstown, Cambria county, then moved to Frankstown, Blair county, and remained there till 1854, when he moved to Hollidaysburg, where he now practices his profession.

Dr. A. J. Clark, a native of Wheatfield township, was educated at Armagh and studied medicine with Dr. Wm. G. Stewart, graduated at Franklin Medical College, Philadelphia, and located in Armagh in 1849, where he practiced a few years, then moved to New Florence, Westmoreland county, Pa., where he resides at present.

Dr. Samuel F. Stewart, a native of Brush valley township, was educated at the Blairsville Academy, and studied medicine with his brother Wm. G. Stewart, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Pa., located in Armagh in 1850, and practiced in that place till 1857, when he died.

Dr. McGowen moved to Armagh from Westmoreland county in 1851, remained there about a year and moved back to his former residence.

Dr. James D. McClure moved to Armagh in 1853 and practiced there about a year, then moved west, (see West Lebanon).

Dr. Robert J. Lamb, a native of East Wheatfield township, educated at the Indiana Academy, studied medicine with Dr. James Taylor, of Fairfield, Westmoreland county, Pa., graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, settled in Armagh in 1854, where he has continued the practice of his profession till the present time. He served as an assistant surgeon during part of the late wars.

Dr. Robert Barrs, a native of Cherryhill township, was educated at the Indiana Academy, studied medicine with Dr. W. B. Stewart, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located in Armagh in 1854, where he practiced his profession till 1859, when he removed to Indiana, where he resides at present. In 1861 he was appointed surgeon of the 67th Reg. Pa. Vol., and after serving in that position for a short time was appointed division surgeon, which position he held until his term of service expired.

Dr. Benjamin F. Lamb, a native of East Wheatfield township, educated in Armagh, studied medicine with his brother Dr. R. J. Lamb, and graduated at the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio. He located at Chest Springs, Cambria county, Pa., in 1862, and practiced his profession there about eighteen months, then moved to Armagh in the fall of 1863, and practiced his profession there till 1867, when he moved to Mechanicsburg, where he now resides.

Dr. George M. Gamble, moved to Armagh, January, 1859—remained nearly one year, and returned to Cherry Tree. (See Cherry Tree.)

Dr. Wallace B. Stewart, moved to Armagh, from Greenville, in 1859, and practiced his profession there till his death, in 1875. (See Greenville.)

Dr. Andrew Johnston, an old practitioner from Hollidaysburg, Blair county, moved to Armagh, late in life, and practiced there a few years. He died there in 1876.

Dr. J. McCurdy, a native of Indiana county, studied medicine with Dr. Miller, of Blairsville—attended a course of lectures. Located at Big Run, Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, in 1870; moved from there to Parnassus, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, then to Armagh, in 1875; remained there about a year, and moved to Dravosburg, opposite McKeesport, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania.

Drs. Crawford and A. J. Souther, settled in Armagh, but did do stay long enough to get into business.

BLACK LICK.

Dr. Thomas McMullen, a native of Centre Township, Indiana county, was educated at the Academies in the county; studied medicine with his brother Jas. McMullin—graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia—located at Black Lick, in 1853, and practiced his profession there till the fall of 1854, when he moved to Mechanicsburgh, and in 1856, moved to Monmouth, Illinois; remained there near a year, and returned to Mechanicsburg, and remained there till 1858, then moved to Greenville, where he practices his profession. He represented Indiana county in the legislature, during the years 1872 and 1873.

Dr. T. P. Simpson, came from Beaver county to Black Lick, for manufacturing purposes, about 1870. After spending a few years at the place, the community pressed him at times, into the practice of medicine. After serving them a few years, he moved to East Liberty, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Samuel L. Wiggins, was raised in the vicinity of Shelocta, and was educated at Elderton Academy. He studied medicine with Dr. T. J. Marlin, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, He practiced his profession about two years at Livermore, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and in 1875, located at Black Lick, where he resides at present.

BLAIRSVILLE.

Dr. Edward P. Emerson, was a native of Ireland, and received his education, literary and medical, in his native country, and then emigrated to the United States, and settled, first at Ebensburg, Cambria county, Pennsylvania, where he practiced his profession for several years. He then moved to Indiana county, and located at Campbell's Mills, on Black Lick creek, where he practiced over a large district of the thinly settled county, at that day. He boarded with General Campbell, when he first came to the county, and afterwards at a hotel that stood where Smith's station is at present, on the Pennsylvania railroad. While at this place, the town of Blairsville was laid out. As soon as they commenced to build in Blairsville, in 1819, he moved into the town and practiced medicine there and in the surrounding country till his death, in 1861. He was the first physician in Blairsville, and stood high professionally.

Drs. Simmons and Craighead settled in Blairsville in 1820, and practiced medicine in partnership for a short time and then left. We have no reliable history of these physicians.

Dr. Duffield located in Blairsville with practice of his profession in 1827. He died there in 1828.

Dr. Robert J. Marshall, a native of Green Castle, Franklin county, Pa., was educated in his native county. He located in Blairsville in 1827, and has continued in the practice of his profession in that place till the present time. Dr. Marshall is the oldest practioneer of medicine in the county at this date.

Dr. Gillespie located in Blairsville a short time after Dr. Marshall, but did not remain long.

Dr. Samuel P. Brown practiced a short time with Dr. Emerson.

Dr. John Gilpin, a native of Maryland, where he received his preparatory education, studied medicine with Dr. Emerson, attended lectures and practiced a short time in Blairsville. He then removed to Kittanning, Armstrong county, Pa., where he practiced a number of years. He removed to Punxsutawney, Jefferson county, in 1849, and practiced his profession there a few years, then returned to Cecil county, Maryland, where he died about thirteen years ago.

Dr. Andrews settled in Blairsville about 1840, remained a short time—no history.

Dr. Robert M. S. Jackson, a native of Huntingdon county, Pa. graduated at the Jefferson College, Cononsburg — studied medicine and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1838. He practiced medicine a short time in Huntingdon and Blair counties, then removed to Blairsville, Indiana county, about 1842, where he practiced his profession till 1852. He moved to Cresson and took an active part in making that place a health resort in the summer season, and remained there till 1861, when he entered the army as surgeon of the 23d, Reg. Pa. Vol., and was afterwards appointed Medical Inspector of the 23d army corps, and at the time of his death was acting medical director of the department of Ohio. He published a work several years ago called "The Mountain." He was a member of the "Pennsylvania Geological Commission;" was a member of the "American Philosophical Society," and the "Academy of Natural Sciences." He died at Chattanooga, Tenn., January 28th, 1865.

Drs. Hammell and Gemmill settled in Blairsville over thirty years ago, but soon moved away.

Dr. Wyley practiced a short time in Blairsville, but retired from medicine and entered the University. I believe he is Bishop in the M. E. Church.

Dr. McKim is a native of the Juniata valley, where he was educated and studied medicine. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania; located in Blairsville in 1848, and remained there a few years.

Dr. Fundenberg, of Westmoreland county, located in Blairsville about 1848, but removed to Somerset, Pennsylvania, in a short time.

Dr. Martin L. Miller, a native of Indiana county, studied medicine with Dr. E. P. Emerson. Graduated at Franklin Medical College, Philadelphia, 1848. Located in Blairsville, and has continued the practice of his profession in the same place till the present time.

Dr. Campbell, a practitioner from Huntingdon county, settled in Blairsville about 1850; moved in a short time to the neighborhood of Greensburg, where he died.

Dr. Anawalt, now of Greensburg, spent a short time in Blairsville before he located in his present situation.

Dr. T. M. Laney practiced his profession in Blairsville from 1853 till 1865. (See Georgeville.)

Dr. Terena J. Cantwell was raised and educated at Blairsville. He studied medicine with Dr. Emerson; graduated at the University of Pennsylvania; settled in Youngstown, Westmoreland county, 1845, and practiced there till about 1854. He moved to Blairsville, where he practiced till his death, about 1865.

Dr. Frank M. McConnoughey, a native of Westmoreland county, was educated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg; studied medicine with his brother, Dr. James McConnoughey; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and located at West Newton, Westmoreland county, in 1846, where he practiced medicine a number of years. He then moved to Chillicothe, Ohio, and remained there a few years, and settled in Blairsville about 1862, and practiced medicine there till 1873. He moved to Mount Washington, then to Greensburg, and resides now at Wilkinsburg, Allegheny county.

Dr. John W. Hughes, a native of Punxsutawney, Jefferson county; educated at Glade Run Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Johnston, of Punxsutawney; graduated at the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery in 1861, and was appointed assistant surgeon of the 5th Cavalry Regiment, Pennsylvania, and held this position for two years. He located at Leechburg, Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, where he practiced about two years, then moved to Blairsville in 1865, where he now resides.

Dr. S. R. Rutledge, a native of Westmoreland county. He received a good academic education; studied medicine with Dr. Banks, of Livermore, his native place; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He practiced at Livermore, Westmoreland county, during 1868 and 1869, then moved to Bransfields, Allegheny county, and in 1871 moved to Blairsville, where he now resides, practicing his profession.

Dr. L. S. Claggett, a native of Baltimore, where he was raised and educated, and studied medicine, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Penn's Station, Westmoreland county, and practiced there a few years. In 1877 he moved to Blairsville, where he has been regularly engaged in the practice of his profession to this date.

CENTREVILLE.

Dr. Liggett, a native of Scotland, was educated at the literary and medical departments of the University of Glasgow. He imigrated to the United States about 1842, and located at Centreville and practiced his profession there till 1846. His health commenced to fail and he thought a sea voyage might be beneficial, but his trip across the Atlantic did not improve his condition, and when he reached his native place he was too weak to return, and died in a few months.

Dr. Joseph McBeth, a native of Cherry Hill township, was educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Stewart; attended a course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Centreville in 1848, and practiced there about a year, and then moved to Ohio. He is now at Galena, O.

Dr. James Taylor, a native of Wheatfield township, was educated at Blairsville Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Emerson; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, settled at Centreville in 1849 and practiced there a few years and then moved to Fairfield, Westmoreland county, Pa., where he now resides. He represented Westmoreland county in the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1863 and 1864.

Dr. William Caldwell, a native of Indiana borough, where he was educated; learned the printing business and followed it for several years. He was one of the editors of the Appalachian, a paper published at Blairsville for a number of years, the firm being Mathias & Caldwell. He retired from the editorial business and studied medicine with Dr. Johnston, in Punxsutawney; attended a course of lectures, and located at Centreville in 1853, and practiced medicine about a year. He then moved to Blairsville and went into the drug and apothecary business; remained there for a few years and moved to Johnstown, where he is at present engaged in the mercantile business.

CHERRY TREE.

Dr. William A. Piatt, a native of Lycoming county, was educated at the Williamsport Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Thomas Lyon; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and located at the Cherry Tree in 1849. He was the first physician that settled at the Cherry Tree. He practiced his profession about four years, then moved to Vinton, Benton county, Iowa, and lived there one year. He then returned to the Cherry Tree and continued to practice his profession till his death, in 1860.

Dr. Joseph H. Ake practiced medicine at the Cherry Tree from 1853 to 1855. (See Gettysburg.)

Dr. George McGamble, a native of Susquehanna county, educated at Harvard College. Studied medicine with Dr. George F. Horton, of Tarrytown, Bradford county; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1848; practiced medicine a few years in his native county; moved to the Cherry Tree about 1855 and practiced till January, 1859. He then moved to Armagh, practiced there about a year and moved to New Milford, Susquehanna county.

Dr. A. R. Lovelace was raised and educated near Harrisburg, and was a practitioner of medicine before he came to the county. He located at the Cherry Tree about 1856, and practiced his profession until 1869, when he moved to the State of Indiana. He returned to Cookport in 1870, and practiced a short time, then returned to the Cherry Tree and remained till 1878, when he moved to the Pine Flat, where he is practicing his profession.

Dr. James Kelly moved to the Cherry Tree in 1859, and practiced there about two years. (See Taylorsville.)

Dr. James T. Adair settled at the Cherry Tree in 1861, and practiced about a year in that place. (See Indiana.)

Dr. Adam C. Wassam, a native of Indiana county, was educated and studied medicine in Darke county, Ohio. He graduated at the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery; located at the Cherry Tree about 1867; practiced his profession at this place for five or six years, and then moved to Eureka, Kansas, where he now resides.

Dr. Emanuel Brallier, a native of Cambria county, was educated at the best schools in his native county. He studied medicine with Dr. Bunn, of Ebensburg; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at the Cherry Tree in 1868, and has continued the practice of his profession there till the present time.

Dr. William Hosack moved to the Cherry Tree in 1879, and practices medicine there at the present time. (See West Lebanon.)

CLARKSBURG.

Dr. Samuel M. Ogden, a native of Westmoreland county, was educated at Eldersridge Academy and Jefferson College, Canonsburg; studied medicine with Dr. James Taylor; graduated at Castleton Medical College, Vermont; located at Clarksburg in 1857, and was the first physician in that place. He did not remain there long; he went to California and spent a few years there, and returned and settled at Latrobe. He then moved to Ohio. He returned to his native county, settled at Pleasant Unity, and died there very suddenly.

Dr. James H. Bell, a native of Westmoreland county, was educated at the Blairsville Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Clackburn, at New Derry; graduated at Castleton Medical College, Vermont; located in Clarksburg, 1852, and practiced his profession there a few years. He then moved to Eldersridge; remained there a short time; moved to Butler, and went into the drug and apothecary business. He finally retired from that business, and is engaged in the mercantile business at Blacklick at the present time.

Dr. Bolinger lived in Clarksburg a short time. He moved to Illinois, and then returned to Kittanning, Pa.

Dr. John McNutt settled in Clarksburg about 1864 and practiced there a short time. (See Georgeville).

Dr. Thomas J. Marlin, a native of Washington township, was educated at Glade Run Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Robert McChesney and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He located first at Clarksburg in 1865, and practiced his profession there for a short time, then moved to Allegheny county, and in 1870 moved to Shelocta, where he is practicing his profession at present.

Dr. Bruce L. Calhoun, a native of Armstrong township, was educated at select schools in the vicinity of his native place; studied medicine with Dr. Virtue and attended lectures at Cincinnati. He located at Clarksburg in 1869, and practiced there about a year; then moved to Unity, Allegheny county, and in a short time to Parnasses, Westmoreland county, Pa., where he resides at present.

Dr. R. M. Orr, a native of Armstrong township, studied medicine in the State of Indiana; lectured at Clarksburg in 1874; practiced about a year there and moved to Mercer county, where he resides at present.

COOKPORT.

Dr. A. H. Allison, a native of East Mahoning township, was educated at Dayton Academy; studied medicine with Dr. McEwen; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College; located at Cookport in 1866, and practiced there till 1877, when he returned to his early home in Mahoning township. He was the first physician at Cookport.

Dr. A. R. Lovelace settled in Cookport in 1870, and practiced his profession there for a short time. (See Cherry Tree).

Dr. Evans, a practioner from Cambria county, Pa., settled in Cookport in 1875 and has practiced medicine there till the present time.

Dr. Orlando C. Stewart, a native of Greensville, was educated at Armagh; studied medicine with Dr. R. J. Lamb; graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore; located at Cookport in 1877 and practices his profession there.

COVODE.

Dr. David M. Marshall, a native of Conemaugh township, was educated at the Jacksonville Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Mabon; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Covode in 1850, where he practiced his profession till 1853. He then moved to Congruity, Westmoreland county, and in a short time to Salem, in the same county, and then to Ohio. In 1860 he returned to Indiana county and settled at Homer City and remained there till 1864, when he moved to Marion and practiced there till 1872. He then moved to Allegheny county, where he resides at present. In 1862 he was appointed surgeon of the 177th Reg. P. V., and served one year. He represented the county of Indiana in the Pennsylvania Legislature during the years 1868 and 1869.

Dr. J. Miller Shields, a native of Rayne Township, was educated at the Marion Institute, and studied medicine with Dr. Thompson. He was a member of Company B., 11th Regular Pennsylvania Reserves for three years, and was Hospital Steward of the 206th Regular Pennsylvania Volunteers one year. He graduated at the Albany Medical College, N. Y., and located at Smithfield, in 1866, and remained there one year. In 1867, he settled at Covode, where he continued to practice till 1877, when he removed to New Mexico, and is engaged in Missionary work, at present.

Dr. Winfield S. Shields, practiced during 1877, in Covode, and then returned to Marion. (See Marion.)

DIAMONDVILLE.

Dr. James D. Baldwin, practiced in Diamondville, and vicinity, from 1846 to 1851, when he removed to Allegheny City, Pennsylvania. (See Marion.)

DIXONVILLE.

Dr. John Buchan, a native of Westmoreland county, was educated at the select schools of Two Lick and Taylorsville; studied medicine and attended lectures at Ann Arbor, Michigan. Located at Dixonville in 1868, and continued to practice there till his death, in 1875.

Dr. John B. Green, a native of Cherry Hill township, was raised in Altoona; studied medicine with Dr. Sloane, at Chest Springs, Cambria county; attended lectures at Cincinnati; located in Dixonville, in 1877, where he practices his profession at the present time.

GEORGEVILLE.

Dr. P. P. Rich, a native of Connecticut, received his education in his native state, and was past the meridian of life when he came to this county. He was the first physician that settled in the vicinity of Georgeville—perhaps about 1828—and lived on different farms while he remained in that part of the county. He is represented as being a remarkably fine scholar, but was in limited circumstances, and had to labor under many disadvantages. He was not appreciated as a physician by the people as much as he would have been, had he been in the possession of the means to secure a good outfit, and devote his time exclusively to his profession. He moved to one of the western states about 1836.

Dr. T. M. Laney, a native of Maryland, where he was educated, studied medicine with Dr. Goodhart, of Dayton, Armstrong county, and graduated at the Medical Department of the University of Maryland, at Baltimore. He located in Georgeville, in 1851, and remained there till 1853, when he moved to Blairsville, and practiced his profession there till 1865, when he moved to Savannah, Missouri. He was surgeon of the 206th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers one year.

Dr. W. L. Morrow, a native of Virginia, was educated at the Jacksonville Academy—studied medicine with Dr. Mabon—graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelpha; located at Georgeville in 1853, and remained there till 1855. He moved to Elderton, Armstrong county, and spent a few years there, and then moved to Three Forks, in the same county, where he resides at present.

Dr. John S. McTrott, a native of Brushvalley township, studied medicine with Dr. Creeswell, of Clarion county; located in Georgeville in 1860; practiced there a few years; moved to Clarksburg about 1864, then to Apollo, and in a short time to Beaver Falls, Beaver county. In 1872 he moved to Philadelphia, 1705 Christian street.

Dr. James Morrow, a native of South Mahoning township, was educated at Dayton Academy; studied medicine with Dr. McEwen; graduated at Cleveland, O.; located at Georgeville in 1867, and practiced there about eighteen months. He then spent a year in Philadelphia, and then moved to Sheakleyville, Mercer county, Pennsylvania.

Dr. J. R. Ewing, a native of Conemaugh township; educated at the academies in the county; studied medicine; graduated at Cincinnati; located in Georgeville in 1872. He moved to Plummville the following year; spent a year there and moved to Louisville; only remained there a short time, and then moved to Oakland Cross Roads, Westmoreland county, where he now resides.

GETTYSBURG.

Dr. Joseph H. Ake, a native of Blair county, after receiving a college education, studied medicine with Dr. Q. D. Ross, of Williamsburg, Blair county; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and located in the vicinity of Gettysburg in 1850. He was the first physician in that neighborhood, and practiced his profession there for three years. He then moved to the Cherry Tree, and practiced there till the summer of 1855, when he returned to Williamsburg, Blair county, where he resides at present. He was surgeon of a regiment during the late war.

Dr. John W. Crooks, a practitioner from the southern part of the State, came to Gettysburg in 1857, and practiced his profession there about three years, and then returned to his former home.

Dr. H. B. Pitman, a native of Green township, educated at the Cherry Tree; studied medicine with Dr. Bunn, at New Washington, Clearfield county, and graduated at Ann Arbor, Michigan. He located at Gettysburg, in 1867, and has continued in the practice of his profession till the present at that place.

GREENVILLE.

Dr. George Cleis, a Frenchman, who had been a surgeon in the army in his native country, came to the United States and stopped a short time at Williamsport, and then came to Greenville in 1841 and practiced there about eighteen months. He then moved to East Liberty, Allegheny county, where he died a few years after. He was the first physician in Greenville.

Dr. Wallace B. Stewart, a native of Philadelphia, where he received the principal part of his education, remained a short time in Huntingdon county. He studied medicine with Dr. W. G. Stewart, of Armagh, and graduated at the Franklin Medical College, Philadelphia. He located in Greenville in 1845, and continued to practice there till the fall of 1855, when he moved to Indiana and spent a few months there, and returned to Greenville and resumed his business, and continued till 1858. He then spent a season in Nebraska, and returned to Greenville, and late in 1839 moved to Armagh, where he remained till his death in 1875. He was surgeon of a regiment during the late war.

Dr. Thomas McMullen settled in Greenville in 1857, and has practiced his profession there since that time. (See Blacklick.)

Dr. C. M. Ewing moved to Greenville in 1870, and practiced there about three years. (See Strongstown.)

Dr. J. C. Wakefield, a native of West Wheatfield township, received his education at different schools; studied medicine with Dr. B. F. Tomb; graduated at Western Reserve College, Cleveland, Ohio; settled in Greenville in 1878; remained there about a year. He then moved to Fairview, Cambria county, where he is at present.

HOMER CITY.

Dr. James Shields, a native of the vicinity of Blairsville, where he was educated, studied medicine with Dr. Marshall; attended lectures at Philadelphia; located at Homer City in 1858; remained there about eighteen months, and moved to West Lebanon. He practiced there a short time, and moved to Westmoreland county. He was the first Physician at Homer City.

Dr. David M. Marshall settled in Homer City in 1860 and practiced medicine there till 1864, when he moved to Marion. (See Covode.)

Dr. John Evans, a native of Brushvalley township, was educated at the best schools in his neighborhood; studied medicine with Dr. James McMullen and attended a course of lectures. He enlisted in Co. A, 12th Reg't Pa. Reserves, and was appointed hospital steward. After the close of the war in 1865 he located at Homer City, where he has been engaged in the practice of his profession.

Dr. John C. Morrison, a native of Westmoreland county, graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, studied medicine in Westmoreland county; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Homer City in 1865, and practiced there till 1867. He then moved to Taylorsville and remained there about two years and then moved to Irwin, Westmoreland county.

Dr. D. Barrell settled in Homer City about 1867, and remained there about two years, and moved to Westmoreland county. (See Taylorsville.)

Dr. S. H. Thomas, a native of Clarion county, educated at the Reedsburg Institute, Clarion county; studied medicine with Dr. Thomas, of Freeport, Armstrong county; attended lectures and located at Homer City in 1873. He remained there till the spring of 1876, and moved to the Pine Flats, where he remained about a year and then went to Texas. He remained there but a short time when he returned to Reedsburg, Clarion county.

Dr. G. F. Arney, a native of Centre county, where he was educated and studied medicine; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Homer City in 1878, practiced his profession there one year and then moved to Altoona.

INDIANA.

Dr. Jonathan French, a native of New Hampshire, received his literary and medical education in Vermont. He located in York, Pa., and after practicing his profession there for some time, moved to Kittanning, and in a short time to Indiana. He was the first physician in Indiana, settling here in 1807 or 1808, and practiced here till his death, August 20th, 1814. He is represented as being a man of fine culture and a very successful physician. He was buried in the "Old Grave Yard," on the south side of the borough.

Dr. Robert Mitchell, a native of West Virginia, was born in Ohio county, on Short Creek, in the year 1787, and was educated in the best schools in the neighborhood at that time. He studied medicine with Dr. Magreehon, a prominent physician residing at that time about sixteen miles from Wheeling and attended a course of lectures at the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia. He settled in Indiana about the year 1811, and soon entered upon an extensive and lucrative practice, which lasted for several years. He was partial to the so-called Rush system of treating diseases and was very successful in certain forms of inflammatory affections. Dr. Mitchell represented Indiana county in the Legislature five years. He was elected first in 1819, and was one of the associate judges of the county for five years, from 1836 to 1841. He was one of the first anti-slave men in the county, and was always willing to lend a helping hand to the slaves. For his humane work, he was prosecuted in the District Court of the United States and suffered heavily for attempting to relieve the oppressed. But his high regard for the right, encouraged him to work in the cause that he believed was sure to triumph. He said, when the Rebellion commenced that "slavery would be destroyed before the war would end," and enjoyed even when quite feeble every form of information that indicated the downfall of slavery. A number of years before his death he invested largely in real estate, and for twenty years before his death in a manner retired from the practice of medicine, only superintending his grist and saw mills and farms. He died April 14th, 1863, aged 76 years.

Dr. James M. Stewart, a native of Huntingdon county, was educated at the best schools in his native county. He studied medicine with Dr. Henderson, of Huntingdon; graduated at the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia; located at Indiana about the year 1814, and continued the practice of medicine and surgery there until a short time before his death, March 27th, 1869. Dr. Stewart performed more than ordinary service as a physician to the people of Indiana county. He was not confined in professional work to Indiana county alone, but was frequently called professionally to the adjoining counties of Armstrong, Cambria, Clarion, Clearfield, Jefferson and Westmoreland, to give counsel in difficult cases in the practice of medicine and more frequently surgical cases. He despised every form of irregular practice that had a tendency to imposition and quackery; was always a true and faithful friend and counsellor to every worthy young physician that needed assistance. He kept fully up with all the discoveries and improvements in medicine and surgery, and cheerfully imparted information to those in need to the end of his life. He represented Indiana county in the Legislature in 1831, but positively refused a re-election, knowing he had a higher and nobler field of usefulness than a seat in the Legislature of Pennsylvania. Governor Johnston appointed him associate judge in 1849. He held this position about three years.

Dr. Thomas Moorhead, a native of White Township, was educated at the Indiana Academy, and studied medicine with Dr. Stewart. He spent some time practicing in the thinly settled portions of Indiana and Clearfied counties. He was for some time at Strongstown, and practiced part of the years 1832 and 1833, in Indiana, but died before he made a permanent settlement. He died in the vicinity of Strongstown.

Dr. George W. Gettys, a native of Huntingdon county, was a printer in early life; followed that business for a number of years, and then studied medicine. He moved to Indiana in 1835, commenced the practice of medicine and remained about three years. He then moved to Armagh, and practiced medicine there about one year, and returned to Indiana, and shortly after moved to Butler, practicing his profession there a few years. He then purchased a printing establishment in that place, and published the "Buttler Whig" for a number of years, and then returned to his native county, and died a few years ago.

Dr. Joseph Crooks, a practitioner from Greencastle, Franklin county, located in Indiana, in 1840, and practiced his profession about three years, and then moved to Ohio.

Dr. James M. Taylor, was raised in the town of Indiana; received his preparatory education at the Indiana and Harrisburg Academies. He taught school in Saltsburg, and Steubenville, Ohio; studied medicine with Dr. J. M. Stewart; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Indiana, in 1843, and continued the practice of his profession till 1857, when he moved to Kittanning. He remained there about sixteen years, and then returned to Indiana, where he now resides. Part of the time he spent in Kittanning, he was connected with the Drug and Apothecary business, and since he returned to Indiana, has continued in the same business.

Dr. Thomas St. Clair, a native of White township, was educated at the Indiana Academy, and studied medicine with Dr. Jas. M. Stewart. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Indiana, in 1847, and has continued in general practice in that place, to the present time, except about six months, when he lived in East Liberty, Allegheny county. For a number of years, at different times, he has had some interest in dry goods, clothing, drug, lumber, oil and real estate business, along with his professional work. He represented the district composed of the counties of Armstrong and Indiana, in the State Senate, during the years 1863 and 1864, and was elected State Senator, in the districts composed of the counties of Indiana and Jefferson, in 1876, for four years.

Dr. William Anderson, a native of Greene township, was educated at the Blairsville and Indiana Academies. He studied medicine with Dr. J. W. Taylor; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Indiana in 1851 and has continued in the regular practice of his profession to the present time.

Dr. Hufeland, a native of Germany, located in Indiana in 1852 and remained about six months, and then moved to the eastern part of the State.

Dr. William Altman, moved from Punxsutawney to Indiana in 1853, and practiced nearly a year and then returned to Punxsutawney. (See Armagh.)

Dr. Samuel M. Swan, a native of Armagh, after receiving a collegiate education, studied medicine with Dr. Samuel F. Stewart; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Indiana in 1854, and practiced nearly a year. He then moved to the State of Illinois, and spent a few years, and then moved to Johnstown, Cambria county, where he resides at present.

Dr. Wallace B. Stewart moved from Greenville to Indiana in the fall of 1855, and practiced a few months and returned to Greenville in the spring of 1856. (See Greenville.)

Dr. Wm. Reed moved from Beaver county to Indiana in 1856, and practiced medicine till 1859; then moved to Ohio. (See Smicksburg.)

Dr. James S. McCartney, a native of Armstrong county, graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg; studied medicine; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Indiana in 1856, and practiced there about one year. He then moved to Tarentown, Allegheny county, where he now resides.

Dr. Robert Barr moved from Armagh to Indiana in 1859, and resides at Indiana. (See Armagh.)

Dr. James T. Adair, a native of Indiana county, was educated at the Jacksonville Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Mabow; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Indiana in 1860, and moved to the Cherry Tree about the close of the same year. In the fall of 1861 he moved to Mt. Jackson, Lawrence county, and practiced medicine there till 1863, when he was appointed assistant surgeon of the 77th P. V. V. I. During the latter part of the year 1865 his regiment was stationed near San Antonio, Texas, in a malarial section of the country. His health gradually failed, but he remained with his regiment until they were mustered out of the service in Philadelphia, January 15th, 1866, when he returned to the home of his parents near Greenville, Indiana county, and sank gradually the victim of consumption. He died May 5th, 1866.

Dr. John K. Thompson moved to Indiana in 1863 and practiced medicine till 1855, when he returned to Marion. (See Marion).

Dr. Herman Row, a native of Greensburg, passed his early life in Somerset. He was educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine in Grantsville, Md., with Dr. McCormick; graduated at the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania; located at Indiana in 1865, and practiced in that place till 1873, when he moved to Altoona, where he now resides.

Dr. A. F. Parington, a native of Maine, received his preparatory education at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary; studied medicine with Dr. James McKeen, of Topsham, Me.; graduated at the Bowdoin Medical College, Maine, in 1864; served as acting assistant surgeon thirteen or fourteen months; located in Indiana in 1866, where he has been in general practice to the present time.

Dr. James W. Lorrence, a native of Punxsutawney, Jefferson county, was a private in the 105th Reg. Pa. Vol. for four years, and was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville, Va., May 3d, 1863. He was educated at the "Glade Run Academy" and "Mt. Union College," Ohio; studied medicine with Dr. Hughes, of Blairsville; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, in 1873, and settled in Indiana in the same year. He has engaged in general practice since that date.

Dr. William L. Cunningham moved from Jacksonville to Indiana in the fall of 1877, and resides there at present. (See Jacksonville.)

Dr. Charles N. St. Clair, a native of Indiana borough, educated at the Indiana schools; studied medicine with his father, Dr. Thomas St. Clair; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia in 1878, and has been practicing his profession in Indiana since that time.

JACKSONVILLE.

Augustus H. Gross was the first physician in Jacksonville. He came from Pittsburgh in 1840, and practiced medicine in Jacksonville about eight years, and moved to East Liberty, Allegheny county, where he continued to practice till his death in 1877.

Dr. Thomas Mabon, a native of Mahoning township, after acquiring a fair education, studied medicine with Dr. Leggett, of Centreville; attended a course of lectures at Glasgow, Scotland; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; settled in Jacksonville 1848, and practiced his profession there for fifteen years. He moved to Allegheny City in 1863, where he now resides.

Dr. John Irvine moved to Jacksonville from Plumville in 1858, and practiced medicine there about two years. (See Plumville.)

Dr. Joseph F. Stewart settled in Jacksonville in 1864, and practiced till his death, September, 1865. (See Taylorsville.)

Dr. William Jack, a native of Black Lick township, received his preparatory education at Elder's Ridg eAcademy; studied medicine with Dr. Mabon; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; served one year as assistant surgeon in 177th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; settled in Jacksonville, in 1865, practiced there till 1874, and moved to Allegheny City, where he resides at present.

Dr. Samuel M. Elder, a native of East Wheatfield township, received his education at the Saltsburg and Indiana Academies; studied medicine with Dr. Barr, and graduted at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. In 1861, he entered the military ranks, and was elected a lieutenant, and afterwards captain of a company in the 12th Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves; served three years, and was appointed assistant surgeon after that time. At the close of the war, he settled at Jacksonville, and practiced his profession, but his health soon began to fail and he was compelled to abandon his work, and returned to his father's, near Armagh, where he died, June 17th, 1868.

Dr. W. V. Parker, a native of Ohio, was educated at Columbus, Ohio, where he studied medicine, and graduated at the Starling Medical College. He settled in Jacksonville, in 1869, where he remained about a year. He then moved to Mansfield, Allegheny county, where he is practicing his profession.

Dr. Christ. C. Miller, a native of Brush valley township, was educated at the "Mechanicsburg Academy" and "Mt. Union College," Ohio. He studied medicine with Dr. B. F. Tomb; graduated at a medical college in Cincinnati; located at Belsono, Cambria county, in 1869, and moved to Jacksonville in 1870, and practiced his profession there till 1876. He moved to Gallitzin, Cambria county, where he resides at present.

Dr. Wm. N. Cunningham, a native of Young township, was educated at "Eldersridge Academy." He studied medicine with Dr. Jack; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia in 1864; located at Jacksonville in the same year, and practiced his profession there till the fall of 1877, when he moved to Indiana, where he now resides.

Dr. William L. Reed moved from Shelocta to Jacksonville in 1875, and has practiced there since. (See Shelocta.)

Dr. John A. Davis, a native of Armstrong township, was educated at Elderton Academy; studied medicine with Dr. St. Clair; graduated at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and practiced several years in Illinois, and returned to Jacksonville in the spring of 1878, where he practices his profession at present.

Dr. James G. Davis, of Jacksonville, is at Jefferson Medical College this winter.

WEST LEBANON.

Dr. William Craig was born near where the town of Marion stands. After he received a fair English education, he studied medicine, and located in West Lebanon soon after the town was laid out. He was the first physician in the town. He did not remain long in the place, and moved to Somerset county, and from there to Wheeling, West Virginia. After a few years' practice there, he moved to Kiosauqua, Iowa, where he resides at present.

Dr. Hugh Adair, a native of White township, was educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Jackson, Blairsville; graduated at the Franklin Medical College, Philadelphia, 1847; located in West Lebanon; practiced there a few years, then moved to Emlenton, Venango county, and after a few years to Anandale, Butler county, where he died.

Dr. James D. McClure, a native of Westmoreland county, where he was educated, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He settled in West Lebanon in 1851, and remained there two years. In 1853 he moved to Armagh, and in the fall of 1854 moved to one of the Western States.

Dr. J. C. Edgar, a native of Westmoreland county, where he was educated, studied medicine in Livermore, and settled in Livermore and practiced there a short time, and then moved to West Lebanon in 1853. He practiced there till 1857, and then retired from the practice.

Dr. George R. Lewis, a native of Indiana county, was educated at Eldersridge Academy, and graduated at Washington College, Washington, Pa. He studied medicine with Dr. Lewis, of Ebensburg, Pa.; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1857; settled in Washington county; remained there about a year, then moved to West Lebanon in 1858, and remained there about six months. He then located in Ebensburg, Cambria county, and practiced his profession there about three years. He was appointed assistant surgeon or the 54th Reigment Pa. volunteers, and held that position about a year. He was then appointed surgeon of the 61st Regiment Pa. volunteers, and held that position until the regiment was mustered out. In 1865 he moved to Indiana, and went into the drug and apothecary business, and has continued in the business till the present time.

Dr. James Shields moved from Homer City to West Lebanon, and practiced a short time in 1859. (See Homer City.)

Dr. Samuel W. Virtue, a native of Centre township, was educated at the Jacksonville Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Mabon, and graduated at the Charity Hospital College, Cleveland, Ohio. He located in West Lebanon in 1865, and practiced his profession there till his death in 1873.

Dr. Palmore, a native of the county, studied medicine and located in West Lebanon in 1870, and practiced there a short time and moved west.

Dr. William Hosack, a native of Westmoreland county, was a soldier in the 11th Regiment Pa. Reserves during the war. He was educated at Glade Run and Dayton Academies; studied medicine with Dr. Banks; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in West Lebanon in 1871, and practiced his profession there till 1879, when he moved to the Cherry Tree, where he resides at present.

Dr. W. T. Lariner, a native of Westmoreland county, was educated at Saltsburg; studied medicine with Dr. Crawford; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in West Lebanon in the spring of 1879, where he resides at present.

LOUISVILLE.

Dr. J. M. Ewing moved from Plummville to Louisville in 1874, and remained a short time. (See Georgeville.)

MARCHAND.

Dr. J. J. Bishop, a practitioner from Brookville, Jefferson county, located at Marchand in 1859, and practiced his profession there about eight years. He then moved to Punxsutawney, and in a short time returned to Brookville. He was the first settled physician at Marchand.

Dr. Samuel C. Allison, a native of Clarion county, where he was educated and studied medicine, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He located at Marchand in 1863, and practiced there about two years, and then moved to Punxsutawney, where he now resides.

Dr. James N. Laughry, a native of White township, studied medicine with Dr. Marshall; attended lectures at Cincinnati; located in Harrison City, Westmoreland county, and practiced there a few years. In 1865 he moved to Marchand; lived there a short time, and then moved to Marion, where he practiced his profession till 1872, when he moved to Penn Station, Westmoreland county.

Dr. John P. Bair, a native of Allegheny county, was educated and studied medicine in his native county. He graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and located at Marchand in 1867, and practiced there till the fall of 1868, and moved back to Allegheny county and died in the latter part of the winter.

Dr. A. H. Armstrong, a native of Armstrong township, was educated at Dayton Academy and Elderton Academy. He studied medicine with Dr. McChesney; attended a course of lectures; located at Marchand in 1867, and remained there a short time. He then moved to the Pine Flat in 1869, and practiced there till he died in 1874. He was the first settled physician at the Pine Flat.

Dr. J. Wilson Morrow, a native of South Mahoning township, was educated at Dayton Academy; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Marchand in 1873, and has continued to practice his profession at that place to the present time.

MARION.

Dr. James D. Baldwin was a native of Boston, Mass., where he was raised and educated. After he completed his medical education he went to Pennsylvania and spent a short time in Chester county, and then moved to Warrior's Mark, Huntingdon county, where he practiced several years. He located in Marion in 1844, and was the first settled physician in Marion. He practiced there about two years, and migrated to Diamondville, and remained there and in the vicinity, until the fall of 1851. He then moved to Allegheny City and practiced there until 1861 or 1862, when he went to Oil City, where he is engaged in the oil business, having relinquished the practice of medicine.

Dr. John K. Thompson, a native of Centre county, Pa., where he was educated; studied medicine with Dr. Angle; attended a course of lectures, and located at Marion in 1846. He pacticed there until 1863, and then located in Indiana and lived there about two years and returned then to Marion, where he resides at present. He was one of the associate judges of the county from 1856 to 1866, and represented Indiana county in the legislature during the years 1874 and 1875.

Dr. John B. Davidson, a native of Westmoreland county, where he was educated and studied medicine, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located in Marion in 1851, where he practiced his profession until 1856. He located in New Alexandria, Westmoreland county, and remained there a short time, and then moved to Moline, Ill., where he resides at present.

Dr. William Anthony moved to Marion from Chambersville in 1856, and practiced his profession until 1864, and he located in Kansas. (See Plumville.)

Dr. George J. McHenry, a native of Washington township, moved from Taylorsville to Marion in 1864, and resides there at present. (See Taylorsville.)

Dr. David M. Marshall moved from Homer City to Marion in 1865, and practiced his profession there until 1872, when he moved to Allegheny county, Pa. (See Covode.)

Dr. James A. Loughry moved from Marchand to Marion in 1865, and practiced there until 1871, and then moved to Westmoreland county. (See Marchand.)

Dr. D. Harold Snowden, a native of Virginia, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; practiced a few years in Allegheny county; settled in Marion in 1873, practiced there about two years, and retired from medicine and is preaching in Ohio at present.

Dr. Winfield S. Shields, a native of Royne township, was educated at "Covode Academy." He studied medicine with Dr. J. Milton Shields, and graduated at Albany Medical College, N. Y. Located in Marion in 1874, and lived there until 1877. He then moved to Covode, remained there a short time and then returned to Marion, where he resides at present.

MECHANICSBURG.

Dr. Hildebrand was the first physician in Mechanicsburg, he moved from Somerset county to Mechanicsburg about 1839, remained only a short time and then moved away.

Dr. Livingston came to Mechanicsburg about 1840, and practiced there nearly two years, and then moved away.

Dr. Ferdinand F. Bingell came from Germany to Mechanicsburg in 1843, and practiced there about two years. He then moved to Johnstown, Pa., practiced there a few years and then located in Marietta, Ohio. He lived there a short time and returned to Johnstown, Pa., and practiced there until his death, about fifteen years ago.

Dr. Henry Faulk, a practitioner from Germany, located in Mechanicsburg in 1845, and practiced there until 1849, and then moved to Ohio.

Dr. James McMullen, a native of Centre township, was educated at the Indiana Academy, studied medicine with Dr. Gross, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located in Mechanicsburg in 1849, and has been in the regular practice of his profession until the present time.

Dr. Thomas McMullen practiced in Mechanicsburg in 1854 and 1855. (See Black Lick.)

Dr. Benjamin F. Tomb moved from Armagh to Mechanicsburg in 1867, and has practiced his profession there since that time. (See Armagh.)

NEWVILLE.

Dr. Theodore B. Gamble is a native of Susquehanna county, where he was educated. Studied medicine with Dr. Horton of Tarrytown, Bradford county. Attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, and Ann Arbor, Mich. Located at Newville in 1858, practiced his profession there about two years, and then moved to Kansas, where he is farming at present.

Dr. Chalmers S. McCrea, a native of Saltsburg, was educated at the Mechanicsburg and Dayton Academies. Studied medicine with Dr. James McMullen, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located at Newville in 1875, where he has practiced his profession till the present time.

NOLO.

Dr. J. B. Luke, a native of Blair county, studied medicine with Dr. Smith of Hollidaysburg. Located in Nolo in 1869, practiced two years, and then removed to Summerhill, Cambria county, where he resides at present.

PINE FLAT.

Dr. A. H. Armstrong, moved from Marchand to the Pine Flat, in 1867, and practiced there till his death in 1874. (See Marchand.)

Dr. S. A. Thomas, moved from Homer City to the Pine Flat in 1876, and remained there about one year. (See Homer City.)

Dr. A. R. Lovelace, moved from the Cherry Tree, to the Pine Flat, in 1878, and resides there at present. (See Cherry Tree.)

PLUMVILLE.

Dr. John McAdoo, a native of Young township, after receiving a good preparatory education, studied medicine with Dr. Aug. H. Gross, and located in Plumville, in 1844, and practiced his profession there a few years.

Dr. George Goodhart, was a native of Huntingdon county, where he studied medicine. He located in Plumville, in 1845, and practiced his profession there about two years, and then moved to Dayton, Armstrong county, and practiced his profession there till his death, in 1853.

Dr. Samuel G. Berryhill, a native of Washington county, where he was educated; studied medicine with Dr. R. M. S. Jackson, in Blairsville; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Plumville, in 1849, where he remained in his professional work till he died, in 1857.

Dr. William Anthony, a native of Armstrong township, was educated at Eldersridge Academy and Jefferson College. He studied medicine with Dr. Robert McChesney, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located at Plumville, in 1855, practiced there a short time and moved to Chambersville. A few months after, in 1856, he moved to Marion, and practiced there till 1863, when he moved to Alathas, Kansas.

Dr. George Irvin, a native of Conemaugh township, was educated at the Jacksonville Academy, studied medicine with Dr. Mabon, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located in Prospect, Butler county, in 1855, and remained there one year. He then moved to Plumville, in 1856, and practiced there two years, and moved to Jacksonville, in 1858, and remained there about a year. In 1859, he moved to Aledo, Illinois, where he resides at present.

Dr. Christopher McEwen, a native of South Mahoning township, was educated at the Dayton Academy. He studied medicine with his brother, Dr. Wm. McEwen, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located at Plumville, in 1855, and has been in regular practice there to the present time.

Dr. Jones, a practitioner from Clarion county, moved to Plumville, in 1858, remained a few months, and returned to Clarion county.

Dr. Joseph W. McEwen, a native of the South Mahoning township, was educated at Dayton and Glade Run Academies; studied medicine with Dr. C. McEwen; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Plumville in 1839, and practiced there about three years, and moved to Philadelphia.

Dr. Joseph Ansley, a native of South Mahoning township, was educated at the Glade Run Academy, and studied medicine with Dr. C. McEwen; attended lectures and located in Plumville in 1863, and practiced there till 1867, when he moved to Illinois, where he resides at present.

Dr. Wm. B. Ansley, a native of Mahoning township, was educated at the Dayton Academy; studied medicine with Drs. McEwen and Ansley; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Plumville in 1867 and practiced there a short time. He then moved to Elderton, Armstrong county, and practiced there a short time. He next located in Appollo, in the same county, where he now resides.

Dr. J. M. Ewing moved from Georgeville to Plumville and remained there one year and moved to Louisville. (See Georgeville.)

Dr. Charles McEwen, a native of Plumville, was educated at the Plumville Classical School; studied medicine with his father, Dr. C. McEwen; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Plumville in 1879 and practices his profession there.

SALTSBURG.

Before there was a settled physician in Saltsburg, Dr. Kirkpatrick, a Westmoreland county physician, practiced his profession there and for several miles east and southeast of the place. He resided about two miles west of Saltsburg. He was a very attentive and successful physician and was highly appreciated by the entire community.

Dr. Benjamin Sterrett was the first physician in Saltsburg. He located there about 1825 or 1826 and practiced there for a number of years. He then moved to Congruity, Westmoreland county, and practiced his profession there for several years and then returned to Saltsburg and followed his profession there till his death, in 1861.

Dr. John McFarland, a native of Allegheny county, where he was educated and studied medicine. Attended lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located in Saltsburg in 1833 and has practiced his profession in the place to the present time, except a few months he spent in Monongahela City. He represented Indiana county in the legislature of Pennsylvania during the years 1844 and 1845.

Dr. Thomas Murray, a native of the Susquehanna Valley, in the southern part of the State, where he was educated and studied medicine; attended lectures at the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania; located in Saltsburg in 1837, and soon obtained an extensive and lucrative practice, which lasted for a number of years. He had great energy, and possessed rare skill in his profession. He retired from practice several years ago, and resides at present on a farm on Eldersridge.

Dr. David R. Allison, a native of Centre township, was educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Robert Mitchell, commencing about 1826; attended lectures at the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia. He was very delicate when he completed his studies. He visited Europe for his health, and when he returned he located at Mount Carmel, Illinois, and practiced his profession in Illinois and Indiana until 1844, when he moved to Saltsburg, and remained there till his death in 1852. Dr. Allison was strictly a conscientious physician, and very successful in the treatment of fevers.

Dr. Kier, a native of Young township, studied medicine with Dr. Murray; practiced a short time in Saltsburg, and then moved to Detroit, Michigan.

Dr. Robert McConnoughey, a native of Westmoreland county, educated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg; studied medicine with his brother, Dr. James McConnoughey; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Saltsburg in 1850, and practiced his profession there till the fall of 1851, when he died.

Dr. Henry G. Lomison, a native of Columbia county. He spent several years at Donaldson, Schuylkill county. He then went into the mercantile business in Blairsville, but soon retired from it. He studied medicine with Dr. Stewart; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; located in Saltsburg in 1852; practiced his profession there a few years, and then moved to Nebraska, remained there a short time, and returned to Greensburg, Westmoreland county, where he resides at present.

Dr. H. S. Snowdon, a native of Freeport, Armstrong county, where he was educated, and studied medicine with his father, Dr. Snowden; graduated at the Philadelphia Medical College; located in Saltsburg in 1854, and practiced his profession there several years, and then moved to Missouri.

Dr. James Morgan, a native of Cherry Hill township, was educated at the Harrisville Academy. Studied medicine with Dr. J. M. Stewart, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located in Maysville, Armstrong county, in 1853, and practiced there about two years, and then moved to Saltsburg, Indiana county. He practiced there a short time, then moved to Sheffield, Bureau county, Ill., and practiced his profession there until his death in 1878.

Dr. Cunningham, a practitioner from Ligonier valley, Westmoreland county, moved to Saltsburg. He was in delicate health when he came, and died in a short time.

Dr. Samuel T. Redick, a native of Allegheny county, after receiving a collegiate education, studied medicine with Dr. Bosland of Freeport. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Located in Freeport, Armstrong county, in 1848, and practiced his profession there until 1860, when he moved to Saltsburg; remained there until 1868, and then moved to Allegheny City, where he now resides.

Dr. William McBryer, a practitioner from New Alexandria, Westmoreland county, moved to Saltsburg, and practiced a short time. He then located in Appollo, Armstrong county, where he resides at present.

Dr. W. Franklin Barclay, a native of Centre township, was educated at Saltsburg and Greensburg Academies. He studied medicine with Dr. Lomison, graduated at Bellevue Medical College, New York, located in Saltsburg, in 1866, and practiced his profession there till 1878, when he left the place, and has not located permanently in another, up to the present time.

Dr. James L. Crawford, a native of North Mahoning township, obtained a good preparatory education. He enlisted as a soldier, and was promoted during the war to captain and adjutant. He studied medicine with Dr. Wilson, of Parnassus, Westmoreland county, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelpha, located at Saltsburg, in 1868, and practiced his profession there till the present time, except a year he spent in Ohio.

Dr. Thomas Carson, a native of Allegheny county, was reared in Armstrong county. He was educated at Eldersridge Academy, studied medicine with Dr. Parke, at Cochran's Mills, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located at Elderton, Armstrong county, in 1865, practiced his profession there till 1874, moved then to Hutton Station, Allegheny county, and in 1875, to Saltsburg, where he resides at present.

Dr. M. R. George, a native of Armstrong county, was educated at the Elderton Academy. He studied medicine with Dr. Carson, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located in Saltsburg, in 1875, remained there one year, then moved to Leechburg, Armstrong county, in 1876, and in 1879, to South Rend, in the same county, where he resides at present.

Dr. W. S. Taylor, a native of Saltsburg, where he was educated and studied medicine with Dr. Crawford, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, located in Saltsburg, in 1876, practiced medicine there a short time, and moved to California.

Dr. Bain, a practitioner from Ohio, settled in Saltsburg, in 1875, remained there a short time, and returned to Ohio.

Dr. E. H. Van Antwerp, has settled recently in Saltsburg.

SMICKSBURG.

Dr. Meeker, settled at the Glade Run, (a few miles from Schmicksburg), in Armstrong county, at an early date. He was the physician that the early settlers of South and West Mahoning townships, called upon when a physician was needed, for many years. In 1829, he moved to Elderton, in the same county, and a few years later to Butler, Pa.

Dr. William M. Sims, a native of Virginia, was raised and educated near the City of Richmond. He received his medical education at the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond. He came to Pennsylvania, and located at Uniontown, Fayette county, remained there a short time, then moved to Glade Run, Armstrong county, and practiced his profession there till 1834, when he moved to Smicksburg, and remained there till his death, in 1871. He was the first settled physician in the place.

Dr. James Ross, a native of Indiana borough, was educated at the Indiana Academy, and Kenyon College, Ohio. He studied medicine with Dr. Jas. M. Stewart, graduated in medicine and located at Smicksburg, in 1838, and practiced his profession there several years. He then located in Clarion, Clarion county, where he resides at present.

Dr. William Reed, a native of Indiana borough, was educated at the Indiana Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Stewart; graduated at the Western Reserve College, Cleveland, Ohio; located at Schmicksburg in 1844; practiced his profession there a few years, then moved to Allegheny county, then to Beaver county, and in 1856 moved to Indiana and remained about three years, then moved to Iberia, Ohio, where he now resides.

Dr. B. Sweeney, a native of Allegheny county, after receiving a liberal education, taught school several years in Westmoreland county and in the borough of Indiana. He studied medicine with Drs. Stewart and Taylor; practiced his profession about a year in Elderton and Kittanning, Armstrong county; located in Smicksburg in 1857; remained there till 1866, and then moved to Brookville, Jefferson county, where he resides at present.

Dr. David R. Crawford, a native of Elder's Ridge, was educated at Elder's Ridge Academy. He studied medicine with Dr. C. McEwen; graduated at Cleveland, Ohio; located in Reynoldsville, Jefferson county; practiced there a few years, and then moved to Smicksburgh in 1865, where he now resides. He was an assistant surgeon during the late Rebellion.

Dr. William Dodson, a native of West Mahoning township; educated at Dayton Academy; studied medicine with Dr. Crawford; graduated at Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio; located in Smicksburg in 1879, and resides there at present.

Dr. E. D. Barrett, a native of Montgomery, Massachusetts, was educated, studied medicine and practiced medicine several years in his native State. He then studied theology, and came into the neighborhood of Smicksburg a Presbyterian minister, and labored in that capacity for a number of years, but would visit the sick in case of emergency. After spending several years in the ministry in that neighborhood, he retired from pastoral work, and practiced for several years with success. He came to Indiana county in 1841, and moved to Springfield, Illinois, in 1859, where he resides at present.

Dr. Samuel D. Barrett, a native of Massachusetts, after receiving a collegiate education, studied medicine with his father, Rev. Dr. E. D. Barrett; graduated at the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio, and practiced medicine for several years a few miles north of Smicksburg, in West Mahoning township. He moved to Shelbyville, Illinois, in 1859, where he resides at present.

SHELOCTA.

Dr. Hugh A. Calvin, a native of Crawford county, where he was educated; studied medicine with Dr. James Dowling, of Brookville, Jefferson county; located at Shelocta in 1841 and practiced his profession there for two years. He then moved to Ohio, and returned to Brookville, Jefferson county, in 1850, and practiced there a few years and died in that place. He was the first settled physician in Shelocta.

Dr. Robert McChesney, a native of Crawford county, was educated in his native county; studied medicine with Dr. James Dowling, of Brookville, Jefferson county; attended lectures at the Medical College of Ohio (Cincinnati); located in Shelocta in 1843, and has continued to practice his profession in the same place to the present time.

Dr. D. C. Rankin, a native of Beaver county, where he was educated, studied medicine with Dr. Robert McChesney in Shelocta; attended a course of lectures; located in Shelocta in 1862, and practiced there one year. In 1863 he moved to Taylorsville and practiced a few years there. He then located in Elderton, Armstrong county, where he died in 1867.

Dr. William L. Reed, a native of Armstrong township, was a soldier for three years during the late rebellion and was wounded severely at the battle of Gettysburg. He was educated at Westminster College, New Wilmington, Lawrence county; studied medicine with Dr. Robert McChesney; attended a course of lectures at the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati; located in Shelocta about 1869, and lived there till 1875, when he moved to Jacksonville, where he is engaged in the practice of medicine.

Dr. Thomas J. Marlin located in Shelocta in 1870 and has continued to practice there since. (See Clarksburg.)

Dr. Wm. A. McChesney, a son of Dr. Robert McChesney, was raised in Shelocta. After receiving a collegiate education, he studied medicine with his father; graduated at the Medical College of Ohio; located at Shelocta in 1874, and has continued to practice in that place to this date.

SMITHPORT.

Dr. J. Milton Shields settled at Smithport in 1866, and remained there about a year. (See Covode.)

Dr. Henry Dickison, a native of Armstrong county, studied medicine with Dr. C. McEwen; located at Smithport in 1867, practiced medicine there about three years, and then moved to Missouri.

Dr. J. W. Lydick, a native of the county, was educated at the Marion Institute; studied medicine with Dr. Pittman; attended lectures at Ann Arbor, Michigan; located in Smithport in 1871, and remained there about three years. He then located in Troutville, Clearfield county, Pa.

Dr. E. Q. McHenry, a native of the county, was educated at the Marion Institute, and studied medicine with Dr. George J. McHenry; he attended lectures at Ann Arbor, Mich., located at Smithport in 1874, and remained there about two years. He next located in Dubois, Clearfield county.

Dr. G. J. Reese, of Clarion county, located at Smithport in 1878, where he now resides.

STRONGSTOWN.

Dr. Thomas Moorhead was the first physician in Strongstown. He spent a short time there about 1831. (See Indiana)

Dr. Andrew Hamilton, a native of White township, was educated at the Indiana Academy, studied medicine with Dr. St. Clair, and attended a course of lectures at the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio. Located in Strongstown in 1851, and remained until 1855, when he removed to Port Byron, Ill., where he resides at present.

Dr. J. C. Golden, a native of Indiana, was raised and educated at Freeport, Armstrong county. Studied medicine, attended lectures and practiced some in Armstrong county. In 1859, he located in Strongstown, and practiced medicine about four years, and then returned to Armstrong county.

Dr. C. M. Ewing, is a native of Westmoreland county, where he was educated and studied medicine. He located in Strongstown about 1866, and remained there until about 1870, when he moved to Greenville. He practiced medicine there until 1873, and then located in Tyrone, where he resides at present.

Dr. T. J. Davison moved from Westmoreland county to Strongstown about 1870, and has practiced his profession there since that date.

Dr. J. C. Wakefield moved from Greenville to Strongstown in 1878, and practiced there about a year. (See Greenville.)

TAYLORSVILLE.

Dr. James Kelly, a native of Conemaugh township, was educated at Saltsburg, studied medicine with Dr. Lomison, attended a course of lectures, located at Taylorsville in 1858, practiced his profession there a little over a year, and then moved to the Cherry Tree. He practiced there two or three years and then located at Pleasant Unity, Westmoreland county, where he now resides. He was the first settled physician in Taylorsville.

Dr. Joseph F. Stewart, a native of Armstrong county, was raised in Brush Valley township, He was educated at the Jacksonville and Indiana Academies, studied medicine with Dr. Mabon, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, settled in Taylorsville in 1860, and practiced his profession there until 1862, when he offered his services as a soldier and was appointed hospital steward in the 177th regiment, Pennsylvania volunteers. After he returned from this position he settled in Jacksonville, and followed his profession until his death, September 21, 1865.

Dr. George J. McHenry, a native of Washington township, was educated at Marion Institute, studied medicine with Dr. Anthony, attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College and Ann Arbor Medical School, Michigan, located in Taylorsville, in 1862 and practiced a little over a year. He then located in Marion, where he has practiced his profession up to this time.

Dr. D. C. Rankin, moved from Shelocta to Taylorsville, in 1863, and practiced there a few years. (See Shelocta.)

Dr. D. Burrell, a native of Westmoreland county, where he was educated, and studied medicine, attended lectures in Cincinnati, Ohio, located in New Derry, Westmoreland county, where he practiced a few years. He then moved to Taylorsville in 1866, and remained there about two years. He then located in Homer City, and remained there between two and three years, and then removed to Westmoreland county.

Dr. John C. Morrison, moved from Homer City, to Taylorsville, in 1867, and practiced about two years. (See Homer City.)

NEW WASHINGTON.

Dr. J. Gilbert Campbell, a native of West Wheatfield township, was educated at the Armagh and Indiana Academies. He studied medicine with Dr. Robert J. Tomb, graduated at the Medical Department of the University of Maryland, Baltimore, located at New Washington, in 1879, where he resides at present.

The first effort to organize a medical society in Indiana county, was in the year 1848, but on account of the small number of medical men in the county, that were eligible to membership in an auxiliary society to The Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, and the lack of good professional feeling, the efforts were suspended. It was not until the year 1858, that the members of the profession renewed its efforts. The first meeting was called June 23d 1858, for the purpose of forming a county medical society, and was responded to by the most influential physicians in the county at that time.

The meeting was organized by calling Dr. James M. Stewart, to the chair, and appointing Dr. William Anderson, Secretary. The usual preliminary business necessary for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization were promptly carried through. Drs. Thos. St. Clair, Thos. Mabon and Christopher McEwen, were appointed a committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws.

Drs. William Anthony, William Reed and Thomas McMullen were appointed a committee on fee-bills.

The meeting adjourned to meet July 21st, 1858.

At the next meeting, the committees reported, and both reports were adopted with a few modifications.

The name and title of the society shall be "The Indiana County Medical Society."

OBJECTS.

"The objects of this society shall be the advancement of medical knowledge; the promotion of harmony, union and friendly intercourse amongst its members; the protection of the interests, honor and usefulness of the profession, and to preserve the health and to protect the lives of the community."

A number of by-laws were adopted. The code of medical ethics, adopted by the American Medical Association in 1847, was established as the code of the society, and its acceptance a requisite of membership. The constitution and by-laws were signed by all the members present, and the following persons elected officers for the ensuing year:

President, Dr. James M. Stewart; Vice-President, Thomas McMullen; Secretary, William Anderson; Treasurer, Thomas Mabon.

Drs. Thomas Mabon and William Anderson were elected delegates to represent "The Indiana County Medical Society," in "The Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania," at its next meeting in Philadelphia, June, 1859.

Two copies of the constitution and by-laws were forwarded to the censors of the districts. They were approved, and one copy returned and the other forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary of the State Society.

Drs. James M. Stewart, Thomas St. Clair and William Anderson were appointed a committee to address the members of the profession throughout the county, calling their attention to the importance of the society.

The committee published the following address:

To the Members of the Medical Profession in Indiana County:

At the last meeting of the "Indiana County Medical Society," the undersigned were appointed a committee to address the members of the profession throughout the county, calling their attention to the importance of the society.

In performing this duty, we feel that we cannot too strongly urge upon your notice a subject that appeals at once to your best interests, your professional pride, and a proper sense of what is due, both to the profession and the public.

Every individual on entering the profession, as he becomes thereby entitled to its privileges and immunities, incurs an obligation to exert his best abilities to maintain its dignity and honors; to exalt its standing, and extend the bounds of its usefulness. He is bound to use unwearied diligence in enriching the sciences and elevating the condition of its members.

We now put the question to every physician in the county—have you the honor and welfare of your profession at heart? Are you willing to do your part in sustaining its honor and promoting its welfare? Shall not the profession be organized for the protection of its own interests?

Shall this society, so long desired and contended for, be allowed to fail from your neglect? Shall the foundation, laid under such auspicious circumstances, crumble into ruins without an effort to raise upon it a superstructure befitting the magnitude of the cause?

The importance of an organization of the medical profession is manifestly required at present. Nothing but this will preserve the character of the profession, and improve its education. Nothing but this will draw the line of demarkation between the physician and the quack, and save us from being confounded in the popular estimation, with ignorant pretenders, whom no law prevents from assuming the titles of the profession as a cloak for the basest charlatanism. The remedy is in ourselves.

We have but to unite the profession to labor for its advancement in learning and skill, to cheer and encourage by friendly association every honorable physician, and utterly exclude from professional intercourse all empirical and irregular practitioners. When we respect ourselves and our common art, an enlightened public will respect us for it.

The members of every profession and calling; the advocates of every form of opinion, are forming associations for the advancement of their particular interests. Shall it be said that the members of our profession are too indifferent to their interests, and the cause of humanity, to follow this worthy example? We know too well the liberality of our profession to doubt the result of an appeal to the better feelings of its members. It is well known that there is not a body of men in the world who sacrifice more on the altar of benevolence. There are none more ready to yield their immediate interests to the general good, and the ultimate promotion of the cause of science and philanthropy. All that is wanted is determined and united effort. Let it be made, and the result will be success.

We would most earnestly urge every regular physician in the county to join the medical society without delay. You may rest assured that the beneficial consequences resulting from the society, will not be a tardy elevation of the profession. They will be felt by all of us at home, and that immediately. The society will supply many of the wants of medical men, by giving them opportunities of extending professional intercourse, and of cultivating friendly relations. They will get to understand each other better, and free them from ungenerous rivalry and jealousies, which often bring scandal on the profession. It will also afford opportunities of increasing our medical knowledge, by frequent inetrchange of opinion, of comparison, of observation, as well as new strength for its individual members, and which will result in the public good. Why stand back longer? You are all alike responsible in sustaining and elevating our knowledge and usefulness, The next meeting of the seciety will be held in the borough of Indiana, on Tuesday, September 28th.

There is no reason why every regularly educated physician in the county, who is now a member, should not join in with those who have thus far labored in the society, with an earnest desire to advance the most useful and profound of human pursuits.

INDIANA, August 18, 1858.

The names of the signers of the constitution are as follows, and in the following order:

"William Anderson, George M. Gamble, Robert McChesney, William Reed, Christopher McEwen, Thomas McMullen, James McMullen, William Anthony, Thomas St. Clair, William A. Piatt, George Irvin, Thomas Mabon, Robert Barr, James T. Adair, Robert J. Tomb, Joseph F. Stewart, Herman Row, Samuel M. Elder, Wallace B. Stewart, William Jack, A. F. Purington, Benjamin F. Tomb, Samuel W. Virtue, John McFarland, George J. McHenry, W. C. Parker, James L. Crawford, John W. Hughes, J. W. Torrence, S. R. Rutledge, Emanuel Brallier, Chalmers S. McCrea, William Hosack, William A. McChesney, L. S. Clagget, Thos. Marlin, William N. Cunningham, Samuel L. Wiggins, G. F. Arney, J. Wilson Morrow, Thomas Carson, W. L. Larimer."

A number of members of the Indiana County Medical Society became members of other medical organizations since the organization of the county society. Dr. Robert Barr became a permanent member of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania in 1867; Dr. E. Brallier a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1876, and a permanent member of the American Medical Association in 1876; Dr. L. Clagget a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1878; Dr. James L. Crawford a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1878; Dr. John W. Hughes a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1879; Dr. James McMullen a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1867; Dr. Thomas McMullen a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1865; Dr. William Anderson a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1862, and a permanent member of the American Medical Association in 1868, and was a member of the International Medical Congress in 1876; Dr. S. R. Rutledge a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1879, and a permanent member of the American Medical Association in 1876; Dr. Robert McChesney a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1868; Dr. Herman Row a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1868.

The Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania requires regular reports from the county societies on diseases and their treatment; but they expect the first report to cover more ground. "The causes which modify the health of the county."

1st. Locality. 2d. Hydrography or Drainage. 3d. Topography. 4th. Geology. 5th. Meteorology. Then, mortuary tables and prevalent diseases. Miscellaneous—For the purpose of complying with the foregoing requirements, Drs. William Anderson, Thomas Mabon and Christopher McEwen were appointed a committee to report, and prepared the following, which was forwarded to The Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, at its annual session in 1860:

LOCALITY.

Indiana, a western county, is bounded on the north by Jefferson county, on the east by Clearfield and Cambria, on the south by Westmoreland, and on the west by Armstrong. It lies between 40 degrees and 23 minutes and 40 degrees and 56 minutes (nearly) north latitude, and one degree and 49 minutes and two degrees and 14 minutes (nearly) west longitude from Washington City. True meridian at Indiana one degree and 20 minutes variation west.

HYDROGRAPHY.

The Conemaugh river flows along the entire south end of the county from east to west. The west branch of the Susquehanna river touches the county on the northeast. Some of the spurs of the Allegheny mountain runs into the county on the northeast. The Laurel Hill on the east and the Chestnut Ridge entering on the south and running a northerly direction about half the length of the county.

The dividing ridge or water shed in the northwestern part of the county, divides the waters of the Susquehanna that flow into the Chesapeake bay, from the streams emptying into the Conemaugh and Allegheny, flowing southwestardly into the Gulf of Mexico. The lowest part of this water-shed is over 1,300 feet above tide. The county is well watered by numerous small streams and creeks. The largest of them is Black Lick, Yellow creek, Two Lick and Blacklegs, emptying into the Conemaugh. Crooked creek, Plum creek, Little Mahoning and Canor into the Allegheny. Cushion and Cush-Cush into the Susquehanna.

The creeks average from thirty to forty feet in width; those emptying into the Conemaugh run west, those into the Allegheny northwest, and those into the Susquehanna east. The bottom lands are narrow, probably not averaging over one-fourth of a mile in width.

The streams flowing into the Conemaugh, have a fall of from twenty to thirty feet to the mile; those flowing into the Allegheny, from ten to fifteen feet to the mile, and those into the Susquehanna, from thirty-five to forty feet to the mile. Inundations are very rare. Owing to the rolling character of the surface, and the numerous small streams running nearly every point of the compass, there is very little marsh land, occasionally we see a spot of a few acres. The western division of the Pennsylvania Canal passes through the Conemaugh valley, the amount of lockage is about 250 feet.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The area of the county is 775 square miles. The average altitude of the county is 1,300 feet above tide. The population is about 33,000. Near three-fourths of the population are the descendants of eastern Pennsylvanians, with some families from New Jersey. The balance are Scotch, Irish, German, Welch, and their descendants. The chief avocations are agriculture, lumbering, and the manufacture of iron and salt. The principal towns are Indiana, Blairsville, and Saltsburg.

Indiana, the county seat, is near the centre of the county, on an elevated piece of ground, about 1,320 feet above tide, with 1,500 inhabitants. Blairsville, sixteen miles south of Indiana, on the border of the county, with 1,000 inhabitants. Saltsburg, twenty miles southeast of Indiana, with 600 inhabitants.

The surface is rolling, cut into small valleys and hills by the numerous small streams. Along the larger streams, the valleys are very narrow. The principal eminences are elevated hills, called "round tops," throughout the county. The ascent of these elevations is from 15 degrees to 25 degrees, rising from 300 to 500 feet above the general surface of the county. The summits of these are from 100 square feet to one or two acres. On the top, the surface is composed of sand and pebbles, with occasional sand-stone rocks. None of the surface is destitute of vegetation. About one half of the surface is cleared, the other half covered with the forest. About one-third of the improved, is in grass, the balance produces wheat, rye, corn, buckwheat, oats, barley, beans, peas, potatoes, turnips, pumpkins, &c., &c. In about one fourth of the county—the eastern part—the timber is principally white pine and spruce. The balance of the county is covered with white-oak, black-oak, chestnut-oak, red-oak, poplar, chestnut, hickory, sugar-maple, walnut, cherry, locust, cucumber, &c., &c.

Clearing off the forests has made our summers more dry and our winters more changeable.

GEOLOGY.

But little attention has been paid to the Geology of Indiana county. The present report will necessarily be meagre, and perhaps in some particulars imperfect; but we give it as far as we have data.

Indiana county belongs to the ninth district of the general palaeozoic region of the State.

It comprises only the Vespertine, Umbral and Seral series. The former in very narrow lines of out-crop, bordering and dividing some of the coal basins. The coal basins are bordered generally by the seral conglomerate.

The different formations dip south-west.

Vespertine—This formation, as seen in the county, is a coarse gray sandstone, engirdling each basin by a continuous belt of rocks. At the gap of the Laurel Hill, on the Conemaugh, it is visible on the north side of the river for several hundred feet; thickness supposed to be about 400 feet.

On the Conemaugh, at the western slope of the Chestnut Ridge, this formation is a gray argillaceous and micaceous sandstone, with a few beds of dark shale of a thickness of about 350 feet. In the anticlinal belts of the Chestnut Ridge this formation occupies the highest flanks, and even the summits of the mountains which sustain the seral conglomerate, and the coal measures at a subordinate elevation on their slopes. The rate of diminution of this deposit is nearly due west.

Umbral Red Shales—This formation, at the Conemaugh gap, contains seral, loose, coarse and fine pebbly sandstone—red and green marl alternating, red predominant, including a few sandy layers, 35 feet; gray, fine grained sandstone 5 or 6 feet; impure white ore from one to three inches; alternating green and red shale, bands of sandstone, including 6 inches coarse ore 17 feet; argillaceous sandstone 3 feet; red shale and green argillaceous sandstone 3 feet; red shale cutting out coarse gray sandstone 10 feet; red and green shales and argillaceous sandy bed 8 feet; calcareous sandstone 10 to 12 feet thick; red, sandy limestone 3 feet; light bluish gray sandy limestone, thick bedded and very oblique, 40 feet.

At the western slope of the Chestnut Ridge, it consists of red marly shales, containing little gray sandstones in the upper half; centrally a thick bed of sandy limestone; and is composed in its lower part of olive shales, thickness, 195 feet. This formation occupies a sort of elevated terrace on the mountains, a little below their actual tops, with a gentle depression, so that the vespertim conglomerate is brought nearer the true coal rocks, and forms with the seral conglomerate but one general rim or border to the several basins. In some parts it would seem not to be overlaid by any conglomerate, but is succeeded by coal measures.

Seral—This formation generally caps the highest summits or crests of the table lands, and has the same peculiarity as in the coal measures elsewhere in the State.

Two and a half miles from Campbell's mill, on Black Lick creek, the following section was had: Unknown to the top of the hill, 40 feet; sandstone, 40 feet; unknown, 20 feet; sandstone, 17 feet; red argillaceous strata; sandstone, 4 feet; slate and shale, 10 to 15 feet; unknown, 20 to 30 feet; red argillaceous stratum, containing small bivalves; red argillaceous stratum, blueish in spots, 8 feet; light green fossiliferous limestone, 10 inches; 20 feet to creek not exposed. Nearly opposite this section, nodular hematic ore in very red shale may be observed. Near the mouth of Black Lick creek, the following section was obtained: Olive slate, 20 feet; blue slate; unknown, 15 feet; callareous clay, 2½ feet; red and green shale, 6 feet; green shale, 10 feet; unknown, 25 feet; green fossiliferous sandstone, 10 inches; unknown, 10 feet; red shale, 3 feet; to the level of the creek, 54 feet.

Above the forks of Two Lick, 35 or 40 feet above the level of the stream, the following section was obtained:

Argillaceous limestone, studded with bivalves, imperfectly preserved, 6 inches; compact limestone with fewer fossils, 4 inches; green and red shales in colored bands, 10 to 12 inches; green fossiliferous limestone 10 inches; greenish sandstone, 5 inches; red shale, 2 feet; dark blue slate.

In boring a well in Indiana, 1,325 feet above tide, 340 feet above Blairsville, 50 feet above the beds of the rivulets on each side; one south about 100 perches, the other west 80 perches; about 50 feet below the red slate, in the immediate neighborhood; Well 162 feet deep—bore 2½ inches—digging in gravel and hard slate rock 17½ feet; hard slate rock of a dark blue color, 8 feet; soft slate rock of a dark blue color, 40½ feet; soft slate rock, in which was a vein of water, 19 feet; at 75 feet, the water sunk to 33 feet from the top of the well; red shale mixed with a yellowish green sandstone and slate, very soft, with a vein of water 7 feet; in this shale the water sank to 43½ from the top of the well; black slate, pretty hard, 4 feet; white flint very hard, 4 inches; at this stage of boring, the water sank to 53 feet 10 inches from the top of the well; dark colored hard slate, with a mixture of white, 2 feet; blue clay with a little sand 4 feet 6 inches; water 54 feet from the top of the well; hard gray sandstone rock 2 feet 6 inches; light blue slate and white clay, very soft, 4 feet; dark gray, fine-grained slate with very little sand, 5 feet; dark blue slate, with a few thin shales of whitish colored slate 18 feet; black slate not very hard, 16 feet; soft black slate 1 foot 3 inches, hard slate 2 feet; gray sandstone 5 feet 6 inches; black slate, very hard, 3 feet 3 inches.

Coal—The second and third, and a small portion of the fourth basins of the bituminous coal region, underlies Indiana county. The coal formation dips southwest with symetrical flexures.

At Centreville, near the middle of the second basin, only the upper coal and limestones are out of the water. Coal six feet thick, emerges half a mile above the village; the same vein is seen one and a half miles below the village. Two coal seams, supposed to be of the barren series, appear north of Bolivar in the hills. The third measure is four feet thick. Following the basin to the northeast, the same measures have been worked at various points. In the neighborhood of Strongstown, the first coal vein measures four feet; then strata, 100 feet; second vein, three feet thick; 50 feet higher; third vein, 18 inches thick; then 30 feet strata; fourth vein, 18 inches thick. There are only two coal seams exposed on the Conemaugh in the third basin, each underlaid by a bed of limestone; they crop out at the axis of the Chestnut Ridge.

The upper Freeport coal has been worked in the northern part of the county, and in the north-eastern part of the county, several beds on Two Lick creek and Yellow creek, on Dixon's run, Buck river, Rayne's Run, Pine run, near the village of Marion, on Crooked creek, near Chambersville; on McKee's run, four and and one-half miles north of Indiana; this bed is coal 22 inches; grayish black crumbly shale from 8 to 10 inches; coal 4 feet 6 inches—the roof a gray micaceous sandstone; dip north 30 degrees west; it contains sulphate of iron—the same is seen in many other places to the north-east. The other veins average from 3½ to 5 feet, all underlaid with limestone, and some of them roofed with slate and iron ore.

On Little Mahoning creek, at Robertsville, the upper Freeport coal is seen; the same is seen four miles west. At Dilt's Mill there is a thin vein of coal supposed to be the same. At Ewing's Mill shale and thin coal seams are opened. At Kinter's Mill, on Little Mahoning, where the third axis crosses the Mahoning valley, the upper Freeport coal is opened above the level of the stream, and 6 inch vein of a barren measure is seen above with calcareous shales. From Mahoning south to the Conemaugh, the beds are the common ones of the basin, occurring at the level of the small streams, while the hills are composed of the unproductive high measures. We also find coal measures, superficial and thin, until they cease to be continuous, prolonged by a few scattered patches, leaping from summit to summit of the narrow, synical table-lands.

At Smicksburg, in the fourth basin, the upper and lower Freeport coal seams are opened. The upper vein is four and a half feet thick; the strata, between the upper and lower average, is about fifty feet. The lower bed has been opened at various points, measuring two and a half feet. Between the terminus of the Chestnut Ridge and the water-shed between the eastern and western waters, the coal seams are split, and very irregular in many places. The same is observable in spots on the borders of the third and fourth basins. In one hundred parts of Blairsville coal, there is as follows: Volatile matter, 31; carbon, 69; earthy matter, 4. Laminated, columnar, hard, compact, shining, jet black.

Ten miles southwest, and about the same distance west from Indiana, the great Pittsburgh coal seam caps the highest knolls between the streams; sinking deeper and deeper under overlying rocks, until three and a halt miles west of Saltsburg, 175 feet of upper barren measures overlies it, containing two unimportant coal seams. The Pittsburg coal vein is seen on the north side of Two Lick; half a mile north of Black Lick it is seven feet thick. Southeast of Two Lick, and one and a half miles north of Black Lick, a seven foot bed, parted by bands of slate, has been opened. In the neighborhood of West Lebanon, the same vein is opened in the higher hills. Near McMean's, on Blacklegs creek, the vein is eleven feet thick.

West of Indiana, there is a third axis brought up in all the creeks, which affords an abundance of both fuel and lime. This coal has been opened at Jacksonville and various other points in that neighborhood. The vein averages about 3½ feet. There is a barren measure overlying the Pittsburgh coal seam of 500 feet. The barren measure between the upper Freeport coal and Pittsburgh, is from 450 to 500 feet. Limestone accompanies all the coal measures in the county; in some places, the limestone is but a few feet under the coal; in other places from 20 to 30 feet. In the barren measure between the upper Freeport and the Pittsburgh coals, there is a fossiliferous limestone. In some parts of the county, it has been used for various purposes; the veins average from two to five feet thick.

Iron Ore—Bands of iron are found in various parts of the county. Several furnaces have been in operation on Black Lick creek, Laurel Run, and Mahoning creek, near Smicksburg, for several years. At Blairsville, the ore in 100 parts, contains carbonate of iron 67.20; peroxide 7.48; carbonate of lime 3.24; carbonate of magnesia 1.50; silica 12.34; water 8 and metalic iron in 100 parts 37.24; dove color, smooth, nodular.

At a bank south-east of Blairsville the following was obtained in 100 parts: Carbonate of iron, 37.80; carbonate of zinc, 5.50; carbonate of magnesia, 7.50; silica and insoluble matter, 37.80; alumina, 7.60; water, 3.50; metalic iron in 100 parts, 18.27. The ore is mottled red and green nodular, somewhat spathose. On the west side of the Chestnut Ridge the following is found: Peroxide of iron, 51.25; oxide manganese, a trace; carbonate of lime, 2; silica and insoluble matter, 36.50; alumina, 5.96; water, 4; metalic iron in 100 parts, 35.87; cinnamon brown, nodular.

At Ewing's Mill, on Little Mahoning creek, there is a vein of very pure carbonate of iron, 18 inches thick, in layers of 4 or 5 inches thick, with concretions of silica, while masses and veins of apparently pure carbonate of lime subdivide the ore.

At Robertsville there is bog ore. The above are the only beds analyzed, but on the surface of the county ore is abundant. It is believed that the ore generally in the county would average about 30 per cent. metalic iron.

Organic Remains.—Many have been found in the county, but few persons have paid any attention to either name or classification. The Fern has been found in abundance. In the northern part of the county, the Neuropterus minor, and the Allethopterus Pennsylvamaca 1st and 2d have been found. One place in a coal seam, the "Modiola." In many quarries there have been reptillion foot prints discovered.

Soil—The soil in the eastern part of the county is loam and sand as far as the pine timber extends; in the balance of the county the soil is loam and slate, with a clay admixture in spots. The subsoil is clay and slate. The subjacent rock is a peculiar hard, blue micareous sandstone in the low lands. In the higher table-lands it is variegated blue and red.

BRIDGE CROSSING THE LOYALHANNA RIVER AT ITS JUNCTION WITH THE CONEMAUGH, FORMING THE KISKIMINETAS.

JOHNSON'S POINT

Water—The water used for domestic purposes throughout the county is generally obtained from springs, which are very numerous, and from most of them a strong current of pure water flows throughout the year, very seldom affected by the dryest season. In towns and in villages, the water is generally obtained by digging or boring wells to the depth of from fifteen to thirty feet; some of them are affected by dry season. There are a few wells in Indiana, bored to the depth of 200 feet. But very few pipes of any kind are used as conduits.

Salts—In the Conemaugh valley there are numerous salt wells, from which are annually manufactured large quantities of salt of a very superior quality. The wells are bored to the depth of from 700 to 1,000 feet; the water is pumped up with steam engines, and boiled in large kettles or pans. The yield is variable. At first it yields in fifty or sixty gallons of water, a bushel of salt. After pumping for a length of time, the yield is less, requiring one hundred gallons or upwards to produce a bushel of salt. Several springs in the county are thought to possess medicinal properties, but from the limited knowledge of their ingredients, we will pass them for the present.

METEOROLOGY.

Very little attention has been paid to this subject within the last few years. With some difficulty I have obtained therometrical tables, kept 1,300 feet above tide; and a barometric table for a few months, kept 980 feet above tide.

NOTE ON METEOROLOGICAL MATTERS—THE GREAT ECLIPSE OF JUNE 16TH, 1806.

As this remarkable phenomenon occurred at a time when the population of the county was very limited, there are few persons now living here, or elsewhere for that matter, who can give a correct description of it. As it was a "thing of terror" to many of the people in those days, and for years was a topic of discussion, we append extracts from papers, books, etc., to show its appearance at other points as the same characteristic obscuration extended throughout the entire boundaries of Venango county, the eclipse being calculated to be total in such parts of New York, New England, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, as were situated between forty-one (41) degrees, thirty-five (35) minutes and forty-three (43) degrees, five (5) minutes north latitude.

Gen. Simon DeWitt, of Albany, in giving an account of the eclipse, observed: "Fortunately on the morning of that day, the atmosphere was very clear. The eclipse began at 9 hours, 5 minutes, 12 seconds, A. M.; the beginning of total obscuration was 11 hours, 8 minutes, 6 seconds; the end of total darkness, 11 hours, 12 minutes, 11 seconds; and of the eclipse, 12 hours, 33 minutes, 8 seconds; length of total eclipse, 4 minutes, 5 seconds."

At Pittsburg, many were troubled as to whether or no the end of all things had come. Some hitherto hardened sinners besought the Almighty to forgive them their past transgressions. Sermons were preached on the Sunday previous (15th) and the text, "repent ye for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand," used on that occasion with peculiar prophetic fervor, was duly appreciated on the morrow. This occasion, like many others, illustrated the old saying:

> "When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be,
> But when the devil got well, devil a monk was he."

At Philadelphia, a total obscurity suddenly turned the day into night. Business ceased, and the sounds of merriment and bustle of the crowded streets were hushed.

In the city of New York, a sudden and dismal gloom overspread the face of nature; the thermometer indicated a fall of the quicksilver, eighteen degrees, and the atmosphere sensibly cooler. Not a cloud was to be seen.

An old settler in speaking to the writer in regard to this subject, said: "I thought the day of judgment was at hand and I was scared. The chickens went to roost and everything was as still as night." Another remarked: "I was working on the mountain, and all of a sudden it became so dark that I could not see my way down the ravine. I waited and waited, it seemed to me a whole day before the sun shone again."

A Cooperstown (N. Y.) writer says: "The atmosphere at this place, on Monday last, was serene and pure. The sun was majestically bright, until fifty minutes past nine o'clock A. M., when a little dark spot was visible about forty-five degrees to the right of the zenith. The shade increased until fifteen minutes past ten, when stars began to appear, and the atmosphere exhibited a gloomy shade. At twelve minutes past eleven, the sun was wholly obscured, exhibiting the appearance of a black globe, or screen, with light behind it, the rays only of which were visible, and which were too feeble to occasion sufficient life to form a shade. Many stars now appeared, though less numerous than are usually seen in clear evenings. There was now 'darkness visible,' a sort of blackish, unnatural twilight. The fowls retired to their roosts, and the 'doves to their windows.' The birds were mute, except the poor whip-poor-will, whose notes partially cheered the gloom. The dew descended, and nature seemed clad in a sad, sombre, and something like a sable livery.

"At fourteen minutes past eleven, a little bright point appeared to the left of the sun's nadir, similar to the focus of a glass when refracting the rays of the sun. Suddenly a segment of the circle of that glorious orb emerged, and seemed to say 'sit lux,' and was immediately obeyed, 'lux fuit,' as quick as thought. A small pin could be discovered on the ground. A more wonderful and pleasing phenomenon can hardly be conceived. The doves left their retirement; the whip-poor-will's melody ceased: and the face of nature again smiled. But some stars were still visible, and Venus displayed her beauty until twelve o'clock. At forty minutes past twelve, the sun shone in full splendor, and in turn eclipsed the moon and all other heavenly luminaries by its glorious effulgence."

Rev. Dr. Nott, President of Union College, in his account, says: "At the instant the last ray was intercepted, and the obscuration became total, a tremulous, undulating shadow, a kind of indescribable, alternate prevalence and intermixture of light and shade struck the earth, and played on its surface, which gave to the most stable objects the semblance of agitation. It seemed as though the moon rode unsteadily in her orbit; and the earth seemed to tremble on its axis. The deception was so complete, that I felt instinctively, and in spite of the instincts of my reason to the contrary, a tottering motion. Some who were present, I observed, took hold of whatever was near them for support, while others leaned forward, and insensibly flung themselves into an attitude which indicated that they found it difficult to stand. * * * * *

"The scenes described at the commencement of the total obscuration, re-appeared when the first rays of the sun were reappearing; the same apparent agitation of the surface of the earth; the same apparent struggle between light and darkness; the same separation between light and shade into distinct and alternate arches, and the same motion reversed; for now the arches of light seemed to crowd those of shade inward; and the whole movement was from the horizon towards the centre, which continued about the same time, and disappeared in about the same manner, as above described."

THE ECLIPSE OF THE SUN MAY 2, 1846.

"This remarkable phenomenon which took place on Saturday last, was not visible here until it passed the middle, thirteen minutes past twelve o'clock, noon, after which it was visible, except occasionally obscured by flying clouds, until it passed off. Its duration was two hours and fifty-four minutes.

During the remainder of the present century, there will be but five eclipses central, in any part of the Atlantic states, viz: those of May 25, 1854, and September 29, 1875, annular in Massachusetts; and that of October 19, 1865, in the Carolinas; whilst those of August 7, 1869, and May 28, 1900, will be total in North Carolina and Virgina.—Pa. Tel.

"Mr. Asa Smith, of New York, who has made due calculations respecting the eclipse, says:

"The first appearance of this eclipse since the creation of the world, (according to Sacred Chronology,) was in the year 1041, January 14, old style, when the moon's shadow just touched the earth at the South Pole; it has appeared every ninteenth year since, and at every return the moon's shadow passed over the earth from west to east a little further to the north, until the year 1756, March 2d, when the centre of the moon's shadow passed a little to the north of the earth's centre, (the moon being five minutes nineteen seconds from her descending node,) which was its thirty-eighth periodical return. The present eclipse will be its fifty-third periodical appearance. It will appear again in 1864, May 6th, but will be invisible in the United States.

"It will also appear in 1882, May 16, at seven o'clock, 41 minutes, 36 seconds, in the morning, when the sun will be almost totally eclipsed; it will continue to appear every nineteenth year, until the year 2441, May 17, at one o'clock, 43 minutes, in the morning when the moon's shadow will just touch the earth at the North Pole, which will be its seventy-seventh periodical and last appearance until the expiration of 12,492 years, when it will come on again at the South Pole, and go through a similar course. The moon's penumbra will first strike the American continent in Mexico, on the coast of the Pacific ocean; it will pass in a northeast direction over Texas, West India Islands, northern part of South America, United States, cross the Atlantic ocean, and disappear in the West of Europe at the setting of the sun."

1816—COLD WEATHER.

The year 1816 is memorable for extreme cold weather. There were frosts in every month, and the harvest of wheat and potatoes were nearly a failure. The corn crop was destroyed at each planting, and a general gloom settled over the community. The farmers wore overcoats in the harvest field, and the weather was "decidedly cool" during the year. The snow was unusually deep in the winter of 1815-'16, and for nearly three months the river was closed by ice. The flood of the spring in height and destructive power, was nearly equal to that of 1806.

1835.

[From the Intelligencer.]

MR. COCHRAN—The following was the state of the thermometer on the days mentioned below, viz:

Sunday, Feb. 8, 1835, mercury nearly all day 6 above zero.
Monday, 9th, at sunrise . . . . 16 below "
Tuesday, 10th, " . . . . . 13 below "
Wednesday, 11th, " . . . . . 12 above "
Thursday, 12th, " . . . . . 10 below "

Monday as above at 16 being the coldest morning for upwards of twenty years, according to my own observations.

WM. CONNELLY.

February 12, 1835.

A PROPHECY IN 1835.

[From the Falmouth English Packet.]

THE APPROACHING COMET.

Lieutenant R. Morrison, of the Royal Navy, has published a most interesting work upon this magnificent phenomenon which is expected to be seen in the course of the year 1835, between the months of May and August, in the constellation of Ursa Major. Lieutenant Morrison states that it will be far more splendid than the one of 1811; some writers affirm that "it will afford a degree of light equal to a full moon, that its tail will extend over 40 degrees," and when the head of the comet reaches the meridian its tail will sweep the horizon. The author says:

"Relying on the corrections of our principle of cometary influence, we venture to predict that the summer of 1835 will be remarked for its intense heat, which may be expected to destroy the harvest in some parts of the world. That year will be noted for earthquakes and volcanoes, and other similar phenomena. The end of 1835, or early in 1836, may be expected to be remarkable for some one or more extensive earthquakes. The winter of 1836 or—'37, will bring a frost such as has not been equaled for at least 20 years. The parts of the earth which we anticipate will suffer most, are those situated to the north of Asia, and some parts of the southern hemisphere, such as China. Those parts of the earth in the vicinity of volcanoes are always subject to the electrical phenomena of earthquakes, because the frequent internal changes which the combustion creates, must necessarily produce a derangement of electricity. And while the comet is near the earth, overcharged with electricity, if there be any internal cavity of the earth deficient of that fluid, it will rush into the earth at that spot. This we take to have been the cause, in 1456 near Naples, when the sudden rendings of the earth destroyed 40,000 human beings."

1836.

The summer of 1836 was nearly as cold as that of 1816. There were frosts in every month in the year; there were one hundred and seventy-eight days of east wind and rain, and the only summer weather occurred in the first fourteen days of September, when the mercury in the thermometer ranged up to ninety degrees.

1859.

The great frosts of June 5th and 12th—1859—are worthy of mention. "The wheat and rye were just in blossom, and there was every prospect of a bountiful harvest. But these frosts smote the fields as with the besom of destruction. The evening before, nature smiled, like Eden almost, with beauty and the prospect of plenty; but on the Sabbath morning, the fields were blasted, as though the breath of the Sirocco had swept over them. A deep and heavy gloom settled over the community. The question of bread became exceedingly practical, and the fear arose that multitudes of our citizens would be obliged to leave their homes for a warmer sky and a more genial atmosphere. But the danger passed over. Corn was plenty in Egypt, means were found for purchasing it, and the next year brought good crops."

MORTALITY.

The absence of a registration law prevents us from reporting the mortality of diseases met with in the county. I am not aware that any mortuary tables have been kept by any physician in the county. But from consultation with a number of physicians I think the following will approximate very closely to the mortality of the different diseases. In typhoid fever, 1 in 15 cases; remittent fever, 1 in 40 cases; small pox, 1 in 20 cases; varialoid, none; measles, 1 in 50 cases; pneumonia, 1 in 20 cases; pleurisy, 1 in 20 cases; in different forms of nervous diseases, 1 in 50 cases; in different forms of diseases of the organs of nutrition, 1 in 15 cases.

PREVALENT DISEASES.

Our county has been remarkably exempt from epidemics and endemics during the past year. Scarlatina, reubeola and pertussis were met with in a few localities, but most cases were mild.

FEVERS.

Intermittent fever is rarely met with. Sometimes a few cases occur which have been contracted abroad. They generally yield to appropriate treatment.

Remittent fever has been more prevalent than in former years. It is mostly confined to a few localities. Some cases are severe and occasionally fatal, but are not troublesome when promptly treated.

Typhus fever is not met with. Typhoid fever is a common disease in this county. It prevails more or less every year, commencing generally in the early part of the summer and continues during the fall, and sometimes into winter. It is not considered contagious, nor is it very fatal. I have observed the first cases in the season to commence on the east side of streams, and occasionally where there was but a small quantity of pure fresh water, but moisture, more or less, on the west side of the residences. In a few localities in the county contiguous to mill-dams and other ponds of water it frequently assumes remissions simulating remittent fever. At Greenville and Diamondville this form prevailed and many of the cases were fatal. Dr. W. B. Stewart, of Greenville, informs me that during an epidemic in that place, in the best marked cases of typhoid fever, with all the general and local symptoms of the disease, doses of sulphate of quinine would give it a remittent form. The treatment pursued by most physicians in the county is such as is laid down in the text books. I have administered quin. sulp. in small doses (one grain) about every three or four hours in connection with such remedies as are required to control the local and general disturbances with the happiest effects. I frequently commence the quinine at my first visit, and have never seen cause to regret it. I believe quinine has very much the same specific influence on the peculiar poison in the blood of a typhoid patient that it has in intermittent and remittent diseases. I think the great error of many is in the administration of large doses; large doses never succeeded well in my practice. The doses should be small and well-timed, so that it will be taken up in the circulation without making a strong impression on the nervous system. Since I adopted this course of treatment, in good constitutions, without any complications, I seldom lose a case or have erysipelas or abscess in the last stage of the disease. In May, 1858, there were a few cases of typhoid fever on a branch of Mahoning creek, that assumed a very malignant form. About a week from the commencement of the attack, on some part of the surface, a severe burning sensation would be felt, very painful to the touch, in a few hours it would become red, then purple and shortly after, black, generally, not more than twelve hours from the time the pain was first felt, the part would begin to slough and even the bones would exfoliate. Most of the cases died. A great many remedies were tried, but the treatment that appeared to mitigate the symptoms most was quinine and spts. turpentine, pushed as far as the patients would bear, with anodynes sufficient to allay pain and procure rest. Some of them lived till portions of the body sloughed and dropped off. It may be proper to remark here that no mercurials were used in any of the cases.

SMALL-POX

Is not often met with. Sometimes vaccination is neglected for a year or two, and a few cases may be contracted before it can be accomplished for protection. The members of the profession generally concur in attesting the value and power of vaccination.

MEASLES.

There are generally cases of measles every year. They are but seldom fatal, unless there is some complication. The antiphlogistic treatment is sometimes necessary, but generally an expectant one is all that is required.

SCARLATINI.

Almost every year it is seen, but not generally of a virulent character. It has prevailed epidemically every six or seven years, when it is more malignant and frequently fatal. No disease has been treated in a greater variety of forms than this. Some have tried the stimulating plan of treatment by administering alchoholic preparations throughout the course of the disease, but I believe this mode of treatment has few advocates in this part of the country at present. Most practitioners pursue a cautious antiphlogistic treatment. The veratrum viride has been extolled by some. Others depend on cold ablutions, while others again prefer and treat with chlorate of potassa. Chloride of sodium in solution with capsicum is frequently used for a gargle.

OTHER DISEASES.

Pneumonia occurs in all parts of the county during the winter and spring; it is generally of a sthenic character. Active antiphlogistic treatment is required in most cases. But one communication has been received on this disease; Dr. Anthony, of Marion, writes: "In November and December, I had a number of cases of pneumonia, all of whom recovered. The treatment in all cases was phlebotomy, cupping, antimony and morphia, to act as a sedative and expectorant; and in some mercurials were pushed till the gums were slightly affected. Also counter-irritation with blisters six by eight inches."

Pleurisy is very common in this part of the country. It generally yields to antiphlogistic treatment.

HEART DISEASE.

During the past year there were more heart affections than has been known before. Many of them proved fatal. Some very suddenly. There was one peculiarity about most of the cases; a large number of them were among those in comfortable circumstances; that lived well, the most industrious, and generally of regular and temperate habits.

INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM

Is very common in our county. It appears to be on the increase; it is not generally manageable by the treatment recommended in the text books. Many physicians have varied their mode of treatment in this disease very much. I have not been favored with any communications on this subject. From intercourse with a very large number of the members of the profession, I learn that many depend much on the iodide of potassium, after the acute inflammatory period is passed. I have used some times with decided benefit, something like the following: Bichloride of mercury, 10 or 12 grains; muriate of ammonia, 1 dram; iodide of potassium, 1½ ozs.; water, 1 pint. Dose, from 40 to 60 drops, three or four times a day.

Within the last few months I treated a few cases with tartrate of soda and potassa and veratrum viride, with anodynes at night sufficient to procure rest and allay pain. I am free to say that I never had rheumatic cases to do as well as those under this mode of treatment.

CONSUMPTION

Has been increasing rapidly during the last few years; it forms a very large space in the mortuary list of our county. Most cases are hereditary, a few can be traced to neglected colds, &c.; but the gradual increased hereditary tendency is truly alarming to the sanitary observer. It is not necessary to speak of the treatments or the result of the treatment, it is here the same as in all other places.

SCROFULA.

Scrofula is frequently met with; a large proportion of the cases are hereditary, and generally terminates in phthisis.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Veratrum viride may properly be considered a new remedy amongst physicians, and has generally been satisfactory. In many cases it is spoken of in the highest terms as to its controlling influence over the heart and arteries. As far as I have tried it, I have been pleased with its effects. When used for a length of time diarrhœa generally sets in.

Yellow jessamine has been tried in certain forms of inflammation of the mucous membranes without giving satisfaction.

The hypo-phosphates have been tried by a few physicians without giving satisfaction.

SURGERY.

The surgical cases during the past year have not been numerous, occasionally an amputation, and a few cases of extirpation of the mammary glands, with fractures of the extremities and clavicle, are the principal. In fractures of the femer, Dessault's apparatus is generally used.

In fractures of the leg, the fracture-box is used by some—others prefer a modification of Dessault's apparatus. In fractures of the clavicle, Foxe's apparatus with a shoulder brace.

BIRTHS.

Of 404 births reported, 214 were males and 190 females.

TOBACCO.

Most persons are satisfied that many of the hereditary diseases are increasing amongt us with fearful rapidity. We cannot help pausing at times and ask ourselves the question, why is this so? What is the cause or causes of this change in the human family? No one will doubt that there are many causes for it—but by examining one by one, the supposed or real causes, carefully and impartially, we must say that the excessive use of tobacco, so common in our country for many years past is the principal. No article so injurious to the human economy is in so general use—we might say universal use. The habit is so common, that persons not addicted to it might be termed exceptions.

Wood & Bache, in the United States Dispensatory, speaking of the effects of tobacco, say that "tobacco, when used in excess, enfeebles digestion, produces emaciation, and general debility; and lays the foundation of serious nervous disorders—sometimes mental disorder, closely resembling delerium tremens." It is liable to disorder the digestive organs and produce general debility. Can the blood be in a healthy state during the use of an accumulative toxic principle? I think not. If the blood is not affected, why the emaciation and serious nervous derangement? Is not the blood the source from which the component parts of every tissue derives its material. The modification of its elements must then modify the secretory—the nutrient, as well as the nervous action. Are not hereditary diseases produced by some primary modification in the constitution or elements in the blood? It is well known that this agent will affect the system applied locally, taken into the mouth or inhaled into the lungs. It has proved fatal in many cases administered in different forms. In all defects and changes in the blood, each particle must participate, and the solids suffer in proportion to their physiological relation; hence the corresponding changes in the secretions. The nervous derangement is another evidence of its destructive property, as the nervous system is subject to influences through the blood, and is deeply in all the phenomena of the living being in health and disease.

I think it will not be disputed that the system of the tobacco chewer and smoker becomes saturated with the substances; for instance subject one of them to a process, like what the hydropathist calls packing, and then examine the linen. I need not offer more. Now, the question may be put: Can an unhealthy being, diseased, poisoned and emaciated beget the reverses? We all know that there are certain tendencies and predispositions, and these are generally inherited. Will not everything that impairs health and depresses the vital organism favor the natural tendency? We have the law that the "parents eat sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." We have no evidence that the persons eating the grapes suffered like the children. We may venture one step farther. Is not this habit the foundation of drunkenness in our land? By an impartial investigation, we not only find diseases produced, but morbid appetites. It is not often that we see a person fond of strong drink that is not a slave to tobacco in some form. In most of our villages and small towns we see boys from seven to ten years of age, chewing and smoking. If we watch their course, the majority of them will be drunkards at twenty-five. Many are of opinion that it is the tasting of intoxicating drinks that makes the drunkard. Close investigation will not sustain this opinion. Many years ago these western counties were studded with small distilleries, and the young men that were raised up about them are among the most temperate in their neighborhood, many of them not tasting a drop.

Occasionally you will meet with one addicted to strong drink. In these instances you generally find that they spent much time in idleness, and used tobacco in some form, and had companions with the same habits. I have neither time nor ability to do justice to this subject, nor in a report of this kind is it expected; but I wished to notice it merely that the subject may be taken up by those who are able to do justice to one of so much magnitude. It is with regret that a report so unsatisfactory is submitted, but circumstances prevent anything better at this time. It was late in the season when the committee was appointed and unfortunately I had no opportunity of meeting the other members of the committee for the purpose of preparing a report. The work was delayed to the latest period and I have been compelled to report what I am in possession of.

You can see from the foregoing, a little of the objects and efforts of the leading medical men in the county of Indiana twenty years ago; satisfied that no one could have attained his perfection, by his own efforts, and that there was still much to learn. And never has there been more rapid advances in medical science than during the last quarter of a century.—Never was the medical profession more industrious or so exact in their views and results than they are at the present day. A number have been faithful to sustain their profession in obedience to the great law of progress and to contribute to its usefulness in the right direction, believing that medical science alone discloses the truth of those mysterious processes and forces, as well as the physical and intellectual constitution of man, both as a creature perfect in structure and attributes and as a moral and physical ruin, and as the result of this skill, to inform the human family as to the best mode of preserving their health in natural perfection, and giving council according to the necessities of society and of controlling disease in all its dangerous forms that threaten the domestic altar.

It would be ungenerous to our predecessors to say, that this is all the fruits of our labors, but acknowledge that much of it is an inheritance transmitted from the industry, wisdom and genius of other days. If a veil could be suspended between the past and the present, seperating them completely, it would be easy to see where we would stand—darkness would cover us. The sun of science would be overhung with clouds and shadows.

and not one star left to guide our labors. We know that knowledge is progressive and marches by slow degrees. Seed sown to-day may not germinate for centuries. It will lie dormant until the proper influence causes it to spring into full vigor and perfection. This great estate is grasped out of the riches of fleeting centuries. With the riches and power of this estate it gives power over the human family, and additional honor to the physician, because he is the protector and friend of the poor and distressed in every rank, and by precept and example raising them up to the level of his own excellency. Take from the physician the motive that should actuate his cause—a desire to benefit his fellow-creatures, and you crumble to atoms the foundation of his profession. It is that elevating principle that induces him to risk his own life, if necessary, to save that of his patient. It has been done on the field of battle, to save wounded; it has been done where the most virulent, contagious and malignant diseases were sweeping districts; it has been done in the prosecution of those studies, essential to the performance of the duties of an enlightened physician. Many never think, that in their calling they exhibit virtues that in other positions would crown them with laurels, and draw the admiration of the world. Others, conscious of their good traits, shun admiration and quietly seek the good of their fellow beings.

The whole community looks to medical men for the solution of all dark and difficult problems of a scientific and medical nature. These questions are unlimited in their range, taking in the character of diseases and similations. The sanitary condition of cities and towns—identity, death, real or apparent, homicide, poisons, the various kinds and how used; business transactions, civil and criminal; the highest interests of individuals, families and societies, frequently rest on medical men, not only of property and life, but that which is equally dear—character and reputation.

"On the fourth day of July, 1876, our worthy Centennial historian, (A. W. Taylor,) truthfully described the early settlers of Indiana county," as follows:

"The early settlers of Indiana county, came from the eastern counties of the state; in a great part from the Cumberland Valley. They were of Scotch-Irish descent—in faith Presbyterians. They came with their bibles, their confession of faith, their catechisms and their rifles. They were a brave determined, self-denying race, by no means deficient in education and in love or learning. It is a notable fact, that in spelling, pemanship and accuracy of style and manner, the early records of our townships and county, will compare favorably with those of more recent date."

"It would be improper not to mention the physicians who practiced their profession with success and distinction. They were something more than physicians to the people—they were their friends and advisers."

There are two items of unwritten history connected with the experience of our physicians, who were worthy of the name, and observed the lives and conduct of the families in the county from its earliest settlements.

1st. That the families who studied their bibles daily, and endeavored to live according to the teaching of that book, faithfully, were the contented and prosperous families, and most generally blessed with good health, and spared to good old age.

2d. That the children, who were trained according to the Divine command, who were well instructed in their duties to their parents and all other persons, most generally became good men and women and were respected and prosperous members of society. On the other hand, the disobedient and disrespectful were soon cast out of good society and their lives soon become burdensome. These items of unwritten history come with more force because some of the observers were not Bible men in a strict sense. From these observations and other facts in our possession, we are safe in affirming, in addition to the Divine promise, that God's Word is the best and safest guide and companion to secure long life, health, prosperity and happiness in this world.

This will account in a great degree for the good sound judgment that the people of Indiana county have always maintained on the subject of health and life. When they were sick they wanted a physician, not an imposter. They correctly classed new systems of medicine along with new religions. The intelligent part of the people of Indiana county, to their credit be it said, have always permitted such fools to go on in their folly, and carry out their ignorance, superstition and human depravity.

In looking over the history of physicians who have lived in the county of Indiana from its organization, we have evidence of high professional ability and of remarkable fidelity in the discharge of their duties, and many of them were esteemed highly by the people, their average ability being much higher than could be found in many of the other counties in the state. At the same time the illiterate, the incompetent and the unworthy could be found bearing the title. This was always so. We know that greatness is not a birthright in any avocation—nor could it be thrust upon the undeserving—a kind of transitory applause may be achieved without merit, but the worthy and deserving are sure to win the prize; that eminence and honorable distinction in the medical profession are the legitimate results of good education and professional knowledge, with high moral character and devotion to duty.

The claims of every one, as far as reliable information could be obtained in the period of three weeks, have been given. My retrospect is finished. I would it were worthier of the object. But in calling the roll we have no answer from Samuel Tamage, George Hays, John Young, Andrew Getty, —— Reed, Jonathan French, —— Kirkpatrick, —— Simmons, —— Craighead, Frank Young, ——, Gillespie, Samuel Duffield, —— Vanhorn, P. P. Rich, Samuel F. Devlin, —— Sterrett, Thomas Moorhead, —— Gemmill, George Cleis, Samuel McKee, —— Hammill, Robert K. Scott, —— Campbell, J. Liggett, David R. Allison, Samuel P. Brown, —— Powell, J. Hay, Hugh Adair, Wm. G. Stewart, Hugh A. Calvin, T. J. Cantwell, Samuel G. Berryhill, Wm. A. Piatt, Robert McConnoughey, Robert Mitchell, George Goodhart, Edward P. Emerson, Samuel F. Stewart, Samuel M. Ogden, John Gilpin, Robert M. S. Jackson, D. C. Rankin, Ferdinand F. Bingle, John B. Bair, James M. Stewart, Samuel M. Elder, Henry Faulk, Aug. H. Gross, Wallace B. Stewart, Samuel W. Virtue, Joseph F. Stewart, George W. Gettys, A. H. Armstrong, James T. Adair, John Buchanon, Andrew Johnston and James Morgan. They are not here; they have passed on; they rejoice on earth no more; "they sleep well after life's fitful fever." Let their names be recorded to abide forever. May the sun of centuries to come pour light on their successors, kindling in their hearts gratitude and joy for the work they performed to others—who lived because they lived, and who were saved from their sufferings and from the sorrows of death by the interposition of their Divine Art. May the rocks in the neighborhood of their ashes chant their requiem to generations yet unborn; and when the sun is sinking behind the flood of years, may its departing rays gild those names with new glory, and shining too on others equally illustrious. We know that their examples are not lost on those who have taken their places in this noble county. Their successors are aware that a wide field for scientific investigation lies before them. Much territory still remains to be redeemed; "the wilderness is yet to blossom as the rose," "and the leaves to be gathered for the healing of the nations."

The hygienic condition of the county is of such immense interest to our people that the first all-important question before the profession—the prevention of disease, is to be improved.

We are to search after truth, and when found is to be generally applied for the good of mankind. A profession like ours, that is invested with a power of unequalled benificence; that disdains all mystery, all prestige of authority, and all superstitious veneration for traditional dogmas; that asks for confidence on the sure basis of scientific knowledge, appropriates no discovery to selfish purposes and holds its resources as the gift of Heaven, open to the good of all mankind, and labors to imitate Him who, nearly nineteen centuries ago, healed the infirmities of the multitudes that waited on his ministry of love and wisdom. Such a profession should never falter in giving heed to its own instincts, never waver in strenuous and persistent exertions to elevate still higher its practical ideas, and never abate those heroic convictions which are at once the proof of its high vocation, the credentials of its claims on public respect and the pledges of its sure success.

The above is respectfully submitted.

WM. ANDERSON, M. D.

CHAPTER XLVII.

THE CHURCHES.

BETHEL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CENTRE TOWNSHIP.

THE origin of this church dates back to about the year 1790. The first substantial building was erected in 1797. This was succeeded by a large frame structure which was finished in 1842. This house having undergone repairs at different times, is still occupied.

The first settled pastor was Rev. J. W. Henderson, whose labors commenced in 1798, and continued until 1823. His successors have been: Rev. Jesse Smith, eight years; Rev. Robert Johnston. about eight years; Rev. John Cross, 1845 to 1850; Rev. Franklin Orr, 1853 to 1877; and Rev. John Gourley, the present pastor.

The following are the names of those who have served as ruling elders: Gen. Michael Campbell, Gen. James McCombs, John Allison, George Sample, John Lewis, Major James Laughlin, William Hamilton, John Robinson, William Anthony, Thomas Hamilton, Evans Lewis, Joseph Henderson, James Hunter, Alexander McMullen, James McKee, William Carson, N. P. Turner, Wm. Johnston, James Reed, Robert McCluskey, J. L. Robinson, G. W. Johnston, Jeremiah Lomison, John Shields, and Daniel Wilson.

The communion service used by this congregation, is so old that the time of its introduction cannot now be ascertained.

In some stray notes furnished to the press some years ago,* we glean the following: "Bethel Church is situated seven miles southwest of Indiana, and was the first Presbyterian church in the county. The first house was built of logs, and no doubt some of our older readers remember the old building with nothing but benches, with no backs, on which to sit; and also the immense ten plate stoves for heating the church.

"It was during the ministry of Rev. Henderson that the temperance question was first agitated. At that time it was the custom for almost everyone to indulge in spirituous liquors, and especially at log rollings, raisings, etc. The result was that it was nothing uncommon for the greater part of the crowd to become badly intoxicated.

"Mr. Henderson saw the evil of drunkenness and preached a sermon on the subject. At the close he called upon all that were willing to sign the pledge to come forward. Five persons did so, their names being: Major Loughrey, James Todd, James Hunter, Alexander McMullen, and Joseph Campbell; Judge Campbell was the last survivor, and he died in the spring of 1879.

"This was the beginning of the temperance agitation which has not yet ceased. All the early meetings were held here or in the vicinity. Looking back over the past years, one cannot help but contrast the public sentiment of 1880 with that of 1798 to 1823.

"During the ministry of Mr. Johnston, the present building was erected. In the latter part of the ministry of Mr. Orr, the house was thoroughly repaired and refurnished."

*Judge Joseph Campbell furnished the information.

EBENEZER PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CONEMAUGH COUNTY.

There is but little known of the early history of this church, and notes of its progress we shall quote largely from a historical sermon preached by its pastor, Rev. D. J. Irwin, July, 1876, who in prefatory remarks, says, "we must rely largely upon tradition for the early history of the church."

"The church was organized about 1790 or 1791, and in connection with Bethel, formed a pastoral charge." It is not known by whom organized, but Rev. Mr. Marquis preached for the congregation in 1793, but how often, or how long a time is not known.

The first elders of whom we have any account were Patrick Jack, S. Coulter, John Marshall and John Robinson, and the first record of membership we have any account of was made in 1832, over forty years after its organization; and of this list of 165 names, there were but nine remaining in fellowship in 1876, viz: "Mrs. Nancy Marshall, Mrs. Rebecca Kerr, Mr. Leslie Hazlett, sen., Mrs. Mary Jack, Mr. Robert Ewing, Mrs. Elizabeth Ewing, Mrs. Margaret Elrick, Mr. John Barclay and Martha Ewing." Of the 31 members received during the same year there remained in 1876 but Messrs. "Tobias Bricker, Isaac Keenor and Mrs. Dorcas Irwin." To these two lists may be added Mr. Thomas Anderson, sen., Mrs. Rebecca Rosborough and Mrs. Polly Elder of the present Clarksburg church, and Mr. Samuel Nesbit and Mrs. Jane Nesbit of the Livermore church.

In addition to the three elders first named we name others now dead or removed to other churches, viz: James Marshall James Coulter, John Douglass, John Ewing, Samuel Marshall, William Leard, John G. Thompson, James Tulton (or Fulton), William Conney, William Moore, John Miller, John McCurdy, and William Wray. The present session (1876), John Barclay, Robert Ewing, Samuel G. Miller, Tobias Bricker, Francis Harbison, James Jack, Robert Wray, R. E. Laird, S. P. Marshall, and James M. Barkley.

It is not settled whether the congregation had any settled pastor till Rev. Joseph Henderson settled within its bounds. He "probably preached here first in 1797, and in 1799 became settled pastor." We give a sketch of this good man in sketches of the pioneers of the county. He served the church until 1824. Rev. Jesse R. Smith succeeded Rev. Henderson and served the church four years.

In 1832 Rev. David Lewis, a native of North Wales, became pastor, and served the church until his death, December 9th, 1844. Of this man, Dr. Donaldson says: "He with the writer had made arrangements for alternately preaching once in two weeks in the village of Clarksburg, on the contiguous border of our charges. On the first evening, December 8th, 1844, both were to be present, but a member of his session from the village failing on that day to attend church, he said 'if it is too far for the elder to come in daylight, it is too far for the pastor to go at night.' so he stayed at home and preached a tender, stirring sermon, and by daylight the next morning 'he was not, for God took him.'" During Rev. Lewis' pastorate Watt's version of the Psalms was introduced instead of Rouse's, creating some dissatisfaction, and some withdrew from the congregation on account of this "innovation."

Rev. John Cross, succeeded to the pastorate after the death of Rev. Lewis, and remained till 1850, and in 1851, Rev. George Morton, became pastor, but by his own request was relieved in 1854; however, he was induced to remain, and in 1855, was again settled as pastor, serving till 1859, when he was dismissed by his own request.

On the 11th of April, 1861, Rev. D. J. Irwin, was called to the pastorate "and on June 19th, 1861, was ordained and installed pastor by the Presbytery of Saltsburg."

"The first place of preaching was a tent of rough boards used only on wet and stormy days;" when fair, the services were held in the grove. "The first house of worship was about twenty-five feet square and was built of hewed logs, the seats of split logs, and had neither fire place or stove." The second house was an improvement only in point of size, and a loose board floor, "and for several winters had neither stove or fire place." These people "walked to the church and listened to the sermon without any fire in the house." The next building was of brick; size 65 by 45 feet. The building now occupied was erected during the years 1870 and 1871, at a cost of probably $8,500, (this was the contract price), and the material in old building. It is two stories, 68 by 48 feet, and in comfort "is surpassed by few country churches."

The membership had increased to 220 in 1876.

A sabbath school was organized in 1820—was suspended for a few years, but another organized in 1830, continuing to the present, and its members now number considerably over one hundred.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF INDIANA.

Indiana county was judicially organized in December, 1806, but there was no stated preaching in the county seat at that time. There appears to have been occasional preaching from 1800 to 1806, by several ministers of the Presbytery at Redstone. The people assembled in the woods according to the custom of the times, and the hardy missionary spoke to them from a rough platform erected for that purpose under the open canopy of heaven.

The early records afford but little information respecting this church, but it was organized in 1807, by the Rev. J. W. Henderson. It consisted at first of only a few members. After the organization, Mr. Henderson, preached as stated supply one-third of his time for one year. During 1808, the Revs. George Hill, Samuel Porter, Thomas Davis, William Speer and others, preached as occasional supplies.

The first settled pastor was the Rev. James Galbraith. He was installed pastor over the united congregation of Harmony and Gilgal, in 1808. He was called to Indiana, for one-half of his time, and installed pastor in 1809. Mr. Galbraith resigned the charge of Harmony in 1810, and came to reside at Indiana, where he remained till 1816, at which time he resigned the pastorate charge and removed to Huntingdon county. He died at Ligonier in 1857.

The next pastor was the Rev. John Reed. He came a licentiate from Washington county, and was engaged in October, 1817, to preach to the congregations of Indiana and Gilgal, as stated supply. In October, 1818, he was ordained and installed pastor of these congregations, by the Presbytery of Redstone. In 1839, he resigned the charge of Gilgal, and devoted the whole of his time to this society till his death, on the 27th of September 1840.

Mr. Reed was succeeded by the Rev. Lewis W. Williams. He came as a licentiate in 1840, soon after Mr. Reed's death, and in May, 1841, he was ordained and installed pastor, by the Presbytery of Blairsville. Mr. Williams resigned in the spring of 1844. He died at Landesburg, Pa., in 1858.

The next pastor was the Rev. Anderson B. Quay,* who was ordained and installed in May, 1844. Mr. Quay resigned in 1850, and died at Rochester, Pa., in 1857. Mr. Quay was succeeded by Rev. A. McElwain, on the 7th of September, 1852. The latter's successor was Rev. David Hall, D. D., in May 1874. He was ordained and installed on the 30th of June, 1874.

Dr. Hall, was born in Armstrong county, on the 13th of December, 1828, and was a son of David and Margaret Hall nee Hindman. The former was a son of David Hall, an officer in the war of 1812, and on some expeditions west, located lands in what are now Portage and Summit counties, in the Western Reserve, Ohio, whither most of the family subsequently removed, leaving the father of our subject on the old homestead, where the latter was born.

He attended an academy at Kittanning under the direction of Rev. Dr. Joseph Painter, and Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Washington county, graduating from the latter in the class of 1850. He took a theological course in the Western Theological Seminary in Allegheny City, graduating in 1854, and a post-graduate course in Princeton Theological Seminary in 1854-5. He was principal of the Witherspoon Institute, a Presbyterial academy in Butler, in 1850-'51; was elected a professor of the Latin language and literature in Jefferson College in 1857, and served as a member of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at New Orleans in 1858.

He was licensed by the Presbytery of Allegheny, June 20, 1854, and was co-pastor with Rev. Dr. James Hoge, of the First Presbyterian Church, of Columbus, Ohio, in 1855-'56. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Allegheny, November 5, 1856; was pastor of the church of Union and Bradley's Bend, Armstrong county, from 1856 to 1867; First Presbyterian Church, Mansfield, Ohio, 1867 to 1874, and removed to Indiana as above stated in May, 1874.

He was married, in 1856, to Miss Elizabeth Walker, of Butler, Pa. Their children are: Edward P., Harry W., Laura B., Mary C. and Carrie R.

At the organization of the church, James McLain, John Ross, John Wilson, and Joseph Moorhead, were ordained and installed ruling elders. In 1810, James McKnight, from 1818 to 1840, John Douglass, William Lucas, James Todd, Jacob Beelor, Robert A. Hamilton, James Hamilton, Clemence McGeary, and Robert Walker, in 1840; Thomas Laughlin, John P. Lloyd and Woodrun Douglas, and in 1851, Joseph Thompson, James McLain, Thomas Moorhead, and John Sutton, were ordained and installed ruling elders.

The present ruling elders are: Judge Joseph Thompson, A. W. Wilson, W. B. Marshall, James McLain, James Moorhead, Alexander Fair, James M. Sutton, Thomas Sutton and Coulter Wiggins.

At the organization, religious services were generally held in the county jail, but from the erection of the court house in 1809, it was occupied as a place of public worship by all denominations having preaching at Indiana, till 1826-'7, when church houses were erected. In fair weather, and especially on sacramental occasions, up to this time, the congregation worshipped at the "Tent," in the grove. In 1827 the old brick house which gave place to the present commodious building, was erected.

A paper published in Indiana, Saturday, October 30th, 1858 gives the following notice of the dedication of the latter building:

"The new Presbyterian Church of Indiana having been completed was occupied on Sabbath last, and dedicated to the service of Almighty God. The building is of brick, and built in accordance with the Doric order. Its length is eighty feet, and its breadth fifty-six feet. The basement story is eleven feet in the clear, and divided into a Sabbath school room, a room devoted to social and prayer meetings and a large hall from which there is an entrance into the upper chamber. The story in the upper room is twenty-five feet high, handsomely furnished. The pulpit is plain and neat, and the gallery at the opposite end of the room is built in a new style, and the most appropriate for the purpose intended that we have ever seen anywhere. There are one hundred and eighteen pews on the main floor and nine in the gallery, which will seat comfortably six hundred and twenty-five people. The trustees, who had the whole management of the erection of the building, have performed their duty in a most satisfactory manner, and deserve the thanks of this whole community for the construction of a building that is an ornament to our town. The members of the congregation, and many others, who have contributed so liberally to aid in its erection, have manifested an interest in the cause of religion that speaks well for the community in which we live.

*Father of Hon. Matthew S. Quay.

On Sabbath morning at the hour of eleven o'clock, the house was filled to its utmost capacity, when the choir rose and sang with great beauty an anthem entitled 'He hath not dealt so with any people.' The pastor, the Rev. A. McElwain, then read a note from J. W. Moorhead, in which he stated that Mr. William S. Baird, of Philadelphia, had presented to the congregation a handsome copy of the Bible, and that a young lady of the church had accompanied it with a 'book mark,' on which was worked the motto, 'Cast thy anchor in Heaven.'" The pastor then read a historical sermon, the substance of which has been before given. The following ministers were present on this occasion: Rev. M. W. Jacobes, D. D., David McKinney, D. D., Dr. Kirkpatrick, Samuel McClung, James Montgomery, —— Hamilton, John Stark, and James A. Ewing.

It is not known how many members there were at the organization of the church. During Mr. Galbraith's ministry the number did not exceed eighty or ninety. At Mr. Reed's death there were only one hundred and fifty-three communicants at Indiana. During the pastorate of Mr. Williams, the highest number reported is one hundred and fifty-three. During the ministry of Mr. Quay, the membership had increased to one hundred and ninety. When Mr. McElwain was installed there were reported one hundred and fifty-nine communicants, and at the time of the dedication there were about three hundred. The membership as printed in the annual tables of 1879 was five hundred and five.

The contributions of the congregation for society and the general religious, benevolent and educational works of the church at large for 1879 were nearly forty-seven hundred dollars.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF GILGAL CHURCH.

We first notice the church as it now is. A commodious brick building, situated on a rising ground, amid a grove of oaks and chestnuts. To the left of the church lies the grave-yard—the city of the dead.

Tradition tells that the first grave in this place was that of a man found dead here, a victim of the red man. The body was interred upon the spot where it was found. Other interments were subsequently made beside it, and this resulted in the cemetery of the present day. Until last fall, the burying ground embraced 2¾ acres. At that time, however, the purchase of a portion of ground from Mr. James Ayres, increased its size to six acres.

The congregation is small, the membership being about fifty-five, but it can well testify that the prosperity of a church is not measured by the number of names on its roll, but rather by the spirit of its members. A small but deeply interesting sabbath school, attended alike by old and young, is maintained, not merely on the pleasant sabbaths of summer, but also through the storms and snows of winter. The last report of its attendance given in at the presbytery, numbered fifty-five scholars.

Glancing over the records of the past, traced by the trembling hand of him who labored so long as the faithful pastor of this people, we find that the Gilgal church was organized by the old Redstone Presbytery, in the year 1808. It had its origin and primitive growth among the families of pioneer settlers in the region of country where it is located.

Among the earliest of these settlers was Robert Thompson, who, with his son Hugh Thompson, and his son-in-law, Hugh Cannon, and their families, emigrated from Westmoreland county in the year 1797, and fixed their homes three miles north of Crooked creek. Their improvement was for a number of years, the outmost bound of civilization. Their next neighbors were the wolf, the panther, and the red man of the forest.

About the beginning of the present century, settlers began to locate north of what was then, and is still, known as the "Purchase Line," in the region technically denominated Mahoning.

Here we find the names of Isaiah Vanhorn, William Work, John Work, John Leasure, Robert Brady, James Thompson, James Irving, John Park, William P. Brady, Matthew Wyncoop, William Hopkins, and Joshua Lewis. Not all of them were church members, but all of Presbyterian proclivities and disposed to favor the enterprise of a Presbyterian church.

During the first few years of the history of these pioneers, their religious privileges were limited. It was not until the year 1806 that regular preaching was obtained. Rev. James Galbreath, then a licentiate of Redstone Presbytery, began to labor as a stated supply a portion of his time at this distant outpost, and this led to the organization of the Gilgal Church two years later. It is to be presumed that he was soon after ordained and installed as its pastor, but the exact date is not known.

Before and for sometime after the organization was obtained, public worship was conducted in private houses. On sacramental occasions, recourse was had to the tent.

Not earlier than the year 1810, the first church building was commenced. It was not finished until several years later. The site was the same as that on which the present one stands. A member who had prepared logs for a barn sold them to the congregation. Each man purchased his quota of logs for a stipulated quantity of wheat.

The house was forty feet square. The seats were in accordance with individual or family tastes. It was a structure which, when the circumstances of the time are taken into consideration, must be pronounced worthy of the purpose to which it was devoted, being then perhaps the best house in all the country.

In the course of years this primitive building became too small for the increasing numbers frequenting it. The people not being yet able to replace it with a new one, removed one entire side and attached to the opening a shed twelve feet wide. Thus enlarged, it served their purpose for some years longer.

In the year 1817, Rev. Galbreath resigned his entire charge, viz: Gilgal and Indiana, and entered another field. In the year 1859 he passed away from earth, being more than fourscore years of age.

In 1818 Rev. John Reed, a licentiate of Washington Presbytery, was ordained and installed in the room of Mr. Galbreath. His time was divided equally between the churches of Gilgal and Indiana.

About this time several families withdrew from Gilgal and obtained a new organization. These constituted the nucleus of the Associate Reform, now the United Presbyterian Church, of Mahoning.

In the summer of 1838, the old log church was taken down to give place to the new brick edifice, fifty feet square, and capable of seating five hundred persons. Frequently has this building been filled to overflowing by the throngs of people who came many miles to hear the preached Word.

In the spring of 1839 Rev. Reed, feeling the labor required by his large charge to be too severe for his strength, resigned his pastorate at Gilgal with a view of employing his whole time at Indiana. This change he afterwards regretted, for being deprived of the healthful exercise to which he had so long been accustomed his health rapidly failed. He died in the fall of 1840, but little past middle life.

The third pastor, Rev. John Carothers, came as a licentiate of Washington Presbytery. He preached his first sermon here on the first sabbath of August, 1839. In 1842, a Ladies' Missionary Society was organized. Its first contribution amounted to twenty dollars. From this time to the close of the year 1860, its contributions amounted to over three hundred and sixty dollars. Those of the entire church, for the same time, were seventeen hundred dollars.

In 1843, the version of the psalms, commonly known as Rouse's Version, which had been in use here, was superceded by the Psalms and Hymns recommended by the General Assembly. This was unsatisfactory to some, and a few families withdrew and sought a new organization under the Associate Reform Banner. This was the commencement of the Associate Reform, now the United Presbyterian Church of Smyrna.

In 1854, an organization obtained at Mount Pleasant, carried from Gilgal about thirty-five members. In 1860, an organization was felt to be needed in the village of Marion. This being obtained, over twenty families, containing about fifty church members, removed from Gilgal to that organization.

After these departures, there remained one hundred and seventy-five members, embraced in about seventy-five families. Sometime during the year 1869, the Rockbridge Church was also organized from Gilgal. An organization at Smicksburg, in 1855, and at Plumville in 1865, drew off a few families from the Mother church.

In the winter of 1869-'70 the church building was repaired at the cost of several hundred dollars. While it was under the hands of the workmen, the congregation was kindly favored with the use of the Mahoning Church.

In the fall of 1870, Mr. Carothers resigned his charge at Gilgal. For over thirty years he had labored here as a faithful and beloved pastor. During that time he had baptized over four hundred infants, and about fifty adults, and had received nearly five hundred persons into the church.

Concerning his departure, we quote his own words: "When I came, I felt the hand of Providence pointed me here. Now I feel it is pointing me away."

Fearful indeed was that parting day. A union so sacred and so long sustained could not be severed without pain. The affection between pastor and people had been mutual. Many whom he had baptized in infancy now stood beside him, strong men in the prime of life. Families, whose heads he had united in the sacred bond of husband and wife, clustered around him to bid him farewell; and those whom he had led to the foot of the cross, drew near to clasp for the last time their pastor's hand. Impelled by some hidden power, the people lingered around the hallowed place. So many tender associations clustered there, and upon this day it seemed as if the spell had been cruelly broken. When at last the crowd dispersed one thought seemed to echo in every heart. Mr. Carothers is gone.

The following winter, the pulpit was vacant. The session maintained a sabbath prayer meeting. In the spring of 1871, Rev. Carl Moore, was sent by presbytery to labor as a stated supply. During his ministration, the prosperity of the church was at a low ebb. Recent expenses had left it several hundred dollars in debt. The congregation was small and to all appearance still decreasing. Everything looked gloomy. Neighboring organizations said, "Gilgal is going down;" and their words were echoed by many of its members and supporters. But the minister ever spoke hopefully. In its darkest hours, he persisted that Gilgal was not going down. His cheerful confidence inspired the dishearted people, and again they rallied to their sacred trust. The dear old church, their life-long sabbath home, must not go down. Nerved with a new strength, they united their purposes and each year the debt grew less. The expenses were promptly met and their sky once more brightened.

On the first Sabbath of August, just thirty-five years after his first coming among them, Mr. Carothers revisited his old charge. He wished, he said, to see his people once more, and to preach again to them of the "vicarious atonement."

With feelings of mingled joy and pain, the people gathered in the sanctuary to meet their pastor. However, he was unable to preach. Assisted by friends he ascended the pulpit stair, and stood once more within the hallowed place from which he had so long taught the waiting people from the Word of God. His discourse was simply a succession of brief talks of the years gone by, when they had sustained the sacred relation of the pastor and people. Speaking of the present he said, "There was a time when I feared the old church must go down, but now I see the danger is past. Gilgal's children have been true to her in her time of need."

It was a day never to be forgotten. As he tottered down the aisle, the people pressed around him for one more word of recognition; and tearful eyes followed him as he passed from the place, perhaps forever.

At the close of Rev. Moore's ministration in the spring of 1877, Gilgal was free from debt. It is but just that he should have the gratitude of the church for having sustained the spirit of its members through a crisis that might have otherwise proved fatal to the organization.

Rev. Wm. F. Gibson, successor of Rev. Moore, preached his first sermon at Gilgal, on the first day of April, 1877. On the twenty-sixth of June, the people, without one dissenting voice, called him to be their pastor. A few days after, he was ordained at a meeting of presbytery in Marion. On the seventh of July, he was installed at Gilgal.

The relationship existing between this pastor and his people is most happy. The circumstances attending his coming too plainly indicate the hand of Providence to be ignored, and now pastor and people are united in their work, and with one mind press forward the Master's cause. May he long be spared to labor here is the earnest prayer of many.*

It will be noticed that every pastor of Gilgal came as a licentiate. During its existence of seventy-two years it has had but one supply, and he was retained for six years.

Thus we see that the old church has stood the test of many changes. Here in the wilderness it lifted up its standard in a time too remote to be remembered by any now living. It has a record in the hearts of all. Its name is ever uttered with sincere respect. All eyes turn with veneration to its sanctuary. Its cemetery is the depository of sacred memories from nearly every family. Its history is identified with the history of the county of its location from its earliest settlement. It stands in close historical relation to all the other churches around it. They are, to a great degree, the off-shoots of its life. The germ of their vitality was first nurtured here. Gilgal is the mother of them all.

ARMAGH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church seems to have been an outgrowth of Wheatfield, which was organized probably as early as 1786. Rev. George

*The present session consists of Samuel Black, Samuel Brady, Thomas Stewart, Samuel Lockard. Mr. Robert Thompson, who died a year ago, was for about fifteen years an elder of Gilgal church.

Hill, grandfather of Dr. Hill of Blairsville, preached for this congregation beginning April 1792. It is not certain whether it ever had a house of worship. The location of this congregation was in this county between Rogers' Mill and Armagh. Dr. Donaldson, in his history, says: "It was twelve miles distant from the pastor's residence. To reach it, he sometimes swam his horse across the river, preached and returned home in his wet clothes." For about twenty years after his pastorate there was no stated preaching, and the organization at Armagh was most probably only a reorganization of this, and occurred about 1820.

The preachers successively have been Rev. J. H. Kirkpatrick, December 13th, 1826, to October, 1833; Rev. S. H. Terry, June, 1835, till October, 1840; Rev. S. Swan, May, 1846, till April, 1855; Rev. Ross Stevenson, April, 1857, till 1859 or 1860; Rev. O. H. Miller, January, 1861, till June, 1863; Rev. G. W. Shaffer, December, 1867, till 1873; and Rev. D. L. Dickey.

We have no note of officers past or present. We learn that it has not sent out any one as a minister of the gospel during its existence, but its lack of wealth as compared with many others may have something to do with this. As a rule its young men have not been able to educate themselves for this office.

BLAIRSVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

[Extracts from historical sermon delivered by Rev. George Hill, D. D., June 21, 1871.]

This church was organized September 21st, 1822, by Rev. Francis Herron, and at that time received the name of West Union. There were thirty-three constituents, sixteen males and seventeen females, of whom but two remained on earth in 1871, one of whom, the aged Henry Barnes, still lives (1880); the other, Mrs. Martha Moorhead, mother of Rev. W. W. Moorhead, having prior to this time removed to Greensburg.

The first ruling elders were Michael Campbell, Daniel Smith and John Cunningham. The next was John McCrea, June 5th, 1830. W. T. Smith, Samuel Matthews and Mathias Lichtenthaler were ordained September 8th, 1838. These were reduced by removal and death till in 1854 there were none but Judge Cunningham left, and on June 25th of that year James Speer, H. A. Thompson and Mathew George were added to the session, the latter by ordination, the others by installation, having been ordained in other churches. In March, 1861, James H. Fair, Joseph Moorhead, Jacob Zimmers and J. M. Turner were ordained and installed, and on April 26th, 1868, Joseph Henderson, Jesse A. Cunningham and Samuel M. Bell were added, the former by installation, the latter two by ordination and installation. Of these seventeen Dr. Hill says in 1871, "but five now remain with us; five others are office bearers in other churches, and seven have gone to their reward in heaven."

In 1855 the congregation for the first time elected a board of deacons consisting of James Baird, David Lintner, James H. Fair, Samuel Kennedy, W. A. Loughrey, Thomas Campbell and Jacob Zimmers, and subsequently to fill vacancies James Alexander, E. G. Still, Thomas Hatham, S. M. Bell, Samuel Barr, M. H. Hassock and Wm. Lintner.

The pastors have been, Rev. Thomas Davis, who labored in the field a year previous to the organization, and continued his labors here in connection with other congregations until 1839, when feeling his strength failing, the services of a co-pastor was decided upon and the labors of George Hill secured a year later, and this condition of pastoral relation continued till the death of the Rev. Mr. Davis, May 28th, 1848, and since that time Dr. Hill alone has had pastoral charge of the congregation. On the thirtieth anniversary of his pastorate the congregation and friends assembled at the house of the pastor and Thomas D. Davis, M. D., grandson of the former pastor, in behalf of their many friends presented an elegant silver table service of nine pieces inscribed,

"PRESENTED TO
REV. DR. AND MRS. A. H. HILL, by the
LADIES OF THE BLAIRSVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
With their affectionate regards, on the 30th anniversary of his pastorate, June 21st, 1871."

The Rev. Adam Torrence, the only living representative of the Presbytery now a member of it, that belonged to it when Blairsville church was organized, presented a silver ice-pitcher, goblets, bowl and salver bearing inscription which explains itself:

"TO
REV. GEO. HILL, D. D., AND WIFE, FROM HIS MINISTERIAL BRETHREN OF THE PRESBYTERY OF BLAIRSVILLE,
On the 30th anniversary of his pastorate, June 21st, 1871."

The first church building was a frame building, and was so far finished in 1822 as to be occupied, but for years afterward the carpenter's work-bench constituted the pulpit. The location was about one-half mile northeast of the town, on lot now attached to —— Laughlin farm, and adjoining the farm of James Wiley.

This was occupied for about nine years, but Rev. Mr. Davis, preached in the town. On evenings of the Sabbaths, he visited the church at West Union, as interest began to be manifested, holding the services in private houses, and later in the log school house, and in 1828, measures were taken to build in town. This was at first opposed by a part of the congregation, but was ultimately successful, and in 1829, the building was completed, and the next year presbytery changed the name from West Union to Blairsville.

There are 250 names on the subscription list for funds to erect the house, and but two exceeded twenty-five dollars, yet the aggregate amount was $1,200.

The average increase of membership from 1822 to 1840, was 16½ per year, and from 1840 to 1871, 22½ per year. The increase from 1822 to 1871, was 971—this amount of course subject to usual decrease by death, removal, dismissal, &c., so that the comparative exhibit of actual membership results thus:—in 1822, 33 members, and in 1871, total members in communion, 222.

The contributions of the church as by comparative statement, show for two years, 1840-1, the sum of $161 20, and for 1870-1, total for two years, $3,114 15. The contributions for benevolent purposes for a period of thirty years from 1841 to 1871, show an average per annum of $487 85, not including private donations, expenses for house of worship, poor fund, Sabbath school, nor pastor's salary.

The Sabbath school was started in 1820 or 1821, and has been continued ever since with excellent results to church and community.

SALTSBURG PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first Presbyterians in the vicinity of what is now Saltsburg came into this section shortly after the opening of a land office in 1769 for sale of these lands, but it is very difficult to obtain any definite information of the time of first preaching. There appears to have been preaching at Unity in 1766, with the exception of an occasional sermon in the new settlements, there does not appear a record of the establishment of a pastorate in what is now Indiana county till the call of Rev. Joseph Henderson to Ebenezer, and even that time is uncertain, yet we learn he took charge of that congregation in 1799.

Of his labors, as well as those of the church, we give sketch elsewhere. Those living in the vicinity of the river in these years, and until 1824, worshipped with the congregations at Poke Run, Congruity, Salem or Ebenezer, and received their training under the ministry of Revs. Porter, McPherson, Henderson, Davis and Laird.

It was no uncommon thing in these early days for them to go several miles to divine service, carrying their rifles for protection, and remain for two discourses, returning home without having seen fire, for, as we have seen in the history of these early tents and log churches, there were no arrangements for fire. The first record we have of a distinct religious movement in the neighborhood was the organization of a little Sabbath school in the early part of the present century. The school was taught by Messrs. Robert and John Robinson, "and is believed to have been kept up until finally transferred to a little log schoolhouse at the end of the present railroad bridge." This little Sunday school and prayer meeting was the germ from which the present Sabbath school grew, and was probably one of the earliest movements of this kind in Western Pennsylvania."

A small stone building was erected at a cost of about $600, and opened for worship in 1820. Joseph W. Henderson conducted the first service, standing upon a work-bench for a pulpit, and as the floor was not yet laid, the hearers sat upon the hewed sleepers, with their feet upon the ground. There was neither glass in the windows or fire in the house, and the day was uncomfortably cold. This building was completed and furnished with pews in the spring of 1831, and destroyed by fire a few days later, April 1st, 1831.

The congregation was organized, by order of the Redstone Presbytery, by Rev. Thomas Davis, August 1st, 1824, and John Robinson, John McKee and Wm. H. Wray were chosen Elders, and the two latter ordained, the former having served in Ebenezer congregation; and soon after Andrew Love, Esq., was added to the number. There is no record obtainable of names or number of constituents, probably forty members in all.

The first pastor was Rev. Joseph Harper, who served the church in conjunction with Warren (now Apollo) until 1829. The number of members at the close of his pastorate was about 100. Saltsburg, laid out in lots in 1816–17, by this time had twelve or fifteen houses. Of the 100 members of the church at the close of his pastorate there were but eight left in 1870, and we give the names; Elizabeth Robinson, Robert Henderson, Kezia White, Samuel Patton, Adam Robinson, William Lemon, Francis Love and John M. Robinson.

Rev. Watson Hughes, commenced his labors for the church soon after Rev. Harper left, and continued to serve the two congregations until 1838, when Warren was relinquished, and his time devoted to Saltsburg, serving it until 1845, when poor health and loss of voice caused him to sever the relation. The membership at the close of his labors was 219. The highest point his salary ever reached was $475, and the habit of those days was to fall below the amount pledged, so we learn that at the close of his labors, the church was owing him $500. During his pastorate, however, a substantial brick church was built 60x75 feet, but much time and money has been spent since in improvement, which has resulted in a very handsome and comfortable edifice, and beautiful surroundings.

Rev. W. W. Woodend, succeeded Rev. Hughes, in the pastorate, and was ordained and installed January 14, 1846, having served the church from April, 1845. During his ministry the growth has been steady, and we are indebted to his history of Saltsburg church, for most all the facts of this sketch, and from his reports we obtain the fact that up to 1870, during the twenty-five years of his ministry, 800 souls were received into the church, and with, decrease by death and removal, still numbered at that time 371, or net gain of 152. The average amount contributed to benevolent objects during that time, was $326 per annum.

Of the late events in this church, records have not been furnished us, but it is known that an unusual interest was manifested in 1876, and the accessions for that year alone must have reached over one hundred.

In addition to the labors of the church, the pastor served as Principal of Saltsburg Academy for seven years.

We note changes in the session:—Alex'r White was elected elder in 1834, and died October 21, 1842. William McIlwain and Samuel Patton, elected in 1840, and James Rhea and William Moore, July 22, 1849; Thomas McKee, May 23, 1852. James B. Robinson, James Rodgers, and Isaiah White, were ordained and installed, December 3, 1858; S. B. Mercer, James Ewing, Johnston Glass and Daniel Rhea, September 8, 1867.

John McKee, of first session, died August 18, 1849; Andrew Love, March 16, 1851, in his 67th year; W. H. Wray, dismissed April 24, 1854, to Ebenezer church, died January 1, 1869; John Robinson died April 25, 1856, aged 84 years.

Of those afterwards appointed, Isaiah White was killed in the battle of Spottsylvania, Va., May 10, 1864; James Rhea, died November 29, 1867.

GLADE RUN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND ACADEMY.

[Extract from historical sketch by Rev. G. W. Mechlin, D. D.]

The writer in a graphic description of the pioneers, says: "The most reliable information now obtainable is that Rev. Robert McGarragh preached the first sermon ever preached in this region, in Wm. Marshall's barn or house, in 1803." "He was threading his way by Indian trail or settler's 'blaze' to the wide wilderness beyond the Redbank river to fold and feed the Great Shepherd's sheep, scattered or scattering there. To reach this broad parish he must ford or swim the Kiskiminitas, Crooked creek, Plum creek, Mahoning, Redbank and Clarion rivers, often with no small risk of life. Over this route on pack horse he removed his family, soon after he first preached on the waters of Glade run."

"The savage war whoop had scarcely died away among these hills when Father McGarragh came to preach the gospel to the people here. * * * Each spring and autumn, for years, he passed back and forth through this neighborhood, and preached, as far as can now be learned at every visit. His appointments were marked by a pin placed at the date in the almanac in some families."

As early as 1804 there were at least four substantial Presbyterian families in this vicinity—James and William Kirkpatrick, William Marshall and William Shields. There may have been others. Out of these four families came the members that composed this church at its organization in 1808, by simply electing elders who were ordained by Mr. McGarragh." This date is fixed upon by recollection of Joseph Marshall, who died in 1859, nearly eighty years old; Hon. John Calhoun, who moved here in 1813, and William Kirkpatrick. There is no evidence to the contrary.

"James and Margaret Kirkpatrick, William and Mary Marshall, William and Martha Kirkpatrick, and William and Mary Shields were probably all the members at the organization, at least all whose names are now certainly known. It seems evident also that James Kirkpatrick and William Marshall were the elders ordained at the organization.

"All the sessional records now known to exist, up to October 24th, 1836, consist of several loose papers preserved by the late George McCombs. The first is dated September 15th, 1821, and reads: 'Communicants for the first time, Margaret Marshall, John Marshall and his wife Martha, William Marshall and his wife Rebecca, Thomas Wilson, sr., Thomas Wilson, jr., James Marshall, jr., and Mary his wife, Rebecca Wait, Margaret Guthrie, Benjamin Irwin and his wife Margaret, Alexander Findley and his wife Catharine, Robert Marshall, Hugh Martin, John Marshall, sr., Moses Kirkpatrick, George Schat and Mary his wife, on examination; Wm. Travis and his wife Mary, Elizabeth Wilson, Thomas Wilson and his wife Mary, James Diven and his wife Nancy, were admitted by letters.' Others must have been admitted between the organization and this date. The late Joseph Diven wrote to me years before his death that he and George McCombs were ordained elders in 1820 by Rev. David Barclay." Another paper dated September 14th, 1822, contains 21 names. Another reads 'Glade Run, July 24, 1825. The following persons were ordained ruling elders, viz: John Marshall, Benj. Irwin and William Kirkpatrick.' The same papers make the list of those in full communion in April, 1824, eighty-two. Another makes the number 107 in June, 1825. On admissions since, we quote again from Dr. Mechlin, his summary in 1867: "From the organization to June 3d, 1826, on examination, 117; during Dr. Barrett's pastorate of twelve years, 59; for the five years of the Rev. J. D. Mason, 32; for the seven years of Rev. C. Forbes, 68: equal to 276 in 1857." The amount received by certificate to this date not stated. From 1857 to 1876, under pastorate of Dr. Mechlin, there have been received on examination 281, and on certificate 131. Present membership 240.

Of the Elders already named James Kirkpatrick died April 22, 1839; William Marshall at 75 years, (by another record 72,) died April 28, 1832; Joseph Devin, probably prior to 1870; George McCombs, aged 76 years, February 17, 1859; Benjamin Irwin, aged 75 years, June 10, 1850; John Marshall, June 12, 1850. William Kirkpatrick still lives (1876).

The elders chosen subsequent to 1825 were Hon. John Calhoun, James Wilson and William Gaghagan, chosen sometime prior to 1836; Robert Wilson and Robert Caldwell, June, 1839; Thomas Travis, John Henderson, and Wm. M. Findley, May, 1844; Benj. Irwin, John Wadding, and John C. McComb, March, 1851; Joseph McGaughey, James R. and Harkley K. Marshall, and William Guthrie, September, 1859; Samuel S. Caldwell and Archibald Findlay, October, 1867. Of these, death has removed nine. Those living (1876) are Robert Caldwell, Irwin, Wadding, McComb, McGaughey, J. R. Marshall, S. S. Caldwell, and A. Findlay.

As we have sketched the results of the pastoral labors, we will name the succession: Rev. Robert McGarragh; Rev. Jas. Galbreath, who preached occasionally; Rev. David Barclay; Rev. Elisha Dow Barrett, M. D., 1828 to 1840, who still lives, and speaks of a precious revival in 1829, the records of which are lost; Rev. James D. Mason, 1843 to 1848; Rev. C. Forbes, 1849 to 1856. Rev. G. W. Mechlin, then a licentiate, preached his first sermon to the church immediately after Rev. Forbes closed his labors, and was ordained and installed February 20, 1857, and since 1865 his full time has been devoted to this congregation. Prior to that time it was embraced in a charge with some other congregation.

"The first church building stood on ground ever since occupied for that purpose. It was 30 by 30 feet, of hewn logs, with shingle roof and board floor. * * * * A subscription paper lately discovered by Mr. J. T. Irwin among the papers of his father, Benj. Irwin, for material,—called "implements" in the paper—for this house, is a novelty. The subscribers obligated themselves in this style: A. B., 5 logs; C. D., 5 logs; E. F., 'gits 5 pair of rafters'; W. C. and J. K. 'gits one summer,' and so on till walls, floor, and roof were provided for." This building was probably erected in 1821, for the material subscribed was "to be delivered to the committee on or before 1st day of May, 1821." The next building was erected in 1831, a frame, 44 by 54 feet, floored with oak boards as broad as could be obtained, and the walls were plastered. The pulpit stood well up to the ceiling, with stairs on each side, doors to close in the preacher, and window directly behind it. "This arrangement was well suited for reading sermons, to people prejudiced against this method of preaching. No one cared to look the window steadfastly in the face long enough to see whether the minister read his sermon or not." The church sexton at one time served at a salary of four dollars a year. It is not known when stoves were first introduced, but it is remembered they did not secure a place in the sanctuary without a struggle. In 1857 a new church was built, 48 by 60 feet, and enlarged in 1871 to 48 by 76 feet.'

The Sabbath school was constituted in 1826, the first officers Joseph Reed, A. Findlay and John Calhoun. It has grown to a school now numbering 225 scholars, 17 teachers, conducted in modern style, with library and other appliances.

The Glade Run Academy, is an enterprise of this church. A general discussion of the subject led to the following action of the session, May 27, 1851: "To-day, session resolved, that measures be adopted for opening a parochial school as soon as possible." Again, in the minutes of September 20, 1851, "the subject of a select parochial school was further discussed, but no plan adopted," and "these are the only resolutions existing on paper, relating to Glade Run Academy, until the first session opened, with Rev. J. M. Jones, as principal, October 27, 1851. More than one thousand young men and women have received instruction here," and some of these now hold positions of high honor.

"Rev. J. M. Jones, of Markle, Pa., was principal from 1851 to 1854, except one session and part of another, during which Mr. R. Boyd Jack, who died February, 1855, filled the position. Mr. Jones was assisted by Rev. Alex. S. Marshall, of Marion, Iowa, session of 1852-3, and by Rev. J. M. Shields, session of 1853. Mrs. N. J. McElhose (Mrs. Judge Torrence) had charge of the ladies' department for about five years, beginning 1854, and was assisted by her sister, Miss L. M. Keir, (now Mrs. D. W. Townsend).

Rev. G. W. Mechlin, D. D., was principal from April, 1855, to December, 1861, assisted during the summer of 1856, by Rev. J. S. Boyd, of Kirkville, Mo.

Rev. James H. Marshall, of Hooker, Pa., gave instructions from 1857 to 1860, having charge several sessions as assistant principal. Rev. D. J. Irwin, of Ebenezer, Pa., was associated with him the summer terms of 1859-60. Miss Sarah H. Coe, (Mrs. D. J. Irwin), had charge of female department in 1860. Mr. James H. Ritchey, A. M., assisted in 1857, and Rev. B. S. Sloan, of Penn Run, Pa., for session of 1861.

Rev. J. M. Jones, was elected principal in 1861, and served till 1868. He was assisted by W. R. Thompson, M. D., of Washington, Pa., the first year; by Rev. Robert Stewart, D. D., of Newburg, N. Y., summer of 1863; by Rev. John A. Calhoun, summer terms of 1864-5-6; by Rev. David Browne, of Oxford, Iowa, winter terms of 1864-5; by Rev. Johnston, McGaughey, of Stewardstown, Pa., summer of 1867. Mr. Jones resigned July, 1868.

In July, 1868, Rev. G. W. Mechlin. D. D., was elected principal. His assistants for summer terms, were in 1869, Rev. Colbert, L. M., Des Islets; in 1870-1-2, Rev. S. B. Fleming, of Arkansas City, Kansas; in 1873-4, Rev. A. B. Marshall, of Morris, Ill.; in 1875, Thomas F. McCune; in 1876, Rev. Henry T. McClelland, of Chase City, Va.; in 1877, Rev. John McCracken; in 1878, W. J. Alexander, A. B.; and in 1879, Rev. John S. Helm."

One of the boarding houses for the young, is the gift of G. W. Goheen, of Goheensville, Pa.—the other was built by contributions from various sources.

Ministers who have gone forth from Glade Run church and received instruction in its Academy, are James H. Marshall, D. J. Irwin, Johnston McGaughey, B. S. Sloan, Joseph T. Gibson, Thomas L. Wilson, Adam L. Wilson, S. B. Fleming, Calvert L. M. Des Islets, Albert B. Marshall, John P. Barbour, A.

F. Irwin, Lycurgus Mechlin, Thomas M. Findley, T. W. Leard, John S. Helm, and James S. McComb. This list includes licentiates and students of theology, and there may be others since 1876, the list we write from.

The Academy has thirty students in 1879. The first board of trustees consisted of the ruling elders of the church whose names are found in this sketch.

The board of trustees appointed by court when charter for church was granted in 1857, were Jacob B. Guyer, J. R. Crouch, M. D. and John Marshall. The first elected by the church in 1858, were Joseph McGaughey, James R. Marshall, and Archibald Findlay.

THE OLD WASHINGTON CHURCH, PAYNE TOWNSHIP.

This church was erected on a lot donated by Wm. A. Patterson and Elizabeth Depester his wife, and was then situated in Washington township. The building commenced on the 6th of February, 1828, and was under the supervision of James McGlaughlin (Church of England), Adam Stumpf (Dutch Reformed), and John Bell (Presbyterian), who were selected as trustees by Mr. Patterson.

The house was a log building thirty feet square, the walls of which stand firm to this day, and was built by the inhabitants of the neighborhood without regard to denomination.

At different times preachers of the several persuasions would occupy the building, and the people would come many miles to attend the services, the nearest church being at Gilgal, a distance of seven miles.

The first minister to officiate in this church was the Rev. N. G. Sharretts of the Indiana Lutheran society, who conducted a service on the 18th of June, 1828. Rev. David Barclay, Presbyterian, of Punxsutawney, preached here Sunday, July 6th, of the same year. Rev. David Blair, still living, now of the U. P. Church, often preached here in the same year and the year following. Also we find Rev. Summerville, Methodist; John Thomas, Baptist; and Althouse, Dutch Reformed, holding services in the same or the subsequent year.

On the 15th of August, 1829, Rev. Sharretts was engaged to preach every four weeks for one year. On the 13th of November, 1833, Rev. John Kirkpatrick, Presbyterian, was installed by Revs. Reed and Lewis. He held the first communion on the 17th of November, 1833, and continued pastor of the congregation till they erected the new church about a quarter of a mile from the old building.

There are about thirty persons buried in the cemetery connected with the house. A lot was also given for "Seminary and other school purposes." For some years there has been no preaching in the old church, yet the memories of the old settlers are green with precious remembrances of the happy hours passed therein.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF ELDER'S RIDGE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

[By A. Donaldson, Pastor.]

Elder's Ridge Presbyterian Church, in Young township, Indiana county, near the line of Armstrong county, where prayer meetings and other services had been held by Rev. Joseph Harper, of Saltsburg, was organized by order of the Presbytery at Redstone, by Rev. Thomas Davis, of Blairsville, August 8, 1830. From Ebenezer were received by letter fifty members, as follows: James Smith, Esq., and Mary Ann his wife, John, Jane, and Margaret Smith, Jacob Weamer and Barbara his wife, David Elder and Julia Ann his wife, James Elder, John Elder and Elizabeth his wife, Joseph Harbison, Esq., and Rebecca his wife, Sally Harbison, Joseph Cunningham, Archibald McMeans and Elizabeth his wife, Andrew, William, and Robert McMeans, Mary Davis, Margaret, and Sarah McMeans, Samuel Cochran and Nancy his wife; Mary Elder, Robert Elder, John Reed, Sr., and Jane his wife; Alexander Reed and Lucy his wife; John Reed, Jr., and Jane his wife; Abel Findley and Eliza his wife; Catharine and Ann Harbison, Matthew Harbison, Margaret and Joseph Patterson; Hannah McCombs, Sr., Hannah McCombs, Jr., Charles McCombs and Mary his wife; William McCombs and Jane his wife; Robert Wray and Abigail his wife. Of these, only six still live in the communion of this church, viz: John Smith, Robert Elder, Andrew McMeans, William McMeans, Margaret McMeans, and Sarah Ewing, and belonging to other churches, Sally Cunningham, Jane Reed, and Joseph Patterson. Joseph Harbison, Esq., and David McComb were elected elders, and ordained November 6, 1830. The organization was reported and the church enrolled in Blairsville Presbytery at the first meeting after it was organized.

Four acres of land had been donated for church purposes by James Smith, Esq., Allen McComb, and Charles McComb, where their farms cornered together. In the fall of 1829, on the portion given by J. Smith, Esq., a three-length log church had been erected, at an expense of about $300. Its length was 60 feet; its breadth, 30 feet at the ends and in the centre 36 feet. The pulpit and pews were unpainted and ununiform.

In the summer of 1845 the second house was erected at the north end of the former one. It was a brick 56 by 46 feet, with square windows, and a story only fourteen feet high. The cost was about $1,600. The contractors were Samuel M. Taylor and Daniel Wilson. During its erection the congregation was accommodated by the Associate Reformed Church at Olivet, Armstrong county, with the use of its house of worship. This house was the scene of several precious revivals, and will be hallowed eternally in the hallowed memories of God's best people born and trained in it. Owing, however, to its unshapeliness, together with the failure of its roof and sleepers, May 13, 1878, it was torn down, scarcely thirty-three years after it had been erected. A few feet from its northwest corner, on land now donated by Robert Elder, was erected a tasteful two-story brick edifice, 70 by 48 feet, fronting eastward, at a cost of $8,000, besides the old church building. The contractors were John Oliver, Esq., and James H. Diven, of West Lebanon. During its erection the church and Sabbath school put up with crowded quarters in the halls of Elder's Ridge Academy. The basement of the new church was first used by the congregation May 30, 1879, and dedicatory services were held November 20, 1879. In point of beauty and worth, the house excels any other country church in the Presbytery.

For the first four years the church had only occasional supplies from Presbytery. Then it was statedly supplied one half the time by Rev. David Kirkpatrick. Falling back to the use of the Scotch Psalms in praise, he drew in many members, of whom but few continued when afterwards the New Testament Psalmody was resumed.

April 8, 1838, Alexander Donaldson, but four days after his licentiate preached to the congregation which had expected again to hear Mr. K. After supplying occasionally that summer, and statedly one-third of the time during the winter following, in the spring of 1839, he was called there for one-half his time, and ordained June 20, 1839. Having procured fifty acres of land close by, he has made it his place of residence ever since, and for several years preached part of the time at Curries' Run.

In 1853, the congregation having been so divided as to constitute of one-third of its members a new church at West Lebanon, which secured one-third of his time—two-thirds were given Elder's Ridge for five years. Now for twenty-[illegible] years, both churches are served on each Sabbath day; Elder's Ridge at 10:30 o'clock, A. M., and West Lebanon [illegible] o'clock, P. M.

Joseph Harbison, Esq., and David McComb, were the first elders. The present session consists, besides the pastor, of INDIANA COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY INDIANA PENNA.

William Fritz, Simon P. Townsend, Alexander McComb, S. Judson Craighead, David Findley and John Smith.

The membership numbers at present 171. The Sabbath school, which in 1846, developed from the pastor's Bible class with about fifty scholars in about five classes, now numbers about 200, including persons of all ages—nearly all that attend church—in 14 classes.

No serious disaster has ever occurred to the interests of the congregation. Miss Lizzie Culbertson, while a member of this church, went as a missionary teacher to the Indians at Wapaunucka, Indian territory, in 1858, and was driven back by the outbreak of the war in 1861. Then having married Rev. Hunter Corbett, she went with him in 186– as a missionary to China, when, after nearly ten year of faithful, pleasing, successful labor, she was relieved of the cross and received her crown, August 20, 1872.

Rev. Alexander H. Donaldson, son of the pastor, with his wife, and three daughters under six years of age, started for a new mission among the Navajoe Indians at Fort Defiance, Arizonia Territory.

From Elder's Ridge Academy, in this church, and under the control of its pastor, have gone forth 137 ministers of the Gospel, and ten foreign missionaries.

A lady member of this church, Mrs. Letitia Ewing, completed in October, 1879, the one hundredth year of life. All her descendents in this region, three sons with their wives, thirteen daughters and six sons, with the wives of two of them—as also one great grand daughter, are members of the church, and with a single exception, are all Presbyterians.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CHERRY TREE—ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting was held in the house of Richard Bard, Esq., on the first day of September, A. D. 1837. The meeting was organized by selecting H. F. Camp, chairman.

It was "Resolved, 1st. That we organize ourselves into an ecclesiastical society, under the name and title of the Cherry Tree Presbyterian congregation. 2d. That a committee of five, viz: Wm. Thompson, Esq., Wm. Moore, Matthias Bartlebaugh, John McDowell and David Somerville, be appointed to locate a site for a house of worship and report to an adjourned meeting, to be held on the 16th inst." At which time the meeting again convened and the committee reported that they had chosen the site offered and given by H. F. Camp for that purpose. The report of the committee was accepted and approved and another committee consisting of John Armstrong, H. F. Camp and Peter Newman was appointed to take subscriptions and build a house and also to manage the temporal concerns of the congregation. The committee having received subscriptions during the remainder of the year 1837, proceeded in the spring of 1838 to the erection of a house, and on the 29th day of May, 1838, it was so far completed that a meeting for the organization of a church was held therein. The church was formed at that time by a committee consisting of Rev. John Kirkpatrick and Rev. Erastus Cole, appointed for that purpose by the Presbytery of Blairsville.

The original members were as follows: Matthias Bartlebaugh, Mrs. Betsy Bartlebaugh, Mrs. Elizabeth Cole, Heth. F. Camp, Mrs. Phebe Camp, John Eason, Mrs. Elizabeth Eason, Mrs. Phebe Hollister, Mrs. Catharine Hewett, John Lowman, Mrs. Mary Lowman, Wm. Moore, Mrs. Jane Moore—13.

John Lowman and Heth. F. Camp were chosen and ordained as elders.

The Rev. E. Cole, who had commenced his labors in this congregation on the first of December, 1837, was then called to become their pastor, and on the first Tuesday of September, 1838, he was regularly installed into that office.

In September, 1839, Mr. Cole removed to the State of Ohio. From that time, for a period of thirteen years, the church was without a pastor.

During the years 1841 and 1842, the Rev. John Williams, of the Welsh Congregational church, was employed to preach a portion of his time. From 1845 to 1847, the Rev. D. M. Smith, preached as stated supply. After this time the Rev. David Mills, supplied the pulpit for a year or more.

In September, 1859, a call was made for the Rev. William Edgar. This call was not accepted, but Mr. Edgar served the congregation as stated supply for about eighteen months.

In September, 1852, the Rev. John Moore, commenced preaching for the congregation, and on the 27th day of January, 1853, he was installed as their pastor, and continued in that office until April, 1857. During his pastorate, a new house of worship was erected in the centre of the village. The cost of the building, including the lot was about $3,500.

In the spring of 1858, the Rev. J. P. Kennedy, became the pastor, and served the congregation very acceptably in that capacity, until October, 1868, a period of ten and a half years.

In the summer of 1869, the pulpit was supplied by Mr. T. D. Wallace, a student from the Western Theological Seminary; in 1870 by Mr. S. S. Wylie, also a student of the same seminary; in 1871 and 1872, by Mr. Thomas Parry, from the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J.;* in 1874, by Mr. D. M. Hazlet, of the Western Theological Seminary, and late missionary to Rio Janeiro, in South America, and from January, 1875 to July, 1876, by Rev. I. N. Diament.

December, 1879, Mr. Gordon MacKay, a young Evangelist, lately arrived from Scotland, visited the congregation by invitation, and is now, (January, 1880), preaching and doing pastoral work with a view to a permanent settlement.

The following are the names of the members who have served the church in the office of ruling elder, with the date of their ordination:

John Lowman, May 29, 1838; Heth. F. Camp, May 29, 1838; Thomas McKisick, July 11, 1847; William Herrett, July 11, 1847; Shepley Priestly, July 11, 1847; Charles Priestly, July 5, 1851; Robert A. Hamilton, July 5, 1851; John Martin, July 5, 1851; E. B. Camp, March, 1857; Benjamin Pittman, October 4, 1868; William Armstrong, October 4, 1868; James McEwen, October 4, 1868; Leonard A. Hollister, January 12, 1874; John E. Pittman, January, 12, 1874; John Eason, August 25, 1877; John E. Johnson, August 25, 1877.

The whole number of members received into the communion of the church from its organization to the present time is 234. Present membership, 72. On the 3d of September, A. D. 1854, "The Court" granted to this Society a charter of incorporation under the title of "The Presbyterian Church of Cherrytree."

The first board of trustees under this charter consisted of George M. Gamble, M. D., Mathew M. McConaughy, E. R. Hollister, E. B. Camp, James Kelly and Gideon Kinports.

The present board of trustees consists of John Eason, Esq., Robert H. McCormick, E. Howard Camp, James Walker, Augustine Craver and B. F. Pitts.

The present ruling elders are: E. B. Camp, William Armstrong, James McEwen, John E. Pittman, John Eason and John E. Johnson.

Sabbath school members, 130; average attendance, 70.

CURRIE'S RUN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

Is situated eight miles west of Indiana, in Armstrong township. Rev. R. Johnston and Rev. J. Reed were appointed as a committee, by the Presbytery of Blairsville, to organize it, during the winter of 1837. But Mr. Reed failing to attend, their appointment was renewed in April, and the organization was consummated in May, 1838. The organization took place in the church building, which was not finished. The following list includes the names of the original members: Mr. R. M. Walker, Mrs. Jane Walker, Mr. John Robinson, Mrs. Jane Robinson, Mr. R. T. Robinson, Mrs. Nancy Robinson, Mr. Samuel Bathel, Mrs. Elizabeth Bathel, Mr. Alexander Beatty, Mrs. Deborah Beatty, Mr. Robert Beatty, Mrs. Nancy Beatty, Mr. Reuben Jewell, Mrs. Jemima Jewell, Mr. David Anthony, Mrs. Floranna Anthony, Mr. James McElhoes, Mrs. Nancy McElhoes, Mr. Thomas Lucas, Mrs. Mary Lucas, Mr. Joseph Peelor, Mrs. Nancy Peelor, Mr. Wm. Anthony, Mrs. Nancy Anthony, Mr. John Lucas, Mrs. Susanna Lucas, Margaret Anthony, Sarah Beatty, Jane E. Anthony—in all, twenty-nine members.

*For six months from October, 1873, Rev. John McKean.

Mr. A. Donaldson preached there on the second Sabbath of June, 1838. Then after it had been supplied three months by Rev. Mr. Geary, Mr. Donaldson fully assumed its responsibilities in September, preaching one-third of the time for six months. On the 20th of June, 1839, he was ordained, and for one-half of his time, was installed as pastor. He continued to serve the congregation with great acceptance for fourteen years. "Then, with warm affection subsisting between the pastor and every member of the flock, because the field of labor was too large, and the other part of the charge wanted all the time, the relation was dissolved in the spring of 1853."

Rev. Franklin Orr was called the same year, and accepting the call, was installed for one-half of his time. His pastorate continued for five years, when he resigned, in order to give his whole time to the field covered by the other part of his charge. He was followed by Mr. M. M. Shirley, who preached as a supply for some time, and was then called and ordained, and for two-thirds of his time, was installed on the 30th day of June, 1859. On account of serious opposition arising, he resigned in 1863.

Its next pastor was Rev. George K. Scott, who was installed in May, 1869. After a brief pastorate, he resigned in 1871.

At a congregational meeting in July, 1872, an unanimous call was made out for Mr. Jacob L. Thompson, who had been supplying the church for some time. He accepted the call and was ordained, and for one-half of his time installed in 1873. In April, 1876, he tendered his resignation to the Presbytery, which was accepted, his pastorate closing the 1st of May.

Mr. Lycurgus Mechlin preached as a supply from May, 1876, to May, 1877. The congregation gave him an unanimous call, which he accepted, and in June he was ordained, and on the 6th day of September, 1877, installed for one-half of his time, and continues to serve them with acceptance at the time of this writing.

The elders at the time of the organization were: Mr. William Anthony and Mr. Robert M. Walker.

The present session is composed of five members, namely: R. McChesney, M. D., Mr. Hugh Miller, Mr. Samuel Fiscus, Mr. J. L. Lewis and Mr. Joseph Cribbs.

The Board of Deacons consists of six members: Mr. Samuel C. Henderson, Mr. David W. Fleming, Mr. R. M. Fleming, Mr. Thomas M. Fleming, F. L. Morehead, Esq., and David Campbell.

There have been six hundred and thirty-one names registered an its roll book since the organization. Over one hundred of this number died in communion with this congregation. Its present membership numbers one hundred and sixty. The Sabbath school grew out of a pastor's Bible class, and was organized in 1845, with perhaps forty scholars. At present it numbers one hundred and forty-one.

The first church building is still standing, and is occupied as the house of worship. The cost of erection was $1,400.

EAST UNION—PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF TAYLORSVILLE,

Was organized by the order of the Presbytery of Blairsville, on Wednesday, the 29th of April, 1846, by the Revs. John H. Caruthers and John H. Kirkpatrick.

It was composed of ten members, received by certificate from the "Manor Congregation," of which Mr. Kirkpatrick was the pastor. Their names were as follows, to-wit: Samuel Lydick, and Catharine, his wife; Robert T Allison, Jane, his wife and two daughters, Eliza and Jane; Mrs. Mary Nickel; Samuel Waddle and Martha, his wife; and Mrs. Mary Ann Shields.

Samuel Lydick and Robert T. Allison, were duly elected and installed ruling elders. In the same year, Rev. David Mills, became the regular minister of the congregation.

CENTRE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF NEWVILLE.

Application having been previously made by petition to the Presbytery of Blairsville, for the organization of Centre Church, presbytery appointed Revs. John Carothers and John Stark, and elders James Todd and Joseph Henderson, a committee to form the church. Accordingly, the organization occurred on the 3d of September, 1851, at the house of Michael Kunkle.

Thirty-five persons were received as members, and John McGara, Robert McHenry, Francis Fairman and Thomas Gibson, were elected and ordained as ruling elders. Public worship for about a year was held in Mr. Kunkle's barn. In 1852, the congregation built the present church edifice.

The pastorate of Rev. S. P. Ballman, commenced soon after the establishment of the society, and continued till in 1856. His successors were: Rev. W. Shand, 1857 and 1858; Rev. D. D. Christy, in 1860 and 1861; Rev. S. P. Bollman, 1863 to 1870, and Rev. Andrew Virtue, the present pastor, whose ministrations commenced in September, 1872.

The present membership is one hundred and ten. The average attendance at Sabbath school is seventy-five. The ruling elders are: William D. Stuchel, James Carrol, John Stuchel, James Hamilton and Joseph Johnston.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF SMICKSBURG.

The first meeting for organizing a church was held at the house of James H. McComb, of Smicksburg, on the 8th of January, 1853. Of this meeting A. L. McCluskey acted as president and John Baird and Samuel Kerr vice presidents. On motion, Joseph Robinson, Robert Jordan, J. T. Kerr, J. H. McComb, J. A. McCormick and Lysander Barrett were selected as a building committee, of which Lysander Barrett was president, J. A. McCormick secretary, and Joseph Robinson treasurer.

This committee procured two lots for the proposed church building of J. Y. Brady and James Work, and subsequently a frame house forty by forty-five feet was built according to a draft made by William Findley. It was framed, weather boarded and roofed by George Condron, seated, &c., by J. H. Jamison, and painted by John McCormick. The first cost of building was fourteen hundred dollars.

The church was organized June 9th, 1854, by a committee from the Blairsville Presbytery, consisting of Rev. C. Forbes, Rev. John Caruthers and William Kirkpatrick, elder, and the original members, numbering thirty. Joseph W. Marshall, David Warner and John McClelland were elected elders.

Rev. Forbes had charge of the congregation to May 12th, 1856, and from that time up to 1863 it was supplied by appointments of presbytery. Rev J. M. Jones then took charge of the society and continued as pastor till 1869. During the time of the ministry of Mr. Jones, Robert Jordan and W. G. Travis were elected and ordained elders; the congregation prospered and paid the balance of the debt incurred in building the house.

Rev. C. Moore was engaged and installed as pastor in 1869, for one-fourth of his time, and continued his ministry to June, 1873. Since then the church has been supplied by Revs. W. F. Morgan, Lycurgus Mechling, Harvey McClelland, J. C. McCrackin, C. C. B. Dunkin and J. S. Helm.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF WEST LEBANON PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

[By Alexander Donaldson, Pastor.]

West Lebanon Presbyterian Church, in Young township, Indiana county, where its pastor had very often preached at nights, was organized by order of Blairsville Presbytery, by Revs. A. Donaldson and Samuel P. Bolman, with Elder Joseph Diven, March 1, 1853, with the following named 66 members: Joseph Harbison, Esq., and Rebecca his wife; Jane and Margaret Harbison; Francis Harbison and Parmela his wife; Matthew Harbison and Mary his wife; Martha A. and Sarah Harbison; Thomas Cunningham and Mary his wife; Nancy and Catharine Cunningham; William Cunningham and Olivia his wife; Robert Cunningham and Rosanna his wife; David Meers and Margaret his wife; Robert Meers; William B. Taylor and Elizabeth his wife; John Reed, Sr., and Jane his wife; John Reed, Jr., and Jane his wife; Mary J. Reed; Jesse Reed and Sarah his wife; Alexander Fulton and Catharine his wife; Keziah A. Fulton; Silas Fulton and Ann his wife; Sarah J. Fulton; John McAdoo; John Elwood and Margaret his wife; William Cruikshanks and Ellen his wife; David Blakeley and Sarah his wife; Samuel Gamble; Mary Stuchell; Catharine McGough; Thomas McGough; Mary A. Montgomery; John McLain and Julia A. his wife; Baptist Scott; John W. Smith and Jane his wife; John Shannon and Mary his wife; Nancy Lowry; Joseph Crusan and Isabella his wife; Martha Cruikshanks; Pauline Miller; Dr. John Edgar; Elizabeth Sylvis; Jane Stewart; Elizabeth Cochran; Joseph Collins and Rebecca his wife. All of these, except the last eight, were from Elder's Ridge. Fourteen of these are still in our communion, viz: Francis and Parmela Harbison, Mary Harbison, Mary Cunningham, Nancy Fulton, Mary J. Collins, Jesse and Sarah Reed, Alexander Fulton, Silas and Ann Fulton, Sarah Blakeley, Thomas McGough and Elizabeth Silvis, and over twenty more are living, members of other churches.

Joseph Harbison, Esq., Matthew Harbison, Silas Fulton and John Elwood were elected Elders. The first was installed, and the others ordained to that office.

A brick building, resembling a duck sitting with wings spread out—40 feet long by 50 feet wide, with vaulted ceilings, and square windows, had been erected in the summer of 1852, at a cost of about $1,000. As it was unshapely, and failing in roof and floor, it was torn down in April, 1878, and partly on the same ground, a very neat two-story frame building was erected by John Oliver, Esq., and James H. Diven, contractors, for about $4,000 and the old church.

During its erection the Church and sabbath school had close quarters in the Baptist church for about 34 Sabbaths.

On Sabbath, November 15, 1878, the congregation used the basement of the new church, and on Thursday, 19th, the house was dedicated to the worship of the Triune God, Rev. J. J. Francis, of Freeport, Pa., preaching the dedication sermon, and Rev. Wilson M. Donaldson, of West Fairfield, Pa., preaching at night. It was a joyous, happy day, and since the congregation has been very happy in its church accommodations.

Rev. A. Donaldson, May 13th, 1853, was installed as pastor over this church for one-third of his time, and gave it his services on every third Sabbath, for five years—but since the fall of 1858, he has served on each Sabbath, at 2 o'clock, P. M., until the present time.

The present session, besides the pastor, consists of Silas Fulton, John Wherry, Esq., George W. Collins and W. T. N. Wallace. The members of the church now number 155. The Sabbath school, which had commenced several years before the organization of the church, now numbers about 175, nearly all that attend the church.

Rev. Elwood M. Wherry, from this church, has been a missionary in northern India, for over twelve years, and his sister, Miss Sarah Maria Wherry, October 2d, 1879, sailed with him and his family from New York, to be a missionary teacher in the same field.

Besides an intensely interesting revival in February, March and April, of the Centennial year, in which fifty-four persons, and eleven by letter were brought into the communion, nothing of special interest has occurred in the history of this quiet going little church.

THE MOUNT PLEASANT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF COVODE.

Forty-one years ago, this section of Indiana county was sparsely settled. Where Covode and Marchand now stands, was then in its original state, and there was no church in the township. In 1840, the Round Top (German Reformed) church was erected, and in the following year the Evangel Association log church was built. In a few years later, a Union church was partly erected in Covode, but was never finished. Except to make this a point of occasional preaching, it never accomplished much.

As early as 1840, the Rev. John Carothers, then pastor at Gilgal and Perry churches, preached four sermons each year at the log school house, near this place. This, in connection with occasional discourses in the previous summer, by Rev. Mr. Knott, a licentiate of the presbytery, were the origin of Mount Pleasant Congregation. In 1854, twenty-eight members from Gilgal, and two from Perry, having to travel from five to eight miles to their respective churches, asked presbytery for an organization at this place. The request was granted, and the organization was completed in the same year. Of then thirty members, only four are at present on our roll, viz: John Gourley, Mrs. Nancy Crawford, William G. Lewis and Margaret his wife.

In 1854, even before the organization was granted, preparations were commenced for the building of a church. This was completed at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars, exclusive of gratuitous labor by members. On the 8th of September, 1855, a frame edifice was dedicated, free of debt, save a note of fifty dollars, which was soon paid, without the congregation's knowing when or by whom.

Rev. John Carothers was the first pastor and continued in charge till 1867. From 1869 to 1872, Rev. C. Moore served in the pastoral relation. In 1877 the present minister, Rev. W. F. Gibson assumed the care of the congregation. In the absence of settled pastors, the church was attended by supplies. The first elders were William Black, of Gilgal; John Gourley, of Perry; William G. Lewis and John L. McComb. The two latter were elected at the organization.

A comfortable parsonage has been erected by the congregation, and during the past season the church has been repaired and refurnished.

Although Rockbridge church, of Richmond, was chiefly formed from Mount pleasant, yet the latter is enjoying a degree of prosperity little dreamed of in its earlier career.

CLARKSBURG PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church included in pastoral charge with that at Ebenezer was organized March, 1857, by Revs. Alexander Donaldson, George Morton, Franklin Orr, and elders William McElwain, James Marshall and Joseph Harbison.

The constituents were Samuel, Nancy and Mary Cochran, Samuel Cochran, jr.; John G., Emily J., Jane E. and Louisa Thompson; William M. and Mary Ann Hazlett; Samuel M. and Polly Russell; Dr. John and Mary J. Kennedy; J. H. and Martha Caldwell; Alexander and Mary J. Hazlett; William C. and Esther Marshall. John G. Thompson and Alexander Hazlett were chosen ruling elders, the latter ordained and installed the same day.

The church has been served successively by Rev. J. E. Carothers from May, 1858, till the spring of 1859, and by R. J. Evans, licentiate, in the summer of 1859; then by Rev. John B. Dickey for one year, after which, for two or three years, had only occasional supplies. From October 1st, 1864, Rev. David Harbison, for about two years, gave one-third of his time to this place, and in the summer of 1867 and part of the following winter the church was served by T. R. Ewing, licentiate. In the spring of 1870 arrangements were made with the church at Ebenezer, by which the pastor was released for one-third of his time to take charge of Clarksburg, and on the 29th of April, 1870, this arrangement went into effect. Since that time, however, the pastor at Ebenezer, Rev. D. J. Irwin has usually preached at Clarksburg in the afternoon each Sabbath.

In 1859 the congregation erected a neat and substantial house of worship.

"The present session (1876) consists of elders George Reed, Wm. Keir and L. W. Anderson."

The membership had increased to 112 in 1876, with a Sabbath school of ten classes.

JACKSONVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church was organized on the 19th of June, 1857, by a committee of the Saltsburg Presbytery, consisting of Rev. A. McElwain, Rev. F. Orr, W. Robinson and Joseph Henderson.

The original members were: W. R. Hunter, Lydia Hunter, James McKee, Nancy McKee, Mary Henderson, Eleanor McKee, Lucinda L. Henderson, William Latimer, Nancy Henderson, Catharine Latimer, Scott Marshall, D. R. Stitsell, Mary McCurdy, John McIntire, Catharine Jewel, Maria Thompson, Samuel Swanger, Catharine Swanger, Charlotte Swanger, S. J. Swanger, Clarissa McIntire, Hannah McKee, Lucinda Christman and Harriet McKee.

The only minister has been their present pastor, Rev. Franklin Orr.

The ruling elders have been: James McKee, W. R. Hunter, William McFarland, I. N. Hodge, John McIntire, Evan Lewis, J. M. Guthrie, Israel Thomas, J. J. Lewis and J. L. Robinson.

MARION PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This society was organized June 15, 1860, with fifty-four constituents, viz: William Anthony, M. D., and Jane his wife; Miss Maria G. Armor; Mary B. Brady; William Campbell and Rachel his wife; Samuel and Ann Brady; Hugh M., Mary B., and Miss Jane S. Cannon; Samuel and Jane Craig; James and Susan Hunter; Milton Lowman; William and Rebecca Midkirk; Elijah and Caroline Moore; James C. and Elizabeth McGinity; Mrs. Keziah and Misses Nancy and Sarah McClusky; David McClusky; Mary Park; Robert Park, Sr.; Miss Mary Park; William N. and Harriet Prothero; Eliza Rochester; William G. Stewart; Andrew J. and Mary J. Stumpf; John Sutor, Sr.; Mrs. Jane and Miss Agnes Sutor; Jane Thompson; Hiram and Ann Thomas; Miss Mary J. Thomas; James T. and Ellen Vanhorn; Mrs. Rebecca and Misses Harriet, Sophia and Rebecca M. Work; Hezekiah and Jane E. Wood; Robert and Margaret Wyncoop, most of whom were dismissed from Gilgal church, for this was an out-station, supplied for several years by the pastor of Gilgal, Rev. John Caruthers. Mrs. Mary Park had been for fifty-two years a member, and to her death, four years later, had in all these fifty-six years never missed a communion service. John Sutor, Sr., continued to occupy his seat, in old age, long after being afflicted with deafness.

At the organization, William G. Stewart, James Hunter and Elijah W. Moon were elected trustees, and Robert Park, Sr., James T. Vanhorn, James S. Martin, William Anthony, M. D., and W. N. Prothero, elders.

The congregation worshipped in the town school house till about 1870. The church building was commenced in 1868 and finished in 1871, at an expense of $6.000.

The Rev. John Carothers, who served the congregation prior to its organization, preaching in dwellings, barns and school houses, continued to preach part of his time till October, 1872; and since February, 1873 Rev. J. Logan Sample has devoted his full time to service for the congregation.

The membership has increased to one hundred and sixty, with an average attendance at Sabbath school of eighty pupils.

The present board of trustees consists of H. P. Lewis, L. A. Hollister and John P. Martin.

The present elders are Robert Park, sr., James T. Vanhorn, James S. Martin, Robert Thompson, jr., Wm. T. McCall and G. J. McHenry, M. D.

PLUMVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The first meetings of this congregation were in 1863, and on June 3d, 1864, the church was organized in Plumville school house, by Revs. John Carothers, G. W. Mechlin, D. D. and B. F. Morgan, under authority of presbytery.

There were twenty-four constituents, viz: Thomas and Eliza Wadding; George, Harriet, Henrietta and Phebe Johnston; William and Jane Wilson; Walter and Jane Templeton; Thomas and Catharine Waddle; Margaret and Mary Jane Shields; Patrick, Jane A. and S. E. Lydick; John and Elizabeth Trusel; Peter, Ann, Sarah, Mary E. and Nancy C. Sutton. Thomas Wadding and Patrick Lydick were elected elders.

A house of worship was erected in 1865 at a cost of one thousand eight hundred dollars. It is not large, but neat and comfortable.

Rev. J. M. Jones served as pastor from 1863 to June, 1868; Rev. Carl Moore from April, 1869, to September, 1876; Rev. C. C. B. Duncan from July, 1877, to July, 1878. J. S. Helm, a licentiate, and Rev. J. E. Leyda have supplied for 1879.

H. H. Shields, Joseph W. Marshall and Robert A. Allison have been elected elders, making five in all. The membership is increased to ninety and there is an attendance of forty at Sabbath school.

HISTORY OF BLACK LICK PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Black Lick Presbyterian Church, Presbytery of Blairsville, Synod of Pittsburgh, is located in Russell township, about one half mile from Black Lick Station.

The first meetings were held in a school house still standing, near the church building. The first sermon was preached sometime in March or April, 1865, by Rev. James T. Patterson, at that time a student in the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, Pa.

A Sabbath school was organized about the same time, with eighteen scholars and three female teachers.

Rev. James R. Hughes, then principal of Blairsville Female Seminary, preached regularly every two weeks, for some time, when he was followed by Rev. James Davis, of Blairsville, who continued as stated supply until after the organization and erection of the church building.

The history of the organization is as follows: At a meeting of Blairsville Presbytery, held in Greensburg, June 26, 1867, a petition was presented, signed by thirty-seven persons, requesting that a committee be appointed to visit the field and ascertain whether or not a church organization was needed.

The committee was appointed, and having performed their duty, reported in favor of an organization. The report was adopted, and on October 31st, 1867, the church was organized by Revs. S. H. Shepley, J. R. Hughes, James Davis and George Hill, D. D.

There were twenty-four original members, and their names are as follows: John Wright, James H. Fair, Harriet S. Fair, Thomas W. Bell, Mary E. Bell, David Palmer, Mary Palmer, Aaron Weir, Sarah A. Weir, Mary McGinity, Belle S. Daugherty, Amanda W. Shannon, Clara Bell, Mary E. Householder, Jane Scully, Sarah Jenkins, Sallie J. Livingstone, Nancy Alexander, Martha D. Simpson, Thomas Shirley, Eliza E. Shirley, F. M. Kinter, John Daugherty, Maggie E. Daugherty.

From the time meetings were first held until the organization, the field was regarded as an outpost of Blairsville church, the session of that church having received a number of persons into its communion, and the pastor having administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in a large barn belonging to W. C. Aughinbaugh, Esq.

The present and only house of worship was completed April 18, 1869, and dedicated sometime in the month following, and cost $2,200.

The church has its third pastor.

Rev. David G. Robinson, began preaching as stated supply, April 29, 1870, and was ordained and installed pastor, for one half time, February 2, 1871.

Rev. Robert Carothers, preached the sermon, Rev. George Hill, D. D., charged the pastor, and Rev. James Davis, the people. The other half of Mr. Robinson's time was occupied at Homer City. Mr. Robinson was pastor until called away by death, April 3, 1873, aged 33 years.

The second pastor, Rev. John Stockton Axtell, was ordained and installed for one half time, July 28, 1874. Rev. J. H. Hunter, preached, Rev. W. F. Hamilton, charged the pastor, and Rev. D. L. Dickey, the people. The church was in connection with Homer City, during his pastoral relation, also.

Mr. Axtell was released from this part of the charge April 26, 1876. The present pastor, Rev. John Gourley, began preaching as stated supply July 15, 1877. In July, 1878, the church was transferred from the Presbytery of Blairsville, Synod of Pittsburgh, to the Presbytery of Kittanning, Synod of Erie, in order to unite with Bethel Church in forming a pastoral charge. Mr. Gourley having been ordained previously at Bethel, was installed pastor for one-half time, September 5, 1878. Rev. Alex. Donaldson, D. D., preached the sermon, Rev. Franklin Orr charged the pastor, and Rev. W. W. Woodend, D. D., the people.

The first Elders, Messrs. John Wright, James H. Fair and F. M. Kuiter, were elected October 31, 1867. Mr. Kuiter was ordained and installed, Mr. Wright having been ordained in Pittsburgh, and Mr. Fair in Blairsville. They were installed the same day. The present session consists of Messrs. John Wright, James H. Fair, S. S. Morrison, McConnel Moore and S. L. Wiggins, M. D.

Messrs. Morrison, Moore and Wiggins were elected May 21, 1877. Mr. Morrison having been ordained in Armagh was installed, and Mr. Moore and Dr. Wiggins were ordained and installed all on the same day of their election. Mr. F. M. Kuiter, having removed from the bounds of the congregation, was dismissed by certificate April 26, 1877.

The first Trustees were Messrs. John Daugherty, James H. Fair, Thomas W. Bell, F. M. Kinter, David Jenkins, John Wright and Thomas Shirley.

The present Trustees are Messrs. Isaac Earhart, Alex. McCune, McConnel Moore, James Fair, Thomas W. Bell and J. H. Bell, M. D.

The present membership is seventy-five. The Sabbath School membership is fifty. Mr. John Wright, now in his eighty-fourth year, has been Superintendent of the Sabbath School from the time of its first organization, prior to the existence of the church. Owing to the infirmities of age, the active duties of the office devolve chiefly upon Mr. McConnel Moore, who, with Mr. S. S. Morrison, is Assistant Superintendent.

The organization of the church was secured mainly through the energy of "Father" Wright, while its "rise and progress" has been largely due to his earnest zeal and liberality. May he long be spared to see it grow and prosper.

The church has produced one minister—Rev. A. Z. T. McGogney.

THE HOMER CITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church was organized on the 21st of July, 1870, the original members being: John McLain, Joseph Griffith, W. H. Stanley, Mrs. Rachael Stanley, Isaac M. Watt, Mrs. Jane Watt, Mary Jane Watt, Dr. John Evans, Mrs. Bell Evans, John A. Barclay, Mrs. Margaret Barclay, Martha A. Barclay, Joseph P. Douthitt, Mrs. Ellen R. Douthitt, Walter B. George, Mrs. Nancy J. George, Reece R. Ellis, Mrs. Bell Ellis, Jesse Griffith, Mrs. Susanna Griffith, Susan Griffith, L. E. Griffith, Mrs. Elizabeth Peddicord, G. H. Ogden, Abraham Flickinger and John F. Barclay.

The church was built in 1872, at an expense of about $3,000. There is an acre of ground in connection with the church, which was purchased at an expense of $600.

The first pastor was Rev. D. G. Robinson, whose death occurred after two years' service. He was succeeded by Rev. J. S. Axtell, who remained three years. Rev. T. R. Ewing has been acting as supply for the last year.

The first elders were: John A. Barclay, Joseph P. Douthitt, and Joseph Griffith. The present elders are: John A. Barclay, Joseph Griffith, Reece R. Ellis and Walter B. George.

The present membership is sixty-eight. There have been one hundred and twenty-three members since the organization. The average attendance at Sabbath school is about fifty.

SKETCH OF CRETE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION.

Crete congregation was organized as a mission station as nearly as can be ascertained about the year 1794 or 1795, by Rev. John Jamison, who came from some of the A. R. Presbyteries east of the Alleghenies. They obtained occasional supply from the A. R. Presbytery of Monongahela. Then they asked for and obtained supply from the Associate Presbytery of Chartiers. In the course of time the members united with other organizations in the vicinity, and Crete, as an organization, apparently ceased to exist.

The present congregation was a reorganization, upon a petition of a few members of the Associate church in the region, by a committee of the Presbytery of Allegheny, in the month of May, 1854. The number at the reorganization was twenty-six. The greater part of these were from the congregations of Indiana of which Rev. D. Blair was pastor.

In the year 1856, Rev. Byron Porter became their pastor, in connection with Shelveta and Elderton. Mr. Porter resigned the charge of Crete in the spring of 1859.

They then united with the congregation of Jacksonville, and the Rev. M. H. Wilson became their pastor, April, 1859. This relation continued until the year 1862. They presented a call for Rev. M. S. Telford, and he became their pastor June 16, 1864.

The congregation was united with the congregation of Homer City, by a resolution of the Presbytery of Conemaugh held at Shelveta June 17, 1873.

The united charge presented calls to Presbytery for the pastoral services of Rev. Henry Q. Graham, which were accepted, and he became their pastor December 8, 1874.

The congration was chartered soon after its reorganization. It has a board of trustees, five in number.

At the present writing, January 1st, 1880, the organization of the congregation is as follows:

Pastor—Rev. Henry Q. Graham.

Session—John Davis, William Ray, John W. Henderson, Thomas Wiggins.

Trustees—John B. Lucas, William White, Robert Lowry, Thomas Carnahan, Robert H. Stewart.

Officers of Sabbath School—J. W. Henderson, Sup't, and a corps of eight teachers.

The annual meeting of the Congregation for the election of Trustees, &c., is on the first Monday in November, fixed by the charter.

CONEMAUGH CONGREGATION OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The time of the organization of this congregation is clouded in some darkness. There are, however, two authentic dates between which the congregation takes its beginning. The one is the suspension of Rev. John Jamison, by the Associate Reformed Synod, which began proceedings against him 27th May, 1795. Rev. Jameson, preached, as one part of his charge, in Conemaugh Congregation of the A. R. body, which worshipped in a building that stood about one mile south of the present building for worship. The Congregation of Conemaugh of the Associate church was formed, shortly after the Rev. Jamison's suspension, out of the members who had left the Conemaugh Congregation of the A. R. The first authentic date of its existence is found in a foot note subscribed to the minutes of Chartiers Presbytery of the associate body of the year of 1801, where a scale of supplies for vacant charges is added, in which Conemaugh is mentioned. Its organization was between the years 1795 and 1801. The next date of its existence is 1808, in which year a Mr. Wilson, preached as a supply. Again, all is blank till 1816, when Mr., now the venerable father Rev. D. Blair, supplied the congregation, and received a call to become its pastor for one third of his time. Having accepted, he was ordained and installed by Chartier's Presbytery, 7th Oct, 1818, pastor of all the congregations north of the Conemaugh river. The installation services were held at Crooked creek, now West Union; Rev. Alex. Wilson, preaching from 2d Cor. 4, 7: "But we have this treasure in earthern vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, not of us." The congregation then embraced the territory now occupied by the congregations of Saltsburgh, Blarsville, Jacksonville, Olivet, and partly of New Alexandria, Westmoreland county. In 1822, some dissatisfaction having arisen among a few of the members, who were not sustained by Presbytery, Moses Thompson, William Coleman and others withdrew and organized the Reformed congregation of Clarksburg. Rev. Blair preached here until the 17th of November, 1839. Rev. Thomas Gilkeson, was the next pastor, from the year 1840 to 185–; Rev. William Cannon, was pastor from the 5th of April, 1859, to September 28th, 1863; Rev. D. W. Collins, D. D., was pastor from 4th of January, 1865, to 14th of April, 1874; Rev. W. McKirahan, was ordained and installed pastor on the 14th of November, 1876.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

The first place of worship after the present organization was in Mr. James McLane's barn, about two miles south of the present house of worship. The next was the grove now used as a hitching place for horses. Here between four saplings a platform was erected for a pulpit, while the congregation sat on logs drawn to within convenient distance of the speaker. Here in "God's first temple" they worshiped Him who gives us all things, as comfortably as many a congregation on cushioned seats, and as devoutly. The first building was a log house built about the year 1820. The next building was of brick, built in 1836. The present one was built in 1874. The first parcel of ground, two acres and 155 perches, was conveyed by an article of agreement from Nicholas Coleman to Samuel Lyons, Samuel Parr and William Coleman, trustees of Conemaugh branch of the seceeding congregation of Indiana, on the 22d of December, 1817, and was deeded by W. Coleman and John Coleman to James Coleman, James Duncan and Robert Thompson, trustees, &c., on the 30th of June, 1832, and acknowledged before Samuel Templeton, Esq. Another parcel of 120 perches was deeded by Nathaniel Nesbit, to John H. Hart, Alex. Templeton and John Campbell, trustees, &c., on the 22d day of March, 1842. A third parcel of one acre and 68 perches was deeded by Wm. McPhilimy to John H. Hart, Alex. Templeton and John Campbell, trustees, &c., on the 23d of March, 1842. The whole containing five acres and 20 perches. Under the charter granted by the court of Indiana county, in 1875. The first trustees were Robert Coleman, Wm. Dunlap, Thompson Megaley, Thomas Hart, Samuel Coleman and Clark Watson.

SKETCHES OF PASTORS.

Rev. John Jamison, although not pastor of the present organization, may be considered the first of the ancestors of the present worshiping people. Mr. Jamison came to America from Scotland in November, 1782, and was the first settled pastor north of the Conemaugh river and west of Black Lick creek. He crossed the mountains on horses with three children. He came from the Associated Burgher Synod of Scotland and united with the Associated Reform church of this country. Mr. Jamison traveled over quite an extensive territory as a "supply" —from New York to South Carolina; but his principal labors seem to have been in a territory embracing what is now the northern part of Westmoreland county and the southern half of Indiana county. He was installed pastor of Brush creek, Hannahstown and Conamaugh, but was released from Brush creek and Hannahstown and his whole time given to Loyalhanna (probably now New Alexander) and Conemaugh, 11th October, 1793. He was charged with misconstruing the actions of Synod in reference to Watt's psalms, days of fasting and thanksgiving usually observed in connection with celebration of the Lord's Supper, &c., &c. These charges were preferred against him at a meeting of Synod held in Philadelphia the 27th May, 1795. Mr. Jamison was found guilty and suspended by Synod. He was then a member of the Second Associated Reformed Presbytery of Pennsylvania. These dates and circumstances are taken from his own writings, as there seems to be some dispute concerning them.

Rev. David Blair was installed pastor in 1818. He is living at present writing. [For further notice see biographical sketch of Rev. D. Blair.]

Rev. Thomas Gilkerson was ordained and installed pastor on the 28th of October, 1840. [See personal sketch.]

Rev. William Connor, installed the 5th of April, 1859. [See personal sketch.]

Rev. D. W. Collins, D. D., installed the 4th of January, 1865. [See History of Blairsville U. P. Congregation.]

Rev. William McKirahan, installed the 14th of November, 1876. He is a descendent of one of two brothers, all of whose kindred were killed in Scotland during the persecutions. The two brothers fled to the North of Ireland with their guns. On attempting to land they were fired upon by Roman Catholics. Their boat sinking, they took to the water, where one of the brothers was shot through the heel, which bled profusely, he sinking to rise no more. The other swam through his brother's blood and escaped. Samuel McKirahan came to this country in 1796, settled in Washington county, Pa., and afterward moved to Ohio, where John, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born. Mrs. I. L. McKirahan, a daughter of Rev. J. M. Johnston, is a relative of Rev. John Jamison. The first members of this congregation were James McLane and family, Moses Thompson and family, Samuel Barr and family, William Crawford and family, Nicholas Coleman and family, Henry Kirkpatrick and family, John Matthews and family, and probably others. The first elders were James McLane, Moses Thompson, William Crawford and James Matthews. This was, in all probability, 1797.

Rev. William Connor was born in Allegheny county, Pa., the 17th of May, 1799, and died the 28th of September, 1863. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pa., and studied theology (by consent of Monongahela Presbytery) under the care of Rev. Alex. McCahan, at Canonsburg, Pa. He was licensed to preach in the year 1837, by his own Presbytery, and installed pastor of Unity congregation, in Allegheny county, Pa., 1849. He was settled over Conemaugh in 1859. Here he served his Master till he was called home. Mr. Connor was a man of fine personal appearance, and by his style and manner commanded the attention of all who heard him. He was a preacher of very considerable power. The following is one of the resolutions passed by his Presbytery in view of his death:

Resolved, That in the removal of our brother we sustain the loss of a faithful watchman on Zion's walls; a good presbyter, and one free from the fear of man that bringeth a snare, shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF INDIANA.

The United Presbyterian Church, as it now exists, was formed in May, 1858, by the union of two bodies, known as The Associate Presbyterian Church, and The Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. Before the union, Indiana congregation belonged to the Associate Presbyterian Church, or as it was commonly called, "Seceder" branch.

The history of the Associate Presbyterian Church goes back to the year 1733, when Ebenezer Erskine and three other ministers of the Church of Scotland refused to respect an unrighteous and tyrannical sentence of despotism, declared their secession from "the prevailing party," made their solemn appeal "to the first free, faithful and reforming General Assembly of the Church of Scotland" and organized the Associate Presbytery. We can not follow their instructive history, nor show how necessary and how just was their cause. It is now conceded by all impartial students that they were battling for the same great principles, substantially, which, more than a century later, were upheld by Dr. Chalmers and the noble men who followed him in founding the Free Church of Scotland. Erskine and his associates deserve our admiration and our emulation as well, for their steadfast faithfulness to the pure doctrines of the Gospel, and for the unflinching courage with which they maintained them. It would be interesting to trace the planting and growth of the Associate church in this country, and especially in Western Pennsylvania, but our limits will not permit. The original settlers in this region of country, as is well known, were chiefly Scotch and Scotch Irish. Some of them had found homes long before the Revolution east of the mountains and afterwards removed hither, but for many years a constant stream of immigrants poured into these western counties directly from the old countries. One has well said of these people: "No better immigration ever reached our shores. By its enthronement of God and His word above all human authority; by its integrity of character, built up by faith in the Lord Jesus; by its aggressiveness and courage as impelled by His Spirit to fight for the truth and righteousness, it contributed largely to the form and spirit of our institutions, and to our national character." They were Presbyterians, and have made of Western Pennsylvania a Presbyterian stronghold. All the different branches of mother church at home had zealous members among them. Some were seceders. Ministers came to them at first from abroad, but ere long of home growth, and congregations were formed and grew and multiplied as the country settled up.

At the time when the history of this congregation begins, Chartiers was the only Presbytery of the Associate church west of the mountains. It was organized in 1800 with five ministers. Its territory was "all west of the Allegheny mountains, with the congregations in Virginia and the Carolinas"—a rather big field of operations for five preachers, but it was gradually narrowed as time went on, until Chartiers Presbytery, with sixteen settled pasters, now finds work enough within the limits of Washington county, Pennsylvania. Under this Presbytery Indiana congregation began to be, and continued to be until 1822. From that time until 1858 the Associate Presbytery of Allegheny had charge of it, and from the union of that year until now, the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Conemaugh.

It is perhaps impossible to fix precisely the date or the circumstances of the organization of this congregation. Conemaugh claims to have been organized as early as 1801, and is probably the oldest Associate church in the county. Indiana, in all likelihood, comes next. We do not know that Crooked creek, or West Union, as we call it now, is ever disposed to dispute the priority, but we do know that no other congregation can, except Conemaugh, for these three, until after Father Blair's settlement, were the only Seceder churches in the county. It is reasonably certain that in the year 1808, Rev. Wilson and Rev. Thomas Allison ordained elders and organized a congregation here, and held the first communion. This was three years after the laying out of Indiana as the county seat of what was then a new county, with a population of less than 6,000. The first communion was in the open air, near the corner of Water and Fifth streets. It is very probable that before the time of the organization there had been preaching here by one or more Associate ministers.

The congregation numbered, when organized, between thirty and forty persons. No complete list of their names exists, but among them were William Trimble and John Clyde, the first elders; Gowin Adams, James Simpson, George Trimble, James Thompson and James McKee.

From the time of the organization in 1808, for about nine years, we find no records which tell of the congregation's condition. There was no pastor. Rev. Alexander Wilson and Rev. McClelland, and perhaps others, preached here. Passing over these early years of which we know so little, we shall endeavor to arrange the facts we know under the successive pastoral settlements.

PASTORATE OF THE REV. DAVID BLAIR.

The first, the longest and in all respects the most important of these pastorates, is that of the Rev. David Blair. It began formally with his ordination and installation in October, 1818, but really some time before that, and closed by his release in October, 1862, and thus extended fully over forty-four years. A full history of his connection with the congregation has already been given in the sketch of his life.

After the release of Mr. Blair, ineffectual calls were presented to Presbytery as follows: March 5, 1863, for J. R. Johnston, of Presbytery of Big Spring; June 16, 1863, for J. R. Kerr, of Presbytery of Monongahela.

PASTORATE OF REV. WILLIAM FULTON.

The call for Mr. Fulton was laid before Presbytery April 12, 1864. He had preached here during the preceding winter, coming out from the seminary at Allegheny. The call was forwarded to Wheeling Presbytery, under whose care he was as a student, and accepted. In the summer of 1864 he began his labors here. His trials for ordination were heard by Presbytery at West Union, the 24th of August, 1864, and on the 25th of October following he was ordained and installed. His ministry here continued until May 3, 1870, at which time he was released and accepted a call to the Fourth U. P. Church, of Allegheny. Then his death took place, amid a sorrowing people, on the 25th of June, 1873.

PASTORATE OF REV. WILLIAM S. OWENS.

Rev. Owens was called in June, 1871, being at that time pastor of the North Church, Philadelphia. The call was accepted in Philadelphia, August 15, 1871, and in the following month he took charge of the congregation. He was installed November 11, 1871. He accepted a call to Steubenville, Ohio, and was released June 26, 1877.

PASTORATE OF REV. J. DAY BROWNLEE.

The congregation were very sorry to part with Rev. Owens, but they were singularly fortunate in securing Rev. Brownlee to preach for them that summer. A call was made out, presented and accepted, and Rev. Brownlee entered upon his pastoral duties about three months after the former pastor was released. He was installed, and under his care the congregation is in a flourishing condition.

ELDERS

At organization, William Trimble and John Clyde.

February 7, 1825, the following names of elders appear: John Trimble, James Getty, William Trimble, John Agey, Andrew Dickson.

October 13, 1832, the following additional names are found: John Patterson, William Calhoun, David Hutchison.

October 27, 1835, Samuel Trimble, William Bruce, Thomas Hood, John Taylor, were ordained elders.

April 7, 1840, Thomas Swan was elected an elder.

May, 1840, John McEwen was received as an elder.

August 25, 1847, Robert Patterson, John Lytle, Robert Hammill and George Rowe were elected elders.

September 1, 1855, John B. Allison and George Rowe were ordained and Andrew Gibson installed.

December, 1858, R. C. Taylor, James R. Smith, Samuel Trimble, jr., Robert Stephens and Samuel Lowry were ordained and installed.

At present the elders are, A. W. Taylor, James Anderson, A. T. Moorhead, jr., John Robertson, Robert Stephens and R. C. Taylor; the last election having been held in 1873.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

In 1818, when Mr. Blair's ministry began, Indiana was but a small village. There was then no church building of any kind in the place, and but two organized congregations of christian people—the other being the Presbyterian congregation, of which Rev. John Reed was pastor. He settled here the same year as Mr. Blair. Both these congregations worshipped in the old court house (a new court house then), which gave place but a few years since to the present fine structure. Mr. Blair preached here every third Sabbath and Mr. Reed every second Sabbath, so that their appointments frequently fell on the same day. This matter, so long as it was necessary, was amicably arranged by each of the ministers alternately giving way to the other on the conflicting days, and fixing his appointment elsewhere to suit.

The first house of worship of the U. P. congregation, and the first erected in this town, was built in 1826-7. It was a one-storied brick building on the same site which is now occupied. This house was replaced in 1851 by a two-storied building, the walls of which still stand, though the building was entirely remoddled in 1868, after the close of Father Blair's pastorate. The cost of the first building was probably under $3,000. The cost of the second house in 1852, was about $3,400.

REV. DAVID BLAIR.

David Blair was born in the parish of Donagor, county Antrim, Ireland, in the year 1787, "three weeks after old Hallowe'en"—that is in November. The name of his father was Hugh, of his mother Jane. They were of Scotch-Irish descent. They had eleven children, three daughters and eight sons, David being the eighth child. Hugh Blair, with his family, attended the Presbyterian church at Park Gate, county Antrim, but for some reason became dissatisfied with the pastor and joined the Seceder church. Donagor congregation, about one mile away, was the nearest organization of Seceders, but in good weather the pastor would preach in the barns and groves in the vicinity of Henry Blair's house. David's first school teacher was an old maiden lady named Jennie Taggart, who kept school near his home. He afterwards attended school in the session house of Donagor congregation. His instructor's name was Heveron, a man who had been educated for the priesthood, but in a frolic he got married, and thereafter devoted himself to teaching. The last night that the Blair family spent in their old home, there was a school exhibition in the session house. David, being one of the pupils, was in attendance. One part of the exercise was the delivery of sentiments by the pupils. When David was called upon, he arose and said:

> This is the last night of our school,
> So I hear them say;
> To-morrow we will leave our home
> For sweet America.

The teacher had not learned of the intended departure of the family, and when David repeated these lines, he came to him and bade him an affectionate adieu.

The family crossed the ocean at five different times. The larger part, however, including David, went to Belfast the day after the exhibition, and, after a delay of a few days, on the second day of October, 1802, set sail in the ship Philadelphia. The sea was rough, and after a passage of nine weeks and three days, they landed at the city of Philadelphia. From there they went in a wagon to the city of Pittsburgh, where they met Rev. Black, a minister with whom they had been acquainted in Ireland, and many members of their congregation in Ireland who had settled in that vicinity. The family went to Steubenville, Ohio, where Ann Strahan, David's sister, lived. David, with two of his brothers, walked from Pittsburgh to Steubenville. The Ohio river was filled with floating ice and they were unable to get across. They were detained on the eastern side for two days. That winter was spent in Steubenville. There, in the spring of 1803, the whole family met together. Then came the removal to Crawford county, Pa., near Hartstown, where Hugh Blair, the father of David, had purchased 100 acres of land, three acres of which were cleared and a log cabin thereon erected. In a short time Mr. Blair built a log house, in which the family lived until a frame dwelling was erected, a number of years after. He also purchased the balance of the tract, in all four hundred acres. Here they made their home. On the 10th of March, 1835, Janet Blair, David's mother, died, aged ninety years. His father died January 5, 1837, aged ninety-six years. They were members of the old Seceder church, and their bodies rest in the Shenango graveyard. Many of their descendants live in the western part of Crawford county, and others of them are scattered through the West.

At the time of their removal to Crawford county, "David was a youth of not quite sixteen and by no means rugged. Indeed, all through his early manhood he was somewhat delicate. He had not seriously thought of devoting himself to the ministry, though the subject had been mentioned in the family. His inclination was for books and study." His elder brother John, sent him a copy of "Brown's Remains," which he yet values highly. The reading of this little book made a strong impression upon him, and was largely instrumental in deciding him to enter the ministry. In this resolution he was encouraged by a student with whom he was intimately acquainted. "Such were the natural and simple influences by which Divine Providence ordered the choice of a vocation and decided the course of his life. In the winter of 1805-6, he began his classical studies privately, under the direction of Rev. McLean, the father of Dr. D. H. A. McLean, late of Cannonsburg, Pa. Like many others then and since, he had to work his own way, for the most part, to an advanced education, and was none the worse for such discipline." In 1810, he entered Jefferson College, at Cannonsburg. "He would have been graduated in 1812, but his health gave way early in that year, and he sought its restoration in open air work at home. His college course was thus never formally completed, but his education was for that day good. With re-established health, in the fall of 1812, he began his theological course under Dr. John Anderson, of the Associate Church, in the old two-storied log building at Service Creek, in Beaver county, Pa., which is claimed to have been the first Theological Seminary on this western continent. The usual four sessions were passed here, study being carried on privately during the spring and summer months between sessions. A portion of the second summer, Mr. Blair spent teaching a school ten miles distant from Service Creek.

He "took the old way," and made the pupils read the Bible. He kept up his Theological studies, and at the opening of the term, returned to the Seminary.

One fact characteristic of the spirit of ecclesiastics in those days, and strongly illustrative of the independence of control and tenacity of purpose which have always distinguished Mr. Blair, we cannot omit. We refer to it chiefly because it was but one of several instances, during the early ministerial life of Mr. Blair, in which he came into very unpleasant, but to him not discreditable collision, as we think, with the rigid views and requirements of a part of the Presbytery. It must be remembered that in all branches of the Presbyterian church, and in others also, the tests of orthodoxy were formerly defined much more narrowly than they now are. This was true even of those ministers whose views were called liberal, and there were many such—but in the case of others, there was a keen watchfulness for heresy, and a success in finding it, which we cannot even understand. The slightest departure from the most minute points of the received doctrines, from the common interpretation of a text, from the current metaphysics of theology, and even a failure to come fully up to the standard in modes of expression—were by not a few regarded as evidences of unsoundness in the faith. We may not blame these good men of lang syne. Their strictness was excessive but it was sincere and honest. Let us simply be thankful that we now know, as they did not, how to maintain the truth faithfully, and yet not put men in straight jackets. The Associate Church has been reported and affirmed, and we dare not say slanderously, to have had its full share of ministers, not only orthodox, but strictly and minutely so. That Chartier's Presbytery once had some such, Mr. Blair's experience shows. In the year 1813, while in his seminary course, he received a text from which to preach a specimen of progress before the Presbytery. The passage was in Romans, chapter 1, beginning, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." Something in this discourse, when delivered—we believe it related to the word Law as used by Paul, the nature of the covenant of works and the relation between the law and the Gospel—did not accord with the ideas or coincide with the modes of expression which some of the members regarded as alone orthodox. The discourse, after some discussion was condemned. Mr. Blair was examined but yielded nothing. He thought he was right and some of the Presbyters at least, among them, that man of honored memory, Dr. Robt. Bruce, of Pittsburgh, either took the same view or held the point of no real importance. The matter was dropped and Mr. Blair continued to attend the Theoligical Seminary. He pursued his studies diligently.

Having spent four years at the Theological Seminary, he was, on the 29th of August, 1816, licensed to preach. His first visit to this region was made shortly after, at which time he preached at Conemaugh and Crooked Creek. The people desired that he should be sent back, and some time in the winter following, he returned and preached at Indiana, as well as at Conemaugh, and Crooked Creek. Early in the year 1817, a call was made out from the three congregations and was presented to the Associate Presbytery of Chartiers, at a meeting in Pittsburgh, on the 4th Wednesday of May, 1817, accompanied by the following petition, which is still in possession of Mr. Blair:

To the Reverend Moderator and Other Members of the Associate Presbytery of Chartiers, to Meet at Pittsburgh on the Fourth Wednesday of May:

The prayer of your petitioners of Conemaugh Congregation humbly sheweth: That, having obtained the moderation of a call for Mr. David Blair, it is our earnest desire that our call be presented to him as soon as possible, and that his settlement amongst us, in case of his accepting our call, be forwarded with all convenient speed. The annual salary which we promise to pay Mr. Blair is five hundred dollars for his ministerial labors.

John Pattison, Esq., and Judge James Smith are appointed Commissioners.

In testimony whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names this 27th day of May, 1817.

Elders—James Smith, John Pattison, William Trimble, John Clyde, Samuel Templeton, James Hart, Robert Miller.

William Coleman, Francis McOlim, David Hutcheson, James McKissick, Sen., James Smith, Bartholomew Hadden, Samuel Lyon, William George, W. Fleming, James Thompson, Robert Douthitt, John Black, Nathan Douthitt, Joseph White, William Smith, John Smith, James Smith, jun., Alexander Pattison, William Calhoun, William Renkin, John Morrow, Theophilus Smith, George Trimble, Joseph Scott, James Templeton, David Gilleland, Robert Henry, John Morland, John Lytle, Samuel George.

This paper is signed by seven elders from the three congregations, and thirty men, who, doubtless, were mainly householders, and represented a much larger number of members. It requires a little explanation. It is not a call, but simply a petition accompanying the call. Why was it drawn up and sent to the Presbytery? Unless we mistake its character, it was not necessary or usual to send such a paper. Our impression is, and Father Blair's recollection supports it, that it was known to the people that some members of the Presbytery were disposed to question the orthodoxy of the candidate, and they feared some obstacle would be interposed to prevent or at least delay his settlement. Hence this petition. We do not venture to assert this as a certainty, however. There may have been other good reasons to account for it, but in the light of all the circumstances, the explanation seems natural and probable. In whatever way its existence may be accounted for, it is an interesting relic of years long gone by.

The call was sustained and presented. Mr. Blair was not willing to settle at once, but desired to travel for a year. Under the advice of Dr. Bruce, however, he accepted the call upon condition that he should not enter upon his charge for at least a year. The remainder of the year 1817 and the early months of 1818 he spent in a preaching tour in the South, going through Virginia and the Carolinas, and returning by way of Tennessee, Kentucky and Ohio, performing the entire journey upon horseback. While in Ohio he preached several times to the Associate congregation of Xenia. A call was proposed, but Mr. Blair said: "No, I could not accept it; I have promised to go back to Indiana," and though the prospects at Xenia were not more flattering than here, he returned to fulfill the engagement already made.

In the spring of 1818, the Presbytery of Chartiers met at Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania. Mr. Blair was present and delivered his trial discourses for ordination. Under the same influence which had controlled the Presbytery before, his trial discourses were condemned and rejected, and texts for new discourses assigned, to be delivered at a subsequent meeting of the Presbytery. Mr. Blair proceeded to fulfill his remaining appointments, and preached in Indiana, Crooked Creek and Conemaugh, one day in each. He then visited his home in Crawford county. From there he went to Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, and on to Philadelphia, to attend a meeting of the Synod, in May. Leaving his horse at Philadelphia, he proceeded by public conveyance up through New York to Saratoga, preaching in vacant congregations.

Returning, he spent a short time here and then went to face Presbytery once more. Presbytery met again at Cannonsburg. He delivered his discourses and they were not condemned, though he did not take back anything of his so-called error in his former discourse. Rather amusing is the account he gives of it. It seems that the fault found with one of his previous discourses—known as the "popular sermon"—was that it was defective on the doctrine of the divine son-ship of Christ—not that he impugned that important doctrine, but that he ignored a certain line of metaphysical argument in support of it, which is neither scriptural nor intelligible to any human mind. To draw him out fully on this point he was given the text: "Dost thou believe on the son of God?" Mr. Blair opened his sermon from this text by stating that the question was asked by the Savior of a certain man, born blind, whose sight the Lord Jesus had restored by a miracle, and who had been condemned and put out of the synagogue for confessing his divine character and mission. After fully elucidating that point he made a practical application by asking whether a Presbytery had ever been known to do such a thing. Clearly they had put a sharp sword into his hands when they gave him that text, and he was bold enough to smite them with it.

When his introduction was ended he simply gathered up the ideas of his previous sermon—the rejected one—and presented them again in the same order and nearly in the same words.

Rev. T. Allison, a member of the Presbytery, in his criticism of this discourse said, "he has gathered up everything we faulted in the former discourses and he has rebuked us openly, before the same congregation that heard the other discourses opposed." Rev. James Ramsey only remarked, "I thought the young man had let the mercury rise too high in the introduction to the popular sermon, but I approve of the discourses." It was due to the influence of these two members of the Presbytery that Mr. Blair's former discourses had been condemned.

At this time some members of the Presbytery were opposed to "occasional hearing." The young candidate for ordination was known to regard their opposition as groundless, and for this opinion Rev. J. Walker desired to have him tried. The Presbytery did not comply with Rev. Walker's request and the matter was dropped. Mr. Blair was ordained without being asked to comply with the usual rules.

At the meeting of Synod in the following May, 1819, a resolution was passed denouncing occasional hearing. When the vote was taken Mr. Blair and Rev. Francis Pringle "craved to have it marked that they dissented" from the action of Synod, and subsequently gave their reasons in writing, which appear in the published minutes.

Presbytery appointed a commission, of which Dr. Robert Bruce, of Pittsburgh, and Rev. John Dickey were members, to install Rev. David Blair "in the congregations north of the Conemaugh river." The exact date of Mr. Blair's installation is uncertain. One record fixes it on the 7th of October, 1818, while the "Report of the Presbytery of Chartiers" to Synod in May, 1819, sets forth that "on the second Wednesday of October Mr. David Blair was ordained to the holy ministry and installed in the United congregations of Indiana, Crooked Creek and Conemaugh." At all events it is quite certain that he was installed in October, 1818, by a commission, at Crooked Creek, now known as West Union, at which time and place Rev. Blair first held communion and was assisted by Rev. Alex. Wilson, from Washington county.

Mr. Blair was the first pastor settled in this charge. Other ministers had preached here, and a call had been made out and presented Rev. McClelland, who declined it.

We have no means of ascertaining the number of members in the churches over which Mr. Blair was placed. He relates that there could not have been more than half a dozen families in the Indiana congregation. We find in the statistical table of 1819, published by Synod, the three congregations are credited with two hundred and thirty members.

Wednesday, May 24, 1820, the Associate Synod met at Huntingdon, Penn., and on the evening of that day "Mr. Blair, by request of Synod, preached from Acts iv: 12—'Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.'" On Monday, May 29, 1880, a petition was presented to Synod from the South asking that two ministers be sent to preach for a few months, and that Rev. Blair be one of them. That day the following entry was made in the minutes:

"Nine o'clock P. M.—Messrs. Murray and Blair were appointed on a mission for three months (September, October and November) to the churches under our inspection in the Presbytery of the Carolinas, particularly to visit the vacant congregations as extensively as possible, to inquire into the state of settled congregations, to meet with the Presbytery and make report to next meeting of Synod; and they were authorized to draw upon the Treasurer for a sum of money to bear the expenses, not exceeding $100, and likewise for such sums as may be necessary to remunerate the preachers who may be employed to supply their pulpits in their absence. Adjourned."

Synod met next morning at 6 o'clock, and after appointing a committee of two to publish the minutes, and some devotional exercises, adjourned.

Mr. Blair was to have been married in the fall of that year, but when he received his appointment to the south, he postponed his marriage until his return. He came up the "Valley of Virginia" and stopped at Huntingdon, where his intended bride lived. The day was fixed for their marriage and he came on to Indiana, and resumed his labors among his people. At the appointed time he returned to Huntingdon on horseback. Early in the year 1821, he was married to Miss Margaret Steele, of Huntingdon. "She proved, as many here well knows 'a help-meet for him,' such as not every minister is blessed in finding. After a long life of usefulness, she was called hence, April 6th, 1865, leaving a blessed memory to her husband and children and to all this community."

When Mr. Blair reached Indiana, after his return from the south, he was amazed to find that charges of heterodoxy had been raised against him. We need not follow them to their complete failure. These early troubles are best understood by remembering that Mr. Blair had no sympathy with the extreme doctrines—amounting in his view to almost fatalism—which some then held. He believed in and preached the old "Narrow doctrines as they were called, in regard to the plan of salvation and the freedom of the Gospel offer of Christ, and all his benefits to lost sinners, simply as such, and without any limitation by the sublime mysteries of God's sovereign decrees. These 'Narrow Doctrines,' the United Presbyterian Church now hold in their glory as a church to proclaim."

The Associate Synod again convened at Pittsburgh in May, 1821. Mr. Blair and Mr. Murray were in attendance and presented a report of their proceedings in the mission to the Carolinas. The report was read and accepted. The following is an extract from it, and all that is of general interest; "we complied with the directions of Synod, so far as was in our power.

We entered the service of the church in the Presbytery of the Carolinas, Mr. Blair on the last Sabbath of August, and Mr. Murray on the last Sabbath of September, and we continued our services in the bounds of that Presbytery until the last Sabbath of November, during which time we preached the Gospel in the congregations both settled and vacant, and dispensed the Lord's supper as often as was in our power. * * * With regard to the state of the church in the Presbytery of the Carolinas, the limits of a report of this kind will not permit us to give a particular detail. The people received us with every mark of affection, and attended our ministry in considerable numbers. They manifested such a concern for the Gospel as will warrant a minister to hope that by diligence and fidelity to his trust, his labors may be successful; but we must acknowledge that the principles and habits of slavery must be very prejudicial to the life of religion; even under the most energetic and faithful ministry; the best laid plans for reformation are by these demoralizing principles powerfully resisted, and owing to the influence of these principles, the minister of the Gospel sees himself deprived of communion with the religious, who emigrate to the free States in the western country in numbers far exceeding anything known in northern congregations. But notwithstanding all these discouragements, we have reason to believe that the day is not far off when a change is to take place with regard to religion in that country, and God will build up Zion; for slavery is felt more and more as a moral evil, and its bad consequences on society are by the generality discovered. We spoke our sentiments with the utmost freedom, to congregations, to church sessions and families, and all seemed to be sensible of the claims of slaves to the privileges of Christianity and the rights of citizens; and some, we have reason to believe, are truly desirous of knowing how their slaves are to be put in possession of these privileges. We hope the Synod will continue their exertion in behalf of religion in that country, and that the addition of a number of zealous, faithful ministers to their number, will be of great advantage to those who are settled, and under the blessing of the King of Zion, give life to religion.

DAVID BLAIR,
ALEXANDER MURRAY."

The Synod learning from the above report "that the act of Synod relative to slaveholding is not attended to among our people in the slaveholding states, a committee was appointed to report on the most effective means for enforcing the observance of said act among the people of our communion in said states." The Synod also resolved "that copies of the act of Synod on slavery, 1811, be transmitted to the several ministers in our communion residing in the slaveholding states, and that said ministers be enjoined to endeavor to have said act carried into effect." Messrs. Doman, Blair and W. Wilson were appointed a committee to carry out the will of Synod.

In 1822 Synod met at Philadelphia. Dr. Robert Bruce and Rev. D. Blair of Chartiers Presbytery and John Dickey of Ohio Presbytery presented their petition for the erection of a new Presbytery comprehending Pittsburgh, Ligonier, Conemaugh, Bethel, Glade run, and Mr. Dickey's congregation. The Synod having heard the members of Chartiers and Ohio Presbyteries, considered it expedient to divide Chartiers Presbytery and appointed the petitioners, together with several other ministers and their ruling elders to meet in Presbytery at Bethel on the first Tuesday of July next at noon, said Presbytery to be designated The Presbytery of Allegheny. The new Presbytery was organized July 9, 1822. The three congregations, Indiana, Conemaugh and Crooked Creek remained in this Presbytery until 1858, when the Associate and Associate Reformed churches united, forming the United Presbyterian Church, and Conemaugh Presbytery was organized, according to the appointment of Synod, at Shelocta, Indiana county, November 12, 1858, and was constituted with prayer by Rev. David Blair, as appears by the report of the Presbytery to the First United Presbyterian Synod, which met in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, September 28, 1859.

When Mr. Blair was settled it was as pastor of the three congregations, Conemaugh, Crooked creek and Indiana. They were then known to Presbytery and Synod under the single name of Conemaugh. These were at that time the only organized congregations of the associate church in this region, so that Mr. Blair was the seceder bishop of all the congregations north of the Conemaugh river. His home was established in Indiana. Crooked creek was twelve miles away and Conemaugh fifteen. His labors were not confined to these points exclusively. He preached as opportunity offered all over the county. But in the three places he ministered regularly, preaching one-third of the time in each congregation and receiving from each one-third of the salary promised. The county was sparsely settled then. The census report for 1820 gives the whole population at 8882. The roads are poor enough yet, but grand highways in comparison with the bridle paths and stumpy tracks through the woods, and fords across unbridged streams, which were the only routes of travel then. For more than twenty years he rode this circuit from Indiana, summer and winter. It is perhaps owing largely to the constant, regular and vigorous exercise in the open air which his charge necessitated, that the somewhat delicate young man, supposed to be a little weak in the lungs, grew physically strong and built up a constitution which has kept him alive to such an advanced age.

In the year 1840, he resigned the charge of Conemaugh, and gave half his time to each of the other congregations. The arrangement continued without change until July, 1852, when the Rev. Samuel Anderson, became his colleague in the charge of the two congregations, preaching alternate days with him, as a rule, at Crooked creek and at Indiana. From this time, the congregation at Indiana, had preaching full time. In July, 1858, Mr. Blair became pastor for the whole of his time, at Indiana, and Mr. Anderson was settled as the pastor of Crooked creek or West Union.

On the 24th of August, 1862, at Elderton, Pa., Mr. Blair tendered the resignation of his charge to the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Conemaugh. At a meeting in October of the same year, at Mahoning, he was finally released. Forty-four years had passed from the time of his ordination and installation. During all these long years he had preached clearly and fully, the doctrines of the everlasting Gospel, and performed the multiplied duties of a pastor—visiting the homes of his people to counsel and to catechize—to comfort the sick and bury the dead—marrying the sons and daughters of the congregation, and baptizing their children.

He had attained the age of seventy-five years, and felt that the time had come for his retirement. He knew not nor could others know, to what an uncommon length his life should extend. The fact of his long continued relations to the same people among whom his ministry began, is of itself no slight proof of his ability as a preacher, and his excellence as a man.

In 1878, when the old home-stead was torn down to make way for improvements, Mr. Blair went to live with his daughter, Mrs. Margaret B. Taylor, of Indiana, where he continues to make his home. His general health is good. Several years ago he lost his hearing, and is now quite deaf. He reads his Bible and the newspapers of the day. He takes great interest in the work of the church, and, although he cannot hear one word uttered by the pastor, he attends the regular service of the church upon the Sabbath day with more regularity than many younger persons.

A few years ago Rev. Byron Porter, since deceased, preached at Shelocta on the twentieth anniversary of his settlement there. After speaking of the changes which took place in the twenty years among the ministry, as well as among the people, of the changes of the relations of pastors and congregations, and of the death of ministers who had been members of Conemaugh Presbytery, he said: "Amid these changes, Rev. David Blair remains like the venerable oak that has withstood many storms and tempests. Many of you look to him as your spiritual father. He baptized you in infancy; he first gave you the emblems of a Saviour's broken body; he joined you in marriage with the companions whom you call the fathers and mothers of your children. His deep toned voice and direct prayer have gone up from your chambers of sickness. His venerable form has led the processions that carried your loved ones to the grave. This people should still honor him as their spiritual father. Almost a score of congregations have swarmed out from the three hives where he formerly labored. Such a fact cannot be paralleled in the records of the United Presbyterian church."

The time can not be far hence when the place that now knows and has so long known him, shall know him no more forever. When he goes hence he may, not unfitfully say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord will give me at that day."

Rev. W. S. Owens, in concluding his sketch of the life of Mr. Blair, in his historical sermon of the U. P. congregation of Indiana, delivered in February, 1880, says:

"We can not look back over a period of years so long as that included in Mr. Blair's ministry here without thinking of the many important moral and religious events it covers. We can not speak of these except as they were felt here, and as they were connected more or less intimately with his life and work. There was the great anti-Masonic excitement of 1826 and the year following. In reference to this, Mr. Blair's teaching and action were in the fullest accord with the position which the Associate Church had assumed, and which the United Presbyterian Church still maintains towards secretism. There was the question of slavery. As far back as 1811 the Associate Church had adopted the position of utter condemnation of the institution and had enjoined the most positive teaching and discipline. Mr. Blair disapproved to some extent the measures advocated by the early abolitionists, but from their principles and those of his church he never severed. He was among those who helped to educate the public sentiment of this region in the anti-slavery principles which ultimately wiped out the foul blot upon our free Constitution and Christian civilization. There was the question of Union between the Associate and Associate Reformed Churches—a question which was always in agitation from the beginning of his ministry. He was always a pronounced and active Union man. He resisted the narrow spirit of exclusiveness and advocated always the broad principles of Christian charity and unity which only in later years have attained general acceptance No man worked harder to secure that happy union of 1858 which gave birth to our United Presbyterian Church, and no man rejoiced with a greater joy when it was at last accomplished, after long years of hopes and fears, of prayers and labors and struggles. As you all know, he is still a Union man, and I have sometimes thought he is now, as he was sixty years ago, only a generation in advance of the rest of us on that subject. Then, finally, there was the great civil war and the issues involved in it. It began, though it did not close, while he was still pastor of this church. I need not say that he was on the side of 'the Union, one and indivisible,' and that this pulpit gave forth no uncertain sounds on the mighty issues then pending."

BETHEL UNITED PREBYTERIAN CHURCH

Is located in Wheatfield township, in the southern part of Indiana county, about three miles north of the Conemaugh river, and the line of the Pennsylvania railroad. This is one of the oldest organizations of the denomination in the county, and like other congregations of its age, the records of the first years of its existence are very imperfect; and hence any history of the earlier years of the congregation's existence, which can be given at this date, must only be an approximation to the truth It seems that the first meetings for preaching were held at the house or Mr. Ligget near to Centreville. Then meetings were held at the house of Mr. Graham, about two miles north-west from Centreville, and then at a tent near to the present site of the church. It is thought that the congregation was organized about the years 1808 to 1810, by the election and ordination of the following named persons as ruling elders, viz: Allen Graham, David Ried, Robert Sutton, Andrew Fee and Isaac Griffeth. It is not known what the names or the number of the persons were who composed the congregation at its organization, but it is probable that their number was quite large, as we learn that there were persons who attended church at Bethel, from different parts of the territory now included in the townships of East-Wheatfield, West-Wheatfield, Brush Valley and Buffington. The first house of worship was built in the year 1818, was a stone structure, and is still standing near the site of the house now occupied by the congregation as a place of worship. It was built at a cost of about one thousand dollars. The second house of worship, a frame structure, was built during the summer of the year 1857, at a cost of about eighteen hundred dollars. This house was burned to the ground on the morning of the 16th of October, 1865, just as the congregation was assembling for public worship on Monday of the communion services. It was rebuilt during the year 1866, at a cost of about twenty-four hundred dollars, and is at this date still occupied by the congregation as a place of worship. The congregation was supplied with preaching by Rev. Mr. McConelle, and others, up till year 1818, when the Rev. Hugh McCrodden, was ordained and installed as the first pastor of the congregation. He served the congregation in this capacity until the year 1830, when he was suspended from the office of the ministry on account of his intemperate habits.

The next pastor, the Rev. N. C. Weed, took charge of the congregation in the year 1833, and served it as its pastor until about the year 1847, when he was released, and removed to Illinois, where he took charge of a congregation, and where he still lives, but in too feeble a state of health to be engaged in the active work of the ministry.

The next pastor the Rev. S. M. Coon, took charge of the congregation in the year 1849, and remained with it in this capacity until the year 1854, when he was released. He now has a pastoral charge in the eastern part of the State of Ohio.

The next pastor, the Rev. H. Q. Graham, took charge of the congregation in the year 1856, and remained with it in this capacity until the year 1874, when he was released, and took charge of the congregations of Homer and Crete, also located in this county.

The next pastor, the Rev. D. H. Blair, took charge of the congregation in the year 1876, and was released in the year 1877, after having served the congregation as pastor for one year and three months. He now has a pastoral charge in the northern part of this county.

The following named persons are at present the officers of the congregation, viz:

Pastor—Rev. T. P. Patterson.

Elders—John Dick, sr., Cornelius Hutchison, Joseph Mack, Thomas V. McGahen, David McCroty and Smith Dick.

Deacons—Hugh Mack, John Hood, D. C. Mack, Thomas McCune, Robert D. Mack and Robert G. Mack.

Treasurer—D. C. Mack.

The congregation has at present a membership of 160 and an attendance of 125 scholars in the Sabbath school. A few years ago this congregation had a membership of over 200, when a congregation was organized at New Florence, composed of members mostly from this organization. The congregation at New Florence, which was originally composed of members the greater part of whom were formerly connected with Bethel congregation, is vigorous and active, and has as its pastor the Rev. D. W. McLain, whose parents were formerly members at Bethel, where he received his early religious training. Other young men who received their early religious training in the bounds of this congregation, occupy the position of pastors in other parts of the church—and members from time to time have gone out from this congregation to the far west, and have been instrumental in helping to build up and strengthen other congregations, such is but a very brief and imperfect sketch of this, one of the oldest United Presbyterian congregations in this county. But the influence for good which it has exerted in the past and is destined to exert in the future, will only be fully known when Christ's redeemed ones are gathered home.

HISTORY OF WEST UNION UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION.

For more than thirty years no record was preserved of the history of this congregation. The facts concerning its organization we have gleaned from the memory of those who in their childhood were among the worshipers, and who still survive, and from their former aged and honored pastor, Rev. David Blair.

The first religious services were held in the grove in which the church now stands. In the year 1814 the congregation was organized. Rev. John Jamison and others supplied them with occasional preaching. On or about the 27th of May, 1817, this congregation, in connection with Indiana and Conemagh, then in the Presbytery of Chartiers, presented a call for Rev. David Blair to become their pastor. This was accepted on the condition that he should have the liberty of traveling for one year. Upon his return, he was ordained and installed in the congregations named, September, 1818. The elders in the congregation at this time were: James Smith, John Pattison, Robert Miller, John Black and William Calhoun. Mr. Blair continued his ministrations in this congregation every third Sabbath, riding through cold and storm, seldom failing to be present until 1820, when he was called by Presbytery to preach in the South. On his return, after an absence of five months, he found some charges preferred against him for preaching erroneous doctrine, these charges being made by some members of each congregation. He was tried and sustained by Presbytery. About this time Conemaugh Presbytery was organized, within the limits of which his congregation were located. On the 4th of August, 1852, Rev. Samuel Anderson was unanimously called by the congregations of Indiana and West Union, and installed as assistant pastor. In August, 1858, this union was dissolved at the request of West Union, Indiana taking the whole of Rev. Blair's time, and this congregation Rev. Anderson's.

Being much reduced by the organization of Shelocta and Elderton, and also by many families being thrown into Jacksonville, Crete and Olivet by the union, at the request of Olivet, one-third of Mr. Anderson's time was granted to that congregation. He continued to preach and attend all the ordinances in both congregations until April, 1867, when he resigned. His resignation being accepted by Presbytery, this congregation, for the first time since its organization, was vacant. In the following month of May, Rev. J. C. Telford was called by this congregation, in connection with Olivet, and installed as pastor. Mr. Telford having, some time after this, resigned the charge of Olivet, his whole time was taken by this congregation, and he is now their pastor.

Since its organization the following persons have been chosen elders: David Hutchinson, Alex. Gilmore, Alex. Henderson, Alex. Patterson, William Lytle, —— Smith, John Gilmore, Robert Hood, Alex. Graham, William Smith, James Calhoun, James Caldwell, John Olver, R. T. Hart, John Robertson, D. J. Blakely, John Wachot, S. T. Smith, William Miller and James Kier.

This congregation first worshipped in the grove, and logs were arranged for seats. The pulpit was about as rude in its construction, being a platform raised four feet from the ground, resting upon the same support. Its dimensions were about five by eight feet. In 1815 a log church was built; its size was 24 by 30 feet. The space between the logs was "chinked and daubed," the roof secured with "ribs and weight poles," and the doors fastened with wooden buttons. This being too small to accommodate the congregation, they frequently assembled, on pleasant days, in the grove, which came to be known throughout the neighborhood as the "Tent," a few years after this the church was enlarged to accommodate their increase in numbers. Forty feet were added to its length, making a house of rather singular dimensions—24 by 70 feet. It was named by their pastor, David Blair, "The forty foot Lane." There was a door at each end and one in the side of the church. The pulpit was placed in a recess opposite the side door. Its height was five or six feet from the floor, boxed in and overhung with what no doubt appeared, compared with the surroundings, an elegant "sounding board." The ceiling was twelve or thirteen feet high. A little lower and directly in front of the pulpit was another box of similar construction for the "clerks," one of whom, it is said (like the young man under the preaching of Paul), fell asleep, and resting too heavily upon the door, the "button" broke and he fell into the arms of a good brother, whose surprised ejaculation of "God bless you," is said to have interfered with the serious attention of the worshipers and even to have caused a smile to appear upon the face of the reverend minister. The pews seem to have been in keeping with the surroundings. Some were slabs with backs set in. Others of a finer finish, but the aristocrat in that line was an old "chair maker" who rose to the dignity of a settee with "rungs and paint." In 1838 a large and commodious brick church was erected on the same site. This was removed in 1877 and the present very substantial and comfortable house was built.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF MECHANICSBURG AND THE CONGREGATION OF PINE GROVE, FROM WHICH IT HAD ITS ORIGIN.

As early as the year 1817 Rev. J. T. Bessly, then a resident of the State of South Carolina, but afterward for many years a resident of Allegheny City, Pa., traveled on horse-back from his native State through this part of the country and preached some to the fore-fathers from whom originated the congregations of the United Presbyterian Church in this part of the county. After this date, up to the year 1830, preaching and missionary labor were done in the same neighborhood by Revs. Messrs. Pringle, of the Associate Church; Jamison, Proudfit, McCrodden, Moses Herr, sr., and Moses Herr, jr., of the Associate Reformed Church. At this date the congregation of Pine Grove was organized by the election of Joseph McCortney and Matthew Dill as ruling elders. Rev. Mungo Dick, of Sewickly, Westmoreland county, Pa., presided in the organization of this congregation. The first and only house of worship occupied by this society was built in a stony hollow about three miles east of the present site of the village of Mechanicsburg; hence it was sometimes called "Stony Hollow" Church, and sometimes "Pine Grove" Church. At this time it is not known what the cost of this house of worship was. The first pastor of this congregation, in connection with Bethel congregation, was the Rev. N. C. Weed, who took charge of it in 1833 and was released in the year 1847. The next pastor was the Rev. S. M. Coon, who took charge of this congregation in connection with Bethel in the year 1849. He labored as pastor in this connection until the year 1852, when two congregations were organized, composed of members which had made up the old charge of Pine Grove. One of these congregations was called Mechanicsburg, and had its place of worship located in the village of Mechanicsburg. The other was called East Union, and had its place of worship at a point situated about six miles east from Mechanicsburg. The members of the session at the organization of Mechanicsburg congregation were Daniel McFarland and Joseph Wilson, and it had about forty members, but what their names were is not known at this time. The first members of session in East Union congregation were Joseph McCortney and James Stewart, but what the names of the original church members were is not now known.

The congregation of Mechanicsburg, in connection with the Presbyterian congregation ("old school") of the same place, erected a house of worship in the year 1850 at a cost of about nine hundred and fifty dollars. About the year 1852 the congregation of East Union erected a house of worship at a point about six miles east from the village of Mechanicsburg, at a cost of about eight hundred dollars. Thus, these two new organizations being completed, the old Pine Grove Church was abandoned as a place of worship, and sold, and is now occupied as a dwelling house.

The Rev. S. M. Coon still remained as the pastor of Mechanicsburg and East Union congregations, in connection with Bethel congregation, until the year 1854, when he was released. The next pastor, the Rev. J. C. Greer, took charge of Mechanicsburg and East Union congregations, in connection with Centre congregation, in 1856, and remained as the pastor in this connection until the year 1859, when Mechanicsburg and Centre congregations applied for and obtained his services for the whole time. Rev. Greer remained as the pastor of these two congregations until the year 1864, when he was released and went into the Union army in the war of the rebellion as captain of a company.

The next pastor, the Rev. Samuel McArthur, took charge of Mechahicsburg congregation in connection with East Union and Greenville congregations in the year 1869. He remained as pastor in this connection until the year 1874, when he was released and moved to New Concord, Ohio, where he still resides, but on account of the infirmities of age is not engaged in the active work of the ministry.

The next pastor, the Rev. D. H. Blair, took charge of Mechanicsburg congregation in connection with Bethel congregation in the year 1876, and was released in the year 1877, after having been the pastor of this charge for one year and three months.

Mechanicsburg congregation at the present time has a membership of about forty and a Sabbath School of about thirty scholars which meets on each Sabbath. East Union congregation, which is mentioned in connection with this narrative, is at the present time occupied as a mission station under the care of the session of Mechanicsburg, and the present pastor of Mechanicsburg and Bethel congregations preaches one sermon in East Union Church once a month. In connection with the congregation there is a Sabbath School of about forty scholars which meets each Sabbath, and with the blessing of God upon the means used in this needy mission field, it is hoped that East Union will grow into a useful and prosperous congregation. The following named persons are at present the officers of Mechanicsburg congregation, viz: Pastor, Rev. T. P. Patterson; Members of Session, Daniel McFarland, Joseph Wilson, Alexander Dick and Thompson McCrea.

Such is a brief sketch of the United Presbyterian congregation of Mechanicsburg and its connections. This congregation has at no time had a large membership, but at the present time we have the three congregations of Greenville, Mechanicsburg and East Union, which at their origin were composed of members which made up the old congregation of Pine Grove, and the three occupy the same territory which was occupied by the one original congregation; and while the membership of each of these congregations is not so large as the membership of the congregation from which they originated, yet with the blessing of God upon fruitful labors it is hoped that three prosperous and useful congregations will be established on the same territory once occupied by the old Pine Grove congregation.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF SHELOCTA.

An attempt was made in 1854 to organize a congregation of the Associate Presbyterian Church at Shelocta, but as the persons elected to the office of ruling elders did not accept, the organization was not then effected May 1, 1856, another attempt to effect an organization was made, and was successful. The following named persons, all, or nearly all, from what is now known as West Union congregation, were then enrolled as members of the Associate Presbyterian congregation of Shelocta: Robert Beatty, Mrs. Elizabeth Beatty, Miss Nancy Beatty, John Cunningham, Mrs. Rebecca Cunningham, Mrs. Mary Wiggins, Miss Jane Wiggins, Miss Sarah A. Wiggins, Andrew Wiggins, Mrs. Sarah Wiggins (wife of Andrew), Thomas Wiggins, Mrs. Sarah Wiggins (wife of Thomas W.) Samuel Wiggins, Mrs. Lena Ann Wiggins, Andrew Sharp, Mrs. Mary Sharp, Mrs. Sarah Sharp, Mrs. Margaret Smith, Hugh B. Miller, James Kerr, Mrs. Catharine Kerr, Mrs. Elizabeth Farren, Mrs. Margaret Walker, Miss Jane Walker, Charles Kerr, Mrs. Isabella Kerr, Miss Mary Kerr, Mrs. Hannah Lockhart, Robert H. Armstrong, Mrs. Martha Armstrong, Hugh Wiggins, Mrs. Jane Wiggins, Miss Susannah Keener, Miss Charlotte Keener, Miss Jane Keener, Alexander T. Calhoun, Mrs. Nancy Calhoun, John B. Beatty and Mrs. Margaret Beatty.

Of these thirty-nine named, thirteen are yet on the roll of this congregation. Alex. T. Calhoun, John B. Beatty and John Cunningham were elected ruling elders, and ordained and installed November 1, 1856.

A lot was purchased from Mr. Samuel Wiggins, on which the church building now occupied by the congregation was erected and opened for worship, in the summer of 1856. This house cost $2,077.75. The building committee, consisting of R. H. Armstrong, James Kerr, John Cunningham and Hugh Wiggins, continued to manage the finances of the congregation until May 6, 1862, when the congregation, having been chartered, a board of trustees was elected. The first trustees were David Bothell, David Anthony, Nathan Douthett, John Cunningham, Samuel Campbell and Benjamin Johnston. Since that the following have been members of the board, viz: J. W. Calhoun, Moses Wood, Alex. A. Wiggins, W. L. Calhoun, James Wiggins, Johnston Keener, Samuel Calhoun, Andrew Sharp, A. J. Reed, John Russell, W. L. Reed, Samuel Lytle, John Ramsey, James Campbell, William Wiggins, A. P. Lytle, George Rupert, Hugh Wiggins, R. H. Cunningham and James A. Walker.

Rev. Byron Porter was installed as the first pastor of the congregation on the first Tuesday of July, 1856. Mr. Porter first preached but one-third of his time at Shelocta, the remainder of his time being spent at Elderton and Crete. At the end of the third year of his pastorate he resigned Crete, and divided his time equally between Shelocta and Elderton. After a very successful pastorate of over twenty years, he died at his residence in Elderton, Armstrong county, November 28, 1876. Mr. P. was born in Bridgewater, Pennsylvania, January 24, 1824. He graduated from Washington College, Washington, Pennsylvania, in 1844, and at the Theological Seminary of the Associate church at Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1849. He was ordained August 21, 1850, and was settled for five years in Randolph county, Illinois. On account of impaired health, he then came east, and settled as stated above.

December 11, 1877, Rev. J. Buff. Jackson was installed pastor of this congregation, in connection with Elderton, and still continues in charge.

John B. Beatty, of the original session, died August 16, 1857. John Robinson, Hugh Wiggins and Samuel Lytle were added to the session, April 17, 1858. Mr. Lytle was certified in 1859. John Ramsey and George S. Mitchell were added to the session August 17, 1859, and William Anderson, February 4, 1860. Mr. Robinson died August 29, 1865. Mr. Mitchell was certified in 1866. Samuel Lytle returned to the congregation in 1869 and resumed his place in the session.

January 29, 1871, all the members of session resigned, and the congregation adopted the rotatory system of electing elders. While that system was in force the following named persons were members of session, viz: John Lytle, Andrew Sharp, A. J. Reed, Charles Barr, J. M. Rankin, James Wiggins, W. Anderson, Albert Dick and Dr. T. J. Marlin. May 7, 1877, it was decided to abandon the rotatory system of choosing elders. May 9, 1879, A. J. Reed, James Wiggins, Dr, T. J. Marlin and Albert Dick, who then composed the session, having resigned, and all having been re-elected, were, together with Andrew Sharp, installed, and these now form the session.

The present membership of the congregation is one hundred and fifty-eight, the largest it has ever been. Something over one hundred are enrolled in the Sabbath school.

By the union formed in 1858 between the Associate and Associate Reformed churches, the United Presbyterian church was formed, and this congregation is since known as the United Presbyterian congregation of Shelocta.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF JACKSONVILLE.

The village of Jacksonville for years had no church organization of any denomination, the one whose history we now trace being the first established in this place. This does not seem to have been owing to irregularities on the part of the citizens, nor wholly to neglect or indifference, but rather to the fact that flourishing congregations existed in the vicinity to which many of the people had attached themselves. Ere long it began to attract attention as a promising field for the establishment of a church bearing on its banner the old reformation doctrines and practices.

About this time a neighboring congregation of the Presbyterian church began to introduce hymns of human composition into its worship. A number of persons dissatisfied with this and preferring the songs of the Bible as the matter of their praises, began to turn their thoughts toward a church adhering to the use of these songs.

Rev. Jonathan G. Fulton, of the Associate Reformed Church, was then located at Blairsville, Indiana county. Application was made to him or probably through him to the Presbytery of which he was a member, for a supply of preaching. Mr. Fulton responded in person, whether on his own responsibility or by appointment of Presbytery does not appear. He was the pioneer in the movement, being the first Associate Reformed minister to preach at Jacksonville. His eloquence and power as a gospel minister, as an able expounder of the word of God, are well known and highly spoken of throughout all this region and doubtless contributed largely toward gathering together and uniting those who were favorable to this enterprise. By him chiefly it was fostered—under his care and labors it grew and speedily developed into an organization possessed of considerable strength and importance from the very outstart. What is now known as the United Presbyterian congregation of Jacksonville was organized in 1841 under the care of the Associate Reformed Presbytery of Blairsville by Rev. Jonathan G. Fulton and his session, Messrs. Wm. Pike and John McCrea of Blairsville congregation.

The organization took place in Jacksonville in a building then used for the double purpose of a school house and a place of worship—now used for a work-shop.

It was the only building of the kind then in the village and was used in common by all denominations holding service in the place. Forty-six members were received at the time of the organization; of these a considerable number came from the Presbyterian congregation of Bethel already referred to; of the others we have no account as to the source from which they came.

At the time of the organization, Messrs. George Lowman, Hugh Blakely and James Lyons, were elected and ordained ruling elders. Mr. Lyon, soon afterward removed. From the best information we have, it would appear he remained about two years a member of the session. Mr. Blakely, on account of age and infirmity, has not met with the session for a considerable time. Of the original three, Mr. Lowman alone remains an active member.

Below we give a list of members of session from the beginning up to the present time, and so far as we can, the time when their names appeared on the records, and disappeared therefrom:

Name appears	1841.	George Lomans.	Continues.
"	1841.	Hugh Blakely.	Continues.
"	1841.	James Lyons.	Disap'rs about 1844.
"	about 1844.	Robert Gamble.	" 1846.
"	1844.	Wm. Stewarts.	Disappears 1861.
"	1854.	Francis Crooks.	" 1859.
"	——	J. Y. McCartney.	1857.
"	1848.	Samuel Wilson.	1865.
"	1848.	John Gilmore, sr.	1855.
"	1859.	Alexander Graham.	Continues.
"	1859.	J. Campbell.	Disappears 1863.
"	1859.	John Gilmore, jr.	Continues.
"	1865.	Wm. Gammill.	Dis'rs 1870, resig'd.
"	1865.	John Lytle.	" 1870.
"	Scott	Lowman.	Continues.

The present session consists of Messrs. G. Lowman, H. Blakely, A. Graham, J. Gilmore and S. Lowman. The first meeting of the congregation for religious services were held, sometimes in the house referred to above, in which the organization was effected, but this being found too small to accommodate the numbers that came to hear the word, the meetings were frequently held in the open air, in a grove by a spring, perhaps, "because there was much water there." In 1842, or about one year after the organization took place, they erected their first house of worship—a brick building, 48x55. This remained until about the present year. About the last of June, 1876, it was taken down in order to make way for another which is now in process of erection, and which the congregation expects to enter within a few weeks. The audience room of the new church is 44x64, with a tower in front and a vestibule 8x12. It is expected to be complete and well adapted to the wants of the congregation.

The congregation was for some time at first without a stated minister. It was supplied mostly by the different members of Presbytery. Prominent among the names mentioned in this connection is that of Mr. Fulton, who after organizing, dispensed the first communion in a grove near the village. Large numbers of people are said to have been present; drawn doubtless, by the well known ability of this gifted man of God. His labors were continued for some time as an occasional and then as a stated supply during one year for one third of the time. The precise date of this period we cannot ascertain, but it probably ended in the early part of 1843. Of the next three or four years we can gather but little save that during this period, the congregation enjoyed the pastoral labors of Rev. Alex. McCahan, two or three years. He preached with acceptance in the united charge of Jacksonville and Olivet, but the length of his pastorate and the date of its commencement or close, cannot be ascertained from any records in our possession. In 1848, Rev. Matthew H. Wilson, became its pastor and continued in this relation for over 14 years. In an obituary notice published in the United Presbyterian, of December 10th, 1862, we have some account of his labors in connection with this congregation, from which we quote: "In June, 1848, he was ordained and installed pastor of the United Congregation of Jacksonville, Olivet and Smyrna."

After laboring a little over two years in the Smyrna congregation with great acceptance and encouraging success, he resigned, arrangements having been made in the other congregations to take the whole of his time. In 1850 he opened an academy in Jacksonville in which he continued to teach, with the exception of a single session, till 1860, when his declining health rendered it necessary for him to abridge his labors. Being elected to the presidency of Madison College, located at Antietam, Ohio, he resigned, and in April, 1857, entered upon his duties in the college, accepting at the same time the pastoral charge of the Antietam congregation."

Not finding as promising a prospect of usefulness in his new field of labor, as representations had led him to anticipate, and entertaining a strong attachment to the people of his former charge, he returned the same fall and resumed the pastoral care of the Jacksonville congregation. In August, 1862, he resigned and on November 30th of the same year passed away in death. During most of his pastorate Jacksonville received two-thirds of his time. He was at first connected with Olivet and then during the latter part of his ministry with Crete. Before the commencement of his pastorate ninety-six persons had been received into communion. During its continuance 134 were received, so that up to its close 230 in all had been admitted to membership.

The next pastor was Rev. M. S. Telford. He was licensed in April, 1863, was ordained and installed pastor of the united charge of Jacksonville and Crete, April 16th, 1864. He continued in this relation until June, 1872. He seems to have labored among this people for some time before his ordination. The entire period of his labors was probably about nine years. He seems to have labored with much success and was permitted to see largely of the fruit of his labors in members gathered into the Redeemer's fold.

The entire number received into membership during his pastorate is 131, and from the beginning of the congregation up to the close of his pastorate 361 were received. The average number received yearly during Mr. Telford's time was a little over twelve. The highest number received during any one year since the organization was twenty-five—the lowest, two. The average from the year of the organization up to the close of 1875 is nearly ten. The entire number received from the beginning up to the present is 388. Of these 140 remain and are at present connected with the congregation. Many have removed beyond the bounds; some have connected with neighboring congregations and others, not a few, have been taken, as we trust, to the church triumphant above.

From the congregation two persons have entered the ministry, viz: Abraham Lowman and D. C. Wilson.

BERACHA UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION, LOCATED IN PLUMVILLE.

About the year 1820 a few families connected with the Associate Presbyterian Church applied to Allegheny Presbytery for preaching. Revs. David Blair, Kirkland and others were sent as missionaries, and in 1824 the congregation was organized by Rev. D. Blair and Elder Getty, of Indiana. The elders elected at the organization were John Clyde, William McKee and Samuel Briggs.

In 1827 a call was presented to Rev. John Hindman, and in the same year he was installed, the first pastor of the congregation, preaching in it the one-sixth of his time. The congregation prospered under the pastoral care of Rev. Hindman, which continued until about 1850, when he resigned.

Rev. J. C. Telford was called by the congregation and installed in 1850, and continued his labors until 1867.

The congregation continued without regular pastoral services until 1871, when Rev. D. W. McLane was installed in the united charge of Beracha, Smyrna and Mahoning, and continued his labors four years.

In 1875 the congregation was left without a pastor and continued so until August 1, 1877, when Rev. D. H. Blair, the present pastor, began his labors in the field.

In 1838 Andrew Morrow and Christopher Stuchell were ordained and installed as ruling elders, and in 1860 John McEwen and J. R. Hopkins became elders. On the 25th of November, 1868, J. R. Stewart, A. Briggs and William Morrow were elected, and in December were ordained and installed as elders by Rev. E. A. Brownlee. In 1872 Wilson Morrow and John Stuchell were ordained and installed by Rev. D. W. McLane, and in 1878 Thomas Morrow was installed as elder by the present pastor.

The first church was erected in 1822, the present building in 1854.

BIOGRAPHY.

Rev. John Hindman was born in Pennsylvania, graduated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., and studied theology at Xenia, Ohio. At the time of the union which constituted the United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Hindman joined those who protested against the union, and remained in the Associate Church until his death in 1860.

Rev. J. C. Telford was born in New York State, graduated in Sefferson College, and studied theology at Newburg, N. Y.

Rev. D. W. McLane was born in this county, graduated at Monmouth, Illinois, and studied theology in the Northwestern Seminary, Illinois.

Rev. D. H. Blair, the present pastor, was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, April 21, 1841, served about three years in the army, studied preparatory studies in West Geneva, Ohio, in 1865–66, graduated in Monmouth, Illinois, in 1871, completed theological studies in the same place in 1874, began pastoral labor in the south part of this county in March, 1876, and in his present charge August 1, 1877.

MAHONING CONGREGATION OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH LOCATED IN EAST MAHONING TOWNSHIP.

Mahoning congregation was first occupied as a preaching station in 1809, and continued as such about nineteen years. In 1828 it was organized as a congregation, and the first officers elected, namely, William McCreery and Hugh Hamilton.

Fifty members entered the new organization whose names are as follows: William McCreery, Margaret McCreery, Jane McCreery, Margaret McCreery, James McCreery, S. F. McCreery, John Hopkins, Margaret Hopkins, Rosanna Hopkins, Robert Hopkins, Robert Hamilton, Jane Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, jr., Rachel Hamilton, Hugh Hamilton, Nancy Hamilton, Miriam Work, Aaron Work, Mary Work, Miriam Work, James Work, Mary Work, A. S. Work, Margaret Work, John Work, Martha Work, William Work, Nancy Work, Robert Lytle, Catharine Lytle, William Lytle, John Lytle, Elizabeth Lytle, Sarah Lytle, James Mabon, Jane Mabon, Matthew Steel, Sarah Steel, Robert Craig, Agnes Craig, Samuel Simpson, Phœbe Simpson, Andrew Gibson and wife, John Thompson, Jane Thompson, John Coon, Nancy Coon, Nancy Smith, Martha Hopkins, Margaret Hopkins.

The officers elected since the first organization who are not now in the congregation are: Robert Lytle, A. S. Work, John Trimble, John Ewing and Aaron Work. The present officers are: James McCreery, Robert McCreery, William Hamil, John Clyde and Abner Briggs.

Rev. John Hindman took pastoral charge of the congregation in 1830 and continued until 1849. In January, 1850, Rev. J. C. Telford took charge of the congregation and labored as pastor until April, 1867. Rev. D. M. Thorn became pastor October 16, 1868, and continued as pastor between one and two years. Rev. D. W. McLane began pastoral labor the 1st of March, 1871, and remained four years. Rev. D. H. Blair, the present pastor, began labor the 1st of August, 1877.

The first church building was erected in 1833 on the ground now occupied by the church. The building cost about $700. The present edifice was erected in 1857 at a cost of about $1 800.

One young man from this congregation entered the ministry, namely, William H. McCreery, now laboring as a missionary in Loveland, Colorado.

SKETCH OF HOMER CITY UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Homer City congregation was formed by a transfer of Centre congregation under the care of the U. P. Presbytery of Conemaugh, by direction of said Presbytery, at a meeting held at Shelocta, June 17, 1873.

Centre congregation was organized September 20, 1856, by Rev. M. H. Wilson, and Elders George Lowman and Samuel Wilson, (in accordance with action of A. R. Presbytery of Blairsville.) The elders elected in the new organization were Arch'd S. Pattison and Wm. C. McCrea. The number of members forming the new organization was about forty. The first administration of the Lord's Supper in the congregation, was by Rev. M. H. Wilson, August 24, 1856. Rev. J. C. Greer, was called to be their pastor in the spring of 1857, and was ordained and installed in June, 1857.

This relation continued till the war broke out, when Mr. Greer resigned and entered the army as a captain in the 206th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. A call was made out for the pastoral services of Rev. D. M. McClellan, which was accepted, and he was ordained and installed pastor, September 10, 1867. This pastorate continued for about five years, when at the request of Mr. McClellan, it was dissolved.

A petition was presented to Presbytery of Conemaugh, in the year 1867, asking for the organization of a Mission Station at Homer City, for various reasons given, and the request was granted.

An effort was made to erect a house of worship in Homer City, and a proposition was made to the members of the Presbyterian body, that a Union Church should be built, each contributing half the cost and enjoying half the benefits. This was rejected.

The congregation determined to build for themselves. The building was completed and dedicated August 1, 1869. The entire cost of building and lot was $2,000. The whole amount was paid within a few months of the completion of the building. At a meeting of the congregation July 24, 1869, the following were elected trustees: for three years, Martin Kier; for two years, Robert Carson; for one year, Peter Kinter.

On account of the growth of the organization, and the increasing weakness of Centre, Presbytery resolved unanimously to transfer the organization from Centre to Homer City—the congregation to be called henceforward Homer City. Order granted at Shelveter, June 17, 1873.

A call was made out by the congregation at Union, with Cret congregation, for the pastoral services of Rev. H. R. Grahar and he was installed pastor, December 8, 1874.

The present officers, January 1, 1880, are:

Pastor—Rev. Henry Q. Graham.

Session—Robert Hammill, Martin Kier, Alexander L. Mitchell and John Devinney.

Trustees—Thompson C. McCrea, J. R. Warner, James Allison, Robert Carson, Wm. H. Douthett, Peter Kinter.

Sabbath School Officers—Superintendent, J. R. Warner; assistant Superintendent, Robert Carson.

Teachers—Mrs. M. J. Douthett, R. Judson Warner, Mrs. Elizabeth Carson, Miss Belle Lytle, Mrs. A. J. Graham, Miss Maggie Mitchell, Wm. H. Douthett, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith.

The annual meeting of the congregation for the election of trustees, &c., is fixed by the charter on the first Monday of January.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF OAKLAND, DECKER'S POINT, GRANT TOWNSHIP.

Shortly after the union of the Associate and Associate Reformed churches, before the Associate Reformed Presbytery of Blairsville and the Associate Presbytery of Clarion were united in the U. P. Presbytery of Conemaugh, the Presbytery of Blairsville appointed a commission to be held at Decker's Point by Rev. Samuel Brown, with James Hamilton, Robert Pollock, James Johnstone and S. H. Thompson ruling elders, with a view to establish a congregation there if practicable. Accordingly on Sabbath, September 19, 1858, the Lord's Supper was dispensed by Rev. S. Brown, assisted by the above named ruling elders.

From this time there was occasional preaching by supplies from Presbytery, and the attendance was so encouraging that the Presbytery of Conemaugh composed of the Associate Presbytery of Clarion and the A. R. Presbytery of Blairsville, appointed Rev. Matthew Wilson, with James McCreery, William Kinaan and S. H. Thompson, ruling elders, to organize a congregation at Decker's Point, which was done June 10, 1859, with the following members from Mahoning U. P. Church: J. R. Brown, Margaret Brown, Mrs. Margaret Clyde, John Clyde, Jane Clyde, Margaret Clyde, William Riddle, Eliza Riddle, eleven in all; from Pine Grove, U. P. Church (now disorganized): William Kinaan, Nancy Kinaan, John McAllister, Mrs. McAllister, Margaret Decker, Samuel Barr, Isabella Barr, Samuel Miller, Mary Miller, nine in all; from Smyrna U. P. Church: Jane Richardson and by examination Nancy Kinaan—twenty-two in all. William Kinaan and John McAllister were elected ruling elders, and having been formerly ruling elders in Pine Grove they were installed July 1st, 1859. The congregation was called Oakland.

The congregation had supplies of preaching from Presbytery until June 2, 1861, when Mr. J. T. Wilson was ordained and installed pastor of Oakland in connection with Greenville and Taylorsville. He continued his labors one year with acceptance, when he resigned. During his pastorate a church building was erected, fifty feet by forty. It is a good frame, with a deed of the property forever.

In December, 1861, Thomas C. Kerr and John R. Brown were elected ruling elders, ordained and installed.

From this time the congregation was supplied with preaching by Presbytery until Mr. G. P. Raitt was elected pastor of the same charge, and commenced his labors June 1st, 1866, and was ordained and installed July 17, 1866, who labored for three years with a goodly degree of success, when he resigned. Rev. J. C. Greer was then stated supply for about three and a half years. On September 8th, 1873, Hugh S. Pollock, James A. McAllister and George F. Hensleigh were elected to the office of ruling elders and ordained and installed December 22, 1873. During the years 1874 and 1875 the congregation was supplied with preaching by Presbytery, when at a meeting of the Brookville Presbytery, which was composed of part of the Presbytery of Conemaugh, a call was presented on April 11th, 1876, to Rev. James Given of the Presbytery of Westmoreland for one-fourth of his time in connection with a call from Richmond and Susquehanna congregations for the remainder of his time, which was by him accepted. He commenced his work of preaching to them the fourth Sabbath of April, 1876, and was installed their pastor October 16, 1876. He is at present their pastor. Their number at present is thirty-five.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF SUSQUEHANNA, BANKS TOWNSHIP.

Susquehanna church is situated on the public road, about half way between Smithport and the Susquehanna river.

In the year 1842, William Martin and his seven sons emigrated from the county Down, Ireland. In the following year Alexander Kirk, David Ratliff and Francis Urey also emigrated from the same place. These with James Salsgiver were organized in a congregation in connection with the Presbyterian Church, old school, in the year 1844. Alexander Kirk, William Martin und James Salsgiver were chosen as elders, and ordained to this office. Rev. David Mills was their first pastor, who had charge of the congregation seven years. In consequence of the Presbyterian Church using hymns of human composition in the worship of God, and the congregation believing that the inspired Psalms of the Bible alone should be used, in the year 1854 it united with the Associate Presbyterian Church.

In 1855 Rev. James Purdy was installed their pastor in the barn of James Martin, and demitted the charge in 1860. This congregation became United Presbyterian at the time of the union of the Associate and Associate Reformed churches, May 28, 1858, which now constitute the United Presbyterian Church.

In 1863 James Martin and James Urey were chosen and ordained elders, and are now discharging the duties of this office. The congregation erected their church edifice in 1869. The present pastor, Rev. James Given, took charge of the congregation April 11, 1876, and was installed pastor October 16, 1876, and it is in a prosperous condition, its members numbering forty-five.

THE GREENVILLE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

Was organized in 1858, in a school house in the village, by Rev. J. T. Wilson, the members having been formerly connected with the Indiana and Mechanicsburg congregations. Their names were as follows: Robert Simpson and wife; A Wiggins, Esq., and wife, deceased; James Spalding, deceased, and wife; Wilson Glassford, and wife; John McKisson, deceased, and wife, deceased; Thomas McKisson, and wife; James McKisson, deceased; William Hadden, sr., deceased; William Hadden, jr., and wife; Garvin Hadden, and wife; Martha Simpson and Mrs. William Moorhead.

The building was erected in 1868, during the pastorate of Rev. George P. Reatt, at a cost of twenty-five hundred dollars.

The present pastor is Rev. T. P. Patterson, who preaches once in two weeks. The present elders are: Robert Simpson and A. Wiggins, Esq.

A flourishing Sabbath school is connected with the Church.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF RICHMOND.

The members of this congregation come principally from the congregation of Mahoning, and being six miles from that congregation, the pastors of Mahoning, Rev. J. C. Telford, Rev. S. Thomas and Rev. D. W. McLane, occasionally preached at Richmond.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Conemaugh, in Plumville, September 8, 1874, about fifty members and adherents of the United Presbyterian church, petitioned Presbytery to grant them an organization, to which the congregation of Mahoning consented. But as Richmond was within the bounds of Brookville Presbytery, the petition was referred to it, which at its meeting at Jefferson, February, 1875, was granted. A commission was appointed to organize a congregation at Richmond, on the 13th of April.

On that day the commission met and organized a congregation with twenty-four members. The following are the names: Susan Hamilton, Euphemy Hamilton, Mary Work, Aaron Work, Elizabeth Work, Aaron Elder, Sarah Work, William Calderwood, Martha Calderwood, James T. Work, Aaron W. Work, Mary H. Work, R. H. Work, sr., Eliza Work, R. H. Work, jr., Catharine Work, Josiah Work, Sarah H. Work, William Hindman, William W. Hopkins, Robert Y. Campbell, Samuel Knox, George Piper, Mr. Mitchell.

Three ruling elders were elected, viz: Aaron Work, William W. Hopkins and Aaron W. Work—and on June 25th, 1875, they were ordained and installed. The congregation was supplied with preaching from time to time by Presbytery.

As no congregation can prosper without a house in which to worship God regularly, the petitioners for an organization met on June 11th, 1875, to make arrangements for the erection of a house of worship. Rev. J. C. Greer, preached, and offered up a prayer for the Divine blessing on the undertaking, and by the good hand of God upon them, they erected a very fine frame building, sixty-five feet long and thirty feet wide, with a spire ninety-five feet high, beautifully situated in a pine grove on the bank of Mahoning creek. Mr. Josiah Work, was the contractor. It was dedicated to the worship of God, at a meeting of the Brookville Presbytery, on Friday, December 3d, 1875, and on the next Sabbath, the Lord's Supper was dispensed, when by the number added at this, and a former communion, the members amounted to forty-five.

At a meeting of the Brookville Presbytery, on April 11th, 1876, this congregation presented a call to the Rev. James Given, of the Presbytery of Westmoreland, for three-eighths of his time in connection with a call from the congregations of Oakland and Susquehanna, each for one-fourth of his time, which was by him accepted, he having united with the Presbytery of Brookville, at that meeting—Presbytery receiving some aid from the Home Mission Board for these congregations, appointed him to labor among them the whole of his time. He commenced stated services on the 3d Sabbath of April, 1876, and was installed their pastor by a commission of Presbytery, consisting of Rev. D. K. Duff, and Rev. M. S. Telford, on Oct. 16, 1876. He is still their pastor, laboring with a goodly prospect of success, in building up a church. The congregation at present numbers fifty-one members.

HISTORY OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCHES IN INDIANA COUNTY.

During the last decade of the eighteenth century a number of Lutheran families from Lancaster, Berks and Franklin counties, settled in this community, which was then part of Westmoreland county. Prominent among these settlers was the family of Conrad Rice, sr., who, as early as 1794, located immediately south of the borough limits of Indiana. His house became conspicuous in the history of Lutheranism in the county as having been the first place of their public worship and general stopping place of other Lutheran immigrants.

Early in the nineteenth century other Lutheran families—some from Eastern Pennsylvania, some from Maryland and others direct from Germany—followed and located in different parts of the county. A quite early settlement is found to have existed in the extreme south of the county, and the locality is still called Germany. Others located in Brush Valley, some in Rayne, and others still in the Mahoning townships. These northern settlements were at a somewhat later date.

In the earliest records of the congregation at Indiana, which was the first Lutheran organization in the county, we find the names of Conrad Rice, sr., (properly spelled Reis), Adam Row, sr., (should be Rau), Christian Ruch, Michael Hess, John Fair (more correctly Fähr), Gottfried Klingenberger and others.

These scattered families were visited, as early as 1798, by the Rev. J. Michael Steck, sr, of Greensburg, Ohio, preached for them every three months. During the cold season the services were held in the house of Conrad Rice, and during the warmer in his barn. Here, for several years, all the Lutherans from different parts of the county that could, met for public worship. Rev. Steck continued these services for two years, closing with 1800, from which time up to 1813 we have no account of any services in the county. There were either no records kept or they were lost, or they had no preaching during this period.

The Rev. John Gottfried Lambrecht, from the Gymnasium of Göttengen, Germany, visited these people, and at that date organized or reorganized the congregation at Indiana. The officers were Conrad Rice, sr., and Christian Ruch, elders, and Michael Hess and John Fähr, deacons. At a communion held November 14, 1813, twenty-two persons partook of the holy supper. Another communion, held on the 23d of October, 1814, presents about the same number present, but some new names appear.

From the names of members it is manifest that this organization was intended to be limited to those who lived within a reasonable distance of Indiana to attend service there. The same Rev. Lambrecht, about this time, also organized a congregation in Brush Valley township, which became a part of his pastorate. Up to this time we find no record of regular services being held, and organized congregations formed save in the vicinity of Indiana. The services in Brush Valley, as in other parts, were held in private dwellings, and for a season in Fry's barn during the summer months. This congregation seems to have grown in numbers, under the ministrations of their successive pastors. So that in 1822 they built a log church on the site of their present edifice, two miles from Mechanicsburg, and in 1823 Rev. Richart—who became pastor at Indiana in 1822—enrolled a membership of seventy-five communicants. Theirs was the first Lutheran Church built in Indiana county. The ministry of Rev. G. A. Richart brings the history of this congregation down to 1826, when he resigned the field and took charge at Kittanning, in Armstrong county.

After Rev. Lambrecht resigned the Indiana pastorate at the close of 1814, the charge remained without a regular pastor, but was visited and supplied as best they could be. In 1817, a man by the name of Hoover, attempted to impose himself upon them as a Lutheran minister, but his deception was soon discovered and he was summarily dismissed.

Rev. Shultz became their pastor in 1819, but remained but a short time. In 1821 the Rev. Möhler supplied them and from 1822 to 1826 the Rev. G. A. Richart served the Indiana pastorate with acceptance and success. From the organization of the church at Indiana up to the close of the ministry of Rev. Richart, the regular services were conducted exclusively in the German language. In May of the year 1827 the Rev. Nicholas G. Sharretts became pastor and introduced English preaching. He was highly esteemed by all, and his ministry was attended with very marked success. He still lives in the affections of many in this community both in and out of the Lutheran Church.

The congregation at Indiana, like those of other denominations at that day, labored under disadvantages for want of a suitable place of worship. For a time they alternated their services with others in the use of the court house. But in 1829, they resolved to erect a church for themselves. A lot was procured on the corner of Church and South Clymer streets, and a brick church 42x50 feet, with basement, vestibule, end gallery, cupalo and bell, was completed in 1830. This house was solemnly dedicated to the service of Almighty God, during the session of the West-Pennsylvania Synod, at Indiana, October 8, 1831. Rev. S. S. Schmucker, D. D., of the Theological Seminary, at Gettysburg, preached the dedicatory sermon in the English language and the Rev. W. Yaeger, preached in the German. The new church at Indiana, greatly encouraged the congregation, and cheered the heart of their beloved pastor.

During the first year of Rev. Shawett's pastorate at Indiana, he directed his attention to the Lutherans in and around Blairsville, and soon organized a congregation of twenty-five members, as follows: John Fair, sr., and wife; Michael Rugh and wife: Henry Libengood, sr., and wife; Louisa Aultman; David Earhart and wife; Elizabeth Earhart; Mary Repine; Dorotha Crissman; Jacob Loose and wife; Elizabeth Harrold; Peter Mikesell and wife; Catharine Hill; Catharine Repine; Ann Maria Kunkle; Charlotte Mikesell; Elizabeth Mikesell.

Henry Libengood, sr., and John Fair, sr, were elected elders. Michael Pugh and David Earhart, deacons.

The congregation was known as the "Hebron Congregation." Immediately after the organization, measures were taken for the erection of a church, material and labor were contributed by the members, and a log church was erected—which is still standing on the lot on Walnut street, now owned by the heirs of the late Rev. Samuel H. Shepley. Mr. Jacob Altman, a citizen of Blairsville, and by profession a Baptist—but no congregation of this denomination being within reach—worshipped with this congregation and contributed freely to its support. He took an active interest in the erection of the church, and largely through his efforts, a bell was placed upon the building. The same bell is still in use on the church since erected, and now occupied by the congregation. On the 12th of May, 1832, Jacob Altman, united with this congregation, and in the course of succeeding years, his entire family became members of the same.

This congregation was served in connection with Indiana and Brushville, the three points constituting one charge. By the untiring efforts of Rev. Sharretts the congregation rapidly increased in membership, so that their church became too small, and in 1833 they asked and obtained permission to hold their communion in the Presbyterian Church. In 1835, the membership having reached one hundred and fifty, they determined to erect a larger building. Mr. Henry Graff—brother of the venerable John Graff, now of Blairsville, an elder of the congregation—presented it with a deed for two lots on the corner of Campbell and Liberty streets. Preparations for building were at once begun, and in 1836 a brick church forty-four by sixty-two feet was completed.

Too much praise can not be given Henry Graff for his untiring energy in carrying forward this work amid the many surrounding discouragements, the greatest of which was the death of their beloved pastor, who died on the 31st of December, 1836, and was buried on the church lot of the Indiana congregation, where he remained until the death of his wife, in December, 1878, when they were placed side by side in Oakland Cemetery, at Indiana, Pa. This charge now remained vacant for two years, during which time the members became greatly scattered, many of them uniting with other churches.

In the year 1838 Rev. Jacob Medtart became pastor and served the charge until 1843. Although there is no record of the separation of the Blairsville congregation from the Indiana charge, yet in 1839 we find that Rev. Medtart withdrew from that congregation, and that Rev. Augustus Babb, D. D., became their pastor. It now became a new charge, with New Derry and probably Germany, in West Wheatfield township. On March 1st of the same year the Plum Creek congregation, in South Mahoning township, was united to the Indiana charge, occupying one-fourth of the time of the pastor.

The Plum creek congregation was the result of the labors of Rev. Reichart, who, in 1829—living in Kittanning—visited a number of families in South Mahoning township, namely: Conrad Luckart, Andrew Weamer, Andrew Harman, Philip Bricker, and others. He preached regularly for them in the barn of Philip Bricker. In the year 1830, he organized a congregation, which is known as the "Plum creek congregation." Andrew Weamer and Christian Hoover, were elected elders. In 1832, they determined to build a church. A half-acre lot was bought of Philip Bricker, to build on, and Andrew Weamer, Conrad Luckart and Ezekial Green, were appointed a building committee. The members subscribed material, labor, or money, as they were best able, and in the spring of 1833, a log church was raised, but was not fully completed until 1835. Rev. Reichart remained pastor of this congregation until 1839, preaching every eight weeks.

On the 28th of May, 1842, Rev. Medtart organized a congregation in Smicksburg, with the enrollment of the following members: Cornelius Lowe, Joseph Black and wife, Mary Condon, Jacob Condon and wife, Elizabeth Hoover, Samuel Hoover, Absalom Hoover, John Hoover, Mrs. M. M. Good, Henry Rush and wife, Mary Ann Mogle, Adam Mogle and wife, John Miller, George Stear, sr., Catharine Stear, John Stear and wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Crissman, Elizabeth Miller.

Jacob Condon was elected elder, Joseph Black and Cornelius Lowe, deacons.

This congregation was also made a part of the Indiana charge, and was accordingly served by Rev. Medtart.

Rev. Medtart remained pastor of the charge until 1843, when he was succeeded by Rev. Henry Bishop. During the pastorate of the latter, the Indiana congregation erected a parsonage on their church lot, on the corner of Church and Clymor streets, and the Smicksburg people commenced and put up a frame church.

In the month of August, 1846, the Plum creek congregation withdrew from the Indiana charge and with the Smicksburg, Round-top and Rural village congregations formed a new charge. A call was extended to Rev. A. C. Ehrenfeld, who became their pastor on the first of January, 1847. We have been unable to find any record of the formation of the Round-top congregation. All that we have been able to learn is that it was organized about 1839, by some minister from Clearfield county, and at that time the following Lutheran families were living in that community: Frederick Sprenkel, Nicholas Maul, Henry Wyning, Col. John Willhelm, George Fitterhoof, Michael Lantz, Jacob Schaffer, Conrad Ramy.

As Rural village is in the adjoining county, we have no further interest at present with its history.

The Blairsville congregation prospered greatly under the care of Rev. Babb; the membership increased from 96 to 250. But about this time, as if to prevent the necessity of enlarging the church building, emigration began, and the liberal, cheerful Henry Graff, with his family, moved to Pittsburgh. Many other families followed from time to time, so that notwithstanding large accessions made under the administration of succeeding pastors, the congregation has never attained its former numerical strength.

On the 14th of December, 1845, Rev. Peter Sahm took charge of the congregation and remained its pastor until 1848, when Rev. A. Borseman, followed him. In the year 1850, fifteen farmers of his church emigrated to the Western States. This was a severe loss to the congregation, leaving them but eighty-four members. Rev. Borseman was succeeded in 1852 by the Rev. Graft M. Pile, who remained in charge but six months; Rev. William Kopp supplied the congregation during the remainder of the year, when Rev. John Suman became the regular pastor. During his ministry the Lutheran chapel was organized, and a brick house of worship erected. They also built the parsonage in Blairsville during his time.

In 1850 the pastor of the Indiana charge, Rev. Bishop, was succeeded by Rev. C. J. Dinninger. On account of ill health, he was compelled to resign in 1853. On the 1st of January of the same year, Rev. Peter Sahm accepted a call to this pastorate, and remained its faithful leader until 1858, and on the 1st of January, was succeeded by Rev. W. S. Emery. In April of 1859, the congregation numbered about two hundred regular members. Rev. Emery resigned in 1862, and in the same year Rev. J. P. Hentz became pastor. He remained in charge until the fall of 1864. With the closing up of Rev. Hentz's labors, the Germans separated themselves from the Indiana congregation. The English portion then alone extended a call to the Rev. A. C. Ehrenfeld, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, who took charge of the field on the 1st of January, 1865. For the first time in the history of the Indiana congregation, it alone resolved to support a pastor and to engage him for all his time, even though the Germans had withdrawn their support. So the new pastor was to preach English only. Finding, however, some eight or ten German families who refused to leave the church, the pastor, by voluntary engagement, held extra service in German on the afternoons of every third Sabbath, which continued for about two years. There was also an out station in the bounds of the congregation, at Wolf's schoolhouse, where afternoon services were held every third Lord's day.

This point so advanced in importance that it became necessary to constitute a separate congregation and erect for themselves a house of worship. A church was accordingly organized, and the following officers composed the council: William Wolf and Jacob Garman were Elders, and Robert Little, Jacob Faith, George Reh and C. J. Speedy the Deacons.

In 1873 they erected a neat frame church, 38 by 58 feet, two stories, arched ceiling, and corner tower. The site on which the church was erected, together with the burying ground, was generously donated by that excellent christian lady, the late Widow Cooper, of Rayne township. This house was dedicated to the service of God on the 28th day of December, 1873, and was called the Grove Chapel Evangelical Lutheran Church. The Rev. George Scholl, of Baltimore, preached the sermon on the occasion. The cost of the building reached something over four thousand dollars. The building committee were William Wolf, Capt. Jac. Crepps, George Lotz, Robert Little and Erasmus Cooper. At the first Synodical meeting after the dedication of their house, the congregation reported 106 communicants, and a Sabbath school of 120 pupils and 12 teachers. After the resignation of the Rev. A. C. Ehrenfeld, it was served successively by the Revs. Steck and Bell, pastors at Indiana. It still retains its connection with said charge and is in a flourishing condition.

The Rev. A. C. Ehrenfeld served the Indiana pastorate for almost eleven years, during which time some decided changes were made. As has been said, the service of the pastor was restricted to this congregation and its out station. The English language alone was retained. The church edifice was entirely remodeled and improved. An organ was introduced and the singing was greatly improved, so that it was not excelled anywhere out of the larger cities. It is due to the people to say that during this time they advanced greatly in liberality.

Their contributions grew to be double, some triple, and some four times what they had ever been before. Twice they increased the salary of their pastor, besides making him many generous donations. Expensive repairs were also made in and around the parsonage, and the church was again repaired during the last year. But severe trials also fell on the congregation during the latter part of this period, in the loss of some of the old and substantial members by death and removal—the aged and esteemed Father Jonathan Row, who died in the summer of 1865. Then passing by a number of other deaths and removals, we would mention especially two: the aged and universally beloved Father Conrad Rice, who was about eighty-two years old when he died, in the fall of 1872. And the faithful and devoted brother, Adam Row, who died just a few weeks before in the same year. The loss of these two brethren has ever since been deeply felt by the congregation.

The Sabbath school connected with this church is probably the first that was ever organized in this county. As nearly as we can learn, it was organized about 1822. It was a Union school, and was auxiliary to the American Sunday School Union. Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Methodists and Lutherans all took part in it. We have been told that among its earliest superintendents and officers were the Elder Sutton, father of the late John Sutton, the great Sunday school worker, and Father Conrad Rice. It was held in the Court House and several other places in town, but after the Lutheran church was finished, in 1830, it was removed to the basement of said church. In course of time the other denominations established schools in connection with their respective churches; but the original stem, thus incidentally, still remains the school in connection with the English Lutheran church to this day.

Rev. Ehrenfeld resigned this charge with the view of having it take effect on the 1st of January, 1875, but by the almost unanimous decision of the charge, not to accept his resignation, he was induced to continue his labors for nine months longer, and then, in accordance with his original conviction of duty, having given notice of his purpose to the Council three months before, he closed his pastoral relation on the 1st of October, 1875.

The Germans, having withdrawn from the English church, had only occasional services from visiting ministers, but in 1867 the Rev. J. F. Hayer visited them and succeeded in organizing a congregation. In July of 1868 Rev. Peter Born became their pastor, remaining for two years. He was followed by Rev. Vinzens Klein, who also remained two years. After his resignation the congregation was greatly disorganized, and their entire property (parsonage and church) was sold at Sheriff's sale. Nearly two years now elapsed before they had any regular service, when the Rev. F. A. Herzberger, of Pittsburgh, supplied them for six months. On the 21st of June, 1874, he organized the congregation, and on the 19th of July of the same year Rev. D. Simons became the regular pastor, remaining until 1880. During the latter part of his ministry a neat brick church was built.

Rev. John J. Suman resigned the Blairsville charge in 1858, and on July 1st of the same year Rev. Cornelius Nitterauer succeeded him. He remained pastor until his death, of hemorrhage of the lungs, on the 11th of May, 1861. He was much beloved, and his services were highly appreciated by the congregation. The Rev. H. Reck now for a short time supplied the charge.

In 1861 Rev. Samuel Aughey, Ph. D., L.L. D., was elected pastor. On the 14th of June, 1863, Rev. John R. Williams became pastor and remained until 1867, when he was followed by Rev. Simon P. Snyder, who was pastor until 1870, when the Rev. Augustus Babb, D. D., was recalled. On the 1st of October, 1876, he was succeeded by Rev. C. L. Streamer, and on the 1st of November, 1878, the present incumbent became pastor, viz: Rev. C. M. Stock.

Since the year 1850, there has been but little variation in the Blairsville congregation. The accessions have but little more than balanced the removals and deaths.

Rev. A. C. Ehrenfeld, having resigned the Indiana congregation October 1st, 1875, was followed by Rev. Charles T. Steck in the beginning of 1876, who remained about two years, and was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. P. Bell. Under the present pastor the congregation took measures for the building of a new church.

The old brick having stood a half century was torn down in October, 1879, and the parsonage having been removed from the corner of Sixth and Church streets, where it had stood for thirty-five years, to the site of the old church, a new edifice was begun on the corner, fronting on Sixth, and the greater part of the foundation laid before the prevention by frost. Owing to the extraordinary mildness of the winter the work was continued at intervals, and energetically renewed early in the spring, so that at this writing, June 18th, 1880, the building is under roof, and the prospect is that it will be dedicated in October next. It is built of brick, and is gothic in its style of architecture, with corner tower and spire. It is one story, 92 feet long and 42 wide. It embraces, aside from the auditorium, a chapel 22 by 54 feet, fronting on Church street. The main room is 18 feet to the square and 27 in the centre. When finished and furnished as designed it will be characterized by neatness, convenience and comfort. The cost is estimated at $9,000. Mr. David Simmons superintends the work. The building committee consists of A. H. Apple, George Bodenhomer and Samuel Grove.

The congregation holds its services for the present in the Episcopal Church, and under the care of their present pastor are greatly encouraged, and hopeful of future prosperity.

In 1851, Rev. G. Pile accepted a call from the Smicksburg charge, and remained one year. In 1852, Rev. F. A. Barnitz became pastor, and was followed in 1856 by Rev. C. Diehl. He remained four years when Rev. C. L. Streamer was called and remained in charge until 1869. Rev. Streamer had also labored in the charge during the last year of Rev. Diehl's service, whose failing health rendered him inadequate to attend to the duties of the charge. In 1872, Rev. George A. Lee was elected pastor and remained for two years. He was followed in November, 1874, by Rev. W. E. Crebs who remained until May 1st, 1879. The present pastor, Rev. Ephraim Miller next took charge, in October, 1879.

THE GETTYSBURG EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

Was organized by Rev. M. Colver the 7th of January, 1866, in the school house, and was named the "Montgomery Church." The members present were: Elder, William Coleman; Deacon, George Griffith; John Grumley, Michael Repple, Lewis Deabenderfer, Henry Deabenderfer, Catharine Colemer, Rebecca Griffith, Mary Grumley, Lucinda Ripple, Catharine Deabenderfer, Hannah Bloss, Flora Grumley, Jane Gardner, Sarah Bloss and Lydia Buchanan.

Mr. Colver preached two years, receiving sixty-five dollars per year, and the charge then became vacant for the ensuing three years. In January, 1870, Rev. L. Wisehaupt became the pastor and continued till August 1, 1879. For the last year the congregation have been served with supplies.

In 1874 John Grumley gave a lot of ground near the village for the purpose of erecting thereon a meeting house. In the spring of 1875, the society commenced the building, and three months from the time of the beginning of the erection of the house services were held in the new church—a happy change from the school house. The edifice cost one thousand dollars.

The present officers are: Elders, John Grumley and William Herrett; Deacons, A. Grumley and J. L. Getty. The membership is twenty-five. The attendance at Sabbath School is twenty-eight.

THE MARTIN LUTHER CHURCH (LUTHERAN DENOMINATION, OLD SCHOOL), OF PUNXSUTAWNEY.

This organization belongs to what is commonly termed the "Old Lutherans." The denomination, as a whole, embraces five churches situated as follows: Punxsutawney (old school), Brookville, Shadigee, Paradise (two churches, one new and one old), and Grubs.

In 1856 the Punxsutawney society was organized, and commenced to have preaching at intervals, the services being held in the Lutheran and Reformed Church, on the hill above the village. Rev. William Engelbach was the pastor, and preached for over a year. Rev. Henneman succeeded him and preached for some time in a school house which was in the centre of the public square.

In 1857 Rev. C. C. Brandt became the pastor, and in this year the edifice they occupy to-day was built. The succession of ministers is as follows: Revs. Jacob Raisig, Peter Engers, Greenmiller F. W. Spindle, K. Waltz, Julius Bauch, John M. Meissner, and the present incumbent, C. Engelder.

The actual church members number over one hundred, and the congregation and the Sunday School are large and on the increase. Their church work, taken as a county, has been on a solid basis, and its growth shows a substantial gain and work for christianity, of which its members may well be proud. The officers of the Punxsutawney Church are: Trustees, John Lang, Henry Ernst and William Zeitler; President, George Weiss; Secretary, John Lang; Treasurer, Henry Ernst, jr. The Lutheran denomination (old and new) number in the county about six hundred members.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN NORTHERN INDIANA COUNTY.

[From Notes of Robert McIsaac.]

The Reformed Presbyterian Church of the United States profess to be not only lineal descendants of, but identical in doctrine, worship, discipline and government with the Church of Scotland at the time of what is called the Second Reformation, culminating about the year 1643, when the "Confession of Faith," "Larger and Shorter Catechism," "Directory of Worship," and form of church government known as Westminster Standards, were adopted by the General Assembly of the Scottish Presbyterian church, and the National Covenant of Scotland and the Solemn League and Covenant of the Three Kingdoms were sworn to by the church, the people and government of those lands. Consistent with their principles, they refused to concur in the revolution established under William III., in 1890*. They still maintain as distinguishing principles, "that civil government is an ordinance of God—that Jesus Christ, as Mediator, is the ruler of nations; that the Bible is the supreme standard of national as well as individual morals."‡ In order to maintain practical testimony for what they believe, they refuse to vote or hold office under any government which, in its constitution or fundamental law, denies or ignores these principles.

About forty years ago, a part of Montgomery township, near the present village of Smithport, now Banks township, was offered for sale by Mr. Roberts, of New York, and residents of New York city were induced to purchase and emigrate, among them a few families of Reformed Presbyterians.

The first of these were Samuel Becket, James Graham, and James Harbison, who arrived in 1842, followed by Peter, James and John Sharp, Oliver Martin and others. These soon organized into a society, holdings meetings for conference on religious subjects, and prayer, on Thursdays and Sabbaths. In a short time they were discovered and visited by preachers of their own faith, and among others are named Revs. Dr. Milligan, A. M. Milligan and Joseph Thornton.

Rev. R. J. Dodds, a young man who had been ordained to the ministry with the intention of becoming a missionary to the West Indies, preached to the different societies in Armstrong, Jefferson, and the north part of Indiana county, and was called by, and installed over these societies in June, 1852; the congregation called Rehoboth, embracing an area of forty square miles, outlined by Kittanning, Armstrong county, west; Cherry Tree, south; the Susquehanna river, east; and Warsaw, Jefferson county, north. He was a man adapted to such charge; of great physical endurance, and mind well stored with both literary and theological matter; could accommodate himself with cheerfulness to the varied circumstances of the people of his charge, and soon became a universal favorite among his own, and other religious societies. Another society of Reformed Presbyterians had sprung up in the Mahoning townships before Mr. Dodds was called. Andrew Pollock and family came from Ireland in 1844, and sometime afterward, Mrs. William Thomas and Robert McFarland, from West Mahoning township. Then James Gailey and wife, from near Cherry Tree, joined; others followed, and soon there were preaching stations at Beatty's, Work's, and Carr's school houses.

The summer of 1856, the Synod of the R. P. Church resolved to establish a mission in Syria and Rev. R. J. Dodds was selected as one of the missionaries. He preached his farewell address to his people in Indiana county, August 3d, 1856, and the same year went to Syria. The societies depended upon supplies till 1859, when Rev. T. M. Elder was called, and ordained April 19th. Under the pastoral charge of Rev. Dodds the building of five new churches was contemplated, all of which have since been built, for until this time there was but one building within the area of the charge and that one in Armstrong county. The first built in this county was in Montgomery township, called "Bear Run" Church, opened for service about 1860. The second near the line of east and north Mahoning townships was opened, August 25th, 1861, and was called Oakland.

Samuel Becket was the first ordained elder at Bear Run, which office he held to his death in 1866. In 1860, Peter Sharp, of Bear Run, and Robert McIsaac, of Mahoning, were chosen elders, and James Graham and William Martin, of Bear Run, deacons. In 1861, the congregation was divided into two charges; Bear Run was united with the societies in Jefferson county, and Mahoning with Rehoboth, in Armstrong county. Rev. A. J. McFarland was ordained pastor of the former in February, 1865, and Rev. T. M. Elder continued in charge of the latter until April 1st, 1866, when he resigned. Rev. McFarland next gave up his charge in Jefferson county, and it became a mission station for some years, when the connection between Rehoboth and Mahoning was severed, and in 1871 the two societies in Indiana county were united in a congregation called Bear Run and Mahoning, with three elders, Peter Sharp, James Graham and Robert McIsaac, and one deacon, William Martin; James Graham, sr., having died.

The pulpits of these two societies were occupied by different preachers till September, 1874, when Rev. J. F. Crozier was called, and in conjunction with Rehoboth the call was accepted, and he was ordained November 18th, 1874. This pastoral relation continues with good feeling and happy results to the present time.

Rev. R. J. Dodds, D. D., revisited his native country in the fall of 1865; passed through his old congregation, visiting most all his old friends, and returned to Syria in the fall of 1866,

*William and Mary, in 1689, established Episcopacy in England and Ireland, and Presbyterianism in Scotland.—Ed.

‡See action of Synod in 1869.

where he died December 11, 1870, universally beloved and lamented.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CLARKSBURG.

This church is situated in the village of Clarksburg. A generation has passed away since it was organized, and, as no records or written documents of any kind have been preserved, the materials for preparing its history are few and scant. It would appear, however, that about 1820 or 1821, Reformed Presbyterians, or Covenanters, as they are popularly called, first began to have preaching in this part of the county. At that time two young men, Richard Wasson and Andrew Stormont, who had emigrated from Ireland, settled in the vicinity of what is now known as Kelley's station. Whether they had been Covenanters in the land of their birth, or whether in those early days it was the nearest place of preaching, and they, being piously inclined, wished to enjoy divine ordinances in some orthodox church, does not now appear; but, however it may have been, they began to wait on the ministry of the late Rev. John Cannon, who was then the pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian congregation at New Alexandria, a town six or seven miles distant from them, in Westmoreland county.

With the membership of this congregation they seemed to have identified themselves, and wishing to disseminate the principles which they had thus espoused, they requested Mr. Cannon to preach for them in their own neighborhood; but his time being all occupied, he had no spare Sabbaths which he could give them. He did the next best thing, however, that he could do under the circumstances; he preached for them occasionally on a week day. The field proved to be a promising one, and in order to be able to cultivate it properly, he gave up two other branches of his congregation, both of which were stronger and more wealthy. He now began to preach on the Sabbath wherever he could find a place, sometimes in the woods when the weather was favorable, and sometimes in a barn, holding one or two communions, through the kindness of Presbyterian brethren, in the church at Ebenezer. But until a church was built, he seems to have preached mostly either in the barn of the late John Coleman, whose farm, about two miles south of Clarksburg, is now occupied by his son Samuel, or in the barn or under an apple tree in the orchard of the late James Gray, about two miles nort of the same village.

At some one of these places the congregation was probably organized, but at what date is unknown to the writer of this sketch, as are likewise the names and the number of original members. At first the congregation, taking the name of the creek that flows through this part of the county, was called Blacklegs, but afterwards, when the town grew up where it is located, the name was changed to that of Clarksburg. In the summer of 1831 the first church was built. It was a frame structure, and erected at a cost of $300. So soon as it was weather-boarded and roofed the congregation began to occupy it, using the sleepers for seats. When it was floored their funds were exhausted, and being unable to put in pews, without going in debt, they seated it with slabs, supported on a kind of trestle-work of logs. On these they sat and listened to the preaching of the Gospel until their financial condition improved, when, of course, they put in more comfortable and expensive seats. At this period the following names appear on the roll of membership: Robert Henry, Moses Thompson, David Henderson, Robert Henderson, Alexander Henderson, John Coleman, Robert Coleman, William Coleman, James Gray, Thomas Gailey, James Gailey, Miss Ann Gailey, John Henry, Mrs. Margaret Henry, Andrew McCreery, Samuel McCreery, Miss Jane McCreery, Daniel Euwer, Samuel Gilmore, Nancy White, John McCurdy, John Morrisson, Thomas Gemmil, Miss Jane McKelvey, Mrs. Martha Smith, Nathan Douthett, Samuel Barr, Mrs. Francis Barr, John Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Kimbal. Many of these names have disappeared from the records of the living, and those who bore them have long been numbered with the dead, while some of their descendants have seen proper to change their ecclesiastical relations. Others of them are still found in the church and congregation of their fathers. The old building in which they worshipped stood for forty years, or until the fall of 1871, when a neat and commodious frame church was erected a few rods to the southwest of the former site, at a cost of $3,500.

The first pastor, as already intimated, was the Rev. John Cannon, who continued to preach part of his time at Clarksburg until his death, which occurred in the winter of 1836. The congregation remained vacant, receiving occasional supplies from Presbytery, until the spring of 1843, when, in connection with another branch of the same denomination twenty-two miles distant, they extended a call to the Rev. S. O. Wylie, who became their pastor and continued in that relation until 1844, when he demitted the charge to accept a call from a congregation in Philadelphia. Three years afterwards, or in 1837, the Rev. Robert Cannon, a son of the first pastor, was ordained and installed, but in April, 1854, was released and went to the West, where he is still preaching. In 1856 the congregation secured part of the time of the Rev. A. M. Milligan, of New Alexandria, Westmoreland county, who continued their pastor until 1866, when he was transferred to Philadelphia. They then felt that they should have all the time of a pastor to themselves, and in the summer of 1868 they extended a call to J. A. Black, a young licentiate, who, a short time before, had finished his course in the theological seminary. Mr. Black accepted the call, and on the 18th of November of the same year was ordained and installed, and at the present writing continues to be the pastor. Thus during the more than half century of the existence of the congregation it has been served by five pastors in succession, all of whom, except the first, are still living and laboring in the Master's vineyard. The first elders to whom its spiritual oversight was committed were Moses Thompson and Robert Henry, both of whom died many years ago. The present officers are: Elders—Robert Henry, sr., M. P. Thompson, Alexander Gray, Thomas Caldwell, David S. Gailey and Robert Henry, jr.; Deacons—John Caldwell, John Forsythe, jr., and Nathus Oliver.

The membership of the congregation is now eighty-two. The Sabbath School, including the adult members of the Bible class, has an average attendance of from forty to fifty.

As this sketch may meet the eye of those who have no knowledge of Reformed Presbyterians, perhaps a remark or two in regard to their creed would not here be deemed out of place. In common with others who bear the Presbyterian name, they hold the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Catechisms (larger and shorter) to be a faithful exposition of all Scripture teaching in regard both to doctrine and to practice. The chief points in which they differ is the application of their principles to civil government. This, they believe, is a Divine ordinance, which is among the "all things" that have been put in subjection to the Lord Jesus Christ in his mediatorial character. They think, therefore, that civil society in its organic capacity should acknowledge God as its author and Christ as its moral governor, and administer its laws in accordance with His revealed will. They repudiate, on the one hand, the idea of making the State the mere creature of the Church, and, on the other, the notion of making the Church the creature of the State. Each, they hold, occupies an independent sphere, but each has a duty which it owes to God, and which can not be neglected or ignored without incurring His displeasure. They lament that the Constitution of our country, while in many respects a noble instrument, is sadly out of harmony with the prevailing Christian sentiment of the people, inasmuch as it ignores the whole subject of the relation of a nation to God and

His law, and makes no provision for our Christian usages and practices. They have, therefore, all along, labored to have it so amended as to give us an undeniable legal basis for Chaplains in Congress and other legislative halls, and in prisons and reformatory institutions; for the appointment of national fast and thanksgiving days; and for the reading of the Bible and other religious exercises in our public schools. They point to the fact that these and kindred Christian features of our Government are assailed on the one hand by Popery, and on the other by infidelity; and they feel that without such a basis there is imminent danger that every public religious custom and observance handed down to us from our fathers will be utterly swept away. They would, therefore, place the nation clearly and unmistakably on the side of Christ and the Christian religion, and until this is accomplished they believe that consistency with their principles requires them to occupy a position of political dissent from the Government of the United States, and to refrain from voting, holding office, or performing any act, the fair construction of which would imply identification with what they conceive to be its immoralities. They feel that they should carry this religion with them into all the affairs of life; that they should conduct themselves as Christians when acting as members of the State, no less than as members of the Church, when voting at the polls as well as when sitting in the sanctuary. While holding these views, they consider it their duty to cultivate and maintain Christian friendship with pious men of every name, and in common with their fellow citizens to labor in every legitimate way to promote the best interests of our country.

THE PUNXSUTAWNEY CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This society was formed in a log school house in the village of Punxsutawney, February 1st, 1836, and was called the Jefferson congregation, being the first in the county. The denomination now has five congregations within the limits of Jefferson county.

At the time of the organization there were seventeen communicants and two elders, Alexander Jordan and Dr. John W. Jenks. Their first pastor was Rev. Charles R. Barclay. At the present time there are about one hundred and fifty members in communion and only one of the original members is now living—Mr. Obed Morris, who was chairman of the meeting at the time of organization.

The church in the county now numbers over six hundred members.

INDIANA METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first Methodist sermon preached in Indiana was delivered in the old court house, in the year 1820. This was then in a six weeks circuit, embracing Blairsville, Indiana, Armagh and other points.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The foundation of the present congregation was laid in 1831, under the superintendence of Rev. J. G. Sanson. At that time a class of persons was formed at the house of John Lucas, three miles west of the borough of Indiana. Samuel Douglas, John Lucas, Polly Lucas, Mrs. Coulter, Mrs. Stewart and Samuel Douglas were appointed elders.

The society continued to meet at the above named place for several years, holding an official connection with the Conemaugh and Cambria mission. In 1832, in accordance with the itinerant plan, Rev. Wm. Butt was appointed to the charge of the mission, with Rev. John Coil as his assistant. In February, 1834, a quarterly meeting was held in the United Presbyterian Church, in the borough, at which time considerable religious interest was manifested and a number added to the church. In the summer of 1834 the mission was divided and a new circuit formed to be called Indiana, with Rev. Thomas Thompson for its pastor. He was succeeded in 1835 by Rev. Ellis St. Worthington, whose term of service expired in the summer of 1836.

Preaching service had generally been held in the old court house, but several families of Methodist persuasion having located here in the years 1837–8, it was deemed advisable to build a church, and a meeting was called for the purpose of taking the matter into consideration, at which the following persons were present: Rev. John Coil, pastor of the circuit, Edward Nixon, W. H. Coleman, Joshua Shepherd, John Lucas, A. C. Hall, Wm. L. Fenton, Robert Craig and several others whose names have been forgotten. A building committee was appointed consisting of Robert Craig, Edward Nixon, John Lucas and William Fenton. The lot was purchased from the executors of Thomas Sutton for $50. The carpenter work was done by W. H. Coleman. The building was completed in 1841, and the first sermon was preached by Rev. D. B. Campbell. Rev. J. R. Means was the next pastor sent by conference to the place.

From the summer of 1836 to July, 1843, embracing a period of about seven years, the congregation was favored successively with the services of Revs. G. D. Kinnear, Harvey Bradshaw, Simon Elliott, John Coil, Isaac McCluskey, David Gordon, John L. Williams, James M. Graham, Joseph Shaw, Caleb Foster and David S. Welling.

At the session of the Pittsburgh annual conference in July, 1843, Rev. J. G. Sansom was appointed presiding elder, and Rev. A. G. Gallaher preacher in charge, with Rev. R. G. White for his colleague. The latter succeeded to the office of senior preacher in the following year, having for his colleaugue, Rev. R. W. Barnes.

From 1845 to 1852, the following ministers named are recorded in connection with the congregation, viz: John White, George Cranage, Edward B. Griffin, M. L. Weekly, Daniel A. Haines, Joseph Woodruff, D. B. D. Coleman, Joseph Shaw, Hugh Montgomery, D. B. Campbell, James R. Means and A. J. Lane.

In 1853, the congregations of Indiana and Homer were struck off, and constituted a separate charge. Rev. Joseph Horner was appointed pastor, and about thirty persons were added to the church during his ministry.

He was succeeded the following year by Rev. T. J. Higgins, his successor being Rev. H. L. Chapman.

In May, 1857, Rev. J. S. Bracken was appointed pastor to this charge. After the expiration of two years he was succeeded by Rev. S. Burt. The dates of appointment of the successive ministers have been as follows: 1861, John C. Hugh; 1862, R. Morrow; 1864, M. W. Dallas; 1867, J. B. Uber; 1869, A. B. Leonard; 1871, M. B. Pugh; 1872, M. J. Sleffy; 1875, John A. Danks, and September, 1877, the present pastor, Homer J. Smith.

In 1833 the official board consisted of the following laymen, viz: James Wakefield, John Wakefield, John M. Trego, Henry Baker, Jonathan Doughty, Thomas Laird, William Dickey, Samuel Douglass, William Bracken and F. Lydie; Samuel Douglass represented Indiana.

In 1843, we find the following additional names in the official list for Indiana: William L. Fenton, John Lucas and A. C. Hall.

In 1859, the board comprised the following names: Edward Nixon, James E. Coulter, William H. Coleman, Joseph Shephard, William C. Boyle, James Fenton and Joshua Shephard. There were one hundred and fifty members, including probationers, in communion with the church. Also a flourishing Sabbath school of eighty scholars and teachers was connected with the congregation.

The congregation for several years had no house for public worship of their own, but occupied the Court House until 1839, when the erection of the edifice now known as Armory Hall was commenced. The building was completed in the following year.

The Register of November 27, 1859, says: "The church is located at the west end of Water street. It is 40 by 55 feet, and has fifty-six pews on its floor. It has neither bell nor portico, but silently stands its own representative until it shall go the way of all the earth. The brick and stone work was done by William Brown, of Blairsville; the carpenter work by Capt. James Sloan, of this borough; and the plastering by a stranger.

The property was settled in the hands of the following persons, who were appointed trustees: John Fenton, Wm. Fenton, Andrew Hall, Robert Craig and John Lucas.

The arrangements for building the present church edifice were commenced under the pastorate of Mr. Sleffy in 1874, but the subscription was made during the administration of Mr. Danks in 1875, and the work of construction commenced that year.

The plans were prepared in the spring by J. W. Drum, architect, of Pittsburgh, and the contract awarded to J. P. Leach, of Indiana, Pa., on the 4th day of August, for the consideration of $15,500. The cost of excavating, seating, gas fitting, &c., to be paid by the church. The lot was purchased from Mr. B. B. Tiffany for the sum of $2,000. The corner stone was laid on the afternoon of Tuesday, October 5, 1875, the ceremony being witnessed by a large concourse of people. The ministers who participated in the ceremonies were: Rev. B. F. Brooke, D. D., of Christ Church, Pittsburgh; Rev. J. F. Core, of Greensburg; Rev. H. C. Beacom, of Johnstown; Rev. J. C. Johnson, Rev. A. P. Leonard, and Rev. John A. Danks, pastor in charge. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Brooke and Rev. Core. The corner stone is the second one in the buttress at the northeast end at the building. A box containing the following articles was placed under it: Bible, hymn book, Church Discipline, copies of all the county papers, Pittsburgh Leader, and Christian Advocate, Ladies' Repository, Church Almanac for 1875, Minutes of Pittsburgh Conference (1875), copy of original specifications, copy of Boston Gazette printed in 1770, names of architect, contractor, trustees, building committee, stewards, officers of Sabbath school, name of pastor in charge when the project was commenced, M. J. Sleppy; name of pastor at present in charge, J. A. Danks.

The board of trustees was composed of J. B. Campbell, Geo. Rink, D. Ellis, E. C. Jamison, A. C. Boyle, T. M. Coleman, D. Mullen.

The board of stewards was: E. C. Jamison, J. H. Flude, W. R. Black, L. Keslar, jun., A. S. Cunningham, C. A. McHenry.

The building committee consisted of J. B. Campbell, D. Ellis, George Rink, D. Mullen, A. C. Boyle, W. R. Black, J. McFarland, Sarah Sansom and N. J. Lucas.

The building was completed November 1, 1876, and was dedicated Sunday, January 21, 1877, by Bishop M. Simpson, assisted by Revs. I. C. Pershing, D. D.; L. H. Bugbee, D. D.; M. J. Sleppy, J. F. Core, J. T. Riley, George Orbin, A. H. Miller, Jno. McIntire, D. K. Stevenson, Solomon Keibler and A. C. Johnson.

The morning sermon was preached by Bishop Simpson, and made a deep and lasting impression. Dr. Pershing announced that the church cost $20,000, $11,000 of which had been subscribed, and that it was the intention to raise the remaining $9,000 during the day. The subscription was started by J. B. Campbell $1,000; the Ladies' Aid Society, $1.000; A. S. Cunningham and John Duncan, each $500; J. McFarland, $400, followed by many others with smaller amounts. The service continued until two o'clock. The Conference trio sang "The Mists Have Cleared Away," the congregation joined in the doxology, and the Bishop pronounced the benediction.

Another large audience assembled at 3:30 to hear Dr. Bugbee, at which time some $300 were subscribed. Services were again held at seven o'clock. The sermon was by Dr. Pershing, after which he announced that $1,100 were yet needed to make up the required amount. More than this sum was raised, swelling the subscriptions of the day to $10,005. The basket collections were $261 additional.

A protracted service was commenced the day following dedication, which continued for some weeks, during which the Holy Spirit worked among the people, and many wanderers were brought in.

Two years' time had been given on the larger subscriptions, so that the last payment was made under the administration of Rev. H. J. Smith in 1878, at which time the church was entirely freed from debt.

The church, at this time (February, 1880), has a membership of 350, and a Sabbath school of 150. The church boards are composed of the following persons: Trustees—J. B. Campbell, D. Ellis, T. M. Coleman, George Rink, J. McFarland, Thomas Lonman, J. A. Bell. Stewards—J. McFarland, W. R. Black, A. S. Cunningham, J. B. Marshall, A. C. Boyle, C. A. McHenry, Jno. Truby, D. McLaughlin and Henry Hall.

REV. HOMER J. SMITH, PASTOR M. E. CHURCH,

Was born in 1846, in Fayette county, and was a son of Rev. Wesley and Mary E. Smith, nee Ford. The former was in the active work of the M. E. Church, and at one time was in charge of the church at Blairsville.

Our subject came of clerical stock. His paternal grandfather was licensed to preach in Ireland by John Wesley, and his two sons Wesley and William, entered the ministry of the M. E. Church. These, with Wesley's five brothers-in-law, were members of the Pittsburgh Conference at the same time. Two of Wesley's sons, Charles W. and Homer J. with several uncles and cousins are now members of the same body.

He was educated at Mount Union College, Ohio. After teaching in West Virginia one year, Fayette county, Pa., two years, and in the State of Delaware for two years, he became a member of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference at the session held in Johnstown in March, 1870. Since then he has served the following charges: Allegheny and Sewickley circuits, near Pittsburgh, one year each; Bridgeport, Pa., one year; Woodsfield, Monroe county, Ohio, three years; Irvin, Pa., two years, and is now closing his third year as pastor of the First M. E. Church of Indiana.

He was married in 1870, by Bishop Scott, to Miss Arcadia Lindale, of Wyoming, Delaware. They have had five children, one of whom, Ralph Irwin, died in Indiana, December 1st, 1878, and was buried in Oakland cemetery.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT NINEVEH, EAST WHEATFIELD TOWNSHIP.

The Methodists had a congregation at this place as early as 1836. They then held their meetings in the brick house, the residence of John M. Barber, up to 1840. This is the oldest house of the kind in this section of the county, and was built by Isaac Rodgers in the year 1816. A subscription paper was gotten up by John Barber and Daniel Pershing, dated September 28, 1840, asking the people to contribute to it for the purpose of building a Methodist church on the farm of John M. Barber. This paper was numerously signed, each one having the privilege to pay his subscription in labor or material for building purposes. Two hundred and fifty dollars were raised in this way towards the building. The house was let during the summer of 1840, to James Ebbs, a contractor and builder, and was completed during the fall of the same year. The edifice was a one-story building with the ceiling arched, at the highest point about twenty feet from the floor, and twenty-eight by thirty-five feet, and having a capacity to seat comfortably about two hundred and fifty persons. This church was dedicated by the Rev. Williams, a very popular Methodist minister, assisted, as I have been told by a colored minister. The membership numbered then about twenty persons.

The Methodists continued to worship in this house until the fall of 1871. During the early part of the summer of 1871, the trustees resolved to make an effort to build a new building, and subscription papers for this purpose were put into the hands of the pastor, Rev. J. N. Pershing, and John R. Grow, now in Paris, Mo. They succeeded in getting about two thousand dollars subscribed, when the building was let to John Dodson and Frank Herlinger, contractors and builders, at fourteen hundred dollars. The building was completed during the fall of 1871 and dedicated by the Rev. I. C. Pershing, of the Pittsburgh Female College, on the first Sabbath of November, 1871. There was a sufficient amount subscribed on the day of dedication to free the church from all encumbrance. The entire cost reached a few dollars over nineteen hundred. The size of the building (frame) is 32x44, and is sixteen feet high on the inside, having stained glass in the windows and two doors. The membership at the time the new church was built numbered twelve persons. The present membership is over one hundred.

NINEVEH.

The first settler was Robert Rodgers (whose notes the reader can examine, as well as the sketch of the mill, in the township history), and the place was known as Rodger's Mill for many years. James Fenton started a store about the same time that the canal was approaching Blairsville, and left about the time of its reaching this locality. The next merchant was Henry Noble, whose room is still standing opposite the canal lock. William Lapsley was afterward a partner, and they called the village Nineveh, managing their store here for several years. D. W. Wakefield, about this time, started a store and tavern. He was succeeded by Patrick Smith and Thomas Taylor. Richard Graham was the next merchant in the Noble building, and was succeeded by William Ford. For several years there has been no mercantile establishment in the village.

In 1832, William W. Wakefield purchased ten acres of land of John M. Barber and platted it into regular lots and streets, commencing at the Armagh road and extending to the graveyard, between the canal and the river.

The blacksmiths were, in order: Daniel Tinkcom, Benjamin Trimble, Thomas McLaughlin, Peter Altimus, John Grant and William Goddard.

The first and only church is the Methodist Episcopal, whose sketch appears above.

JACKSONVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was organized at the dwelling house of Robert Hunter, sr., in the village of Jacksonville, in the year 1839, and the congregation met in the public school house from 1841 to 1859. This school house was erected for school and church purposes.

The original members were, Daniel Welsh, leader, Mrs. Welsh, James Hunter, Jane Hunter, Martha Hunter, Nancy McGlaughlin, Ellen McIntire, Robert Hunter, sr., and wife, and Mary Hunter.

The first pastors were, Revs. John Coil, Joseph Ray, Samuel Nesbit, James Beacom, James Dean, L. M. Weekly, Thomas Higgins, James Borbridge, Richard Jordan and Robert Cunningham.

In 1859, the society erected the present church building and have since worshipped therein. The trustees at that time were, Elliott Ferguson, D. M. Henderson, D. S. Hunter, A. D. Ferguson and Phillip Steffy. Rev. Williams, the presiding elder, dedicated the new church in November, 1859. John Bruce was the contractor. It cost $1500, and is in size 45x54 feet.

Since the building of the church the following ministers have preached here: Revs. Robert Cunningham, two years; Joseph Shane, two years; S. Howe, two years; John Wakefield, two years; Appleton, two years; J. Leonard, two years; Joseph Pershing, two years; D. Kurtz, two years; George W. Cook, two years; T. J. Hatfield, two years; and the present pastor, Edward J. Knox.

The present trustees are Elliott Ferguson, in same office since first election, D. S. Hunter, S. C. Kennedy, R. L. Hunter and Joseph Ferguson.

The present membership is thirty-seven. The attendance at the Sabbath school is about forty.

THE BLAIRSVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was organized about 1824 or '25. Prior to this time there had been occasional preaching by Rev. J. Wakefield, a pioneer local preacher, and missionaries. Among the original members, which are said to have numbered twelve, were Jonathan and Elizabeth Kuntz, Stewart and Elizabeth Davis, John M. and Evaline Barber, Henry Keely and Mrs. Dr. Simmons.

The first church was erected at the south end of Liberty street in 1828. The second was built on the adjoining lot in 1847, and the third was constructed partly out of the material of the second and used a portion of its foundation, at an expense of about five thousand dollars. The first church cost seven and the second seventeen hundred dollars.

The ministers having charge of the circuit and station were* as follows: Connellsville circuit, 1, Robert Boyd; 2, John Connelly; 3, David Sharp; 4, Charles Thorn; Blairsville station, 5, Charles Thorn; Blairsville circuit, 6, James G. Sansom; Blairsville station, 7, Nathaniel Callender; 8, Moses Tichnell; 9, Wesley Smith; Blairsville circuit, 10, Gideon D. Kinear; 11, Simon Elliott; 12, John Coil; 13, John L. Williams; 14, Caleb Foster; 15, David S. Welling; 16, Charles Best; 17, William F. Lauck; 18, Abram I. Rich; 19, Samuel H. Nesbitt; 20, James Beacom; 21, James Deens; 22, Thomas I. Higgins; 23, Robert Cunningham; 24, John W. Shirer; Blairsville station, 25, Thomas McCleary; 26, Samuel Y. Kennedy; 27, Alexander Scott; 28, Henry C. Beacom; 29, John Grant; 30, William F. Lauck; 31, Franklin Core; and 32, S. P. Woolf, the present pastor.

The first trustees were: John Harrold, Daniel Steffey, John M. Barber, Stewart Davis, Henry Keely, Isaac Pierce and Jonathan Doty. Jonathan Kurtz was the first class leader, and it is said the church was organized at his house, and the second leader was Samuel Sharer. The first steward was Stewart Davis.

The present official board consists of Archibald Davis, Esq., John Graff, Samuel Dixon, Robert Johnston, David Davis, Daniel W. Artley, Charles Rugg, Philip Steffey, S. D. Steffey, John Wynn, Tobias Hammer, William Davis, Chester C. Davis, John G. Long, W. Geer, A. P. Kirkland, Paul Graff and John Bruce.

The present membership is 375. The enrollment of the Sabbath school is 325. The average attendance is 275.

Fourteen young preachers have been sent out from this church. Bishop Wiley was at one time a member of the Blairsville church.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF PUNXSUTAWNEY.

The first preaching of which we have any record was in 1822, at the house of Jacob Hoover, who resided in what is now known as Claysville. A class was formed, and this, in connection with an occasional visit from a minister, was the foundation of the church which to-day numbers in the county over twenty-five hundred members, thirty-two societies and thirty-two edifices.

*This list does not include the names of their colleagues.

In 1828, a class of six members was formed about a mile north from the present borough of Brookville. David Butler was appointed leader, and the services were held in an old mill. A Sunday school was organized, with Cyrus Butler as superintendent. In 1824, Rev. Mr. Dorsey established several classes, and preached at many points in the county.

In 1825, Rev. Mr. Yackett was appointed. He had regular stated services at Punxsutawney, Mr. Leiser's, Mr. Lawson's, Mr. Young's, and other points unrecorded. Punxsutawney was the central point from which the whole movement was directed.

Log churches were erected, and these have been succeeded by the elegant structures of to-day. Local preachers visited every portion of the county where there were settlements, and aided materially the regular minister in urging on the work, and building deep and well. The names of Berd, Bair, Holland, Reglesworth, Keller, Taylor, Scott and others, in addition to those above mentioned, will not soon be forgotten.

There have been two sessions of the Erie annual conference at Brookville. The first was from the 13th to the 19th of July, 1859, with Bishop M. Simpson as the presiding officer. There were 126 members present, and the meeting was marked by the large amount of business transacted, and the zeal evinced by the members generally.

The second was from the 3d to the 9th of September, 1873, and Bishop G. Haven was in charge. One hundred and fifty-one ministers were present, and the Association was successful in every respect.

The past of Methodism in Jefferson county was allied to hard, untiring work, and the present is fruitful, as the result of the seed sown in 1822, at the house of Jacob Hoover.

THE MARION METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

There were occasional meetings held in vicinity of Marion, East Mahoning township, in the years from 1830 to 1837, and during the year 1837 there was a society organized known as the "Compton Appointment." There were but nine members. The first house of worship was erected in 1844. The present handsome and commodious edifice was erected in 1871–2 at a cost of $7,500.

The preachers in succession have been Revs. James Day, John Summerville, William Butt, C. Foster, H. McCall, Joseph Wray (who organized the society), Augustus Lowman, James Henderson, Elijah Coleman, John Coyle, D. Gordon, —— Rankin, John and Joseph McCarty, S. H. Nesbitt, —— Blackburn, —— Lane, —— Hill, M. J. Montgomery, Richard Cartwright, 1856-7; W. Johnson and —— Yarnell, 1858-9; —— ——, 1860; J. S. Lemon, 1861-2-3*; M. W. Dallas, 1863-4; N. G. Miller, 1864-5-6; A. P. Leonard, 1866-7; James B. Gray, 1867-8-9; M. B. Sleppey, 1869-72, during whose pastorate the new church was built; John A. Danks, 1872-3-4; W. K. Brown, 1874-5; F. W. Vertican, 1875-6-7; J. J. Moffat, 1877-8; N. Davis, 1878-9-80.

The first officers were: Steward, Robert Craig; Class Leader, John Compton; Trustees, William Meanor, sr., Robert Craig, William Brady and James L. Park.

The number of members in January, 1880, is one hundred and forty-five, and the Sunday School numbers one hundred and fifty.

The present officers are: Stewards—James McGregor, J. N. Gibson, Adam Braughler and D. Dibler; Class Leaders—Levi Lowmaster, D. H. Bee, James L. Park and Mary Wetzel; Trustees—J. H. Rochester, Henry Wetzel, James McGregor, Adam Braughler, David McLaughlin, A. W. Brown, and John Snyder.

The presiding elders who appear to have preached more than the amount included in regular duties were: D. L. Dempsey, 1856-60; W. Lynch, 1860-4; T. McCleary, 1864-8.

*Parts of years.

TWOLICK BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Twolick Baptist church, located on Dickson's run, in Green township, was organized in the autumn of 1824. Its constituents, about twelve in number, were chiefly immigrants from Wales. Owing to the loss of the early records of the church, a partial list only can be here given of these constituents. Among them were the names following; Simon Davis and wife, George Turner and wife, Elizabeth Price, Mary Shadrach and John Thomas. The other constituent members were persons baptized at the time of the organization.

This was the first Baptist church in Indiana county. It was constituted at the house of Mr. Francis Chapman, who, together with his wife and several of his daughters, were among the earliest accessions to the church. Rev. Thomas Williams and Rev. Benjamin Davis, ministers of the Beulah Baptist church, in Cambria county, officiated at the organization.

The first settlement in that part of the county was made as early as 1801–2, by a few families from Wales, namely: John Rees, Hugh Rees, Simon Davis, David Price and David Moses. This region at that time was an unbroken wilderness, the outer border of civilization. Between Dickson's run and the Susquehanna river no man lived. Wild beasts roamed the forests undisturbed. Night was often made hideous by the howling of wolves, and bears and wolves, not seldom, committed serious trespass on the pens and sheepfolds of the settlers.

Among the settlers above named were three Baptists, i. e. Simon Davis and wife, and Elizabeth Price, wife of David Price. Their membership was held in the Beulah Baptist Church, near Ebonsburg, and ministers of that church paid them, at long intervals, paternal visits. It was not, however, until the year 1819, that any attempt was made to institute a religious society of any name or kind. In that year a widow woman, sister to John and Hugh Rees, with her two sons, John Thomas and William Shadrach, arrived from Wales. Mary Shadrach and her eldest son, John Thomas, were members of the Baptist Church in Wales, and as Beulah, 26 miles distant, was the nearest church of their faith, they deposited their certificates of membership in that church, and frequently, for a time, attended its communion. It is due to the memory of this christian woman to state, in this connection, that it was mainly owing to her devoted zeal, the first effort was made to establish, in the neighborhood stated religious services. Young people were called to meet together, on the Sabbath, to read the scriptures and learn to sing. In connection with these exercises, prayer meetings, held from house to house, continued to increase in numbers and interest. No other organized meetings for religious worship, within a circle of from eight to ten miles, could be found. From 1820 onward, more frequent visits were made by various ministers from Ebonsburg, among whom were George Roberts (Independent), William Williams, Thomas Williams, Festus Tibbot, Thomas E. Thomas, and Benjamin Davis. Converts were made, at first among the youth, mainly, and those of riper years soon followed. So that by the autumn of 1824, it was deemed advisable, as above stated, to organize a church.

Soon after the church was formed Rev. John Thomas, who had previously been called to ordination while yet a member of the Beulah church, was called to the pastorate, and continued to serve it for a period of six years; some of the Beulah ministers continuing, meantime, to pay him and the church their brotherly visits.

In 1826, the church licensed William Shadrach, the pastor's brother, to preach the gospel wherever he might find an open door; The two brothers, during this and the year following, made frequent preaching excursions through various districts, from Pine Flat, on the east, to Glade run, on the borders of Armstrong county, on the west, and southward to the waters of Black Lick. The church at this period had a large territory claiming service from it, and drew members into its communion from distances varying from seven to eighteen miles east and west.

In 1830 the church dismissed thirteen members for the purpose of forming a new church, now known as the Mahoning Baptist church. It was organized under the supervision of Rev. G. I. Mihs and Rev. William Shadrach, April 18, 1830, at the house of Enoch Hastings, on Glade run, and was the third Baptist church in the county, Saltsburg church, constituted in the autumn of 1829, being the second.

In the year 1830–31, the Two Lick church was greatly disturbed, and very seriously damaged and divided, by the introduction among its members of the doctrinal teachings of Alexander Campbell. Hitherto nothing had occurred to mar their peace, or to hinder their progress. Now angry controversy took the place of their former brotherly greetings, and hot discussions on "baptismal regeneration" and kindred matters, were substituted, for prayerful endeavors to promote the glory of God in the salvation of men. The pastor did all in his power to prevent the breach, and to heal it after it had taken place; but among the advocates of the new doctrine were some influential men who had hitherto been his special friends. He became weary of the strife, and removed with his family to Fayette county, taking with him his aged mother, from scenes which deeply grieved and saddened her heart.

In 1832, the long struggle having measurably subsided, the church called to the pastorate Rev. Thomas E. Thomas, who, during his ministry of two years, did much to encourage the enfeebled church and to rebuild its broken walls. The next year the church was without a settled pastor, but received occasional visits from several ministers from a distance, among whom were David Williams, John P. Rockafeller, and William Shadrach.

In 1836, Rev. Thomas Wilson took charge of the church, under the auspices of the "Baptist General Association for Missionary Purposes," and continued serving the church for the space of three years. During his pastorate, and near its close, a new church was organized at what is now known as Decker's point, and was called the Shiloh Baptist Church. Its constituents numbered fourteen members, all of whom had been dismissed from the Two Lick church for that purpose.

From 1840 to 1850, the church seems to have passed through a low and depressed state. No pastoral settlement is recorded, though occasional services were rendered by visiting ministers.

In 1850, Rev. Samuel Furman supplied the pulpit regularly, a part of his time, and in the autumn of 1852, A. B. Runyan, a recently licensed young man, was invited to preach for the church, and he pleased them so well that in February, 1853, he was called by them to ordination, and continued to serve the church until March, 1854. The ministers in attendance at his ordination were Rev. Aaron Neff and Rev. Samuel Furman.

Rev. Franklin Hollen rendered pastoral service to the church in the years 1857–8, at which time A. Shadrach was licensed by the church to preach the gospel; and after doing missionary work in this and the adjoining county of Armstrong, and receiving ordination at the call of the Pine Creek Baptist Church, in the county last named, he was called to the pastorate of the Two Lick Church in 1863, and continued to devote to its interests a part of his time, until the spring of 1869. During his pastorate the church substituted for the old log meeting house a new and commodious frame building, in which they now worship.

Since the last named date, the church has been ministered unto, at two different periods, by Rev. Samuel Furman; also by Rev. C. A. Prescot, and Rev. Enos Woodruff. It numbers at this time eighty-five members, has a good house of worship free from debt, and has recently elected to the pastorate Rev. M. L. Rowland.

LOYALHANNAH BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Loyalhannah Baptist Church was organized at Saltsburg, Indiana county, November 29, 1828, by concurrence and advice of a council of ministers appointed for the purpose by the Redstone Baptist Association, namely: Rev. James Frey, of Big Redstone. Rev. James Estep, of Forks of Zough, and Rev. John Thomas, of the Two Lick Church, Indiana county.

Its constituents were the nine following named persons, to-wit: Mrs. Mary Johnston, Andrew Johnston and his wife Martha, John Johnston and his wife Anna, George Hunt and his wife Mary, Mrs. Betsie Nicholson, and Stephen Drury.

The first business meeting was held June 20, 1829, at which time Andrew Johnston was ordained deacon, and Rev. William Shadrach, recently ordained to the ministry, was chosen as pastor. He accepted their call and entered upon the service immediately, dividing his labor equally between this church and the church at Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, where on the 10th of December preceding he had been ordained and settled.

During the greater part of the first year of its history the little church, through the kindness of their Presbyterian brethren, had the privilege of holding their services in their meeting-house; but this arrangement not proving quite agreeable to some members of the session of the Presbyterian Church, the little band withdrew, and held their worship at such places as they found to be most convenient. Sometimes they met in private houses; sometimes they accepted a tender made to them to use a meeting house at New Alexandria, at which place some of the members resided, and here they occasionally held the communion service.

In the opening of the spring of 1830, the church erected a tent in a beautiful grove, some three miles from Saltsburg, near the road leading to New Alexandria. This spot was selected as the most eligible on which to build their sanctuary, whenever they should deem themselves able for the undertaking. Around this preaching stand, in the open air and under the canopy of heaven, large assemblies gathered to pray and praise and hear the word.

In 1832, having been greatly strengthened in the meantime by accessions to their number, they erected a neat and commodious brick building, and dedicated it to the worship of God, free of debt, and having now a "local habitation," they took to themselves the name of the Loyalhannah Baptist church. This location was well suited to the convenience of the congregation, as the greater part of the membership, both of the original constituents and of those who subsequently united with the church, resided on the Westmoreland side of the Conemaugh.

In March, 1835, their first pastor, after having served the church for five years and ten months, resigned the pastorate, to take charge of a newly organized church in the city of Allegheny—then called Allegheny town. This parting of a young church with its youthful minister was the severance of tender ties, mutually painful to both; but the call of duty seemed to demand the sacrifice, and to this demand they mutually yielded. At this time the church numbered one hundred and thirty communicants.

On the 6th of April, 1836, the church elected to the pastorate Rev. Benoni Allen, who served in the office until August, 1839. This proved to be before its close a very unhappy pastorate. Under it a spirit of discord was engendered among the members, parties were formed, proper discipline was neglected, and in the midst of this disorder the pastor withdrew, without being regularly dismissed. For a long period the strife continued, and terminated finally by the exclusion of as many as twenty-one members from the communion of the church. This occurred February 15, 1842. Through the years of 1840 and '41, frequent efforts at reconciliation had been attempted, but without effect. In the meantime the disaffected party had withdrawn from the church and organized a separate body, under the name of the Livermore Baptist church. This proceeding, being regarded as fractious and disorderly, did not prevent the church, in the exercise of its discipline, from expelling them from its fellowship. After the lapse of some years a better spirit prevailed, and a good degree of brotherly concord was bestowed, a calm succeeding the storm. The Livermore church, by removal, death and otherwise, has become extinct.

From 1840 to 1849, the church was served for brief periods, either as pastors or supplies, by the following named ministers: Isaac Winn, John Parker, Milton Sutton, John P. Rockafeller and Edward M. Miles. Not anything of special note took place during this period. In June, 1849, the church called to ordination Mr. P. M. Weddle, a licensed preacher, who by the advice of a council called for that purpose, was ordained to the full work of the christian ministry, and served the church till June, 1852. He was soon succeeded by Rev. T. J. Penny, who held the office until April, 1855. During his pastorate, the church resolved to change their location, and, in 1853, they built themselves a house of worship in the borough of Saltsburg, and assumed the name of the Saltsburg Baptist Church; not, however, without providing for holding occasional services at Loyalhannah.

Mr. Penny was followed by Rev. D. W. Hunter, who ministered to the church from August, 1855, to April, 1857. The next year the church was without a pastor.

In March, 1858, Rev. J. R. Morris devoted to the interests of the church the one-half of his time for one year. April, 1859, Mr. W. T. Johnston, a licentiate, was called by the church to ordination, and served it as pastor from April of that year until April, 1862.

From 1862 to 1864, the church received pastoral services from Rev. Samuel Furman, then pastor of the church at Indiana. In March, 1864, Rev. A. H. Taylor was called to the pastorate and remained in office until failing health compelled him to retire, March, 1866.

From the last named date, until May, 1867, the church was without a pastor, at which time they extended a call to Rev. A. Shadrach, who accepted the call, and served the church for a period of eight years, when he resigned to take the financial agency of the Mount Pleasant Institute, in Westmoreland county. During his pastorate the church deemed it advisable to occupy more fully the ground on the Westmoreland side of the river; accordingly, in 1872, thirty-six members were dismissed for the purpose of organizing a new church, under the old name of the Loyalhannah Baptist Church. They built, that year, a new and commodious church edifice and united under the same pastoral charge with the Saltsburg Church. At the close of Rev. A. Shadrach's pastorate, April, 1875, Rev. G. W. Baker was called to the pastorate of the Saltsburg Church, served it for one year; and in April, 1876, Rev. John Burke became pastor of Saltsburg and Loyalhahnah churches. He continued in the pastorate until April, 1879. Near the close of Mr. Burke's ministry, a new church was constituted, at one of his out posts, and eleven members were dismissed from the Saltsburg Church, who together with eleven others, dismissed from the Loyalhannah Church, became the constituents of the new body, under the name of the

KELLY'S STATION BAPTIST CHURCH.

This new interest is in a flourishing condition, and all these churches are now under the pastoral care of Rev. E. C. Baird, who succeeded Rev. John Burke, June, 1879.

The membership of these churches, as shown by the latest public records, is as follows:

Saltsburg	75
Loyalhannah	63
Kelly's station, February, 1880	52
Total	190

RICHMOND BAPTIST CHURCH.

As early as 1845, there was occasional Baptist preaching in the vicinity of the present village of Richmond. The first preachers of whom we have any record were Aaron Neff and Thomas Wilson. The few Baptists in the vicinity for the years from this time forward belonged to Shiloh church, at the present village of Colfax, Decker's Point, P. O. The most active members in the vicinity having died, or removed, interest in the work about ceased, until vitalized by the voluntary labor of Rev. C. H. Prescott, of Reynoldsville, Jefferson county, Pa. He preached without pay, giving of his own means also toward the establishment of a church, with a house of worship of its own. A meeting held by him in the United Brethren house of worship resulted in the conversion and baptism of some, who, with members from Shiloh and East Mahoning churches living in the neighborhood, met and organized January 26, 1875. A council from other churches of the same faith and order convened July 28, 1875, in the Presbyterian church, and recognized the brethren as a regular Baptist church. Ministers present at these services: Rev. William Shadrach, D. D., Rev. Enos Woodruff, Rev. Daniel Griffith, Rev. Samuel Furman, Rev. Aaron Neff, Rev. A. B Runyan, Rev. Hewell Jeffries, and Rev. C. H. Prescott. James Ansley, of Crooked Creek church, was chairman, and Rev. Enos Woodruff, clerk.

The constituents were George Barrett and wife, John C. Weaver and Prudence his wife, David Weaver, Conrad Peiffer and Eliza his wife, John Lowman, David T. Brown and Hannah his wife, and David Daugherty and Caroline his wife.

The officers of the church are: Deacons, George Barrett, David T. Brown and David Daugherty, Barrett also serving as Treasurer, and Daugherty as church clerk. The trustees are: Conrad Peiffer, John C. Weaver and George Barrett.

A comfortable building was erected in the summer of 1875, at a cost of $1,500.

Rev. C. H. Prescott served the church as pastor a part of his time for two years, and Rev. D. W. C. Hervey part of the time for eighteen months.

The church now numbers 36 members, and has established a Sunday school, with an average attendance of twenty-five.

The church building is one of four built at this point since 1860, the first being built about that year on the south side of Mahoning creek, for the United Brethren, and since then three comfortable churches have been erected on the north side of the creek, one each by the Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, and Baptists. The site of these three, twenty years ago, was a dense undergrowth of pine and laurel, and it is now the prettiest part of the village.

EAST MAHONING BAPTIST CHURCH.

In the summer of 1850, Rev. Samuel Furman, then pastor of the Two Lick and Pine Flat churches, visited, by request, the neighborhood of the Butterbaugh's, and preached a sermon in the old log schoolhouse near John O'Harrow's. The service resulted in the awakening of O'Harrow and wife, and John Spricher and wife. At the next meeting these four converts were baptized.

In the autumn of 1851, Mr. Furman, assisted by Rev. Thos. Wilson, held a protracted meeting in the neigborhood, with good results. Ten persons professed conversion, and were baptized. During this meeting the East Mahoning church was organized. Its constituents were David Butterbaugh and Frederick Butterbaugh, with their wives, dismissed from the Two Lick church; J. O'Harrow and J. Spricher, with their wives, and Margaret Langham, dismissed from the Shiloh church; James Davis and wife, dismissed from the Livermore church, together with the ten baptized at the time—twenty-one in all.

From this time forward, Mr. Furman preached statedly for the new church, every fourth week, occupying for two years the log schoolhouse. In 1853, the church built a plain and commodious frame meeting-house, burdened now with no debt, in which they still worship.

For ten successive years the church held a yearly meeting of some days' continuance, which were greatly blessed, the least number of hopeful conversions at any one meeting being ten, and the greatest twenty-one.

In 1863, Mr. Furman resigned his pastorate, having served the church faithfully for the space of ten years. He was succeeded by Rev. Franklin Hollen, who served the church for but one year, at which time the former pastor was recalled and ministered to the church for six years more, from April, 1864, to March, 1870, at which time he again resigned, and, with his family, removed to Tennessee. In the summer of 1870, Rev. J. E. Dean served the church for three months, and in the fall of this year, Rev. T. C. Gepford was called to the pastorate, and filled the office until July, 1874, when he was dismissed. A third call was now extended to Rev. Furman, the old pastor. This he accepted, and in the spring of 1875, moved from Tennessee to the parsonage of the East Mahoning Church, and remains to this date, April 21, 1879, serving the church with fidelity and acceptance.

Brief Summary:—East Mahoning Baptist church was organized in 1851, with 21 constituent members. The whole number added to the church since, by baptism and otherwise (as by letter and experience), is 530. In 1878, 23 of its members were, by their request, dismissed, for the purpose of organizing a Baptist church at Fairview, and 30 others, in the same year, applied for and received letters, to organize the First Baptist Church of Cookport.

Removed from the church, from 1851 to 1879, by letter, exclusion, and death, 375. The present membership is 123.

CROOKED CREEK BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Crooked Creek Baptist church, with and by the advice of a large council of delegates from surrounding churches convened on the occasion, was organized December 15, 1870. Its constituent members numbered forty, all dismissed for the purpose from the Plumville Baptist church.

It is in possession of a very neat and commodious church edifice, free from debt, and bids fair to become a large and flourishing church. Thirty-eight persons have been baptized into its fellowship since its organization. Its membership at present is 73.

The following named ministers have served the church as pastors, in the order given, viz: Revs. C. H. Prescott, Aaron Neff, H. Jeffries, and the present pastor, A. B. Runyan.

WEST LEBANON CHURCH.

The West Lebanon Baptist church was organized by Revs. T. Dinsmore and J. Johnston, August 7, 1847. This little church, like almost all the Baptist churches in this country, has struggled hard, in the face of many difficulties, to maintain its visibility. Too weak in financial resources to sustain a regular ministry, it has had but very scant ministerial culture. Quite a list of devoted men is given in its history, as having served it at different periods, but mostly for brief terms. Some served a few months only, others for periods extending from one to three years. Its longest pastorate, including, however, but a fraction of the minister's time, extended to less than five years. It is now in a feeble state and without any pastoral service. Hoping seemingly against hope, it still struggles on, and looks for brighter days. The following named ministers have tendered more or less service to the church, viz: T. Dinsmore, Aaron Neff, John Thomas, T. Penny, W. B. Bingham, S. Furman, M. S. Bowser, and M. L. Rowland, who resigned October, 1879.

COOKPORT BAPTIST CHURCH.

In 1867-8, a number of Baptists residing in Cookport and vicinity, some of whom being members of the Pine Flat Church, and others of the East Mahoning Church, deemed it very desirable to have a place of worship in the village. They accordingly set about the matter in good earnest, and succeeded. Rev. W. P. England, pastor of the Pine Flat Church, rendered them good service by preaching for them a part of his time. Several persons professed conversion and were baptized.

In 1870, by advise of Council, they were organized as a branch of the East Mahoning Church, with thirty-two members. For about three months in this year, Rev. J. E. Dean served the church and the branch as pastor.

In 1871, Rev. T. C. Gessford was called to the pastorate of the mother church, and ministered to it and the branch till July, 1874, when his ministry came to a sudden close.

In 1875, the old pastor of the East Mahoning Church, Rev. S. Furman, was recalled, and in 1876-7, preached alternately at the church and at the branch.

In April, 1878, by advise of Council, called for consultation, the branch was organized as an independent body, under the name of the First Baptist Church of Cookport, Rev. Furman serving both churches jointly.

PINE FLAT BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Pine Flat Baptist Church was organized in the month of October, 1845, by Revs. G. F. Dinsmore and S. D. Morris. Its constituents, nineteen in number, thirteen of whom were dismissed from the Two Lick Baptist Church, both for the convenience of its members and the hope of further enlargement—the distance from Two Lick to the Flat being seven miles or more. Since its organization the church has registered the names of one hundred and eighty-nine persons as members. Its present membership is eighty.

The following is the list of ministers who have served the church either as pastors or temporary supplies, viz: Revs. W. B. Bingham, W. Shadrach, John Thomas, Samuel Furman, A. B. Runyan, J. W. Evans, W. P. England, Enos Woodruff, and their present pastor, A. Shadrach, who has ministered to them since June, 1877.

RICHMOND BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Richmond Baptist Church was organized by Rev. Charles H. Prescott, January 26, 1875. Its constituents numbered twelve (names not given), four of whom came by letter from the Shiloh Baptist Church, two from East Mahoning, three baptised at the time, and the remaining three came over from the United Brethren Church.

Rev. C. H. Prescott continued to minister to the little church till June 25, 1877. September 15, 1877, Rev. D. W. C. Hervey took charge of the church, withdrawing for that purpose, a part of his time, as pastor of the Punxsutawney Baptist Church. He remained in charge till February 17, 1879. This church has succeeded by a very strong effort to build for itself a very neat and comfortable house of worship, for which it deserves much credit, in view of the fewness of its members. It has received into its fellowship by baptism thirteen, by letter nine, and by experience one, making a total of thirty-six.

MAHONING BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church was organized under the supervision of Rev. G. I. Miles and William Shadrach, at the house of Enoch Hastings, on Glade Run, April 18th, 1830. Its constituents, thirteen in number, were dismissed for the purpose from the Two Lick Baptist Church. On the Sabbath, the day following the organization, two persons were baptised into its fellowship, so that there were fifteen members at its first celebration of the Lord's supper.

At this time the church had no pastor, the ministers above named were but casual visitors, both engaged in voluntary missionary tours over territory extending from Centre county, on the east, to Washington county on the west. The first regular ministrations rendered the church were by Rev. Thomas E. Thomas, pastor at the time of the Zion Baptist Church, in Clarion county. He was followed by J. P. Rockafellow, T. Wilson, Ed. McCrombor, S. Furman, A. Neff, M. S. Bowser, A. B. Runyan, J. W. Shoemaker and D. W. C. Henry, their present pastor. This church has been greatly blessed. Planted amidst a homogeneous and settled community, it has received into its fellowship four hundred and sixty-three souls, and has at present a membership of one hundred and eighty-three. Among its leading families all through its history are those of the Hastings, Davises and Ansleys.

BRUSH VALLEY BAPTIST CHURCH.

Mr. Hugh Evans, it is believed, was the first Baptist plant which took root and flourished in Brush Valley. After him came a family by the name of Stevens. Branches of both of these families still remain in the valley, and maintain the principles which they received from the fathers.

As far back as 1824 (possibly earlier) pioneer preachers from Beulah and Ebensburg, in Cambria county, made occasional visits to the valley, and preached in the house or barn of Hugh Evans, or under the shade of trees, as circumstances required. Among these pioneers, the following named ministers are still remembered with grateful aflection, viz: Revs. Thomas Williams, Benjamin Davis, John Thomas, Thomas E. Thomas, and Festus Tibbot. All these, except Benjamin Davis, are gone to their rest.

The Brush Valley church was not organized until the year 1839. Occasional preaching, however, continued from the first to be enjoyed by the people. In September of the year last named, Revs. Samuel Conrad and John P. Rockafellow were called for consultation, and, after seeking divine counsel and guidance, concluded to organize the little company into a regular church. Its constituents numbered sixteen members. Since its organization it has baptized into its fellowship 139 converts. Its present membership is 42. The church has suffered much of late by the removal by death of its most substantial supporters.

The ministers named below have served the church, either as pastors or temporary supplies, viz: Revs. Samuel Conrad, Aaron Neff, Thomas Wilson, Samuel C. Morris, John W. Evans, Joseph R. Morris, Franklin Hollen, A. Shadrach, W. P. England, C. H. Prescott, G. W. Baker and A. B. Runyan. At present the church is without a pastor.

PLUMVILLE BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church was organized October, 1849, as a Free Mission Baptist church, with eleven constituents, who had withdrawn from the Mahoning church. Persons of extreme views on the question of slavery, became dissatisfied with the close connection of the Northern with the Southern Baptists in carrying on the work of Foreign Missions, and in many quarters, strifes and divisions arose. Rev. W. B. Bingham, an active and zealous abolitionist, organized the church and ministered to it until February, 1855. He was succeeded by Revs. W. Shepard and J. Johnston.

In 1857, a council of neighboring churches was convened, and reorganized the church as a regular Baptist church. Rev. J. J. Shorthill was called to the pastorate, and continued to serve the church till September, 1868, and was succeeded by Rev. H. Jeffries.

In 1870, the great majority of the members, believing their location to be unfavorable to their growth, obtained letters of dismission, with a view to organize a church at Chambersville. Forty members were thus removed from Plumville, leaving but ten or twelve at the last named place. These still claim the name of the Plumville church, but can scarcely be regarded as a visible body.

BLACK LICK CHURCH.

The Black Lick Baptist church was organized under the supervision of Revs. W. H. Johnston and F. Hollen, May 29, 1861, with sixteen members, all of whom had been dismissed from the Livermore Baptist church, in Westmoreland county.

The church is a very feeble band, and at different times has seemed to be at the point of extinction. Its pulpit has been occupied, for brief periods only, by Revs. F. Hollen, Samuel Furman and Jesse Morgan. Its present pastor, Rev. R. L. Williams, has devoted to its interests a part of his time during the two years last past. Its membership is but nineteen.

SHILOH BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Shiloh Baptist Church, located in Green township, was organized June 15, 1839, by Rev. Thomas Wilson, assisted by Rev. Samuel A. Morris. Its constituent members, fourteen in number, were dismissed, for the purpose, from the Two Lick Baptist Church. Since its organization it has registered in the roll of its membership two hundred and seven names, one hundred and thirty of whom were baptized into its fellowship. Its present membership is fifty-five.

The church worships in a neat and commodious edifice, which is free from debt. Its pulpit has been occupied, for shorter or longer periods, by the following named ministers, to-wit: Revs. Thomas Wilson, L. W. Chapman, Samuel Furman, F. Hallen, W. Shadrach, A. Shadrach, W. P. England, J. G. Conover, C. H. Prescott, D. W. C. Hervey, and M. L. Rowland, who is the present pastor.

FAIRVIEW BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Fairview Baptist Church, located in Grant township, was organized October 11, 1877, and recognized as a regular Baptist Church, by a council representing several of the neighboring churches, called for the purpose, in accordance with the usual practice of the denomination. The ministers serving on the occasion were Revs. Samuel Furman, J. G. Conover and I. W. Shoemaker. Its constituent members numbered about thirty, twenty-three of whom had been dismissed for this purpose from the East Mahoning Church.

At the time of their organization they placed themselves under the pastoral care of Rev. I. W. Shoemaker, who served them for one year. After a brief interval, the church called to the pastorate the present incumbent, Rev. M. M. L. Rowland.

THE FIRST REGULAR BAPTIST CHURCH OF INDIANA, PA.

During the winter of 1857–8, Rev. Samuel Furman, a Baptist minister residing in the northern part of Indiana county, visited the borough of Indiana, and commenced holding stated monthly meetings in the old court house. In the spring of 1858, a church meeting was held in the grand jury room, and an invitation extended to the churches of Clarion Association to send their pastors and delegates to meet in council to consider the propriety of organizing a church at Indiana.

Pursuant to that call, the council convened sometime in July 1858. The following ministers were present, viz: Rev. P. N. Waddell, A. B. Runyan, Samuel Furman, Samuel Miles and R. L. Hunt. Only six persons presented themselves as constituent members. Their names were: William Shields, Lewis E. Freet, Mrs. Mary J. Shields, Mrs. Rosanna Freet, Mrs. Catharine Craig and Mrs. Eliza Canning. At first the council hesitated as to the propriety of organizing such a small number of communicants as an independent body, but subsequently concluded to do so. The organization ceremonies took place in the court house, and at the same time and place L. E. Freet was ordained as deacon.

The church continued to worship in the court house for some time, but subsequently secured the use of the Free Presbyterian meeting-house, on Water street, which they occupied until their own house was completed.

On the 4th day of December, 1859, their present house of worship was dedicated. Rev. W. Shadrach, D. D., of Philadelphia, preached the dedicatory sermon. At that time the membership of the church had increased until it numbered twenty-nine, ten of whom were males and nineteen females.

Rev. Samuel Furman was continued as pastor of the church until December 18, 1862, when he resigned. From that time until the spring of 1864, the church was without a pastor. However, the pulpit was occasionally occupied by different ministers of Clarion Association.

On the 23d day of March, 1864, a call was extended to Rev. A. B. Taylor, for one-fourth of his time. This call was accepted and he continued as pastor of the church until April 28th, 1866, when he tendered his resignation on account of an attack of cancer in his face, an affection which untimately caused his death.

For almost a year the church was again without a pastor. February 17th, 1867, a call was extended to Rev. A. B. Runyan for one-half his time, which was subsequently, October 19th of same year, changed to one-fourth time. Rev. Runyan closed his pastorate with this church about the first of January, 1868.

For several subsequent years the church was without a pastor, and from October, 1870, till April, 1872, the Congregational Church had the use of the meeting house.

During the latter part of 1871, an effort was made on the part of the Associational Missionary Committee to awaken the latent energies of Indiana Baptist Church. At this time their members had been so reduced by death, removals and otherwise, that of the fifty-three persons that had from time to time united with the church, but thirteen remained, and some of even that small number, resided at points too far distant to attend regularly upon the services of the sanctuary. A meeting was held, December 2d, 1871, at which time the church was reorganized by electing two additional members to the board of deacons, and several persons were received into the fellowship of the church. A resolution was adopted to make an earnest effort to secure regular preaching, at least one Sabbath each month, and April 1st, 1872, a call was extended to and accepted by Rev. A. Shadrach for one-fourth time for one year.

In April, 1873, Rev. William Shadrach, D. D., assumed the duties of pastor of this church, and has continued to occupy that position until the present time, devoting his whole time to the work. Under his efficient ministrations the growth of the church has been regular and healthy instead of rapid or spasmodic, until it has reached its present number—one hundred and two. An examination of the list of members shows that one hundred and fifty-two persons have been received into the fellowship of the church since its organization.

Lewis E. Freet and Thomas Ray, both of whom are deceased, were the first deacons. The following brethren compose the present board of deacons, viz: James S. McAnulty, J. Miles Walker, Joseph F. Barnes, Daniel Ansley and Isaac W. Warner.

Lewis E. Freet and Thomas Row were trustees of the church from A. D. 1859, until A. D. 1876, when a charter of incorporation was secured. The present board of trustees are as follows: Daniel Ansley, president; Joseph F. Barnes, secretary; John S. McAnulty, Charles K. Johnton, and Isaac W. Warner.

The Sabbath school is in a very flourishing condition. For several years past the enrollment of the school has never been less than one hundred and sixty-eight, and last year it reached one hundred and eighty-seven. Lewis E. Freet was the first S. S. superintendent, and Joseph F. Barnes is the present incumbent of that office.

KELLY'S STATION BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church was organized April 1, 1879, by Rev. John Burke, who had preached at this point in connection with Saltsburg and Loyalhanna for about three years.

The constituents were J. B. Smith, D. C. Duncan, Jane Duncan, Jane Yingling, Caroline Kelly, Rebecca Horrel, W. S. Mears, Mary A. Mears, Alexander Dias, John Garland and Eliza Garland, of Loyalhanna church; and William Garland, John Kritzer, George Garris, James Drummond, Wilson Klepper, Mary Garris, Nancy Garris, Ida Shearer, Lizzie Shearer, Amanda Klepper and Rachel Kelly, of Saltsburg church.

The first officers were: J. B. Smith, James Drummond and W. S. Mears, deacons, and D. C. Duncan, clerk and treasurer. The first trustees were J. B. Smith, D. C. Duncan and James Drummond.

Services were first held in the Methodist church, the same building now owned by the congregation. The purchase of this building was effected in 1878 at a cost of $210. It is about 35 by 40 feet in size, and is a neat frame building. One hundred dollars have been spent in repairs since the purchase.

Rev. John Burke served the church until organized, since which Rev. Edwin C. Baird has served one-fourth of his time.

There is no change in officers (1880) except J. B. Smith, deceased. The present membership is 52, with an average attendance at Sabbath school of twenty-five.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH IN PUNXSUTAWNEY.

On the 30th of October, 1840, the society was organized at this place, and the history of the regular Baptist church commenced. Revs. Thomas E. Thomas and Benoni Allen had been conducting a revival, and under its ministrations an association was formed, the influence of which has never ceased. The following joined by letter: Isaac London, Hiram London, Lemuel Carey, Hannah Carey, John R. Reed, Margaret Reed, James Armstrong, Mary Armstrong, Esther McMillen, Eliza Cochran, Sarah Gilhausen and Elizabeth McCracken.

The Revs. Thomas and Allen were invited to preach until the 1st of April, 1841, each to officiate as pastor one-fourth of his time, and William Campbell was elected clerk. On the 1st of November, 1840, Stephen London and James McConaughy were admitted by baptism.

November 2d of the same year was memorized by the addition of William Davis, William Campbell, Ephraim Bair, Jacob Bair, Samuel Gilhausen, John Hunt and Prudence Stewart, also by a profession of faith signified by baptism. The third day of the same month, James H. Bell, Ann Bell, William Torrance, Lemuel Carey, jr., Mary Davis, Jane Hunt, Elizabeth McDermort and Jane Major were baptized.

Rev. Thomas continued with the society till October, 1841, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Wilson, who was followed by Rev. Samuel Miles, who was called on the 10th of January, 1847. Revs. John J. Shorthill, F. C. Gessford, Howell Jeffries, and the present incumbent, D. W. C. Hervey, comprise the remaining pastors.

The edifice now occupied by them was erected in 1858, the previous meetings being held in the village schoolhouse.

The number of Baptist communicants in the county is about 700. There are churches at Punxsutawney, Beech Woods, Reynoldsville, Brookville and Corsica.

HAZELET METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

The first Methodist Protestant Church organized in the county is known as the Hazelet M. P. Church. It is located about midway between Cherry Tree and Gettysburg, on the old State road. It was organized in 1832, in the house of Rev. Samuel Hazelet, a local preacher, who had moved in from Clearfield county, Pa. The society was organized either by Rev. Zack. Ragan, D. D., then President of Pittsburgh Conference, or by Rev. Robert Simonton, who was pastor of a frontier work extending from Phillipsburg, Clearfield county, to the vicinity of Blairsville, Indiana county. The organization was composed of Rev. Samuel Hazelet, his wife Sarah and daughters Anna E. and Maria; Rev. Samuel Rank, a local preacher, and his wife Margaret A., John Bartlebaugh and his wife, Mrs. Mary King and her daughter Nancy, and Miss Mary Notley. Others united soon after.

In 1854, a good frame church was built, 30x40 feet, one-story, which is still in a good state of preservation (1879). The names of the pastors who have served them are: Robert Simonton, I. Huntsman, T. J. Addis, William McCullough, C. C. Chapman, C. A. Compton, Henry Palmer, J. L. Turner, M. Stewart, D. Dershing, John I. Stillions, Henry Lucas, N. Burgess, Alex. Marple, Anson Kingsley, W. H. Phipps, William M. Smith, J. B. Lucas, Alex. Patton, Michael Lee, D. H. Davis, William Turner, and S. F. Crowther, who served seven consecutive years, from September, 1872, to 1879.

This church has been the spiritual birth-place and home of a goodly number of persons, but her ranks have been reduced frequently during the last twenty years, by deaths, removals, and the organizing of several other churches in neighboring communities. The present membership is about fifty. Nearly all of the original members have gone to rest. Rev. S. Hazelet and wife, both sleep in the graveyard by the church. Their children that survive them are in the church. One son has been in the ministry for a number of years. The Sabbath School numbers from seventy-five to one hundred, and is doing a good work. W. T. Hazelet, James W. Hazelet, John Hazelet, P. W. Wassam, R. W. and M. W. Smith are among the office bearers and efficient workers at this time. Rev. J. A. Gehrett succeeds Rev. Crowther as pastor.

SALEM M. P. CHURCH.

This church was organized in A. D. 1839, by Rev. Thomas J. Addis, in the house of John Dunckel. The members of the organization were John Dunckel and his wife Susan and their daughters Keziah and Magdalene, Joseph Clifford and wife and perhaps several others. The location is in Green township, about three miles east of Pine Flats. In 1849 a hewed log church was built on Mr. Dunckel's land. It was lined and ceiled after the style of those days and is a comfortable house yet, and still in use (1879). They have been served by the following pastors: Thomas J. Addis, William McCullough, C. C. Chapman, G. A. Compton, H. Palmer, J. L. Turner, Martin Stewart, David Pershing (during whose term the church was erected), John I. Stillions, H. Lucas, N. Burgess, Alexander Marple, Anson Kingsley, W. H. Phipps, William McSmith, J. B. Lucas, Alexander Patton, M. Lee, D. H. Davis, William Turner and S. F. Crowther, who served from September, 1872, to 1879, seven years. This church has had many members since its organization, yet so many of them were migratory, that by removals and deaths, it was always kept weak, both numerically and financially. During the last seven years the membership has increased fifty per cent, and yet at this writing there are not over thirty-five on the records, the principal of whom are Thomas Patterson, Esq., Thomas Luckard and John C. Repine and their wives, all three of whom are daughters of John and Susan Dunckel. Some of their children are also members. They maintain a Sabbath school and all the interests of the church, hoping for a broader field of usefulness in the future. Rev. J. A. Gehrett succeeded pastor Crowther in September, 1879.

COOKPORT M. P. CHURCH.

The First M. P. Church of Cookport was organized in 1843 by Rev. C. C. Chapman. The first members were: Mrs. Margaret Fleming, Bartholomew, Francis, William, Elizabeth, Catharine and Maria Fleming, John Stephens and William McCombs. John Stephens was elected Leader, and William Fleming, Steward. For several years it was known as the Fleming Church. Rev. Chapman was succeeded by G. A. Compton, H. Palmer, J. L. Turner, M. Stewart, D. Pershing, John I. Stillions, H. Lucas, William McCollough, and N. Burgess, during whose term a frame church was erected near the present site of Cookport, and called North Salem. It was dedicated in January, 1855, by Rev. David Pershing. Then came Alex. Marple, Anson Kinsley, W. H. Phipps, William McSmith, J. B. Lucas, Alex. Patton, Michael Lee, D. H. Davis, and William Turner.

This brings us to 1872, when S. F. Crowther became pastor. There were then thirty-five members on the records. Previously to this time the records had not been carefully preserved; subsequently they were. During the seven years of Pastor Crowther's term, there were yearly ingatherings—as many as twenty-seven at one time—and gradual growth, so that after deducting all who removed, died and dropped out by the way, there remains a membership of about seventy. During this term a new church edifice has been erected in the village of Cookport, in size 40x67, frame, with spire one hundred feet high—an ornament to the town.

Several enthusiastic district Sunday School conventions have been held in Cookport under the direction of Pastor Crowther as President of the district; also several Sunday School concerts by the several schools in Cookport. The Sunday School is kept open all the year, and is doing a good work.

We think this church has a hopeful future. Among its present leading members and office bearers are some of the Camerons, Cooks, Conraths, Cunninghams, Buterbaughs, Lockards, Lovelace, Meyers, Nupp, Hudson, Reeds, Leasure et al. This church co-operates with the general church in all the home and foreign work for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom on the earth. Rev. J. A. Gehrett succeeds Pastor Crowther September, 1879.

GETTYSBURG METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

The First M. P. Church of Gettysburg was organized in June 1857, by Rev. Anson Kingsley, with the following membership: Jacob G. Ake, H. H. Ruffner, Mrs. Eliza H. Churchill, H. R. Rankin and Mrs. Mary L. Rankin. For thirteen years they worshipped in the township schoolhouse, and then erected a frame church, the first in the place; size, 40 by 50 feet, with spire and bell. It was completed and dedicated in 1871, by Rev. S. F. Crowther. It has been served by the following pastors: Anson Kingsley, W. H. Phipps, William McSmith, Alexander Patton, Michael Lee (in whose time the church building was commenced), D. H. Davis, William Turner and S. F. Crowther, who became pastor in 1872, at which time there were seventeen members. They sustained the usual church services, and a Sabbath school during the summer only, as was then the custom of the country. During February and March, 1873, there were upwards of sixty professed conversions, forty of whom united with the church. During 1874, fifteen professed conversion, and some united with the church. During 1875, upwards of twenty professed conversion, and sixteen united with the church. In 1876, nine were received, and so on; each year added some; but also took some away by death and other causes, so that at this time, September, 1879, the membership numbers about sixty. Among the office-bearers and workers at this time are the Ake's, Byers' Clark's, Churchill's, Dunlap's, Pittman's, Ruffner's, Strasler's, Weaver's, et al. The Sabbath school is vigorous, and doing a good work. Several conventions of great profit have been held in this church during the past few years. The school is kept open all the year. The future of this church is hopeful. Pastor Crowther is about closing his seventh year, and having been elected President of the Pittsburgh Conference, and pastor of the First M. P. Church of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, will be succeeded by Rev. J. A. Gehrett.

CHERRY TREE M. P. CHURCH.

The First M. P. church of Cherry Tree was organized by Rev. S. F. Crowther, August 22, 1873. The persons forming the organization were Rev. S. F. Crowther, his wife C. M. Crowther, and daughter Amelia E. Crowther, now Mrs. R. S. Lovelace; John Mahaffey and wife, Ellen Mahaffey; Andrew Fraley and his wife, Mary Fraley; L. M. Clark and Almira his wife; John and Elma Kneedler, A. R. Lovelace, M. D.; Robert S. Lovelace, H. B. Grumling, William W. and Mary Langdon, Margaret Langdon, R. McKeage and his wife, Jane McKeage; William Shaw, J. D. Shaffer, Eliza and Emma Lovelace, Miss Maggie T. Keller and S. Conner were added soon after. They labored under great disadvantages on account of not having a church edifice. Part of the time they worshipped in the Presbyterian church, and part in the town hall, and the Sabbath school was in the schoolhouse sometimes, and sometimes in the hall. Each year added to the membership, but church building was deferred on account of the financial panic until 1875. During this year forty-six were added to the church, and preparations for building commenced. The Sunday school and all the services were now being held in the old hall; were well attended and full of interest. The work of church building was pushed forward as rapidly as circumstances would allow, for "there were many adversaries." And it may safely be said, had it not been for the indomitable courage of the pastor and a very few others, it would have failed. On the last day of A. D. 1876, the first story of the handsomest church in this section of country was dedicated to the worship of God. The church is 38 by 64 feet, two stories high, with a tower on the corner 116 feet high, Gothic style. In order to be ready to furnish the church as soon as built, the pastor's wife, Mrs. Crowther, organized a "Ladies' Church Aid Society" in October, 1874, and kept it in vigorous operation. The result was, they paid for the central front window, which bears their memorial inscription, and furnished the church as far as finished, with pulpit, carpets, chairs, chandeliers, and, aided by the Sunday school, bought an organ, clock, &c. The pastor was assisted at the dedication by Rev. T. H. Colhouer, President of Pittsburgh Conference, and Rev. J. H. Hull, of Mt. Washington. They were now comfortably situated in their new church. All the regular services were established according to Methodist usages, and the good work went on well, but as all great revivals are followed by heavy reaction, so in this case, "the love of some waxed cold," and some "went back and walked no more with Christ;" but the faithful went forward, and maintained the church in all her interests, securing her permanency and hopefulness for the future. The present membership, September 1879, is about 50, prominent among whom are the names of John Mahaffey, W. T. Mahaffey, A. R. Lovelace, M. D., R. S. Lovelace, Andrew Fraley, P. Kinport, W. Reed, et al.

These five churches are associated, for the support of a pastor, under the name of Cherry Tree pastorate. Each church owns her own property, but, in case of extinction, it vests in the Quarterly Conference, which is composed of the official members of the several churches, with the pastor as President. The records kept by the pastor show receptions, baptisms, withdrawals, marriages, deaths, statistics, &c.

Pastor Crowther, having been elected President of Pittsburgh Annual Conference, and also pastor of the First Methodist Protestant church of Allegheny City, Pa., removed to the city in September, 1879, and was succeeded by Rev. J. A. Gehrette. The M. P. Church is republican in government, and maintains an itinerant ministry, schools, colleges, &c.

CHRIST CHURCH—PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Prior to 1855, there was no Protestant Episcopal Church in Indiana, but services were held by Rev. Nash, who, with his wife, remained some time in town, doing much good and making such an impression upon the people that the need of a church was felt. The services were conducted in the Lutheran Church, through the kindness of their pastor, Rev. Sharrelta.

Hon. Thomas White bought two lots on the corner of Philadelphia and St. Clair streets, West Indiana, and donated them to the church, and a subscription was then taken up, Judge White making up the balance necessary for building a small frame church. The 13th day of October, 1855, the deed was made and Christ Church of Indiana was organized and consecrated by Bishop Alonzo Potter. The services for organizing and consecrating the church were arranged by Rev. William Pattock, then rector at Greensburg, Westmoreland county. The original vestrymen were Judge White, senior warden; William Scott, junior warden, William M. Stewart. James Sloan, Titian J. Coffee, John Leichtiberger and Edmund Page.

The original members were, Judge White and Mr. and Mrs. William Scott. Rev. Oliver was the first rector, coming shortly after the church was organized and remaining about two years. During his stay William M. Stewart and wife were confirmed and their family baptized by Bishop Alonzo Potter. During that period Bishop Potter's son now rector of Grace Church, New York, then rector of the church at Greensburg, visited Indiana several times and held service for Mr. Oliver.

After Mr. Oliver was called away, Rev. Edward B. Spaulding, a very able, learned gentleman, had charge of the church for about six months, when he was called to a professorship in the college at Racine, Wisconsin. Many were the regrets when he left. He was followed by Rev. John Cromlish, who remained three years, and several members were added to the church during his stay.

The church was then taken in charge by Rev. Floridus A. Steel, rector a Greensburg, who held service in Indiana every two weeks. He remained several years doing a good work, making many friends for himself and the church. He left here to accept a call at Hartford, Connecticut. For some time the church was without a regular rector, but supplied by missionaries, an occasional service being held whenever a clergyman could be spared from any where within reach. Rev. B. B. Killkelly, one of the oldest clergymen in the diocese, came often. Rev. Edwards, Rev. Spaulding and others were among the number who visited here. For some time Mr. Steel, then principal of the public schools of Indiana, read lay service—kept the church open—had a flourishing Sunday school with about forty children in attendance, giving work to the few church people and others who were interested.

In 1870, the church was given into the hands of Rev. J. Heber McCandless, of Pittsburgh, a most energetic, earnest, hard-working church man. He held service every two weeks on Sunday, often giving week day services, always holding Lenten services, was devoted to his work, always willing to do anything that was to do, and finding plenty to do. The Sunday School was made most interesting under his care, and more members were added to the church than during any other rector's term. He remained, working hard for five years, and then resigned on account of an inefficient salary to support him. Since then the church has only been open when the Dean, Rev. G. C. Rafter, of Johnstown, or his assistant, can visit it.

In 1866, Rt. Rev. John B. Kerfoot was elected Bishop of the Diocese, and has been and is most faithful in his care of this little church. It has made but little progress, the membership never exceeding eighteen or twenty. The people were coming and going, never staying long enough to get deeply interested in the church. It must have been a failure but for the sympathy and kindness of the good Bishop. He makes his visits regularly, causing his people to feel and know that, although few in number, he thinks them worth looking after.

The church lost much when, in 1867, Judge White died, leaving a place that has never been filled. His presence was never missed from the church when able to attend. Many times he made the responses alone—oftener with but two or three to assist. He, with William M. Stewart, made the expenses of the church very light to others, and his death threw a heavy burden on Mr. Stewart.

It seemed as if the last stay was gone when, in 1871, Mr. Stewart moved his family to Philadelphia. The church in all her struggles should not forget Mr. Stewart, who always remembers how much need there is in Indiana, and never turns a deaf ear to a call for help from her.

In 1874, a pavement was ordered on Philadelphia street, in front of the church, which was a great expense, and the church property was advertised for sale for the payment of the debt contracted in making it.

Bishop Kerfoot came to the rescue and saved the church, with the aid of some small subscriptions.

In 1875, the ladies of the church held a "Mush and Milk" festival, for the purpose of securing a new organ. In one evening $130 were raised, a new organ purchased and put into the church for the Christmas service.

In 1878, a pavement was made on the St. Clair street side of the church with less trouble than the first, and to-day it is free of debt. Some few items are worthy of notice.

The church, from being closed so long, was often damp and very hard to heat during the winter, and on one occasion, when Rev. Hartman, of Pittsburgh, was to visit Indiana, the weather set in very cold. The service was held in William M. Stewart's parlor, quite a number of persons being present. Another time, when the church was open and service commenced by Rev. J. Heber McCandless, it was found to be so uncomfortably cold that they decided to conclude the service at the house of Mr. Edward Nixon, which was done, and the sacrament administered to almost all the members of the church. Once again, when Dr. Killikelly was holding a service, it grew so cold that he was obliged to dismiss the congregation before he was through with his sermon. One winter, when without a rector, not wishing to give up the Sunday school, which was in good condition, and the church being too cold for the children, it was held at the house of Mr. Nixon for many weeks, until serious sickness in the family prevented doing so any longer. As has been said, the church has never made much progress. When one family of church people came into the town, another went away, and so the membership has always been kept down. But it is claimed there are some good, energetic church people here, who have tried hard to keep the church open, and suffer because they are so much of the time deprived of church privileges.

Although now without a rector, and only an occasional service held, there is always a hope that some time in the not far distant future, Christ Church will take a place among the flourishing churches of Indiana, and then the past history will only add to the interest of it.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH OF ST. BERNARD, OF THE BOROUGH OF INDIANA.

The first Catholic settlers in the town of Indiana were Francis Gompers (died in 1858) and William Tinthoff. The latter being a single man, removed after a short stay to Lebanon county, where he married, and afterward returned to Indiana. G. Silvers next arrived, and for many years kept a tavern in his own house, afterward the property of the Catholic clergyman. Mr. Silvers died October 14, 1849.

The family of Sweeneys, on the road leading from Indiana to Strongstown, were also among the oldest Catholic settlers in the neighborhood. All of these arrived here from 1814 to 1822. Later came the families of Mr. Maloy and Mr. Sheridan; then Andrew Young, in 1829; Andrew Stottmiller, in 1834; G. Adam Young, in 1836; Oliver Joseph Metz, Herman Custercamp and John P. Young, in 1838; B. Wehrle, in 1840, and the three brothers, Conrad, Bernard and Cyriac Wissel, in 1844. There were, perhaps, more Catholics settled around, especially of the English tongue, the descendants of whom now no more belong to the religion of their fathers, because they had no ministers of their faith for many years.

A great many of these settlers came from the eastern counties of Lebanon, Huntingdon, etc., to whom were at that time the western counties of Pennsylvania what are now the States and territories of the "Great West" to us.

During the early period of their location, all the stations of Catholic worship in Indiana and Westmoreland were supplied from Sportmanshall, or Hill Church, now the Abbey of the Benedictines, at St. Vincents, in Westmoreland county, where, before the beginning of our century, Rev. Theodore Browers, a Belgian by birth, and of the Franciscan order, laid the foundation of a parish church, with which were connected the Catholics of Pittsburgh.

The early Catholics of the county had to go to Hill Church or to Laretto, Cambria county, where, since about 1800, Rev. Dem Gallitzen, well known by his labors, zeal and love, settled and collected around him a poor but sincere congregation.

After some time, all the counties around were annexed to the Bishopric of Baltimore until the See of Pittsburgh was erected in 1843.

The first Catholic priest who ever came to Indiana for Catholic services was Rev. Terrence McGirr, the eighth pastor of Hill Church. He erected a small log house as a place for holding public worship, at Cameron's Bottom, about the same year that the Clay turnpike was being made from Indiana to Ebonsburg. This was the first Catholic Church in the county, but was not regularly attended.

After McGirr, Rev. T. Bradley, then residing at Ebonsburg, but for a number of years previous located at Newry, Blair county, had charge of the Indiana and Cameron's Bottom congregations, and attended more or less until in 1844 or 1845, when Rev. J. A. Stillinger, of Blairsville, took charge of the Indiana congregation for about two years.

In 1845, the Catholic Church at Indiana, a frame building thirty by forty feet, was built by about twenty families belonging to the congregation, at a cost of nearly six hundred dollars.

In 1847, the Rt. Rev. Boniface Wimmer Abbott delcatur of St. Vincent, at that time Superior of the Monastery at that place, and itinerant missionary, frequently came to Indiana and supplied the charge with preaching himself or sent some of his young assistants to minister in his stead, until 1849.

About this time, Rev. Nic. Stauber came to Indiana and remained until 1850, when he was removed. He died at St. Vincents, in November, 1857. After Mr. Stauber came another secular priest, Rev. John Schmied, who left Indiana in October, 1850, and was succeeded by Rev. Will Lambert, an Irishman, who attended the congregation until March, 1851.

OIL WELL ON THE FARM OF ALEX. KREMKAU NEAR MOUTH OF CANOE CREEK 2½ MILES FROM PUNXSUTAWNEY.
DINSMORE & HOWE, LESSEES. DANIEL CANFIELD AND CHAS. C. ROOT, CONTRACTORS. ENGINE 15 HORSE-POWER.
DERRICK 72 FT. IN HEIGHT.

No clergyman would stay here any longer, so the Rev. Boniface Wimmer resumed the place, purchased a home and made his residence here.

Revs. P. Mauris, P. Jerome, P. Ildefons, P. Celestine, P. Valentine, P. Alto, P. Ulric, and P. Magnus Mayer, all of the order of St. Benedict, attended here at various times as missionaries.

The whole number of these missionaries who ever attended the congregation was not more than twenty.

Owing, probably, to such frequent changes in the ministry, the congregation did not increase as rapidly as others in the neighborhood. Besides this charge, all the priests were obliged to attend other missions and stations, among them being Johnstown, Brookville and Kittanning, and therefore a pastor would never know all the members of the congregation, which numbered in 1859 over seventy families; twenty-four of them were of the English speaking, and the remainder of the German nationality.

The next pastors were: Revs. Gerhard Pilz, O. S. B.; Blazidus Pilz, O. S. B. (brother of Gerhard); and Moritz Koeder, O. S. B., who officiated from 1859 until 1861.

From 1861 until May, 1876, Revs. Ferdinand Wolf, O. S. B.; Utto Hube, O. S. B., and Leander Schnerr, O. S. B., had charge of the congregation.

On the 28th of May, 1876, Rev. George P. Allman, a secular priest, became pastor, and has since officiated in such capacity.

The foundation of the present brick edifice was laid in 1869, under the superintendence of Rev. Wolf. The church was dedicated on the 26th of May, 1871, during the pastorate of Rev. Hube. It is of the cross form, of Gothic architecture, 93½ by 57 feet in size, and will seat about six hundred.

The height of the tower is 125 feet. The architect's estimate of the cost was $22,000, but the actual expenditure in money was only $10,500, the balance being supplied by the hard labor of the congregation. The expense was borne by only sixty-five families.

The priest's house was completed, as well as the Sisters' house, in 1876.

There is a parochial school under the care of two Sisters of St. Agnes connected with the congregation. Both English and German are taught. The daily attendance is from seventy to eighty.

The number of families in the congregation is over one hundred, with an average of five persons to each family.

In 1859, the Catholic population living in the Mahonings and other northern townships, amounted to only ten families. At that time they had a church ground and graveyard in North Mahoning, but no church.

In 1845, a small brick church was built at Saltsburg by about twenty-five families.

There has been a fine frame edifice at Cameron's Bottom since 1853. At that time sixty families and a monastery of the Franciscan brothers were connected with it. The old stone church was erected in 1828–9. Among the priests who attended this congregation were, first, Revs. Terrence McGirr and Dennis Kearney. J. Hacket was the pastor in 1858 and 1859.

The whole number of Catholics living in the county in 1859 exceeded one thousand. The number is estimated at this time at about fifteen hundred.

S. S. SIMON AND JUDE'S CHURCH, BLAIRSVILLE.

The Catholics of Blairsville were attended at first by the Priests who resided at "Sportsman's Hall on the Hill," as it is sometimes called, where St. Vincent's Monastery is now. The regularly appointed pastors of that place were Rev. Theodore Brommis, Rev. L. S. Phelan (or Whelan), Rev. Fr. Lanigan, Rev. P. Heilbron, Rev. G. F. X. O'Brien, Rev. Charles Bonaventine McGuire, and Rev. Terrence McGirr, who was the last before the appointment of Rev. J. A. Stillinger, to take charge of Sportsman's Hall and Blairsville. The congregation of S. S. Simon's and Jude's Church was organized in the year 1829, when two lots of ground were purchased, bearing the numbers on the plan 241 and 243; in size 120x150 feet, situated at the corner of Campbell street and Coal lane.

This land was paid for in full on February 8th, 1830, when it was conveyed to John Brown and John Campbell, of the borough of Blairsville, by Robert Brown and Ann his wife, of the borough of Greensburg. It was transferred by John Brown and John Campbell to the first trustees of the congregation February 3d, 1831, viz: John Campbell, William Bradley, Thomas Shannon, Thomas Donnelly and John W. Brown. By these gentlemen it was transferred to Rt. Rev. F. P. Kenrick, Bishop of Philadelphia, December 9th, 1831.

The arrangement was made a condition on which the Bishop sent a priest to take charge of the congregation. A subscription was taken up in the year 1829, for the purpose of erecting a new church. The following names appear on the list: John Campbell, John W. Brown, Patrick O'Donnell, James Cantwell, John Schrosk, Hugh Harkins, Thomas McCullough, Thomas McFarland, Richard B. McCabe, Mark Graham, John McMahan, Peter McMahan, Lewis Mittinger, Michael Duras, Prosper Howard, Benjamin Crissman, David Mahan, John McAfee, John McMullen, Meredith Reed, Edward Shevlin, sr., Elizabeth Emerson, James McDermott, Con. Johnston, Wm. McAfee, Samuel McAnulty, James Murry, John Boland, Edward Laughlin, P. Duffy, Thomas Brown, A. Richards, James P. Johnston, Stewart Davis, Wm. P. Sterrett, Joseph McMasters, Thomas Lindsy, John Sheriden, Lawrence McMullen, Daniel Short, Christopher Hughes, sr., James D. McGill, Hugh Curran, John Short, George Miller, John Conway, Hugh Conway, James McGuire, John McCarty, Dennis O'Neil, James P. Donnelly, John Flowers, John Connor, Edw. Davis, William Flowers, Thomas McCaffrey, John Garrigan, James G. Brown, Rodger Meeching, Daniel O'Neil, Anthony Loftus, George Glass, Michael McKeever, Thomas Donnelly, Henry Rentzel, Jacob Burgoon, Cornelius Campbell, Rev. Thomas Heyden, Mathias Blake, Michael Henry, Charles O'Rourke, William Blakeley, Michael Leyden, Michael Kelly, Jane Renney, John Kerboy, Bernard Ferrier, Michael Brawly, John Walsh, Peter Short, L. S. Waterman, D. McKaley, James Haney, Daniel Gilmartin. There is also a "list No. 2," exhibiting the names of those who subscribed and paid since the settlement of March 11, 1830. This list was made for the purpose of finishing the church, and to pay the debt due by the congregation. The managers were William Bradley, Thomas Shannon, John Campbell, Thomas Donnelly and John W. Brown. There was also a subscription taken up at Bolivar for the benefit of the church in May, 1831, by Wilson Knott, Esq., superintendent of the canal. The full amount of subscription was $676.11; the cost of ground $85.00; of erection of church $1,244.17. The number of Easter communicants, the first year after the formation of the congregation was 180 representing about 300 souls. The number increased every year till in 1840 it reached 310.

The dedication of the church took place October 28, 1830, the feast of S. S. Simon and Jude. The Rt. Rev. F. P. Kennick blessed it, assisted by Rev. John Hughes. Fr. Stillinger's appointment to the pastorship immediately followed, and on the Sunday of Advent, 1830, (November 28,) he entered upon the discharge of his duties.

THE NEW CHURCH.

As the congregation had increased to such an extent that a larger church was needed, a new one was erected. The ground was opened and the foundation laid in 1841, work commencing in May of that year, and the building was completed by July or August, 1842, and was dedicated to the service of God on the 2d of October, by Very Rev. Michael O'Connor, D. D., V. G. Doctor O'Connor preached in the afternoon; Rev. Thomas Heyden in the forenoon.

The contract was let to Christopher McCaffrey, of Blairsville, for the sum of $5,800, the amount of his bid. Some trouble arising between the contractor and the church committee about extra work, it was referred to the courts for decision, and judgment was in Mr. McCaffrey's favor for $1,204.67, which made the whole cost of the church $7,004.67. The architect was Patrick Cunningham, of Pittsburgh. The church committee consisted of D. H. Barr, Esq., John McLaughlin, William Maher, John S. Watterson and George Miller. The church stands on grounds adjoining that of the old church; its general style is Gothic, is 90 feet long, 48 feet wide, and 25 feet high, and will accommodate about 600 persons. It took about eight or ten years to pay off the entire debt. The paintings, which are a marked feature in our church, were put up in the years 1858–9, and were painted in Munich, Germany.

The school building was erected about the year 1855. It was 50 by 30 feet in size.

On the 19th day of September, 1873, Rev. J. H. Stillinger died, and was succeeded by Rev. E. M. McKeever on the 22d of September, same year.

The convent was erected in 1872. It is about forty feet square, and has fourteen rooms. It is occupied by the Sisters of Charity who teach the parochial schools. When Rev. E. M. McKeever took charge, the church committee was composed of Messrs. James S. Layton, James Crate, Thomas Geary and Frederick Hughes. There was also a special committee who took charge of the convent building, composed of Messrs. William Maher, Patrick Maher, Patrick McBride, John B. Bonner and John K. Henry. There was a debt of $3,000 against the convent when Rev. E. M. McKeever took charge of affairs, which was principally due the carpenters. The whole cost of the building was about $9,000. In the year 1875 the church was frescoed and newly painted. During the summer of the same year an addition of about 20 feet was made to the schoolhouse, and over the whole length of the building a fine hall was erected. These improvements, together with a great many repairs that had to be made on the property, cost about $9,000. The present debt of the church is between $6,000 and $7,000.

The number of communicants in 1874, the first year after Fr. McKeever's arrival, was about 500, representing about 900 souls. During the hard times of the panic, the congregation remained at about the same figures.

The graveyard, back of the church, consisting of about two and one-half acres, was purchased about 1860.

HISTORY OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCHES IN THE NORTHERN PART OF INDIANA COUNTY.

Isaac Johns, from Butler county, visited the German settlement in North Mahoning township, in the year 1843, and preached several times for the people in private houses. The first service was preached in John Piffer's house, and afterwards in the houses of John Reoder and Martin Zirkel. Isaac Johns being only a local preacher, could not attend to the work properly. He therefore notified Revs. Simon Heis and —— Howard, who visited the new appointment.

Late in the winter of 1843, the first congregation was organized under the pastoral supervision of Simon Heis. It then consisted of John Piffer, Eva Piffer, Martin Zirkel, Catharine Zirkel, John Reoder, Catharine Reoder, Andrew Piffer, Elizabeth Piffer, and Margaret Piffer.

In the spring of the year 1844, the congregation was supplied in connection with other appointments located in Jefferson and Armstrong counties by Revs. Rishel and Trubey. When they arrived they found the little congregation actively engaged in church work, holding prayer-meetings and class-meetings and visiting among their German countrymen. During the year the following list of members were added to the congregation: Philip Sutter and wife, Jacob Sutter and wife, Nicholas Loos and wife, John Beam and wife, Conrad Zener and wife, and Elizabeth Feitt. After the above addition was made to the church the members went to work at once to make preparation for the erection of a house of worship.

In March, 1845, Jacob Rank and G. W. Cupp were sent by Conference to serve the charge. Under the administration of Jacob Rank the church was completed during the year. The house was built half a mile northeast of Covode, in North Mahoning township, on a lot of land then owned by Martin Zirkel. The church edifice is a plain log building 24x24, and was at first seated with slabs, but later was furnished with more modern pews. The house at present has quite an ancient appearance, but is still used as a house of worship by a small congregation, who worship exclusively in the German language. Five of the original members still remain, but the membership has decreased to thirteen. Andrew Piffer, one of the original members, is class leader, and Jacob Feitt is exhorter. Philip Sutter and C. C. Sutter are the trustees.

In 1846, Rev. Sill and Rev. Brown were sent by Conference to serve the congregation, which was then attached to other appointments, and was called Mahoning circuit. The circuit then comprised all the appointments of the Evangelical Association in the counties of Indiana, Jefferson and Armstrong.

In 1847, Rev. Sill was again returned to the charge, with C. Lindaman as his colleague.

In 1848, Rev. George Dellinger and J. Weikel served the circuit; in 1849, George Dellinger was returned to the charge, with Rev. Kelly as his colleague, and in 1850, Daniel Long succeeded Dellinger and Kelly.

Jacob Rank served the work in 1851, and in 1853 H. Hample; in 1854, B. L. Miller; in 1855, George Dull; in 1857, J. M. Zirkel; in 1858, John Piffer; in 1860, A. R. Teats; in 1861, J. H. Shaffer and J. J. Bernhart.

Under the administration of J. H. Shaffer, a new church edifice was erected in Canoe township. The society was a branch of the Log Church congregation. The church is a plain frame building, 30 by 35 feet. It was formally dedicated as the "Salem Church of the Evangelical Association" by the Rev. George Piffer. The congregation at present has a membership of ninety-three members. It supports a Sunday school; the average attendance is fifty. The northern class of this congregation also conducts a Sunday school in a schoolhouse near Mr. Larry McQuown's, which has an average attendance during the summer of forty scholars.

The officers of this congregation are as follows: Class leaders—Absalom Dehaven and Daniel Stirer. Exhorters—Emanuel Rishel and Charles Mackel. Trustees—Daniel Stiver, Chas. Hefflich, Mathias Smith, Christian Rishel and Martin Wineberg. The services are conducted both in the German and English languages.

In 1862, the work was served by Jacob Honecker, and under his administration the circuit built a parsonage in the village of Marchand, which the minister in charge of the work occupies. The circuit was then supplied as follows: In 1863–4, Christian Stauffer; 1865, L. B. Demmies; in 1867, John Piffer, and in 1868, Henry Rhoads. During the conference year beginning in March, 1868, and ending in March, 1869, the society in the vicinity of Marchand built the Evangelical church in Marchand. The building committee consisted of John Piffer, John Bean and Philip Enterlein. The first board of trustees consisted of John Gall, John Beam, John Piffer, John Dorn and Conrad Zener. With successful management and incessant labor, the work was pushed to successful completion in November, 1869. The church is a frame building, 38 by 56 feet, and cost $3,000. It has a well-proportioned steeple and a fine sounding bell. On the 14th of September, 1869, the church was formally dedicated by Bishop J. J. Escher, of Chicago. Illinois, as the "Emanuel's church of the Evangelical Association." The pastor, Henry Rhoads, and congregation, had a just cause for being grateful for their success.

In 1870, G. Foch took charge of the work and served it two years. In 1872, he was succeeded by N. Yoder and W. D. Ordtz; in 1873, J. Vogel and S. Millison served the charge; in 1874, J. S. Seip; in 1875–6. G. Foch was again seated in the circuit. During the conference session of 1875, the name of "Mahoning circuit" was changed to "Marchand station." In the years 1877–8, J. Dick served the work, and in March, 1879, Theodore Bach took charge of the work, and is the present incumbent. The congregation that meets in Marchand church numbers seventy-five members. The worship is conducted in the German and English languages. The congregation supports a Sunday school, which is in a thrifty condition. During the summer an organ was purchased for the school. The schoo has an average attendance of 60 scholars. Its present officers are: Superintendent, John Piffer; Secretary, J. J. Gall; Treasurer, John Rener; Librarian, John Kohlepp. The church officers are: Theodore Bach, pastor; leader of the German class, John Piffer; exhorter, John Beam; leader of the English class, John Zener; exhorter, J. W. Piffer; trustees, John Dorn, John Piffer, John Beam, Conrad Zener and John Zener.

The following ministers have served as Presiding Elders on the charge since its organization: Revs. — Longsdorf; M. Smedlinger, J. Rank, G. W. Cupp, J. Weikel, J. D. Hollinger, G. S. Domer, J. J. Bernhart, and J. A. Grimm. John Bishop, a member of the log church congregation, entered the ministry in the year 1849, and was sent to Bedford county, where he died during the year. George Piffer, also a member of the same congregation, entered the ministry about twenty-five years ago, and is at present one of the presiding elders of the Kansas conference. J. M. Zirkel and John Piffer also served a number of years in the itinerant ministry in the Pittsburgh conference. The former has retired, and is how living in Freedom, Allegheny county, Pa., and the latter has also retired from the active work, and is living in Marchand, Indiana county.

THE MECHANICSBURG EVANGELICAL CHURCH OF NORTH AMERICA.

The first meetings in the village were held in 1822, and the congregation was organized in the same year, at the house of Nicholas Enders. The original members were: Nicholas Enders, his wife Elizabeth Enders, George Enders, Jacob Enders, Mary Enders, and Susan Enders, all of the same family; George Lowmaster, his wife Magdalena Lowmaster, and daughter H. A. Lowmaster.

The first church was built in or about the year 1840, and was called the "Log Church." The second was erected in 1858, and was styled the "Valley Church." The present edifice in Mechanicsburg is a new and substantial structure.

Jacob Baumgartner and Joseph Long served as the first preachers for only one year. In the second year J. Deholf and T. Buck were the pastors. The present minister is S. Milliron, who succeeded Joseph Porcth.

The first class leader was N. Enders, and the second John Overdorff. The Sabbath school from the earliest period was connected with the church, and was at first held in private houses.

The circuit of which the Mechanicsburg church is a part, comprises three churches, three Sabbath schools, and seven appointments—all situated in Indiana county.

INDIANA CIRCUIT—EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

This charge was organized by the Rev. Joseph Portch in the year 1877, and then consisted of two appointments with a membership of nineteen persons. During the fall of 1877 a revival took place which greatly enhanced the interests of the denomination. The circuit now consists of six appointments, one being situated in Indiana town, one in White township, two in Cherry Hill township, one in Rayne township, and one in Armstrong township. During the pastorate of Rev. J. Portch two churches have been built with a debt of about $150.00, which is all covered by good subscriptions. Three Sabbath schools are in connection with the work, numbering 175 scholars. The entire membership now consists of one hundred and forty.

THE BRETHREN; GERMAN BAPTISTS—(Tunkers or Dunkers.)

All the Brethren churches in America, are the offspring of one organized at Schwardzenau, Germany, in 1708, consisting of seven souls, six of whom had been bred Presbyterians; and one, Lutheran; not one of these knew there was a Baptist in the world. They increased rapidly, spreading to other places, but persecution drove them, some to Holland, others to Creyfelt, and the mother church moved from Schwardzenau to Serustervin, in Freizland, and from thence about twenty families, with Peter Becker (Baker) as leader, imigrated to America in 1719. Landing in Philadelphia, in not the best spirit of brotherly love, owing to difficulties among them in transit, a portion only settled at Germantown, while the others dispersed to Skippeck, Oley, Conestoga, and elsewhere. Thus seperated they grew cold in religious service, but in the year 1722 Peter Becker, Johan Gomery, Balser Gans, Henrich Trant and others, grieved and zealous for their religion, by their extortions in behalf of the cause, succeeded in a measure in restoring the lost interest, insomuch that a great revival was the result; new converts were baptized in the Wissahicon by Peter Becker, whom they delegated to the ministry.

The first converts were Martin Urner, Henry Landes, Frederich Long, with their wives, and John Mayl. A church was organized with seventeen constituent members and the seven converts to the faith, in all twenty-three, the first organized church of this kind in America. We subjoin the names of those who partook of the first "Love Feast and Holy Communion:" Peter Becker, Henrich Traut, Jeremiah Traut, Balser Traut, Henrich Holzople, Johannes Gomery, Stephen Koch, Jacob Koch, Johannes Hildebrand, Daniel Ritter, George Balser Gansz, Johannes Preisz, Johannes Kempfer, Magdalena Traut, Anna Gomery, Maria Hildebrand, Joanna Gansz, and the seven converts named.

This organization, the baptism, and Love Feast, were accomplished December 25th, 1723, at Germantown, Pa.

These people worked earnestly for about three years and organized many other societies during the year 1724, one at Coventry, Chester county, and another at Eprhrata,* Lancaster county, and others. After this time of earnest work the churches lapsed into a lukewarm state until 1729, when Alexder Mack, who had been the temporal head of the first church at Schwardzenau, being still persecuted, having fled to Creyfeld, thence to Holland, now with about thirty families migrated to Pennsylvania. This influx so encouraged their brethren that new zeal became general, and results of their labors were manifest. We find the record of establishment of new churches in part as follows: Oley,‡ 1732; Great Swamp, 1733; Arnwell, N. J., 1733; Cocolia, 1735; White Oak, 1736; Little Conawago, 1738, and Big Conawago, 1741.

There have schisms occurred, but the church has increased, extending its influence to all the States, and in 1870 numbered not less than 100,000 communicants.

MANOR CONGREGATION OF GERMAN BAPTISTS.

[From Sketch by Joseph Halsopple.]

This congregation embraces all members within an area bounded by the "Purchase Line," west by Mahoning road and

*A division occurred in this church in 1730, and the Ephrata society of Seventh Day Baptists grew out of it u der the leadership of Conrad Beissel.

‡Oley, nearly extinct now, 1879.

the road from Indiana to Blacklick, south by Blacklick creek, and eastward extends into Cambria county, without any definite line. The first meetings were conducted by elders Samuel Lidy, of Cambria county, and George Rairich, of Armstrong county. Elder Lidy had been elected to the ministry in 1825, and preached in Somerset county, and moved to this county about 1840; like most ministers of the brethren, labored on his farm during the week and visited his brethren, preaching for them, on Sundays, until his death in April, 1873. Among the pioneer members of this congregation were Mrs. Mary and Catharine Fyock, nee Hoffman.

The organization of the society was effected in 1843, at the house of John Soyster; the record of constituency now lost, but Elder Lidy was commissioned Bishop and Adam Helman and David Brown elected deacons, probably at the same time, for Mr. Helman was chosen for the ministry but two years later. John Soyster, a minister also, moved here from the east. Levi Fry was elected to the ministry in 1847, David Ober 1855, Samuel Brallier 1858, Joseph Halsopple 1866, Daniel Brallier 1868, Caleb Secrist 1873.

The present ministerial record is, Bishop, David Ober, advanced to this office on September 3d, 1871; Levi Fry, Joseph Halsopple, Daniel Brailler and Jacob W. Smouse, the last named moving here in 1879. The board of deacons consists of Emanuel Brallier, Jacob Fyock, George Wise, S. S. Cresswell, H. F. Burkebile, Isaac Secrist, Levi Good, Levi R. Brallier and Daniel H. Ruffner.

The membership in 1878 was near 180, but is reduced by removal to about 160, and the Sunday schools have an aggregate attendance of 150.

The first meetings of the congregation were in the houses of David Brown, Adam Gier and John Blickenderfer in Cherry Hill township, but since they have erected a house of worship at Manor, near Greenville, one at Purchase Line, Green township, one at Belsena, Cambria county, and have one in course of construction at Crooked creek, Payne township, and also some stations where services are held in school houses. These buildings are not large, but comfortable, erected at a cost of about seven hundred dollars each, and were built in the order named in the years 1856, 1870 and 1875. Bishop Lidy lived to see two of these completed. The tribute paid him by one who knew his worth is couched in the words "he was a good citizen, firm friend and devoted christian.

MONTGOMERY GERMAN BAPTIST CHURCH, GRANT TOWNSHIP.

The first meetings were held in 1843. The first minister was Joseph Shoemaker, who commenced in 1844 and continued till the organization of the church in 1858. George Rairigh, sen., was also among the early minsters. The church was organized at Cornelius Rowley's. The first members were: Samuel Spicher and wife, Joseph Spicher and wife, George Rairigh and wife, and Cornelius Rowley and wife.

The first deacons were Samuel Rairigh and Henry Spicher. The present deacons are Samuel Rairigh, George B. Spicher, Jonathan Burkey, W. G. Walker and Daniel Rairigh.

Peter Beer was chosen to the ministry at the time of the organization of the church. The first communion meeting was held on the 24th of August, 1861, when J. W. Spicher was elected to the ministry. The present ministers are: Mark Minser, who located here in 1868, elder, and John W. Spicher, Crissman John, and George S. Rairigh, jr., assistants.

The first meeting house was built in Grant township in 1873, at an expense of $1,500. The present membership is eighty. The attendance at Sabbath school is about forty.

THE PINE GROVE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHURCH.

The Pine Grove church of the Wesleyan Methodist connection of America was organized near Gettysburg, by Rev. R. S. Ensign, in 1848.

The following names composed the first organization: Samuel Rank, Mary Ann Rank, George Rank, Jesse Thomas and Sarah Thomas. All of them are now dead but George Rank, who still lives to be a useful member of the church, which at the present time has about twenty-four members.

This congregation has a good substantial church building, in which they meet statedly for public worship. The house and lot on which it stands are valued at about $1,500. There is also a good Sabbath school of about thirty scholars, of which George Rank is the superintendent.

In the organization of the Wesleyan Methodist churches of this county, Rev. R. S. Ensign, V. B. Jones, Benj. Longhead, Joseph Campbell and others participated, but since the Pine Grove circuit was organized, the following named ministers have succeeded each other on this circuit, from one to four or five years in their succession, as follows: F. D. Houlett, Benj. Longhead, Joseph Campbell, William Austin, James Spear, Thomas Burrows, E. J. Hays, A. T. Wolff and Henry Westlake, now in his second year.

DIXONVILLE CHURCH—PINE GROVE CIRCUIT.

This church was organized in May, 1855, with the following persons: George Buchanan, Thomas Longwill, Sarah Longwill, Rev. Joseph Campbell, Catharine Campbell, James Baker, Sister Baker, Rev. F. D. Houlett and Hannah Houlett. These composed the first organization, most of whom are still living to buffet with the realities of time, and some of them patiently waiting the near approach of the realities of eternity. I heard Sarah Longwell, who has numbered her fourscore years, say on last Sabbath, in view of the future, "all is well."

They have a comfortable church, built in 1858, worth, including the lot on which it stands, about $800, and the circuit parsonage is there, worth, including the lot on which it is situated, $600.

The church numbers about forty members, and the Sabbath school about forty scholars. John Longwell is the superintendent.

THE MANOR CHURCH, PINE GROVE CIRCUIT,

Of the Wesleyan Methodist connection of Indiana county, was organized about 1856, by Rev. Benjamin Longhead. The following named persons composed the first organization: Giles Stephens, Agnes Stephens, Thomas W. Stephens, Anne E. Stephens, James Stephens, Nancy Stephens, Elizabeth Fetterman, Jacob Craig, Susannah Craig, Catharine Craig, William Craig, and Margaret Lydick.

The present number of members of this church is about 35. The house where they meet for religious worship is known as the "Rich Hill" schoolhouse. Their Sabbath school numbers about thirty scholars. J. R. Baird is superintendent.

THE SPRUCE CHURCH, PINE GROVE CIRCUIT,

Was organized by Rev. Joseph Campbell, about 1862, as a mission, and was afterwards connected with the circuit, under his labors.

The members of the first organization were Jacob Craig, Susannah Craig, Catharine Craig, Martha Craig, John Myers, Rosanna Myers, Hannah Myers, Catharine Bowers, Henry Bowers, Eliza Bowers, Rachel Fetterman, John Fisher and Eliza Fisher.

At the present time they number about thirty members. They have a plain little frame church to worship in, worth, including the lot, six or seven hundred dollars. An interesting Sabbath school numbering fifty-two scholars is connected with the congregation. David Sommerville is the superintendent.

There were some organizations in the south and west part of the county at one time, which by death and removals have become disorganized. For this reason their numbers are not reported.

If after reading this short sketch of the origin and present condition of the Wesleyan Methodist connection of Indiana county, the reader should be disposed to inquire why they had not prospered better, the answer is that while they have prospered in proportion to their numbers, as well as those around them, they have had to contend with many disadvantages, such as secret societies, the Episcopacy, etc., as those have not to do who admit these things into the Church.

In conclusion, the Wesleyan Methodist connection have succeeded from a few ministers at the organization at Utica, N. Y., in 1843, to hundreds of ministers in twenty already organized annual conferences.

NEBO CALVINISTIC METHODIST CHURCH

Of Green township, near Kimmel Postoffice, was erected by the Calvinistic Methodists in 1867. It is a plank structure. It was dedicated by Rev. William Harrison.

The society was organized in 1842, with fifteen members, and till the erection of the church the services were held in school houses.

Their first minister was Rev. David T. Lewis: His successors were: Revs. John Williams, Morgan E. Ellis, William Harris and John I. Hughes.

The first deacon was William Thomas. Richard Williams, Robert Roberts, Thomas Jones, Thomas Williams, Robert Norris and Edward Jones have been deacons of the congregation.

There is no settled pastor. Occasional services are held by visiting ministers or the voluntary action of some of the members.

BETHESDA CHURCH, INDEPENDENT AND PRESBYTERIAN,

Near Pine Flat, Green township, was erected in 1842 by the joint efforts of the Independents and Presbyterians, each subscribing half of the expense and performing half of the labor.

The first pastor of the Independents was Rev. John Williams. Among the first members were: John Roberts, Thomas T. Thomas, Hugh Williams, Robert Devans, Hugh Perry and their wives. Only three of the original members are now living, viz.: Thomas, Perry, and the latter's wife.

The first Presbyterian minister was Rev. John P. Kennedy. For several years this organization was served by supplies. Rev. Sloan, of Greenville, is their present pastor. The congregation is small. The old church is still used.

HISTORY OF THE "CHURCH OF CHRIST," AT PINE FLAT.

The Church of Christ, at Pine Flat, was organized by Elders James B. Pyatte and James Dorsie, January 2, 1856, the members thereof unanimously agreeing to take Christ as their "Prophet, Priest and King," and the Bible as their only rule faith and practice in all things relating to the religion of Jesus Christ. Said church was organized with seven members, (but had immediate accessions until it numbered twenty-six). It thereupon appointed Daniel Williams and P. J. Arthur, elders, and J. W. Williams, clerk. The church building was erected in 1858 at a cost of about $1,200. The church has sustained a regular pastor about one-half the time since its organization. These were James B. Pyatte, George Lobengier, D. M. Kinter, Amos Hutton and W. William Griggsby, and it has been visited by many others, viz: Festus Tibbott, Benjamin Davis, L. R. Norton, Andrew Burns, Alinson Wilcox, Benjamin Franklin, S. P. Miller, John Ellis, et al., some of whom have labored frequently for said church. The present officers are: Pastor, Neal S. McCallum, elders, J. W. Williams and P. J. Arthur; deacons, Hugh Perry and Stephen B. Griffith; clerk, J. W. Williams.

The church sustains also a very interesting and active Lord's Day school, with a good attendance, averaging probably forty names. Sabbath school officers—Superintendent, Alonzo Sides; treasurer, Isaac Griffith; librarian, W. H. Perry; secretary, Miss J. B. Grumbling.

Present church membership of Pine Flat church, 75. There are five other organizations in the county, namely: "Sample Run," "Homer City," "Purchase Line," "Smithport" and "Brush Run," the history of which we are unable to give at present.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

ACT TO ERECT THE COUNTY—OFFICIAL LIST AND TABLES.

FORMATION OF TOWNSHIPS.*

ARMSTRONG was formed from Wheatfield township. First assessment noted in 1785.

Banks was formed from Canoe township in 1868.

Blacklick was formed from Armstrong township in 1807.

Brush Valley was formed from Wheatfield township in 1835.

Buffington was formed from Pine township in 1867.

Burrell was formed from Blacklick township in 1853.

Canoe was formed from Montgomery township in 1847.

Centre was formed from Armstrong township in 1807.

Cherry Hill was formed from Green and Brush Valley townships in 1834.

Conemaugh was formed from Armstrong township. First record we note in 1803.

Grant was formed from Montgomery township in 1868.

Green was formed from Wheatfield township in 1816.

Mahoning was formed from that part of the county taken from Lycoming county in 1803. The first assessment is dated in 1807.

East Mahoning was formed from Mahoning township in 1846.

West Mahoning was formed from Mahoning township in 1846.

North Mahoning was formed from Mahoning township in 1846.

South Mahoning was formed from Mahoning township in 1846.

Montgomery was formed from Mahoning township in 1834.

Pine was formed from Wheatfield township in 1850.

Rayne was formed from Washington and Green townships in 1845.

Washington was formed from Armstrong township in 1807.

Wheatfield originally embraced all that part of Westmoreland county north of the Conemaugh river. The first assessment is dated in 1779.

East Wheatfield was formed from Wheatfield township in 1859.

West Wheatfield was formed from Wheatfield township in 1859.

White was formed from three miles around the borough of Indiana in 1843.

Young was formed from Blacklick and Conemaugh township in 1830.

EARLY ELECTION PLACES—1885.

"The election for that portion of Westmoreland county north of the Conewaugh river, being the first district, shall be held at the dwelling-house of Samuel Dickson." (Laws of Pa., vol. 3, p. 90.)

*These dates, etc., were furnished by Col. E. Page, County Surveyor,

1792—"The freemen of the first district of Westmoreland county shall hold their election at the house of William Neal, Armstrong township. (Laws of Pa., vol. 4., p. 127.)

1802—"The electors residing within Wheatfield and Fairfield township, Westmoreland county, shall hold their general election at he house of Richard Dinsey, in the town of Armagh." (Vol. 6, p. 238.)

1807—"Armstrong, Washington and Centre township, in the county of Indiana, be and the same are hereby erected into a separate election district, and the electors of the township aforesaid shall hold their general elections at the house now occupied by Peter Sutton, in the town of Indiana, or at such other house in town as the commissioners of said county shall direct." (Vol. 8, p. 356.)

"Black Lick township at the house of Patrick McGee."

"Conemaugh township at the house of John Marshall."

"Mahoning township at the house of James Bready, sr."

1808—"Armstrong townshp at the house of David McCulloch."

MEMBERS OF THE ASSEMBLY—REPRESENTATIVES.

1803 to 1808, James McComb; 1808 to 1809, James Sloan; 1809 to 1815, James McComb; 1815 to 1816, David Reed; 1816 to 1818, James M. Kelly and Joshua Lewis; 1818 to 1819, James M. Kelly and Samuel Houston; 1819 to 1820, Robert Orr, jr., and Samuel Houston; 1820 to 1822, Robert Orr, jr., and Robert Mitchell; 1822 to 1823, John Taylor and Robert Mitchell; 1823 to 1825, John Taylor and Joseph Rankin; 1825 to 1826, David Lawson and Joseph Rankin; 1826 to 1827, David Lawson and Thomas Johnson; 1827 to 1828, David Lawson and Joseph Rankin; 1828 to 1829, Robert Mitchell and Joseph Rankin; 1829 to 1830, David Lawson and Joseph Rankin; 1830 to 1831, Robert Mitchell; 1831 to 1833, William Houston; 1833 to 1834, James M. Stewart; 1834 to 1836, William Banks; 1836 to 1838, James Taylor; 1838 to 1839, William McCaran, jr.; 1839—Allen N. Work; 1840 to 1841, John Cummins; 1842 to 1843, John McEwen; 1844 to 1845, John McFarland; 1846 to 1847, William C. McKnight; 1848 to 1851, William Evans; 1852 to 1855, Alex. McConnell; 1856 to 1857, R. B. Moorhead; 1858, John Bruce; 1859 to 1860, A. W. Taylor; 1861 to 1862, James Alexander; 1862 to 1863, Richard Graham; 1863 to 1864, J. W. Huston; 1865 to 1866, George E. Smith; 1867, W. C. Gordon; A. W. Kimmell; 1868, W. C. Gordon; 1868, R. H. McCormick; 1869 to 1870, D. M. Marshall; 1871, Thomas McMullin; H. K. Sloan; 1872, Thomas McMullin; 1873 to 1874, Daniel Ramey; 1875, A. W. Kimmell; J. K. Thompson; 1876, A. W. Kimmell; J. K. Thompson; 1877, A. H. Fulton; Jacob Creps; 1878, A. H. Fulton; Jacob Creps; 1879, A. H. Fulton; John Hill.

MEMBERS OF THE ASSEMBLY—SENATORS.

1803 to 1815, James Brady; 1815 to 1819, John Reed; 1819 to 1822, Henry Allshouse; 1822 to 1825, Robert Orr, jun.; 1823 to 1830, Eben S. Kelly; 1830 to 1835, Robert Mechling; 1834 to 1838, Meek Kelly; 1839, Findley Patterson; 1841 to 1844, Wm. Bigler, of Clearfield; 1847, Wm. F. Johnston; 1850, Augustus Drum; 1851 to 1853, C. Myers; 1854 to 1856, Samuel S. Jamison; 1863, Harry White; 1864 to 1865, Thomas St. Clair; 1866 to 1874, Harry White; 1877 to 1879, Thomas St. Clair.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

1840, Albert G. Marchand, Westmoreland Co., Democrat; 1842 to 1844, Joseph Buffington, Armstrong Co., Whig, 1846, Alexander Irwin, Clearfield Co., Whig; 1848 to 1850, Alfred Gilmore, Butler Co., Democrat; 1852, Augustus Drum, Indiana Co., Democrat; 1854 to 1860, John Covode, Westmoreland Co., Republican; 1862 to 1864, J. L. Dawson, Fayette Co., Democrat; 1866, John Covode, Westmoreland Co., Republican; 1868 to 1870, H. D. Foster, Westmoreland Co., Democrat; 1872, A. W. Taylor, Indiana Co., Republican; 1874. George A. Jenks, Jefferson Co., Democrat; 1876 to 1878, Harry White, Indiana Co., Republican.

PRESIDENT JUDGES OF INDIANA COUNTY.

Hon, John Young, of Greensburg, Westmoreland county, 1806 to 1836; Hon. Thomas White, of Indiana, Indiana county, 1836 to 1847; Hon. Jeremiah M. Burrell, of Greensburg, June, 1847, to March, 1848; Hon. John C. Knox, of Tioga county, June, 1848, to December, 1850; Hon. Jeremiah M. Burrell, of Greensburg, December, 1851, December, 1855; Hon. Joseph Buffington, of Kittanning, Armstrong county, June, 1855, to April, 1871; Hon. James A. Logan, of Greensburg, June, 1871, to January, 1875; Hon. John P. Blair, of Indiana, January, 1875, to ——.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES, APPOINTED OR ELECTED.

1806, James Smith, Charles Campbell; 1818, Joshua Lewis. (Succeeded Smith); 1828, John Taylor; 1829, Andrew Brown; 1830, Samuel Moorhead, jr.; 1836, Robert Mitchell, M. D.; 1842, Meek Kelly, James McKennon; 1843, John Cunningham; 1845 Fergus Cannon; 1846, Joseph Thompson; 1849, James M. Stewart, M. D.; 1851 to 1856*, Peter Ditts, sr.; 1851 to 1861, Isaac M. Watt; 1856 to 1866, John K. Thompson, M. D.; 1861 to 1866, Peter Sutton; 1866 to 1871, T. B. Allison; 1866 to 1871, Joseph Campbell; 1871 to 1876, Peter Ditts, jr.; 1871 to February, 1874, James S. Nesbit, (resigned); February, 1874 to January 1st, 1875, William Irwin.

PROTHONOTARY, CLERK, ETC.

James McLain, 1806 to 1818. Also, Register and Recorder; John Taylor, 1818 to 1821; also, Register and Recorder; James McCahan, 1821 to 1824; Alexander Taylor, 1824 to 1828, also, Register and Recorder; William Banks, 1828 to 1833, also, Register and Clerk; R. B. McCabe, 1833 to 1836, also Register and Recorder; Thos. Laughlin, 1836 to 1839, and Janaury 4, 1839, to February 11; Fergus Cannon, February, 1839, to December, 1839; Robert Craig, December, 1839, to 1845; Alexander W. Taylor, 1845 to 1851; N. B. Loughrey, 1851 to 1854; John Myers, 1854 to 1857; J. R. Porter, jun., 1857 to 1860; E. P. Hildebrand, 1860 to 1866, John Lowry, 1866 to 1872; A. C. Boyle, 1872 to ——.

REGISTER AND RECORDER.

James Speer, 1821 to 1824, W. Douglass, 1836 to 1839, January 4, 1839, to February 11; Isaac M. Watt, 1839 to 1842, and January, 1847, to December, 1847; William McClaran, 1842 to 1845, and 1845 to 1847: David Peelor, December, 1847, to 1853; John H. Lichteberger, 1853 to 1862; A. L. McClusky, 1862 to 1868. W. R. Black, 1868 to 1874; David R. Lewis, 1874.

SHERIFFS OF INDIANA COUNTY.

Thomas McCartney, 1806 to 1809; Thomas Sutton, 1809 to 1812; Robert Robinson, 1812 to 1815; Thomas Sutton, 1815 to 1818; James Elliott, 1818 to 1821; Henry Kinter, 1821 to 1824; Clemence McGara, 1824 to 1827; James Gordon, 1827 to 1830; James Taylor, 1830 to 1833; Joseph Loughry, 1833 to 1836; James Kier, 1836 to 1839; William Evans, 1839 to 1842; David Ralston, 1842 to 1845; Simeon Truby, 1845 to 1848; Gawin Sutton, 1848 to 1851; John Mullen, 1851 to 1854; John Montgomery, 1854 to 1857; Joseph R. Smith, 1857 to 1860; A. P. Thompson, 1860 to 1863; James R. Dougherty, 1863 to 1866; Jacob Creps, 1866 to 1869; Henderson C. Howard, 1869 to 1872; James R. Dougherty, 1872 to 1875; William C. Brown, 1875 to 1878; Daniel Ansley, 1878.

*First election, 1851—office previously filled by appointment.

DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERALS.

The first record of the criminal courts that we find is that of the June sessions of 1817. Thomas Blair's name appears as the prosecuting attorney for the commonwealth. No evidence as to when he received his appointment or was sworn in. He seems to have held the office until—

March 9, 1819, when William H. Brackinridge, Esq., was sworn as deputy attorney for the United States for Indiana county, and also as deputy attorney general for the State of Pennsylvania.

September 13th, 1819. Henry Shippen, Esq., produced a deputation from Thomas Sergeant, Esq., attorney general of the commonwealth appointing him deputy attorney general for the county of Indiana and was sworn according to law.

Thomas White seems to have been the incumbent of the office but there is no record of his commission.

March 25, 1822. W. R. Smith, Esq., prosecuting attorney, not appearing, Mr. Canon was appointed by the court. He was also appointed at the June sessions. Smith receipts for fees at September session, 1822, from December sessions, 1822. Thomas White receipts, attorney general fees, but this is the only evidence that he held the office.

March 23, 1824. Ephraim Carpenter, Esq., was sworn in as prosecuting attorney for the commonwealth, being deputized by Fred Smith, attorney general of the commonwealth. He seems to have held office continually up to 1836, but there is no record of his re-appointment or his taking the oath of office.

William Banks, Esq., was sworn as deputy attorney general for Indiana county March 28, 1836.

Augustus Drum, Esq., was sworn in as deputy prosecuting attorney for the county of Indiana on the 25th of March, 1839.

Thomas C. McDonald, Esq., was appointed prosecuting attorney by the court at the June session, 1842. Also at the September and December sessions of the same year and the March session, 1843.

June 26, 1843. Thomas Sutton, Esq., presents his credentials as deputy attorney for this county and is sworn accordingly.

September 25, 1844. Court appoints Thomas C. McDowell to prosecute on behalf of the commonwealth.

And now, to-wit: March 24, 1845, John Potter, Esq., comes into court and presents his commission as prosecuting attorney of this county and is sworn accordingly.

June 22, 1846. Ephraim Carpenter, Esq., appointed prosecuting attorney for the commonwealth this session.

September 28, 1846. The court appoints Pliney Kelly, Esq., to prosecute for the commonwealth.

At December session, Ephraim Carpenter receipts for fees, but there is no other evidence of his appointment.

March 22, 1847. Ephraim Carpenter appointed by the court as prosecuting attorney. Also at June and September sessions of same year.

December 27, 1847. Commission from Benjamin Chapney, attorney general for the commonwealth, appointing Orville H. Brown. Esq., deputy attorney general for the county, read and oath of office administered.

March 27, 1848. Ephraim Carpenter appointed to prosecute for commonwealth the present session.

June 26, 1848. Commission by Benjamin Chafney, attorney general, appointing Ephraim Carpenter, Esq., deputy attorney general for Indiana county, read in open court.

September 25, 1848. Alex. Taylor sworn as deputy attorney general of Indiana county.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Edmund Page, 1850 to1853; Henry B. Woods, 1856 to 1859; John Lowry, 1862; Daniel S. Porter, 1865 to 1868; William R. Allison, 1871; Samuel Cunningham, 1874; M. C. Watson, 1877.

JURY COMMISSIONERS.

1867, I. M. Watt; 1867, Robert Crawford; 1870, A. L. McCluskey; 1870, James Bailey; 1873, James P. Carter; 1873, John Robertson; 1876, W. H. Coleman; 1876, Francis Laird; 1879, William Shields; 1879, Nathaniel Nesbit.

AUDITOR.

1839, Abraham Davis; 1840, Thomas Laughlin; 1841, Alexander White; 1842, Thompson McCrea, for 2 years; 1842, Fullerton Woods; 1843, John Clark; 1844, John McNiel; 1845; Robert Elder; 1846, James H. Young; 1847, Edmund Page, sr.; 1848, John Pollock; 1849, Isaac Kinter; 1850, Cornelius Lowe; 1851, James C. Dill; 1852, Elijah Criswell; 1853, Abraham Wolf; 1854, J. H. Allison; 1855, William Riddle; 1856, Samuel W. Drips; 1857, Robert Hughes; 1858, Josiah Shields; 1859, John L. Work, 3 years; 1859, Hugh Cunningham, 2 years; 1860, Samuel Wilson; 1861, John Brink; 1862, John Wachol; 1863, Thomas R. Lukehart; 1864, Samuel H. Thompson, 3 years; 1864, John Brink, 1 year; 1865, Samuel McCartney; 1865, William Shields, 2 years; 1866, Samuel W. Drips; 1867, William S. Davidson; 1868, Joseph Griffith; 1868, R. H. Armstrong, 2 years; 1869, A. J. Hamilton; 1870, Samuel M. Hazlett; 1871, H. P. Lewis; 1872, James Ansley; 1873, Joseph Griffith; 1874, W. G. Stewart; 1875, J. H. Dix; 1875, John G. Robinson; 1875, J. Gamble Fleming; 1878, Jacob S. Stuchell; 1878; J. K. McElhoes; 1878, Marshall Shields.

TREASURER.

1811–12, James McKnight; 1813, Thomas Sutton; 1815–16, John Taylor; 1817–18, William Lucas; 1820–21, William Douglas; 1822–23, Alexander Taylor; 1824 to 1826, William Trimble; 1827 to 1829, William Lucas; 1830 to 1832, Blaney Adair; 1833 to 1835, James Todd; 1836 to 1838, I. M. Watt; 1839–41, W. W. Caldwell; 1842, William Bruce; 1843, W. Douglass; 1845, William W. Caldwell; 1847, Samuel R. Rankin; 1849, William W. Caldwell; 1851, James Hood; 1853, Garvin Sutton; 1855, Thomas McCandless; 1857, John Brink; 1859, Chas. N. Swoyer, elected but died before taking office; 1859, William Earl, appointed; 1861, James Moorhead; 1863, W. H. Coleman; 1865, John A. Stewart; 1867, George W. McHenry; 1869, Noah Lohr; 1871, James M. Sutton; 1873, George H. Johnston; 1875, John Ebey; 1878, John Truby.

COMMISSIONERS.

William Clarke, 1806 and 1807; James Johnson, 1806; Alexander McLean, 1806; William Clark, 1808; Alexander McLean, 1808; William Clarke, 1809; Rev. John Jamison, 1809; James McNight, 1810; Rev. John Jamison, 1810; Robert Robison, 1810; Robert Robison, 1811; Joshua Lewis, 1811; Rev. John Jamison, 1811; Robert Robison, 1812; Joshua Lewis, 1812; Joseph Moorhead, 1812; Francis Boals, 1813; Joshua Lewis, 1813; Joseph Moorhead, 1813; Joseph Moorhead, 1814; Francis Boals, 1814; Alexander McLain, 1814; Alexander McLain, 1815; Francis Boals, 1815; Gawin Sutton, 1815; Gawin Sutton, 1816; Alexander McLain, 1816; Thomas Sharp, 1816; Gawin Sutton, 1817; Thomas Sharp, 1817; John Smith, 1817; Thomas Sharp, 1818; John Smith, 1818; Thomas Laughlin, 1818; Thomas Laughlin, 1819; John Smith, 1819; Joseph Henderson, 1819; William Clarke, 1820; John Smith, 1820; Joseph Henderson, 1820; Jos. Henderson, 1821; Wm. Clarke, 1821; Clemence McGara, 1821; Clemence McGara, 1822; Stewart Davis, 1822; William Clarke, 1822; Stewart Davis, 1823: Clemence McGara, 1823; Alexander Pattison, 1823; Alexander Pattison, 1824; Jas. Gordon, 1824; Stewart Davis, 1824; James Gordon, William W. Caldwell, Alexander Pattison, 1825; James Gordon, James Todd, W. W. Caldwell, 1826; Peter Dilts, W. W. Caldwell, Jas. Todd, 1827; Samuel Trimble, Peter Dilts, James Todd, 1828;

Samuel Trimble, Peter Dilts, Archibald Johnson, 1829; Samuel Trimble, Archibald Johnson, Gawin Sutton, 1830; Gawin Sutton, Archibald Johnson, James Lewis, 1831; Gawin Sutton, William Leard, 1833; James Lewis, Alexander McMullin, 1834; James McComb, William Laird, Alexander McMullin, 1834; James McComb, William Laird, Alexander McMullin, 1835; James McComb, James Lapsley, John Cummins, 1836; John Cummins, James Lapsley, Joseph McMasters, 1837; William Smith, John Cummins, Joseph McMasters, 1838; William Smith, Philip Rice, James Rhea, 1839; John Dick to his seat, October 20, in lieu of Smith; Philip Rice, James Rhea, John Dick, 1840; Philip Rice, James Rhea, John Dick, 1841, Charles Campbell took his seat November 2, in lieu of Dick; James Rhea, John Dick, Charles Campbell, 1842; Thomas Stewart took his seat October 24, in lieu of Rhea; John Dick, Charles Campbell, Thomas Stewart, 1843; John A. Jamison took his seat October 23, in lieu of Dick; Charles Campbell, Thomas Stewart, John A. Jamison, 1844; Alex. T. Moorhead took his seat in lieu of Stewart; Charles Campbell, John A. Jameson, Alex. T. Moorhead, 1845; Abraham Davis, November 3, took his seat in lieu of Campbell; John T. Jameson, Alex. T. Moorhead, Abraham Davis, 1846; November 2, Thomas Walker took his seat in lieu of Jameson; Alex. T. Moorhead, Abraham Davis, Thomas Walker, 1847; October 25, Jacob Gamble took Moorhead's seat; Abraham Davis, Thos. Walker, Jacob Gamble, 1848; October 14, Thomas Gibson took Abraham Davis's seat; Thomas Walker, 1849; Jacob Gamble, 1849; Thomas Gibson, 1849; Oct. 15th, John Lytle took Walker's seat. Jacob Gamble, 1850; Thomas Gibson, 1850; John Lytle, 1850. John Shields took Gamble's place October 21st. Thomas Gibson, 1851; John Lytle 1851; John Shields, 1851. November 3d Samuel H. Johnston took Gibson's place. John Lytle, 1852; John Shields, 1852; Samuel H. Johnston, 1852. October 25th Robert H. Armstrong took Lytle's place. John Shields, 1853; Samuel H. Johnston, 1853; Robert H. Armstrong, 1873. November 1st Moses T. Work took Shields' place. Samuel H. Johnston, Robert H. Armstrong, Moses T. Work, 1854. George Lowman took the place of Johnston. Robert H. Armstrong, Moses T. Work, George Lowman, 1855. October 17th John Gourley took Armstrong's place. Moses T. Work, George Lowman, John Gourley, 1856. David Henderson took Work's place October 29th. George Lowman, John Gourley, David Henderson, 1857. Thomas Davis took Lowman's place November 3d. John Gourley, David Henderson, Thomas Davis, 1858. A. L. McCluskey took Gourley's place October 25th. David Henderson, Thomas Davis, A. L. McCluskey, 1859. October 26th, William Johnston took Henderson's place. Thomas Davis, A. L. McCluskey, William Johnston, 1860. October 15th, Samuel Irwin took Davis' place. A. L McCluskey, William Johnston, Samuel Irwin, 1861. Andrew Shields took McCluskey's place November 12th. William Johnston, Samuel Irwin, Andrew Shields. 1862; Samuel Irwin, Andrew Shields, S. A. Allison, 1863; Andrew Shields, S. A. Allison, W. C. McCrea, 1864; S. A. Allison, W. C. McCrea, W. G. Stewart, 1865; W. C. McCrea, W. G. Stewart, R. Adams, 1866; W. G. Stewart, R. Adams, G. Shryock, 1867; Robert Adams, George Shryock, Elliott Ferguson, 1868; George Shryock, Elliott Ferguson, James T. Van Horn, 1869; Elliott Ferguson, James T. Van Horn, John S. Flemming, 1870; James T. Van Horn, John S. Flemming, Jacob Darr, 1871; John S. Flemming, Jacob Darr, James M. Work, 1872; Jacob Darr, Jas. M. Work, George W. Boadenhamer, 1873; James M. Work, George W. Broadenhamer, Samuel G. Miller, 1874; George W. Broadenhamer, Samuel G. Miller, Francis Mabon, 1875; Jeremiah Lomison, Frederick Cameron, Frederick Buterbaugh, 1876-7-8; John G. Robinson, A. P. Thompson, William Daugherty, 1879-80.

CLERKS TO COMMISSIONERS.

Alex. Johnson, for trustees of county, 1804; Paul Morrison, for trustees of county, 1805; James Riddle, for commissioners, 1806; James McNight, 1807; Daniel Stenard and James M. Biddle, 1808; Daniel Stenard, 1809-10; James McKnight, 1811; James M. Kelley, 1812-13; John Wilson and James Coulter-1814; John Wilson and John Taylor, 1815; Gawin Sutton and John Taylor, 1816; Daniel Stenard and Stewart Davis, 1817; Stewart Davis, 1818 to 1820; Robert Young, 1822-3; Ephraim Carpenter, 1824; Stewart Davis, 1825; William Banks, 1826 to 1828; John Johnston, 1829 to 1832; William Banks, 1833; Joseph J. Young, from 1824 to 1837; William M. Stewart, I. M. Watt and John Myers, 1838; Robert M. Gibson, from 1839 to 1840; A. W. Taylor, from 1841 to 1847; Edward Paige, 1848; J. H. Lichteberger, 1849 to 1852; George Shryock, from 1853 to 1861; George Shryock, from 1862 to 1864; W. R. Black, 1865 to 1869; James B. Work, 1870; W. H. Coleman, 1871-2; D. R. Lewis, 1873-4; J. T. Gibson, 1875 to 1878; J. P. St. Clair, 1879-80.

DISTRICT SURVEYORS, DEPUTY SURVEYORS, COUNTY SURVEYORS.

The District Surveyors, whose services extended over that part of Indiana county north of the old purchase line, were: James Hamilton, John Brodhead, James Johnston, James Potter and William P. Brady.

Those serving within the limits of the purchase of 1768 were: Joshua Elder, John Moore, Joseph L. Findley, Eonieu Williams, James Ross, Thomas Allison and Alexander Taylor.

Their successors were: John Taylor, 1815, also served as Surveyor General; Robert Young, 1818; Alexander Taylor, jr., 1819; Meek Kelly, 1821; John Taylor, 1825–1827; Meek Kelly, 1830–'33; Robert McGee, 1834; William Evans, 1836; Robert McGee, 1839; Thompson McCrea, 1850; David Peelor, 1856; William Evans, 1859: Edmund Paige, 1862; Thompson McCrea, 1865–'68; Edmund Paige, 1871–'77.

CORONERS.

Samuel Young, 1806; Joseph Turner, 1809; William Shields, 1812; James Loughrey, 1815; William Douglas, 1818; Peter Sutton, jr., 1821; James E. Cooper, 1824; Samuel George, 1827 to 1830; Samuel McCartney, 1833-36; William Henry, 1839; John McQuilkin, 1842; James Hood, 1845; Samuel Trimble, 1848; James McLain, 1851; J. W. Mahon, 1854; J. A. Jamison, 1857; J. I. Kelly, 1860; William Shields, 1863; Joseph Gilbert, 1868; John Clawson, 1869; William H. Coleman, 1872; Samuel A. Smith, 1875; Irvin McFarland, 1878.

ROLL OF ATTORNEYS TO 1859, AS REPORTED BY THE INDIANA REGISTER OF 1859.

John B. Alexander, Samuel S. Harrison, Samuel Massey, Daniel Stennard, Walter Forward, Samuel F. Riddle, James M. Kelley, Henry Baldwin, John Johnston, Wm. H. Brackenridge, Walter M. Denny, Ephraim M. Carpenter, John Williamson, Daniel M. Broadhead, Thomas White, Thomas R. Peters, George Canan, George Armstrong, James M. Riddle Samuel Guthry, Joseph Weighley, Paul Morrow, Alex. W. Foster, Beal Howard, John Maintain, Thomas Blair, A. Lawrence, Charles B. Seely, William M. Kennedy, Jacob M. Wise, Henry Shippen, John Y. Barclay, W. R. Smith, John Reid, R. B. McCabe, Henry G. Herron, George Carson, John Miles, J. McWilliams, Joseph H. Kuhne, W. F. Boon, George W. Smith, John Frances, Thomas Knox William Banks, Stewart Steel, Alexander McCalmont, Michael Dan McGehan, James Hepburn, Thomas Struthers. George Shaw, Charles S. Bradford, Joseph Buffington, James H. Devor, Joseph J. Young, H. D. Foster, Benjamin Bartholomew, Robert Brown, Martin Brainard, William M. Watson, Caleb A. Alexander, William B. Conway, Barnwell

D. Bassford, Joseph B. Musser, Michael Galliher, Richard Arthurs, John Fenton, John Brady, Darwin Phelps, Albert Merchand, John Myers, William M. Stewart, Samuel Johnston, John F. Beaver, Thomas Sutton, Alexander W. Taylor, Robert L Johnston, Michael Hasson, S. Hay, Edgar Cowan, James Nichols, Samuel A. Purviance, Jeremiah M. Burwell, Wilson Riley, Ephraim Buffington, A. L. Hamilton, B. Cornyn, T. C. McDowel, John Potter, James W. Johnston, Charles H. Heyer, P. C. Shannon, H. P. Laird, G. P. Reed, Alex. W. Taylor, S. Steel Blair, Wm. A. Todd, James C. Clark, Pliny Kelly, Joshua F. Cox, Wm. A. Campbell, Jackson Boggs, Mathew Taylor, Levi McElhose, Edward Hutchison, L. S. Cantwell, Edmund Paige John Crisswell, O. H. Brown, T. J. Coffey, John Stanard, Wm. Houston, jr., Richard Coulter, jr., Joseph Frantz, Samuel H. Tate, Samuel Sherwell, J. Alex. Fulton, David Barclay, John A. Willis, Robert Sutton, Edward S. Golden, Samuel Douglass, H. B. Woods, Hugh Weir, Thomas E. Morgan, G. W. Bonnen, Jacob Turney, Geo. M. Reed, Wm. H. Coulter, Charles Wyngard, Phineas M. Jenks, J. K. Coxson, Lewis M. Stewart, Harry White, Mathews Coleman Joseph M. Thompson, Martin R. Cooley, C. D. Steel, Edward J. Belch, William H. McKee, John Conrod, Alex. McKinney, Philip S. Noon, Benj. F. Lucas, James A. Getty, John McClaran, Silas M. Clark, John Campbell, T. J. McCullough, William Kittell, John T. Crawford, John K. Kalhoun.

CHAPTER XLIX.

TRAILS, PATHS, BLOCK-HOUSES, ROADS, ETC.

THE "KITTANNING TRAIL"—THE "KISKAMINATES PATH"—THE "CHENANGO TRAIL"—OTHER TRACES OF TRAILS OR PATHS—THE "LIGONIER AND PEHOLAND TRAIL," OR "LIGONIER AND COUGH-CHEATING PATH"—BRANCH PEHOLAND PATH—A BRANCH TRAIL FROM THE LIGONIER AND COUGH-CHEATING TRAIL—EARLY SURVEYS NOTED IN JOSHUA ELDER'S MEMORANDUM BOOK, IN WHICH ARE NOTED TRAILS, ETC.—BLOCK-HOUSES, STATIONS, OR PROMINENT FORTIFIED HOUSES—THE FIRST ROAD—EARLY COUNTY ROADS—STATE ROADS—THE KITTANNING TRAIL, WHICH PASSED FROM PHILADELPHIA VIA HARRIS' FERRY, FORT SHIRLEY, STANDING STONE, SHAWNEE CABINS, TWO LICKS, INDIANA, NEAR SHELOCTA, BLANKET HILL, TO THE "KITTANNING."

THE route from Harris' Ferry to Kittanning was as follows, viz..

From Harris' Ferry to George Croghan's, five miles.
To Kittanning Mountains, nine miles.
" Andrew Montour's, five miles.
" Tuscarora Hill, nine miles.
" Thomas Mitchell's Sleeping place, three miles.
" Tuscarora, fourteen miles.
" Cove Spring, ten miles.
" Shadow of Death, eight miles.
" Black Log, three miles, making sixty-six miles to the Point.

Here the road forks to Raystown (Bedford) and Frankstown.
To Aughwick (Fort Shirley), six miles.
" Jack Armstrong's Narrows, eight miles.
" Standing Stone, ten miles.

At each of the last places the path crossed the Juniata.
To next and last crossing of the Juniata, eight miles.
" Branch of Juniata, ten miles.
" Big Lick, ten miles.
" Frank's (Stephen's) Town, five miles.

To Beaver Dams, ten miles.
" Allegheny Hill, four miles.
" the Clearfields, six miles.
" John Hart's Sleeping place, on headwaters of the Susquehanna, on land owned by William Weakley, Susquehanna township, Cambria county, twelve miles.

To Large Lick, on the Susquehanna, in Cambria county, three miles above the Cherry Tree, nine miles.

To Levi Hollingsworth's survey, Green township, south of the Purchase Line in which said Path is noted by Thomas Smith, Surveyor, October 30, 1775, one and a half miles southeasterly from the Forks of the "Kittanning and Shenango Trails." These forks are on the lowest dividing ridge between the waters of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico.

The above named forks is where Col. Armstrong encamped in 1756, fifty miles from Kittanning. They are located on a tract of land warranted July 23, 1773, to Samuel Caldwell, and "are situate on the road leading from Frankstown to Kittanning, at the forks of the road, about four miles from Owen's Stamping Ground, including several Indian cabins in Westmoreland county. They were situated near a large spring on the lands now owned by Daniel Cameron and Isaac Craig's heirs, in Green township. The tract was patented July 2, 1776.

To Shawanese Cabins, Green township, twenty-four miles from Hart's Sleeping place. The tract immediately above these cabins shows the trail in the original survey. It was warranted in the name of Moses Bartram, and was surveyed July 10, 1787. The cabins were located in "the Shawanese Bottoms," and were called the "Spruce Camp or the Old Shawnee Cabins." The tract was on the south branch of Two Lick creek, about half a mile above the forks of Two Lick creek. It was warranted on the 27th of April, 1773, surveyed June 29th, and returned November 14th of that year.

To "Original Tract," in Green township, upon which the village of Diamondville is situated, the path passed very near the village.

To tracts warranted in the names of William Bedford, Thomas Wharton, John Martin and Thomas Canby.

To northwest corner of "Penn's Manor of Cherry Hill," in Cherry Hill township. The manor contained twelve hundred and two acres.

To tract warranted in the name of William Brown, near the village of Greenville, where "there were a number of warriors' marks on the Kittanning Path."

To tracts warranted in the names of Joshua Moore, James Bisham, James Rannells, Amos Lynex and Andrew Taylor. The Lynex land was surveyed October 3, 1788, and warranted October 4, 1786. The path passed on the hill about ninety-two rods south of the house of Samuel Ralston, the present owner. The Taylor land was surveyed March 17, 1790. The warrant was issued November 1, 1785. The trail is dotted through this tract for about a mile, and is called the "Armstrong Path."

To Shaver's or Shaffer's Sleeping Place,* three-quarters of a mile distant from the last named tract. This was situated near "Two Large Licks," about half a mile above the mouth of Ramsey's run. The two licks are located on a tract warranted in the name of Elijah Brown.

The trail now bears to the right of the site of Indiana town.

To tracts warranted in the name of Philip Walter, Jeremiah Williamson, David Williamson, Rev. John Smith, afterward owned by Conrad Rice and James McLain, "on both sides of the Kittanning path,"† (the patent was issued December 10, 1773). Here it passed by "Shaffer's," or "Shaver's spring," in the rear of William G. McElhaney's residence, in the borough of Indiana.

*Harris' Letters in History of Dauphin and other counties by Daniel Rupp.
†See Deed from Smith to Rice, printed in full.

To tracts warranted in the names of Charles Campbell and Fergus Moorhead.

To "Watt's Hill," Curry's run, down the same through the "Old Hunter homestead." Jacob Peelor's, "on the old Kittanning path," and "Gilpin Lands" owned by the Thomas families and others.

To William Armstrong's tract, situate on the waters of Crooked creek, "to include the crossings of the Kiskaminates and Kittanning paths." The warrant was dated March, 5, 1785. The survey was made May 15, 1785.

To Jacob Anthony's or "Anthony's Garden," "on the Kittanning path." Surveyed April 27, 1775, and "situated on a run that empties into the south side of Crooked creek, about a mile and a half from the crossing of the Kiskaminates and Kittanning paths, below and adjoining lands surveyed for Gilpin and Fisher in Westmoreland county."

To land now occupied by Andrew Wiggins, sixty rods above the present bridge, to the ridge to the right of the site of Shelocta, near the present residence of James S. Ralston, Armstrong county, passing "between Two Large Lick." This tract was surveyed to Hugh Espy, May 18, 1786, by warrant dated February 2, 1785, and "included two hundred and ninety-nine acres and allowance, situated on the forks of Crooked creek and Plum creek, including the old field*, in the county of Westmoreland.

To Blanket Hill, Armstrong county. This is situated on a tract surveyed to J. Vanderin, May 30, 1776, and lies on Blanket hill, six miles easterly of the Kittanning, on the old Kittanning path."

The "Kiskaminates path" left the Kittanning at the crossing on the aforenamed Armstrong tract, at a run called "Eighteen Mile," which was twelve miles from the "Two Large Licks," thence to "Ten Mile Lick," six miles.

To Kiscomettas Old Town on the creek, (Kiskeminitis) which runs into the Allegheny river, six miles down, almost as large as the Schuylkill, ten miles.

To "Chartiers landing on the Allegheny," eight miles.

THE CHENANGO TRAIL, OR WENANGO PATH,

Left the Kittanning trail at the forks on the Caldwell tract, Green township, and passed through tracts warranted in the names of Robert Porter, William Miller, Alexander Quarrier, where it crossed the Purchase line; Humphrey Fullerton, "on the waters of Little Mahoning creek, where the path from Frankstown to Chenango crosses the same, including a large Indian camp on the bank of said creek."

OTHER TRACES OF PATHS OR TRAILS NOTED IN SURVEYS.

Samuel Dixon's tract, head of Cherry Run, on the Kittanning path, by order of April 3, 1769.

William Robison; near Blacklick, on the south side of the "Kittanning path."

William Clark, on the path between Conemaugh and Blacklick, in line of George Findley, March 6, 1775.

"LIGONIER AND PEHOLAND TRAIL," OR "LIGONIER AND COUGHCHEATING PATH" EXTENDING NORTH THROUGH INDIANA COUNTY, TO "COUGHCHEATING," AN INDIAN TOWN.

The first ascertained location in Indiana county, was near the site of Centreville, and the next point was on the present James Mitchell farm, Centre township, as far as can be ascertained by the surveys. The next was on the McConaughey farm, opposite Homer City, where Pheholand's camp or town was situated. The next point definitely known, was at or near Samuel Moorhead's mill site, later known as the Andrew Dickson saw mill, and still later, as the J. M. Guthrie proprerty. The next place was on the Brown Survey, of April, 1773. It then crossed the Kittanning trail, at Shaffer's (now William G. McElhaney spring. Indiana borough,) spring, "where there was a large number of warrior's marks." By present residence of Col. Edmund Paige. By Elk Lick, on Gen. Harvey White's farm, near the forks of McKee and Plumville roads. Through Jonas Gall's tract. Through Samuel Boyles' tract. Through Samuel Coates' tract, warranted April 27th, 1773, and surveyed July 5th, 1773. Through James Bringhurt's tract, near the residence of Christopher Borland, on said tract. This tract was warranted April 27th, 1773, and surveyed July 5th, 1773. Through Joseph Bringhurt's tract, warranted April 27th, 1773, and surveyed July 6th, 1773, owned by Robert Galbraith, Gen. White, and others. Through John Mifflin's tract, warranted April 27th, 1773, surveyed July 6th, 1773. Through Joseph Mariott's tract, warranted April 27th, 1773, surveyed July 7th, 1773. Through Robert Lewis' tract. Through Presley Blackstone's tract, near the noted Buchanan tavern, on the Mahoning road; crossed Crooked Creek, very near the site of the present bridge on Indiana and Punxsutawney road, and extended up the old Mahoning road, near the present residence of Isaiah McElhoes. The McElhoes tract was warranted April 14th, 1774, in the name of Francis Jones, and was situated on the "path leading from Ligonier to Coughcheating." Through the Lewis' Bush tract, adjoining the present village of Kellysburg, including the present farms of Robert and John McElhoes, and situated on the "Ligonier and Coughcheating trail." Through Andrew Bogg's tract, adjoining the "Purchase Line," on the north, surveyed April 14th, 1774. Through David Fullerton's tract, on the purchase of 1784, warranted and surveyed in 1773, thence north to the present O. C. Brady farm. This tract was warranted to John Leasure, January 15th, 1802, and patented to the same in 1812. Through Elijah I. Work's farm. Through John Hamelan's farm. Through Robert McCreary's farm. Through William Nichol's farm. Through West Georgeville, whence it crossed Mahoning Creek at the mouth of Ross Run. An Indian town was situated at this place. Through the Williamson tract, thence across the ridge to the "narrows," at the "forks" of the Little and Big Mahoning. From Williamson's, in the "forks," was sometimes called the "Bull Path."

A branch Peholand Path extended from the Ligonier and Coughcheating Trail on the Williamson tract. It crossed Little Mahoning, at or near Ewing's mill, extended north through Port Barnett, and advanced in the direction of Tionesta and Olean.

A branch Trail extended from the Ligonier and Coughcheating Trail, on the Elijah I. Work farm, to near John Simpson's farm, on the Little Mahoning, on the Humphrey Fullerton tract, "where a path that leads from Frankstown to the Allegheny, crosses said creek, including a large Indian camp, on the bank of said creek, Westmoreland county, provided the same land be purchased from the Indians."

ROADS—THE FIRST ROAD.

The first road surveyed in what is now Indiana county, was that mentioned in the act of the 20th of March, 1787, which is as follows:

"An act for opening and establishing a road between the navigable waters of the Frankstown branch of the river Juniata and the river Conemaugh."

"Commissioners to be appointed to lay out a State Highway between the waters of the Frankstown branch of Juniata, and the river Conemaugh. Report to be made to council, who may approve the same or order a review thereof; and the said highway, when established, shall be a state highway between said points; and the courses and distances shall be entered in the council books, which entry shall be deemed a record thereof.

*Known to the early settlers as a camping ground for Indians and whites.

"The said commissioners having marked out said road, were directed to trace the courses of another road, to begin from the terminating spot of the first mentioned road, and lead along the left shore of the Conemaugh, to that point where the river begins to be navigable at all seasons; said road to be hereafter opened as occasion may require, and then deemed also a public highway. Allowance fixed for the commissioners and the sum of five hundred pounds appropriated for the purposes of this act.

"Sec. V. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the Frankstown branch of the Juniata, and the Conemaugh, together with the Kiskimenetas, throughout their whole navigable course shall be deemed and declared public highways:

"Passed 29th of March, 1787. Recorded in Law Book No. III. p. 234 (a)

"(a) The road was run and marked — day of December, 1787, and entered and confirmed by council on the 18th — the minutes of council, vol. 8, p. 205."

This road a few years later (date unknown) was cut or partially cut out, and we are informed,* at that time, Newport was located on the banks of Black Lick, near the Conemaugh, on the opposite side of the former from the road.

Early in 1800, the course was somewhat changed, and what is known at this date as the old Frankstown road was the result. In passing through the country parts of its route were parallel with, or formed a part of the later northern turnpike, or crossed the path of the latter and proceeded from and then approached it, seemingly "as if trying to mount on the hills in its way." It passed through Sharpstown, Armagh (what is now known as Smith's station), on the I. B. R. R., and crossed the Conemaugh at Williams' Ferry, on the Indiana side or Barnes' Ferry, on the Westmoreland bank of the river.

EARLY COUNTY ROADS.

"At the March sessions of the commissioners, 1807, petitions were presented for roads: From Clark's Mill to Indiana; from Rodgers' Mill to Indiana; from Cambria county line to Armstrong county line; from Ann Sharp's to the county line; and from Elder's ford at the Conemaugh river to McKee's mill, near McPharlan's mill. John Robinson, William Cummins, Alex. Lyon, John Mitchell, Thomas Allison and Chris Harrold, Viewers."

"At September sessions, John McCready, Michael Campbell, James Gordon, Samuel Dickson, Daniel Smith and James Caldwell were appointed to examine a route from Newport to Indiana, and report at the ensuing session."

"Thomas Sanderson, John McCrea, Robert Kelly, Michael Campbell, Adam Altman and Francis Boals were appointed to view and locate a road from Campbell's mill on Blacklick to Empfield's mill on Yellow creek."

"Alex Taylor, Alex Lyons, Christian Roof, Daniel Smith, Samuel Dixon and George Rankin were appointed to make a view of a road from Parr's store, on Chestnut ridge, to intersect the road from Campbell's mill to Sloan's ferry."

"Thomas Benson, Benjamin Walker, Joseph Moorhead, Samuel McNitt, David McCullough and Alex Taylor were appointed to view a road from Indiana to the road from Woodward's to Bolar's.

"William P. Brady, Joshua Pearce, John Thompson, jr., John Parks, William Work and Hugh Brady were appointed to report on the road from Brady's mill, on Little Mahoning, to the contemplated West Branch road."

"James McComb, Adam Thompson, Thomas Baird, James Matthews, Moses Thompson, jr., and Wm. Coleman appointed to report on a road from Conemaugh river, opposite Port Johnston, to Harden's Branch, where it intersects the Indiana road."

Reports of roads confirmed, viz.: "Rodger's mill to Indiana; Clark's mill to Indiana; Indiana to intersect at McFarlan's mill; Armstrong county line to Brady's mill; David Fulton's to Brady's mill; and Newport to intersect with Indiana road."

"Thomas Allison, John Wilson, Thomas McCartney, David Cummins, Joseph Moorhead and James Wilkins, sr., were appointed to locate a road from Indiana to Allison's mill, on Yellow creek."

"William P. Brady, Thomas Lucas, Samuel Scott, James McHenry, Captain Hugh Brady and James Johnston were appointed to lay out a road from Joseph Barnett's, on Redbank, to Brady's mill."

"Thomas Allison, Michael Hess, James McKee, Peter Sutton, Joseph Parker and James Moorhead were appointed to report on a road from McKee's mill to Indiana."

STATE ROADS.

1810—The road from Milesburg, Center county, to Lebouff, Erie county, was located in 1810, and passed through the northeast corner of the county. The survey is dated November 24, 1810. The Commissioners were: Francis McEwen, John Maxwell and Joseph Moorhead, of Indiana county. In the same year a road was surveyed from Indiana to intersect this road.

1818—An act passed the Assembly in 1817 for the location and survey of a road from Bedford, Bedford county, to Franklin, Venango county. The road was located and surveyed in 1818, and passed through Armagh, Indiana and other points in this county. The distance of this route was one hundred and twenty-eight miles. The Commissioners were: A. McCalmont, Venango county; Isaac Proctor and Daniel Stanard, Indiana.

1825—The "Old State Road" was located from Phillipsburg, Centre county, via Indiana to Pittsburgh in 1825. The survey is dated April 11, 1825. The Commissioners were: J. B. Shugert, John Taylor, of Indiana, and A. B. Reed.

1826—The road from Ligonier to Blairsville and thence to Indiana, was located and surveyed in 1826.

1838—The "New State Road" was located from Curwensville, Clearfield county, to East Liberty, Allegheny county, or as surveyed in 1838 by Meek Kelly. The Commissioners were: Alexander Patterson, William McCuthin and Moses Boggs.

1842—The road from Cherry Tree to intersect the Waterford and Susquehanna turnpike was surveyed by David Peelor in 1842, the distance being fifty-five and a half miles. The viewers were Robert Woodward, Henry Trease, Peter Clover, John Sloan, jun.; John Decker and Heth. F. Camp.

CHAPTER L.

A COMPLETE LIST OF TAXABLES OF INDIANA AND JEFFERSON COUNTIES FOR 1807.—EXTRACT FROM PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTEER OF 1832.—COUNTY STATEMENT FOR 1879.

A LIST OF THE TAXABLE INHABITANTS OF WHEATFIELD TOWNSHIP, INDIANA COUNTY, A. D. 1807.

AUBERTS, Henry, innkeeper; James Anderson, distiller; Valentine Amsbough, farmer; Adam Amsbough, farmer; Henry Amsbough, farmer; Thomas Askins, farmer; John Armstrong, farmer; William Alexander, innkeeper; Thomas Bracken, sen., farmer; Samuel Bratten, farmer; John Bruce, cabinet maker; Frederick Brantlinger, farmer; Alexander

*Judge Joseph Campbell

Barr, jun., innkeeper; Archibald Beckwith, farmer; Thomas Bracken, jun., farmer; Ruth Bracken, widow; John Bowler, farmer; George Bowler, farmer; Jacob Bowzer, farmer; Mary Boner, widow; John Bennett, shoemaker; George Bowers, farmer; Nathaniel Bryan, jun., farmer; Henry Bowers, farmer; John Bowers, farmer; Thos. Barr, farmer; Francis Boals, farmer; Wm. Boals, farmer; David Boals, farmer; David Campbell, blacksmith; Alex. Carnahan, cooper; Samuel Carnahan, farmer: Jas. Campbell, shoemaker; Jas. Campbell, farmer; Jas. Crawford, farmer; Moses Crawford, farmer; Alex. Campbell, farmer; Samuel Cochran, farmer; John Campbell, farmer; Elizabeth Carney, widow; Thomas Clarke, farmer; William Clarke, jun., farmer; Ruth Clarke, spinster; Findley Cameron, farmer; Daniel Cameron, farmer; Hugh Cameron, farmer; Andrew Campbell, farmer; Mark Campbell, farmer; Wm. Clarke, Esq., Robert Craig, farmer; William Campbell, farmer; Andrew Campbell, jun., farmer; John Crisswell, farmer; Francis Chapman, farmer; Thomas Craven, farmer; John Carney, farmer; Jacob Craig, weaver; John Craven, farmer; John Coleman, shoemaker; Jas. Campbell, stonecutter; Mary Dempsey, widow; Chris. Dumars, shoemaker; Peter Dike, blacksmith; John Davis, farmer; Jos. Davis, farmer; Wm. Davis, farmer; Matthew Dill, sen., farmer; Matthew Dill, jun., wheelright; Richard Dill, farmer; Thomas Dias, sen., farmer; Richard Dias, farmer; Robert Davis, tobacconist; John Davis, farmer; Nathaniel Davis, laborer; James Dunwoody, farmer; Isaac Dicker, farmer; Job Dicker, farmer; William Erwin, innkeeper; John Elder, farmer; Geo. Empfield, mill-wright; Jacob Empfield, mill-wright; Joseph Evans, farmer; Hugh Evans, farmer; Robert Elkins, farmer; John Evans, farmer; John Ewings, farmer; Elizabeth Faloon, widow; George Finley, farmer; James Finley, farmer; Isabella Ferrier, widow; Andrew Fee, farmer; John Fink, carpenter; John Fleaker, carpenter; William Fowler, farmer; Lawrence Fox, farmer; William Ferguson, jun., farmer; William Ferguson, sen., farmer; James Grimes, sen., innkeeper; Joseph Grimes, farmer; William Grimes, jun., farmer; Allen Grimes, farmer; John Grimes, farmer; William Grimes, sen., farmer; Isaac Griffith, farmer; William Gamble, farmer; George Glassford, sen., farmer; George Glassford, jun., farmer; Alex. Glassford, farmer; Leonard Gooshorn, blacksmith; John Grimes, sen., farmer; James Grimes, jun., farmer; Charles Gibson, farmer; Hugh Junkins, mason; Robert Hill, farmer; John Hopkins, farmer; Henry Heis, farmer; George Heis, farmer; Wm. Heis, farmer; Thomas Hull, farmer; Barbara Heater, widow; Robert Holmes, tailor; Wm. Johnston, sen., farmer; William Johnston, jun., farmer; Mary Johnston, widow; Archibald Jameson, sen., blacksmith; Archibald Jameson, jun., farmer; Allen Jameson, sen., farmer; William Jameson, farmer; John Jameson, farmer; Allen Jameson, jun., shoemaker; Alezander Jameson, laborer; David Jenkins, farmer; John Jones, mason; David Kennedy, weaver; William Kennedy, farmer; Thomas Lapsley, farmer; Mary Lapsley, widow; Francis Lathers, farmer; Robert Ligget, farmer; Elizabeth Likens, widow; Samuel Logan, weaver; James Longstreth, farmer; William Lee, farmer; James Luke, farmer: Archibald Louthers, farmer; William McBroom, weaver; Henry McBroom, farmer; Robert McBroom, carpenter; James McLane, laborer; Robert Muck, farmer. Joseph McDonald, farmer; Archibald McCochran, tailor; James McCochran, farmer; Robert Marshal, tanner; Archibald Matthews, distiller; William Mayben, farmer; Geo. McGarrow, farmer; David McKown, farmer; Robert Maffet, farmer; Robert Michael, distiller; William Murphy, laborer; Patrick McCormick, farmer; James McDonald, farmer; James McNitt, farmer; Joseph McCartney, sen., treasurer; Joseph McCartney, jun., farmer; John McCartney, farmer; John Mecune, sen., farmer; John Mecune, jun., farmer; John McDowell, farmer; Neal Manaman, farmer; George McEntire, distiller; tiller, John Mcarland, weaver; Samuel Parker, cabinetmaker; maker; William Parker, cabinet maker; Hugh Parker, laborer; Frederick Persian, farmer; John Patterson, farmer; Thomas Patterson, farmer; Joseph Patterson, farmer; Samuel Patterson, farmer; Archibald Patterson, farmer; Wm. Patterson, farmer; Benjamin Pitman, farmer; Joseph Pitman, farmer; Thomas Pettigrew, farmer; David Reed, esquire; Aaron Robison, farmer; Isaac Rodgers, miller; Robert Rodgers, farmer; Daniel Reynolds, farmer; Adam Ritchey, farmer; Matthew Rhea, farmer; Aaron Rose, farmer; Philip Smires, farmer; Hugh St. Clair, farmer; James Shaw, farmer; Robert Sutton, farmer; Adam Sides, farmer; Thomas Sanderson, Esq.; Samuel Stevens, farmer; Benjamin Stevens, farmer; John Stilwell, farmer; Shedrick Stevens, farmer; Daniel Sleppey, farmer; Thomas Selfridge, farmer; Christopher Stinemen, farmer; James Strong, weaver; John Thorn, farmer; David Tomb, constable; Henry Taylor, laborer; Geo. Turner, farmer; Henry Treece, farmer; Alexander Tilford, farmer; Jesse Talkington, farmer, Thomas Taylor, farmer; David Wakefield, wheel-wright; James Wakefield, farmer; Thomas Wakefield, farmer; Robert Wakefield, farmer; Ephraim Wallace, farmer; Robert Wallace, farmer; John Wallace, farmer; Richard Wilson, speculator; Andrew Wilkins, farmer; Alexander Wilson, farmer; Joseph Wilson, weaver; Richard Williams, farmer; Robert Wier, farmer; William Wilson, distiller; Archibald Woodsides, farmer; Henry Wyke, farmer; John Wolf, farmer; Jeremiah Wakefield, farmer. Returned, November 18, 1807, 237 taxables.

JEREMIAH WAKEFIELD, Assessor.

LIST OF TAXABLES OF ARMSTRONG TOWNSHIP, 1807.

Jacob Anthony, constable; William Anthony, singleman; James Armstrong, laborer; John Buckley, sr., shoemaker; Joseph Buckley, laborer; John Buckley, laborer; Thomas Benson, cabinet maker; Mary Bothwell, spinter; Jas. Bothwell, laborer; John Black, shoemaker; John Black, laborer; Thomas Boyd, laborer; David Bothwell, laborer; John Bothwell, laborer; Alexander Black, laborsr; John Betty, shoemaker; William Coughran, laborer; William Cahoun, laborer; Robert Cunningham, laborer; John Campbell, farmer; Nathan Douthet, laborer; William Devling, laborer; John Donely, tailor; Mary French, spinster; Archibald Findley, laborer; James Faran, laborer; Conrad Frederick, cooper; David Gilliland, weaver; Daniel Harkins, laborer; William Harkins, shoemaker; Hugh Harkins, shoemaker; Michael Harkins, laborer; Samuel Hall, wheel-wright; P. Hefflefinger, laborer; Wm. Hefflefinger, laborer; Jno. Harkins, laborer; Jno. Johnson, laborer; Felty Karr, laborer; Joseph Dowry, laborer; Rob't Lowry, wheel-wright; Patrick Lucas, laborer; Samuel Lucas, weaver; Captain John Lucas, blacksmith; John Lucas, tailor; Robert Little, laborer; Uriah Matson, laborer; Thomas McElhoes, shoemaker; John McElhoes, laborer; Clements McGery, laborer; John Mogney, laborer; William McNutt. laborer; Samuel McNutt, laborer; Joseph McNutt, laborer; Robert McNutt, laborer; Alexander McNutt, laborer; John Mitchell, sr., laborer; Robert Mitchell, laborer; Mathew Mitchell, laborer; John Mitchell, jr., laborer; David McCollough, laborer; Alexander McIntire, laborer; Daniel McCoy, laborer; James Moat, weaver; Mary Neal, spinster; James Orr, laborer; Fanny Peter, spinster; Esther Patton, spinster; John Patison, tanner; Jacob Pelor, laborer; John Robison, sr., laborer; William Robison, laborer; John Robison, carpenter; William Ranking, laborer; Barnard Ready, blacksmith; Mathew Ranking, laborer; Robert Robison, Esq.; James Smith, Esq.; Ann Sharp, spinster; James Stewart, wheel-wright; Archibald Stewart, peddler; George Scott, laborer; Joseph Scott, laborer; Michael Stewart, laborer; Alexander Scott, laborer; Jas. Templeton, weaver; John Trimble, laborer; Israel Thomas, laborer; William Thomas, laborer; John Thompson, laborer; James Watt, laborer; Benjamin Walker, laborer; Isaac Wahop, laborer; Robert Walker.—Am't, 93.

Robert Robison, Assessor.

A LIST OF ALL THE TAXABLE INHABITANTS OF CONEMAUGH TOWNSHIP, INDIANA COUNTY, FOR A. D. 1807.

John Barr, tanner; Charles Barr, weaver; Samuel Barr, weaver; Samuel Barr, cooper; Thomas Bell, weaver; John Bell, farmer; David Blakely, farmer; James Black, saddler; Alexander Barkley, farmer; Nancy Bollman, widow; James Brown, farmer; David Black, farmer; James Burns, farmer; William Crawford, farmer; Thomas Cunningham; Samuel Coulter, farmer; Andrew Cunningham, farmer; John Cunningham, farmer; William Croazer, shoemaker; George Cunningham, farmer; Thomas Curry, laborer; John Coleman, laborer; William Coleman, farmer; Nicholas Coleman, farmer; Hugh Cunningham, laborer; John Crosier, laborer; Ann Canning, widow; Thomas Carey, laborer; James Curray, farmer; Robert Dunlap, reedmaker; Frederick Deemer, farmer; Thomas Duncan, shoemaker; John Duncan, laborer; John Davis, laborer; James Elder, farmer; Robert Elder, farmer; David Elder, farmer; Mary Elder, widow; John Ewing, farmer; Robert Ewing, blacksmith; Thomas Elder, laborer; James Elder, fuller; Benjamin Edwards, shoemaker; Abb Findley, farmer; Robert Fulton, farmer; John Flemming, farmer; William Flemming, farmer; James Flemming, farmer; Alexander Flemming, farmer; James Gailey, cooper; John Garey, farmer; John Gray, farmer; James Gibson, farmer; Andrew Getty, farmer; John Getty, joiner; William Gains, farmer; Anna Gibson, widow; Robert Henderson, farmer; David Henderson, joiner; Robert Henderson, farmer; Joseph Henderson, farmer; Edward Hutchison, farmer; David Hutchison, farmer; George Hutchison, farmer; James Hutchison, farmer; John Hutchison, farmer; Francis Harbison, tailor; Joseph Harbison, tailor; Robert Harbison, farmer; John Hopkins, farmer; Moses Hart, farmer; Rosanneh Haselet, widow; John Henry, farmer; Robert Henry, yeoman; Thomas Hood, yeoman; James Hamilton, yeoman; Elizabeth Hutchison, widow; Joseph Hutchison, yeoman; Catharine Hindman, widow; Eliphlet Irwin, farmer; Hannah Irwin, widow; Beza Irwin, schoolmaster; Thomas Kier, yeoman; David Kerr, yeoman; Jacob Keener, yeoman; Samuel Kelly, yeoman; Samuel Kilpatrick, yeoman; Henry Kilpatrick, weaver; Robert Kelly, laborer; John Long, yeoman; Tobias Long, carpenter; Jacob Long, yeoman; Tobias Long, yeoman; Araham Lowman, yeoman; John Lewis, yeoman; Hugh Lynn, yeoman; John Laird, yeoman; Zachariah Loughrey, yeoman; Margaret Loughrey, widow; Samuel Lyon, yeoman; Robert Lafferty, yeoman; John Lafferty, yeoman; Alexander Little, yeoman; Jacob Libengood, yeoman; Robert Little, yeoman; James Leach, yeoman; John Lepley, wagonmaker; Allen McComb, yeoman; James McNeal, yeoman; Susannah Millirons, widow; James Millen, yeoman; Joseph Millen, carpenter; Christian Miller, stiller; Matthias Miller, blacksmith; R. McCreedy, yeoman; R. Miller, yeoman; J. Mardanand, yeoman; J. McCreight, yeoman; J. McKissock, yeoman; J. Mitchell; Margaret Marshall, widow; John McCleland; Daniel McCleland, yeoman; Matthew McCowell, yeoman; James McDowell; Francis McClellam, yeoman; Robert McKissock; John Marshall, yeoman; Archibald Marshall, yeoman; James Marshall; John McKee, hatter; Alexander McCurdy, yeoman; Alexander McLean; James McLean, Esq.; Samuel McMean; John McLean, yeoman; Samuel Marshall, yeoman, Archibald Marshall, yeoman; William Marshall, tanner; Robert Miller, yeoman; Samuel Miller, laborer; John Matthews, yeoman; James Matthews, yeoman; Rev. John Matthews, yeoman; Samuel Miller, yeoman; Joseph Marshall, yeoman; William McElhaney, blacksmith; Samuel Mitchell, yeoman; Andrew McCurdy, yeoman; Joseph Mitchell, yeoman; Andrew McCreery, yeoman; Samuel McCreery, yeoman; Robert Mitchell, shoemaker; Isabella Martin, widow; Thomas McClelland, shoemaker; Jane Madre, widow; Robert McComb, yeoman; John McNeal, blacksmith; William Newel, yeoman; John Neal, yeoman; William Neal, farmer; Rosannah Neal yeoman; John Nesbit, yeoman; Jonathan Nisbet, yeoman; Mary Nisbet, widow; Agnes Oliver, widow; James Oliver, laborer; John Patterson, yeoman; Alexander Patterson, yeoman; William Patterson, yeoman; Joseph Pitts, yeoman; Joseph Pierce, cooper; Samuel Reed, merchant; Thomas Reed, yeoman; John Reed, shoemaker; Robert Robinson, sen., yeoman; George Randles, laborer; John Robinson, yeoman; Robert Robinson, jun., yeoman; Rebecca Rosborough, widow; Joseph Ross, yeoman; John Rutherford, yeoman; James Smith, weaver; Thomas Smith, yeoman; James Smith, yeoman; Robert Shields, yeoman; Robert Shirley, yeoman, John Shirley, yeoman; James Simmons, weaver; Nicholas Snow, blacksmith; Mary Thompson, widow; Moses Thompson, cabinet maker; Moses Thompson, sen., yeoman; Adam Thompson, yeoman; Alexander Thompson, yeoman; Alexander Templeton, yeoman; James Thompson, laborer; William Thompton, yeoman; Jane Thompson, widow; John Thompson, yeoman; Robert Virtue, yeoman; Samuel Virtue, yeoman; Adam Wreath, weaver; Mathew Watron, yeoman; Jacob Wimmer, yeoman; Bobert Wilson, yeoman; Daniel Wray, yeoman; Robert Wray, yeoman; John Wray, laborer; Joseph Wray, farmer; John Wright, farmer; Francis Riddle, weaver; Joseph Yates, farmer; James Alexander, weaver.—Total, 238.

John Henderson, Assessor.

LIST OF TAXABLE INHABITANTS RESIDENT WITHIN THE BOUNDS OF BLACK LICK TOWNSHIP, IN THE COUNTY OF INDIANA, FOR 1807.

Robert Anderson, weaver; Philip Altman, farmer; Jacob Altman, blacksmith; George Altman, farmer; John Anderson, farmer; James Brunson, molato; John Burns, laborer; Mary Bell, spinter; George Bell, tailor; Jeremiah Brown, farmer; Thomas Bell, farmer; David Byers, weaver; Tobias Byers, laborer; Henry Byers, laborer; Jacob Bricker, farmer; Benjamin Closson, constable; Philip Cribs, laborer; John Casaday, laborer; Charles Campbell, judge; Michael Campbell, farmer; Josiah Closson, farmer; Richard Closson, farmer; George Cribs, sr., farmer; John Conkle, farmer; John Cowen, laborer; James Caldwell, farmer; John Caldwell, farmer; James Craig, laborer; George Cribs, jr., farmer; Samuel Coulter, farmer; David Campbell, weaver; John Compton, shoemaker; Jean Dean, spinster; Samuel Dixon, Esq.; Andrew Dickson, farmer; James Dickson, farmer; Davis Davis, farmer; William Davis, sr., farmer; William Drvis, jr., farmer; William Downey, laborer; Samuel Downey, laborer; John Downey, farmer; Mary Downey, spinster; Thomas David, farmer; William Deviney, Esq.; Andrew Deviney, farmer; Samuel Douglass, cabinet maker; Steward Davis, shoemaker; George Dougherty, laborer; Abraham Dehavens, laborer; William Donahew, farmer; Henry Ebrick, carpenter; Mary Elder, spinster; Joseph Elder, farmer; Elizabeth Elder, mantua maker; John Fair, farmer; Peter Fair, farmer; James Ferguson, sr, laborer; James Fergusen, blacksmith; David Ferguson, farmer; Hance Ferguson, farmer; Alexander Fails, farmer; Susanna Glenn, spinster; James Gordon, farmer; John Gibson, farmer; Hugh Gibson, laborer; Samuel Gray, tailor; William Green, laborer; Michael Heir, weaver; Robert Hunter, shoemaker; James Hunter, farmer; George Hays, doctor; John Hamilton, weaver; Henry Frederick, farmer; John Herrold, sr., farmer; John Herrold, jr., farmer; Daniel Herrold, farmer; David Herren, laborer; Ruban Jewel, laborer; Potrick Jack, farmer; Rev'd John Jameson; William Jameson, laborer; John Jameson, painter; Isaac Jennings, farmer; Samuel Keton, farmer; Archibald Kelly, laborer; Charles Kenning, farmer; Joseph Kenning, farmer; James Kelly, stone mason; Patrick Kelly, coverlid weaver; Amos Laurance, farmer;

William Laurance, laborer; Reynold Laughlin, farmer; James Lyon, farmer; Alexander Lyon, farmer; Jacob Leply, wagon maker; Henry Livingston, wagon Maker; Conrad Lintner, tavern keeper; Andrew Lowers, farmer; James Lockerd, farmer; Joseph Loughry, cooper; Nicholas Loughry, farmor; William Loughry, farmer; Daniel Levear, laborer; John Miller, laborer; James McConnal, farmer; David Mercer, farmer; John Meriman, wheelwright; Archibald McEwen, farmer; Patrick McGee, Distiller; Rebochah Moorhead, weaver; Jonathan Marton, stone mason; James McComb, assembly; George McComb, tanner; William McFarland, farmer; John McFarland, miller; William Martin, laborer; Hugh McIntire, farmer; Andrew McCartney, carpenter; Arthur McGuff, farmer; John McCready, farmer; John Meason, trader; William Mecum, tavern keeper, Joshua McCracken, shoemaker; Robert McElhaney, laborer; Jane McClure, spinster; Robert Murdurgh, laborer; Peres Means, farmer; Elizabeth McCartney, spinster; John McCrea, farmer; William McFarland, farmer; James Mitchell, farmer; Robert Nixon, merchant; Robert Nixon, jr., merchant; John O'Conner, school master; Robert Patten, farmer; Peter Palmer, farmer; Charles Palmer, laborer; Susanna Palmer, spinster; John Palmer, laborer; Sarah Reed, weaver; Samuel Reed, farmer; Jane Rapine, spinster; James Rapine, farmer; Daniel Rapine, laborer; John Rapine, mill right; William Rankin, farmer; George Rankin, farmer; Andrew Rankin, farmer; James Reed, laborer; Christopher Rapine, farmer; George Rapine, fuller; Agnes Rain, spinster; Christian Ruch, farmer; John Robins, shoemaker; Catharine Rhees, spinster; Robert Rhees, farmer; Michael Buch, farmer; Joseph Smith, laborer; Daniel Smith, blacksmith; William Smith, shoemaker; David Still, farmer; James Shields, farmer; Garvin Sutton, farmer; Joseph Shields, cooper; John Scott, shoemaker; Thomas N. Sloan, Esq.; John Spires, farmer; Jane Smith, negro, jobber; Catharine Thomas, spinster; Joseph Turner, wheelright; Samuel Talmage, doctor; Michael Tarry, laborer; Daniel Ulam, farmer; Aaron Wear, farmer; Hugh Wear, farmer; George Wear, wheelright; Joseph Wear, farmer; Abraham Wear, laborer; William Wallace, laborer; Samuel Wallace, tailor; James Williams, laborer; Catharine Wolf, tavern keeper; James Wilson, farmer; Hugh Wiley, cooper; John Wiley, miller; Adam Walker, farmer.—180 taxables.

Returned by me, November 16, 1807,

JOHN MCCREA, Assessor.

A LIST OF THE TAXABLE INHABITANTS OF CENTER TOWNSHIP 1807.

Adam Altimes, blacksmith; Andrew Allison, farmer; John Armitage, farmer; Robert Allison, jun., farmer; Robert Allison, sen., farmer; Thomas Allison, surveyor; John Allison, miller; John G. Allison, carpenter; John B. Allison, laborer; Robert T. Allison, carpenter; Gavin Adams, farmer; Robert Adams, farmer; James Adams, laborer; John Armstrong, farmer; John Arthurs, farmer; Beany Adear, farmer; James Alcorn, farmer; James Alexson, miller; John Allison, sen.; Peter Bricker, farmer; William Brown, carpenter; Thomas Burns, farmer; George Byers, farmer; John Clyde, farmer; William Cain, laborer; Jacob Cribs, farmer; William Cummins, farmer; John Cummins, farmer; David Cummins, farmer; Jean Cummins; Moses Chambers, farmer; Solomon Chambers, farmer; James Canon, mason; Ann Campbell; John R. Cummins, mason; James Dixon, farmer; Andrew Dixon, farmer; William Dickie, blacksmith; Martha Dean; Martha Dean, jun.; John Davis, farmer; James Donald, farmer; Moses Donald, laborer; William Donald, laborer; Andrew Dickson, laborer; Robert Eggy, farmer; Jonathan Eggy, laborer; Daniel Elgin, farmer; Jacob Fluke, laborer; William Fleming, farmer; George Frederick, farmer; William Fulton, schoolmaster; Robert Gordon, farmer; John Griffin, farmer; Lydia Gibson; Robert Gordon, laborer; John Gourley, shopkeeper; James Gardner, tailor; William Hamilton, Esq.; Robert Hutchison, farmer; William Hall, farmer; John Hawk, farmer; Joseph Henderson, minister; Christopher Harold, farmer; James Huston, farmer; Robert Jordon, farmer; Meek Kelly, carpenter; Patrick Kelly, farmer; James Kelly, farmer; John Laughlin, farmer; James Laughery, farmer; John Lowery, farmer; Samuel Lowery, farmer; William Lowery, farmer; John Lytle, farmer; Daniel Leny, cooper; Randolph Laurence, laborer; Mary Latta; John Laughery, mason; Fergus Moorhead, sen., farmer; Fergus Moorhead, tanner; Daniel McKisson, farmer; John McLanahan, farmer; James McLanahan, farmer; Robert McLanahan, farmer; James McKnight, Esq.; Charles Morrow, farmer; Jas. McGenity, farmer; John Murphy, farmer; William McKee, farmer; Michael McAnulty, farmer; James Montgomery, farmer; Daniel McGlaughlin, farmer; James McLane, prothonotary; Joseph Moorhead, Esq.; Jas. Moorhead, carpenter; Samuel Moorhead, carpenter; Thomas Moorhead, farmer; Jas. McFarlin, farmer; Thomas McCartney, sheriff; John Micksell, farmer; John Matson, carpenter; Jean McConaughey; James McKisson, farmer; Daniel McQuelkin, blacksmith; James O'Harra, farmer; Charles O'Harra, laborer; Mary Patton, Jas. Patton, farmer; Adam Pilson, farmer; John Pillson, farmer; Mary Pilson; John Pounds, farmer; Adonijah Pounds, farmer; Benj. Pard, shopkeeper; Armor Phillips, farmer; Ann Quigley; John Ross, carpenter; John Ross, farmer; Alexander Rea, farmer; Samuel Rea, farmer; John Rankin, farmer; Philip Rice, farmer; Conrad Rice, farmer; John Redick, farmer; Robert Rea, farmer; James Reynolds, schoolmaster; James Stunkard, farmer; James Simpson, farmer; Andrew Speddy, farmer; John Sines, farmer; Charles Stewart, farmer; James Stewart, farmer; Richard Stewart; David Semple, farmer; James Semple, laborer; Peter Sutton, innkeeper; Thomas Sutton, carpenter; Daniel Stanard, lawyer; William Shields, farmer; Matthew Steel, farmer; William Smith, farmer; Alexander Taylor, farmer; William Tremble, farmer; Samuel Todd, farmer; James Thompson, farmer; John Thompson, laborer; Joseph White, farmer; Samuel Wiggins, farmer; Thomas Wiggins, farmer; William Wiggins, farmer; James Wilkins, farmer; James Wilkins, sen., farmer; William Wilkins, farmer; John Wilson, farmer—157 taxables. Returned by me.

JOHN ALLISON, Assessor.

A LIST OF THE TAXABLE INHABITANTS RESIDING IN WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP, NOVEMBER, 1807.

John G. Allison, house carpenter; Robert Anderson, farmer; James Armstrong, farmer; Robert T. Allison, house carpenter; Samuel Barr, brick maker; Robert Boyles, farmer; Charles Buchanan, laborer; John Buchanan, farmer; Samuel Bell, farmer; Cornelius Blue, farmer; William Boreland, farmer; John Buchanan, laborer; John Bell, constable; William Coulter, laborer; Hugh Cannon, farmer; Adam Carson, farmer; Elisha Chambers, farmer; Henry Coleman, school master; John Denniston, storekeeper; John Dougherty, shoemaker; Simon Davies, farmer; Lewis Deckard, farmer; Samuel Dixon, farmer; Patrick Dougherty, farmer; George Dixon, laborer; John Evans, Esq., farmer; William Evans, farmer; Margaret Evans, weaver; James Evans, laborer; William Evans, supervisor; John Fleming, farmer; James Fairman, weaver; David Fairman, farmer; William Fulton, farmer; Samuel Ferguson, farmer; Robert Frazer, farmer; William Frazer, laborer; David Fulton, farmer; James Galbreath, minister of gospel; Peter Gordon, weaver; Peter Gordon, farmer; James Gamble, farmer; Moses Gamble, farmer; William Holliday, laborer; Bartholomew, Haddam, farmer; Michael Hess, farmer; Jacob Hess, sen., farmer; Archibald Haddam, farmer; John Huey, joiner; Thomas Harbrige, farmer; Jacob Hess, jun., farmer; Robert Hazlet, Edward Hallowell, farmer; Nathaniel Highlands, farmer, William Hazlet, laborer; John Ish, farmer; Jacob Lydick, farmer; Margaret Lydick, house keeper; John Lydick, farmer; Moses Lowers, farmer; James Lydick, farmer; Patrick Lydick, farmer; Daniel Morrison, farmer; James Moorhead; tavernkeeper; James McMahon, stone-mason; John McAnulty, brickmaker; Samuel Moorhead, joiner; Robert McClosky, farmer; David Moses, farmer; Robert McKissock, farmer; William McHenry, farmer; Samuel McCartney, blacksmith; John Mark, schoolmaster; James McKee, farmer; Robert Miller, farmer; William McCulloch, farmer; Alexander McKnight, farmer; Robert Morrison, farmer; Timothy O'Naile, farmer: David Price, wagonmaker; Peter Pruner, blacksmith; Joseph Parker, speculator; John Phees, farmer; Hugh Phees, farmer; Michael Restler, farmer; George Rowe, farmer; John Ruth, farmer; William Riddle farmer; John Rowe, farmer; James M. Riddle, attorney-at-law; Henry Sryock, tavernkeeper; Robert Stuart, brickmaker; Abraham Stutchel, farmer; Christopher Stutchel, farmer; Daniel Swartzwalter, farmer; Charles Stuart, laborer; Jacob Shallaberger, farmer, James Spence, farmer; John Shields, farmer; Jacob Stutchel, farmer; Robert Simpson, farmer; James Simpson, farmer; Nathaniel Simpson, farmer; John Simpson, laborer; Joel Storet, joiner; George Trimble, weaver; George Trimble, farmer; Robert Thompson, farmer; James Thompson, farmer; John Thompson, farmer; Hugh Thompson, farmer; John Thompson, farmer; James Thompson, farmer; Hugh Thompson, farmer; John Thompson, farmer; John Talkington, shoemaker; Samuel Young, tavernkeeper.

David Fulton, Assessor.

LIST OF TAXABLE INHABITANTS RESIDENT IN MAHONING TOWNSHIP, INDIANA COUNTY, 1807.

Jonathan Ayers, blacksmith; James Brady, sr., laborer; John Brady, sr., laborer; Fergus Blackney, laborerer; John Brady, jr., laborer; John Brown, laborer; Robert Brady, laborer; Arthur Black, laborer; David Black, laborer; Joseph Brady, laborer; Hugh Brady, sr., laborer; William P. Brady, surveyor; Joseph Brady, jr., laborer; Asa Crossman, wheelwright; John Carson, doctor; William Cain, laborer; Frederick Clingerberger, laborer; Peter Croftzer, distiller; Elizabeth Colter, spinster; John Cain, laborer; David Coughran, laborer; Moses Curry, laborer; Bernard Cook, laborer; Daniel Davis, laborer; Joshua Davis, laborer; William Dilts, laborer; Peter Dilts, laborer; James Ewing, distiller; Samuel Fleming, laborer; John Flummer; laborer; Stephen Gaskin, laborer; Robert Hamilton, laborer; Peter Hoover, laborer; William Hannah, constable; William Hopkins, laborer; John Henderson, laborer; John Jamison, laborer; James Johnston, laborer; John Johnston, taylor; Peter Justice, laborer; Thomas Jones, laborer; David Kirkpatrick, laborer; John Leashure, laborer; Joshua Lewis, esquire; Michael Lane, tanner; William McGlaughlin, laborer; Archibold McBride, laborerer, William McCreary, laborer; Isaac McHenry, laborer; James McHenry, laborer; Joseph McHenry, laborer; James McComb, laborer; William McCall, laborer; Samuel McHenry, laborer; James McBride, laborer; Thomas Neal, laborer; Samuel Newcome, laborerer; William Neal, George Pierce, laborer; Jacob Pierce, laborer; David Pierce, laborer; Joshua Pierce, laborer; Job Pierce, laborer; John Parks, laborer; Patrick Porter, mason; John Reary, laborer; Samuel Smith, laborer; Robert Sadler, laborer; William Smith, sr., laborer; Henry Stuart, laborer; William Smith, jr., laborer; William Thompson, laborer; John Thompson, sr., laborer; John Thompson, jr., laborer; James Thompson, laborer; Isaiah Vanhorn, laborer; John Work, esquire; John White, laborer; John Wiggings, laborer; William Warden, laborer; Matthew Wynekoop, laborer; John Woodruff, miller; John Wear, laborer; Christopher Wells, laborer; Robert Walker, laborer. Total number, 87.

Willliam Work, Assessor.

"A LIST CONTAINING A JUST AND TRUE ACCOUNT OF THE NAMES, SURNAMES, AND OCCUPATION OF THE TAXABLE INHABITANTS OF JEFFERSON COUNTY."

Joseph Barnet, farmer; John Dickson, weaver; Elijah M. Grimes, laborer; Lewis Heeb, farmer; Peter Jones, blacksmith; John Jones, farmer; Moses Knapp, farmer; Samuel Lucas, tailor; Thomas Lucas, farmer; William Lucas, tailor; Ludwig Long, farmer; Alexander McCoy, farmer; Jacob Mason, laborer; John Roll, cooper; Daniel Roadarmil, farmer; John Scott, sen., farmer; Samuel Scott, miller; John Scott, jr., farmer; Adam Vastbinder, wheelright; William Vastbinder, farmer; Jacob Vastbinder, farmer; John Vastbinder, laborer; Fridge Vancamp, farmer.

To the Commissioners of Indiana County, including Jefferson:

I do certify that the foregoing list contains a just and true account of the names, surnames and occupations of every taxable person of the age of twenty-one years and upward, whether male or female, residing within the county of Jefferson, and also that there are no negroes, mulattoes, or people of color, held as slaves within the said county of Jefferson. Witness my hand this 28th day of October, 1807.

Joseph Barnet, Assessor of Jefferson County.

EXTRACT FROM PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE OF 1832.

The county was originally settled by Irish and German emigrants, and is now possessed by their descendants, the majority of whom are from the former source. The population in 1810 was 6,214, in 1820, 8,882, and in 1830, 14,250, of whom 7,197 were white males, 6,947 white females, 41 free black males, 56 free black females, and 6 male and 4 female slaves. There were 222 aliens, 12 deaf and dumb, and 2 blind.

That the inhabitants are religiously disposed, may be satisfactorily inferred from the fact that there is a church in the county for every 650 souls. The regular association of Presbyterians has 10, the Seceders 5, Methodists 2, Episcopalians 1, Catholics 1. A Baptist society at Indiana, having no church, convene in a school house. There are a County Bible and Missionary Society, and Sunday schools in neighborhoods whose population is sufficiently dense to admit of their convenient establishment. Adequate provision, however, has not yet been made for education. But an academy has been established at the borough of Indiana, which was incorporated in 1814 by an act which granted the sum of $2,000 for its use. Classical and mathematical instruction is given here. There are four newspapers published weekly, viz.; The Indiana Enquirer, and Free Press, at Indiana borough, and the Blairsville Record, and Conemaugh Republican, at Blairsville.

The county possesses 22 grist mills, 30 saw mills, 14 fulling mills, a woolen manufactory in Centre township and another in Wheatfield township, both engaged in the manufacture of cloth and kersinettes; and a foundry in Blairsville for casting stoves, etc.

The chief exports are horses, neat cattle, sheep, swine and salt. The manufacture of salt, with the facilities afforded by the coal beds and the transportation by the river is generally a profitable business, and is fast increasing.

The assessed value of taxable property was, in 1829: real estate, $886,080; personal, $89,168; rate of levy, one-third of a cent on every dollarf.

The county contributed to the funds of the State, 1831, for tax on writs $280, tavern licenses $328.13, duties on dealers in foreign merchandize, $586.29, State maps $4.75, collateral inheritances $14.76, hawkers' and peddlers' licences, $15.29. Total, $1,229.12.

Indiana, Venango, Warren, Armstrong and Jefferson counties constitute the 24th Senatorial district of the State, sending one member to the Senate. Indiana and Jefferson united send one member to the House of Representatives.

Indiana, Westmoreland and Jefferson form the 17th Congressional district, sending one member to Congress. Indiana, Westmoreland, Cambria and Armstrong make the 10th judicial district, over which John Young, esq., presides. The courts are holden at Indiana on the second Mondays of March, June, September and December. This county belongs to the western district of the Supreme Court, which holds a session at Pittsburgh on the first Monday in September annually.

The chief towns of the county are Indiana borough, Armagh, Blairsville, Newport, Saltsburg, Strongtown, Nicholsburg, Georgeville, Smicksburg, Diamond's Mills, etc.

STATISTICAL TABLE OF INDIANA COUNTY.

TOWNSHIPS, ETC.	Greatest Lth.	Greatest Brh.	Area in Acres.	Population 1820.	Population 1830.	Taxables.
Wheatfield	13	10½	78,720	2,020	2,961	551
Armstrong	7½	7½	23,120	587	814	161
Blairsville Borough					957	182
Blacklick township	9½	8	32,000	1,303	1,850	321
Centre	10	8	46,720	937	1,237	281
Conemaugh	8	5½	23,680	1,555	2,104	473
Greene	12	11	77,440		1,130	200
Mahoning	20	12½	133,120	1,106	1,640	297
Indiana borough				317	433
Washington	11	10	48,000	1,057	957	265
Young	8	5	18,560
				8,882	14,251	2.732

COUNTY STATEMENT FOR 1879.

Number of taxables, 11,069. (1880, also 11,069).
Value of real estate	$7,999.732 00
Aggregate value real estate taxable	7,999,732 00
Value of all household furniture, including gold and silver plate, (xceeding $300)	4,100 00
Aggregate amount of money at interest (including bonds, stock, &c.,)	529,452 00
Number and value of horses, mares, geldings and mules over the age of four years; number 6,904; value	217,815 00
Number and value of cows and neat cattle over four years—number 9,753; value	120.090 00
Aggregate value of all property taxable for State purposes, at the rate of 3 mills on the dollar	883,918 00
Amount of State tax assessed, at the rate of 3 mills on the dollar	2,643 08
Aggregate number and value of all pleasure carriages and buggies, and tax at the rate of 1 per cent—number 820; value $24.841; tax	248 41
Valuation of salaries, emoluments of office, posts of profit, trades, occupations and professions	341,826 00
Aggregate value of all property taxable for county purposes, at the rate of 5 mills on the dollar	9,090,766 00
Gold lever watches 19, silver lever watches 60, common watches 64. Aggregate amount of tax on all watches	96 00
Aggregate amount of State tax assessed	2,998 51
Aggregate amount of county tax assessed, at the rate of 5 mills on the dollar	46,089 74
Debt of county	56,70 000

CHAPTER LI.

SOME BRIEF NOTES ON INDIANA COUNTY'S CITIZENS WHO HAVE STATE OR NATIONAL REPUTATION—NOTES ON SOME OF THE MEMBERS OF THE PAST—REV. J. W. HENDERSON—THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

INDIANA county is comparatively new when contrasted with other portions of the State, and till within a brief period of time, was without the advantages of ordinary commercial centers. These causes, in connection with the primitive inclinations and habits of the early settlers, were well calculated to prevent her citizens from becoming noted in the State and nation. The foundation of her society was laid in kindness, hospitality, sympathy and generosity to neighbors and friends. Rivalry, jealousy and selfishness were not known to exist among the pioneers. The inordinate love of money and power that dwarfs the soul, and dries up the sympathies of true manhood witnessed at the present time, is of more modern growth. When we consider the surroundings of the county, the poverty and isolated condition of the citizens, it is remarkable that many of her sons should acquire a State record, much less a National reputation. Without any desire to disparage the claims or worth of others, we will mention the following persons:

HON. JOHN TAYLOR, of Indiana, was Prothonotary, Associate Judge, Representative in the Legislature, and Surveyor General of the State during the administration of Governor Ritner. He was an officer of great merit; and highly esteemed throughout the State.

WILLIAM EVANS, ESQ., a native of the county, held the offices of Sheriff and County Surveyor, represented the county three years in the Legislature, and for a number of years was chief clerk in the Surveyor General's office at Harrisburg. He was recognized as a man of ability throughout the Commonwealth.

HON. WASHINGTON MCCARTNEY, a native of the county and son of the first Sheriff, for a number of years was one of the professors at "Lafayette College," Easton, Northampton county, and subsequently was President-judge, with residence in the same city. His record is that of one of Pennsylvania's most useful and gifted sons.

HON. M. S. QUAY, Secretary of the Commonwealth, was reared in Indiana, and educated at the "Academy."

HON. AUGUSTUS DRUM (See Notes on the Bar), HON. A. W. TAYLOR (See Sketch of Taylor), and GEN. HARRY WHITE were Members of Congress, and well known to the country at large.

HON SAMUEL S. BLAIR, of Hollidaysburg, was a native of Indiana county, and remained here till his admission to the bar. He is one of the leading lawyers in the State, and has represented his Congressional district several terms.

HON. JOHN REILEY, a native of Indiana county, represented the Blair and Huntingdon Congressional district for one term.

HON. JOHN CUMMINS, of Indiana county, removed to Ohio, and represented a Congressional district from that State for a number of years.

HON. ROBERT T. VAN HORN, a native of the county, learned and worked at the printing business in Indiana for several years. He has been a Congressman from Missouri since he adopted that State as his home.

HON. STEWART STEELE, for many years a resident of Blairsville, was Consul at Dundee, Scotland, from 1845 to 1849.

HON. JAMES CLARK, a resident of Blairsville, for several years held the office of Canal Commissioner. He was the pioneer in the internal improvement system of Pennsylvania. He was esteemed as an honest, faithful and judicious officer.

HON. TITIAN J. COFFEY, a resident of Indiana, for several years, was deputy Attorney General for the United States, from 1861 to 1865. He is now a popular advocate at the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Richard B. McCabe, was a well known attorney for the county. He served as prothonetary, and published a paper at Blairsville, for several years. His historical articles found a place among the standard writings of his times, and without any desire or expectation, his reputation became national. No one acquainted with his articles will doubt the valuable aid our later historians received from his contributions.

Hon. Thomas White, was considered one of the best jurists in the state, (see article on the Bar). His opinions, either as president, judge or attorney, commanded the highest respect, of the best legal minds in the country.

Dr. Robert Mitchell, from his early and faithful advocacy of universal freedom for all classes, without regard to race or color, and the persecutions he had to bear, won a name familiar at one time to a large part of the United States. His sentiments and career were copied into many of the anti-slavery publications, and his name will be handed down to posterity.

Dr. Robert Montgomery Smith Jackson, for many years a resident of Blairsville, had a national reputation as a scientific man. His chief reputation was a geologist and botanist. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Geological Commission, the American Philosophical Society, the Academy of Natural Sciences, and other learned societies.

Dr. William Anderson, was president of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, in 1866. He has been connected with the permanent membership of the American Medical Association, for twelve years, and was a member of the International Medical Congress, in 1876.

Dr. R. Stansberry Sutton, a native of Indiana county, but lately a resident of Pittsburgh, is well known from his contributions to medical literature, and his membership in the American Medical Association. He is now a professor in the Rust Medical College, of Chicago.

Rev. William Shadrach, D. D., came to the county in 1819, and has always been considered one of its citizens, as he retained the old homestead, and made frequent visits to his early home. His ministerial labors as a Baptist Clergyman, were commenced in Western Pennsylvania, but in a short time he was called to Philadelphia, thence to New York City. For a number of years he traveled through the United States, as agent for the Board of Home Missions, then as finance agent of the University of Lewisburg, and afterwards was secretary of the Board of Publication of the church to which he belongs. His fame and usefulness have been national for more than thirty years, and every citizen of Indiana county, is proud of his early identity.

Rev. J. W. Wiley, D. D., one of the Bishops of the M. E. Church, practiced medicine for a few years, in Blairsville, before he entered the ministry. He is known and respected throughout the United States.

Lieutenant Alexander McCracken, of the U. S. Navy, was born in Indiana in 1850. He was a cabin boy on a gunboat commanded by Captain Wells, on the lower Mississippi, in 1863 and 1864. In 1865, he entered the naval school at Annapolis, Maryland; graduated in 1869; was appointed midshipman, and left Boston, August 1st, in the same year for the East, in the service of the government, visiting France, Italy, Egypt and other countries. Subsequently he was in the coast survey on the Gulf of Mexico, and lower Mississippi river. In 1877, he was sent to the coast of South America, and returned in November, 1879. He is now one of the instructors in mathematics in the naval school at Annapolis. He was promoted regularly from midshipman to lieutenant, in January, 1879.

General Hugh Brady, of the U. S. army, lived for several years in Indiana county. He was born at Huntingdon, Pa., in 1768, entered the United States army in March, 1792, and served with General Wayne on his western expedition after the defeat of St. Clair. He was appointed a lieutenant in February, 1794, and captain, January 8th, 1799. He afterward left the military service and came to Indiana county, and while a citizen in 1809, was a candidate for sheriff. Subsequently he rejoined the army, and was appointed colonel in June, 1812. He displayed great courage at Chippewa and other battles on the frontier. He was brevetted brigadier general July 6th, 1822, and major general, for long and faithful services, May 30th, 1848. He died at Detroit, Michigan, April 15th, 1851.

The grand parents of Alfred T. Goshorn, director general of the Centennial Exhibition, were among the early settlers of what is now Brush Valley township. They migrated to Ohio in 1811.

The grand parents of Gov. Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, were among the early settlers of what is now West Wheatfield township. His father was a native of the vicinity of Centreville.

Many more might be mentioned as worthy of a name and place amongst the useful and noted members of the different professions and callings. Our great men are not of the average kind. They were not pushed up by wealth, hereditary influence or the fomentations of great cities or corporations. They acted the part of the truly great, were willing to labor faithfully in the performance of their duties, without the aid of outside influences or the devices of unprincipled men.

NOTES ON SOME OF THE MEMBERS OF THE BAR IN THE PAST.

Daniel Stanard, Esq., was the first resident lawyer who located permanently at Indiana. He was a native of Vermont, and came here, a young lawyer, in 1807. He was over six feet in height, erect, and of commanding presence. His fine appearance would arrest attention anywhere. Although his early education was limited, by study and application he became a man of more than ordinary intelligence on most subjects. He was a successful practitioner of the law up till 1836, when he retired from active practice, and died March 4, 1867, at the age of eighty-five years.

James M. Kelly, Esq., was a native of Indiana county, son of James Kelly, one of the early settlers of the county. At an early day the attention of George Armstrong, Esq., a lawyer of Greensburg, Pennsylvania, who attended the courts at Indiana, was arrested by the sprightliness of young Kelly and his skill as a performer on the violin. Armstrong, who was without children, induced young Kelly to go to Greensburg and become a member of his family, where he assisted him in obtaining an education and in the study of the law. Upon being admitted to the bar, he returned to Indiana and engaged in the practice of the law, where he had a brilliant, but brief career. He was tall, slender, graceful, and most winning in his ways. He was bright, and took the hearts of the people by storm. Although a member of the minority party, a Federalist, he was irresistible as a candidate, and was triumphantly elected to the State Legislature, in a strong Democratic district. In 1820, he visited Cuba, in company with Dr. Robert Mitchell, for the benefit of his health, but consumption had marked him for her own, and soon after his return home, in the same year, he breathed his last, aged thirty-five years.

Thomas White, Esq., studied law in the office of Wm. Rawle, Esq., in Philadelphia, and in 1821, commenced the practice of law at Indiana. He was then aged about twenty-one years, and was very soon in successful practice. He was also agent of Geo. Clymer, who owned a large quantity of land in Indiana county. From 1836 till 1846, he presided over our county with distinguished ability. Early in the rebellion he served as one of the commissioners on what was called the "Penn convention," which met at Washington city. He was of medium size, in manner affable and polite, but dignified. Although reared in the city, he took a decided interest in agriculture. He was one of the main projectors and supporters of the Indiana county Agricultural Society, among the most successful societies of the kind in the State, and was the president of the society from its origin till his death. He devoted considerable time to agricultural pursuits, the raising of sheep, blooded cattle, &c. Most undoubtedly Indiana county is greatly indebted to him for her improved stock and modes of farming. Judge White died on the 23d day of July, 1866, aged sixty-seven years.

EPHRAIM CARPENTER, ESQ., was of New England birth, having been born at Sharon, Vermont, August 10, 1788. When a young man he taught in the Academy at Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and there studied law. He commenced the practice of the law at Indiana in 1819, and remained there till his death, June 10, 1860, (at the age of seventy years). For many years he was deputy attorney general for Indiana and adjacent counties. He was exceeding particular and precise in his business habits, and made an excellent prosecuting officer.

AUGUSTUS DRUM, ESQ., was a son of Simon Drum, Esq., of Greensburg, Pa., and was educated at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, he studied law under John B. Alexander, Esq., at Greensburg, and located in Indiana, in 1831. He was a successful lawyer, and a gentleman of pleasant, social qualities and fine literary taste. He was a member of the Democratic party, and took a decided part in politics, and to some extent was a newspaper writer. He served in the State Senate and in Congress. He died on the seventeenth day of September, 1858, aged 43 years.

WILLIAM BANKS, ESQ., was a native of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, and studied law in the office of his brother, Hon. Jno. Banks, at Mercer, Pennsylvania. He commenced the practice of law in Indiana, in 1826, and for many years was a leading member of the bar. He was naturally sensitive and diffident, and only commenced to argue cases before the jury when circumstances compelled him. He became a forcible advocate, concise, to the point, and sometimes eloquent. He was fond of scientific studies, and was very conversant with the scriptures. He filled the offices of Deputy Attorney General, Prothonotary and member of the Legislature. After serving in the legislature, he totally abjured holding public office. He died on the 10th day of August, 1871, aged 76 years.

REV. JOSEPH W. HENDERSON.—The Rev. Joseph Washington Henderson, was a native of Franklin county, Pennsylvania. He graduated at the college of New Jersey, in 1776, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Donegal, June 16th, 1779. On the 20th of October following, he received a call from the congregation of Hanover, which he declined. Another call was presented to him on the 21st of June, 1780, from the congregation of Conewago; and again, on the 17th of October, of the same year, he received a call from the united congregation of East Fennsborough and Monaghan.

In each of these calls, the salary promised was to be paid in wheat. He accepted the call from Conewago, and was ordained and installed their pastor, June 20th, 1781. When the Presbytery of Carlisle was erected in 1786, he was one of its original members. On the 15th of April, 1795, in consequence of his congregation failing to meet their engagements with regard to salary, he asked leave to resign his pastoral charge.

With a view to ascertain the facts, the Presbytery appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Black and Paxton, upon the report of which committee, his request for a dissolution of his connection with the congregation was granted. Shortly after this, having obtained leave from the Presbytery, he traveled Westward, as far as Kentucky, where he labored for some time.

On his return, he preached one or two Sabbaths in the congregations of Bethel and Ebenezer, within the bounds of the Presbytery of Redstone, but without any view to settlement, as his purpose was to settle in Kentucky. Having reached his home in York county, he made application at the next meeting of the Presbytery of Carlisle, and received a dismission on the 11th of April, 1798, to connect with that of Redstone, and about the same time set out with his family for the west.

On his arrival in Westmoreland county, he stopped in the congregations of Bethel and Ebenezer, where he had preached on his journey eastward. So urgent were the people of these congregations that he should remain with them, he consented to supply them for a year. Before the close of the year, a call was prepared and put into his hands on the 9th of April, 1799, at the same meeting of the Presbytery of Redstone at which he was received as a member. Of this call he declared his acceptance, and became the settled pastor of these churches, although he was never formally installed.

At the time of his settlement, he was the only Presbyterian minister in that part of Westmoreland, which is now included in Indiana county. His charge was extensive, and the country being new, he was often subjected to much exposure, and had to endure many hardships in the fulfillment of his pastoral duties. But, although his constitution was weak and his health delicate, by a rigid attention to the rules of temperance, he was enabled, by the grace of God, to labor successfully among the people of his charge for more than twenty-five years. He was finally obliged, however, at the expiration of that period, and about twelve years before his death, to relinquish his connection with the people of his pastoral charge, in consequence of the loss of his voice, by which he was disabled from preaching. When the Presbytery of Blairsville was erected by the Synod in 1830, he was one of its original members.

He died at his residence in Center township, near Bethel church, on the 19th of September, 1836, in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

The following extract from an obituary notice of him—written, as we have been informed, by the Rev. Robert Johnston,—will show the estimation in which he was held by those most familiar with his character and attainments.

"The general opinion of those who were accustomed to hear him was, that his principal excellence appeared in the pulpit. Everything like ostentation or display, he despised. Perspicuity, simplicity, precision and comprehension of thought, were the general characteristics of his sermons. His style and method are said, by those qualified to judge, very much to have resembled those of Dr. Witherspoon, under whose instructions his habits of thinking and writing had been formed.

As a man, whether at home or abroad, he was in a high degree companionable, easy of access, amiable in his disposition, a pattern of politeness, cheerful without levity, and always instructive in conversation. In a word, his general deportment was that of the finished gentleman and the humble christian. His hospitable mansion was always open for the accommodation of friends or strangers, and his benevolent heart could never say to the needy, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled," without imparting such things as were needful.

He was the decided friend of all the benevolent operations of the day, and their liberal patron, in proportion to the means which he possessed. He had no desire to be rich in this world's goods, and never had more than a competency, and of the little that was left for the support of his declining years, he bequeathed, in his will, fifty dollars to the cause of missions. A few months previous to his death, he sent for the writer, and told him of the bequest, and that having lived longer than he expected, he began to fear that he might live to see the end of his funds, and as he had given that sum to the Lord, he felt that it was not his own, and desired me to receive it, and give one-half of it to each of the boards of missions, which was accordingly done.

He was a zealous friend and advocate of the cause of temperance, and both by precept and example, inculcated the principle of entire abstinence, long before a temperance society was formed. He continued to the last to manifest a deep interest in the purity, prosperity and peace of the church; and he viewed with painful solicitude, the progress of error, and the consequent divisions, jealousies and unhallowed contentions which were rending the church into parties, and holding her up as a reproach to the enemy.

The curious reader will be gratified with the subjoined transcript of the original certificate of his graduation, over the signature of President Witherspoon:

"These testify that the bearer, Joseph Washington Henderson, has resided in the College for two years preceding this date, behaving himself regularly; that he applied himself to his studies with diligence and success; was examined for admission to the degree of Bachelor of Arts and approved, and is entitled to that standing from this time. In witness whereof, the above is written and subscribed at Princeton, September 26, 1776, by John Witherspoon."

It is said that the cognomen—Washington—was conferred upon him at college, on account of some peculiar excellence which he possessed.

Note on Rev. Joseph W. Henderson by Josiah Capeley.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

[By Prof. J. H. Young.]

The following sketch, by one closely connected with the normal from its very inception, will furnish some additional points and bring its history down to the catalogue of 1880.

The normal school system for the due preparation of the teachers for our public schools, was authorized by act of legislature of 1857.

Our state was divided into twelve normal districts, but in 1874 another was added, making thirteen.

Millersville was the first established under our present efficient State Superintendent. This was followed by those at West Chester, Bloomsburg, Kutztown, Mansfield, Sagamore, Edinboro, Shippensburg and Indiana. Ours is consequently the ninth district, and is composed of the counties of Armstrong, Cambria, Westmoreland and Indiana.

The project of a normal at this place came up first in the discussions of the teachers' institutes which met at Indiana in 1869 and 1871.

From the teachers it was received and discussed by the citizens. In due time, a number of our leading citizens becoming identified with it, the fugitive idea became a fixed resolve, the fleeting notion a settled fact. Subscriptions were solicited, estimates made, plans drawn up, contracts awarded, and finally in the spring of 1873, work was begun on the finest site in the vicinity.

The persons who figured in this noble enterprise most actively, and whose names are deserving of the lasting respect of this county and district, were the following: John Sutton, Silas M. Clark, Wm. B. Hildebrand, Harry White, A. W. Wilson, Joseph R. Smith, Col. Dan S. Porter, Dr. Thomas St. Clair, Peter Sutton, Dr. G. R. Lewis, Wm. B. Marshall, Samuel McCartney, A. M. Stewart and others.

Of these, the devotion and energy of the lamented John Sutton are beyond all praise. He was nobly seconded, however, by S. M. Clark and others who have taken up and ever since worn the mantle that he has dropped.

The appreciation of the labors of these men by the community and stockholders is evidenced by the fact that nearly all of them have been the trustees of the institution from the beginning and remain so at the present time.

The building was completed and accepted by the trustees from the contractors in January, 1875. Its contract price was $180,000, which sum was swelled to over $200,000 by the addition of gas fixtures and steam heating apparatus, furniture, bedding, &c.

The site of the Indiana normal comprises twelve acres on the edge of the town. It contains a beautiful grove of large trees, and lies on the line of the railway.

The building itself is four stories high, exclusive of the basement. It consists of three wings—a centre, north and south wings. The main frontage is 223 feet by 150 in depth and surmounted by an observatory containing a fine bell.

The basement—a miniature town in itself—contains thirty-one rooms, embracing kitchens, scullery, bakery, laundry, drying rooms, store rooms, engine rooms, work shops and bath rooms.

The first story contains the Principal's office and part of his residence, the steward's apartments, the reception room, the model school room and teaching rooms, carving, linen and bath rooms; also, closets, pantries, servants' rooms and the immense dining room, with a capacity of 500 boarders, and furnished with all the modern improvements.

The second story, containing thirty-five apartments, comprises a large parlor and reading room, library and laboratory, recitation and music rooms, the mercantile department, bath rooms, the normal chapel, seating 1,000 persons, and a book room for the sale and rent of all kinds of stationery and text books. The third and fourth stories are fitted up with 155 large and comfortably furnished dormitories, with bath rooms and water closets complete.

There are in all 262 rooms. Under the roof, in what might be called a sixth story, if we count the basement as one, are two large water tanks, whose exhaustless streams flow to every part of the building, and are connected with huge water cocks on each floor, which in case of fire are able to flood the floors in a few moments. This accident, however, is almost impossible, as the building is heated throughout by steam, and the lightning apparatus is managed by careful employés. The several halls, also, are under the careof the teachers of the several floors, which, in connection with the frequent rounds of the night watchman, would speedily detect anything wrong or unusual.

In May, 1875, the gigantic structure was completed, and by the aid of the ladies of our town, who made miles of window blinds and carpets and a score of other things necessary for housekeping on a large scale, it was soon ready for occupation.

In the meantime an excellent faculty had been secured, with Edmund B. Fairfield, L. L. D., at its head, and by the 17th, the Indiana normal was thrown open to the public.

The formal approval of reception of the building on the part of the State occurred on May 21.

The committee of approval were State Superintendent Wickersham, Col. J. M. Campbell, of Cambria county; Col. S. M. Jackson, of Armstrong; James R. McAtee, of Westmoreland, and the county superintendents of the district, namely: Prof. A. D. Glenn, of Armstrong; Prof. Jones, of Westmoreland, and Prof. Wolf, of Indiana.

Senator Anderson, of Allegheny county, and others, were also present on the occasion.

In his speech of acceptance and approval, Dr. Wickersham, who is the father of the normal system of the State, and intimate with all others in the country, pronounced the normal at Indiana, Pa, the "best building of its kind, and best adapted for its purpose, in the United States."

The five years' life of the Indiana normal has been fraught with great diversity, and been cast in the gloom of public financial disaster and depression.

Yet through it all she has lived, and even prospered; gradually freeing herself from her incubus of debt, and earning for herself an enviable name and reputation for sound scholarship and faithful teaching.

Her first catalogue, in 1875, shows her total attendance for the year, without duplication, to be 306
That of 1876 304
That of 1877.....304
That of 1878.....353
That of 1879.....305
That of 1880.....374

Thus, in a little more than five years, there has been an attendance of nearly two thousand; while the present year, as the financial horizon is beginning to clear, is in excess of all the preceding, and has still better hopes for the future.

It is also probable that the freqent partial changes in the faculty of this institution may not have been for its best interests, but it can be safely avouched that, at no time in its history has it been without a first-class corps of experienced teachers.

And it may be questioned with all considerateness and moderation of speech, whether a faculty of equal ability to the present one, can be found outside of our first-class colleges. The faculty of 1880 comprise the following:

1. John H. French, LL.D., Principal.
2. J. H. Young, A. M., Languages.
3. Jane E. Leonard, Preceptress; History, Geography and Rhetoric.
4. R. Willis Fair, M. S., Mathematics.
5. John S. McKay, A. M. Natural Sciences.
6. Fannie L. Ells, Reading, Elocution and Literature.
7. W. C. Sandy, Penmanship, Book-keeping and Drawing.
8. Mattie A. Keeler, Superintendent of Model School.
9. Wm. B. Hall, Vocal Music and Voice Culture.
10. Maggie Lichteberger, Instrumental Music.
11. Mrs. M. A. Fair, Assistant, Mathematics, &c.
12. Ed. P. Johnston, B. E., Assistant, Latin and Mathematics.
13. Emma F. Sampson, Assistant, Drawing.
14. Jacob M. Berkey, B. E., Assistant, Mathematics, &c.

Of the original faculty, which began with the school, Jane E. Leonard and Prof. Young only, remain.

The board of trustees of 1880 comprises the following:

Representing the Stockholders—Silas M. Clark, President; Wm. B. Hildebrand, Secretary; Joseph R. Smith, A. W. Wilson, Wm. B. Marshall, A. W. Taylor, James R. Daugherty, Harry White, Samuel Wolf, George R. Lewis, E. H. Wilson and Albert Boyle.

Representing the State—A. W. Kimmel, R. A. Paul, Rev. Jas. Davis, Daniel S. Porter, Dr. Wm. Shadrach, A. T. Moorhead, jr.

Thomas Sutton, Treasurer.

The advantages offered by the State Normal school at Indiana Pa., may be summarized as follows:

1. Its location, in the beautiful town of Indiana, the county seat and terminus of the Indiana Branch of the Pennsylvania railroad, 19 miles north of Blairsville intersection and 72 by railroad from Pittsburgh. This town is distinguished for its numerous fine churches, court house and other buildings, and especially for its salubrious elevation and picturesque scenery.

2. Its buildings, before described, heated by steam and lighted, without care or trouble to the students. Every floor provided with abundance of hot and cold water, bath-rooms, lavatories, and water-closets, students' rooms completely furnished and ladies' rooms carpeted.

3. Its extensive grounds, with its beautiful grove, affording shady promenades, a gymnasium, croquet and archery grounds. There is besides a large campus interspersed with trees and fenced in, for base ball, foot ball and other athletic sports.

4. Its apparatus, philosophical and chemical; its libraries, its maps, globes and articles for object teaching: all of which, taken together, are probably the best to be found in any normal school in the United States.

5. Its Faculty, of large and successful experience; each an adept in his or her own department.

6. Its curriculum, offering—

1. A college preparatory course of Latin, Greek, French and German.

2. A complete normal course, or equipment for teaching according to the best and most recent methods.

3. A business course, with practice in the normal, jobbing house, commission house, general agency and bank, similar to that offered by mercantile colleges.

4. An excellent model school for practice in teaching under an experienced critic and superintendent.

5. Drawing, music, instrumental and vocal.

The terms of the normal are quite moderate in view of all its advantages, and its deductions and privileges the same as in all similar state institutions.

CHAPTER LII.

STORIES OF CAPTAIN SAMUEL BRADY.

THE CAPTURE OF BRADY, AND THE LEAP.

IN the North American, we find* a communication from Mr. Rea, in which he details a thrilling incident in the life of the celebrated Indian scout, Captain Brady, related to him by the captain of the canal boat on which he recently traveled from New Brighton to New Castle.

The captain was once taken prisoner by the redskins, at a point about five or six miles above the mouth of Beaver river, and his capture is thus described by the skipper: "Brady had never been taken by the Indians before, and was this time led into their hands by the too eager pursuit of a wounded buck. He had wounded a deer, and was following it with that long, loping gait, in which he traveled when he was rapidly pressing on his game or an enemy.

Coming out from the hills suddenly, upon what is now called "Walnut Bottom," he was seized, thrown from his feet, and pinioned to the earth by a half dozen stalwart savages. One reason, doubtless, why Brady was so incautious, was the fact that peace nominally prevailed between the whites and the Indians. This was in 1786, and late in the autumn of that year. Fort McIntosh had been abandoned in 1785. Lukens' blockhouse built where New Brighton now stands, was only nominally occupied.

The Indians, therefore, had stolen into the neighborhood, and formed an encampment without detection. They were upon a hunting expedition, and had with them a number of women and children. As soon as Brady was seized, disarmed and bound, the joy of the Indians knew no limit. It was in vain their captive pleaded that peace existed. Their great foe was in their power and they resolved to burn him at the stake that very day.

After the usual preparations were made, he was led to the place of execution. When he was tied, and just as the flames began to crackle about him, he contrived to seize a knife from an Indian squaw near by, and in one instant he was free. He snatched an Indian child from the arms of its mother, threw it into the fire, and during the confusion consequent upon the attempt to rescue it from the flames, bounded away with a fleetness, to be equalled only by the trained frontiersman of that day.

Unarmed as he was, save with the knife he had to depend, upon his speed for his life. The Indians understanding well that he would make for the blockhouse, kept down the "narrows," on the west side of the river, (a narrow defile even to this day, only affording room enough after heavy cutting, for a wagon road.) They drove him up the crest of a narrow ridge overlooking Falston. To descend the rocks opposite our blockhouse, rising as they did, perpendicularly for about forty feet or more, seemed impossible. The Indians therefore kept on at full speed, hoping to catch him as he descended Fallston neck, nearly a mile below, where the declivity becomes more gradual. He saw and comprehended the terrible circumstances by which he was surrounded. Behind him the woods were swarming with armed foes. Others had passed in front of him, and cut off his retreat to the southward.

*Register, August 7th, 1860.

He stood for a moment overlooking the whole valley from his eyrie. A grape vine, running along the ground for some distance, and closely twined to the limbs of a tree overhanging the precipice, providentially chanced to be at hand. It was cut. He swung out upon it. The tree yielded, and he was within ten feet of a narrow shelf in the ledge, from which, if he could reach it, he could rapidly descend to the foot of the hill.

He dropped; and, although bruised and cut by the fall, in ten minutes he had reached the water's edge, crossed the river, and was safely housed in the stockade fort. Two years afterwards, within five hundred feet of where he had made this terrible leap, he amply revenged himself by cutting off a band of thirty of his red foes, and among them the leader of the very band who had taken him prisoner. Such is one of the thrilling adventures with which the valley abounds.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL BRADY AND CORNPLANTER.*

Many of the wild legends of border strife and Indian barbarity that have been enacted along the shores of the Allegheny and Ohio have never been rescued from the dim and fading remembrance of a past age. But occasionally a story of thrilling interest is snatched from the lingering records of the red man.

The story I am about to relate, I received from an old Indian pilot of the Allegheny: It was many years ago, when that stern old chief, Cornplanter (whose remains now repose in silence and loneliness on the banks of that beautiful stream he loved so well), was in his glory. His tribe roamed over the dense and unbroken forests along its banks, fearless, unmolested and free. His people were hostile to the whites, and never lost an opportunity to lie in ambush and seize the lonely voyager as he descended the river and consign him to the stake and torture. But the watchful, shrewd and deadly foe of Cornplanter and the whole "tawny race," was the indomitable and fearless Captain Samuel Brady. This veteran pioneer and Indian fighter was one of those noble specimens of the hardy foresters who plunged fearlessly into the interminable forests that then overspread so large a portion of the Western States.

Like Daniel Boone, Lewis Wetzel, Simon Kenton and others who made Indian hunting a pastime, his deadly hate of the Indian and his burning passion for hunting them down, amounted to a monomania. This hatred was in consequence of the wrongs inflicted upon his family, his father, Captain John Brady, and his brother having fallen victims to the tomahawk and scalping knife.

The scene of the present story is at a place known to boatmen and raftmen as "Brady's Bend," and where now the noise and bustle of a new manufacturing town called the "Great Western" resounds along the shores that then echoed only to the whoop of the savage, or the panther's scream.

It is a bend in the river nine miles in length, and is sometimes called "Nine-Mile Bend," and is scarcely half a mile across the neck. Here in this bend, Cornplanter, returned from some successful inroad upon the whites, had secured several prisoners, by tying them to as many trees, while his swarthy and hideously painted followers were busy in making preparations for the foggot and the torture.

The stake was erected and the faggots prepared with all the coolness and refinement of Indian barbarity. It was a beautiful evening; the sun was just sinking behind the lofty hill upon the opposite shore. Calmness had thrown its oily wand upon the Allegheny's crystal tide, and it slept. The full, round moon, just bursting through the tree tops behind them, sailed calmly through the distant blue, and cast its mellow beams upon the sleeping river, and danced upon its placid bosom.

The melancholy notes of the whipporwill from the adjoining thicket fell sweetly upon the ear. The victims were unbound and led forth to the place of torture.

At this moment a voice high up among the frowning rocks that loomed out from the thick hemlocks that crowned the hill opposite, hailed Cornplanter in the Indian tongue, informing him that he "was an Indian warrior, just returned from the war path with a goodly number of prisoners."

He desired that "the ceremonies of the torture might be suspended until he could ford the river and join them, when they would celebrate the occasion with unusual demonstrations of savage rejoicings." To this Cornplanter consented. The flames that had been kindled were extinguished, and the prisoners again bound to the trees.

In the meantime, Brady, for it was he who had deceived the wily Indian, with a body of men, moved silently up the river to a place known as "Truby's Ripple," and there fording the river, drew his men up across the neck of the bend, and moved noiselessly down upon the savages. So cautious was his approach that the Indians were completely cut off from retreat before they became alarmed.

Brady's men hemmed them in from behind, while the Allegheny rolled in front. The first intimation to the savages of his approach was communicated by a deadly discharge from his unerring rifles. The Indians fought with desperation, but were overpowered. All were killed or taken prisoner save the chief, Cornplanter, who, finding himself alone, plunged into the river and swam for the other shore.

Being a good swimmer, he remained several minutes under water, but as he rose for breath he was greeted with a shower of bullets. In this way, alternately swimming under water as long as he could hold his breath, and then rising to the surface, he escaped unhurt, and reached the other shore in safety, secreting himself behind a large standing rock.

The prisoners were of course unbound, and all joined in the jollification and joy at the timely and unlooked for release. The rock that shielded Cornplanter from Brady's bullets, was pointed out to me by the old Indian in a recent trip down the river. It is known as the "Cornplanter's Rock." The old Indian gave me the story with a sad and dejected countenance in broken English.

Alas! what a change. Where then the sheeny tide of the beauteous Allegheny parted only to the swift, skimming birchen canoe, and echoed to the wild voices that came out of the dense, dark forest, now is heard the shrill whistle of the steam pipe, and the rushing of the steam pipe, and the rushing of the mighty steamer. Where the tawny savage then reclined upon the shady banks from his pursuit of the deer, the panther, and the bear, or rested from the warpath, is now the scene of life and activity.

The tall old forest has receded from before the advances of civilization, and given place to farms, beautiful villas and bustling towns. The Indian, too, has passed away: but a few, and they but miserable decaying relics of what they once were, are now occasionally seen, the descendants of the proud race that once could call these hills, and groves, and rivers, all their own. Alas! in the language of the poet:

*Knickerbocker, July, 1859.

"Chieftains and their tribes have perished,
Like the thickets where they grew".

CAPTAIN SAMUEL BRADY'S* RESCUE OF THE GRAY FAMILY.

About thirty miles below the present city of Pittsburgh stood an ancient fort, known as Fort McIntosh. It was built by a revolutionary general of that name in the summer of 1778. It was one of a line of forts which was intended to guard the people who lived south of the Ohio river from the incursions of the savages to the northward. This fort was one of the favorite resorts of the great Indian spy and hunter, Captain Samuel Brady, although his usual headquarters was Pittsburgh, then consisting of a rude fort and a score or two of rough frontier tenements.

Brady had emigrated westward, or rather had marched thither in 1778, as a lieutenant in the distinguished 7th Pennsylvania regiment, under the command of General Broadhead, of Easton. When in the spring of 1779 RichardMcIntosh retired from the command in the west, Broadhead succeeded him, and remained at Pittsburgh until 1781. Shortly after his advent to the west Brady was brevetted captain.

Captain Brady had served at the siege of Boston, fought at Long Island and White Plains, gone through the whole of the terrible campaign of Trenton and Princeton, suffered at Valley Forge, distinguished himself at Germantown and Brandywine, and narrowly escaped death at Paoli. But his tastes led him to the erratic mode of warfare known upon the frontier. Indeed his early education upon the upper Susquehanna had inculcated and developed those tastes from the very earliest boyhood. Hateing an Indian with that instinctive hatred which is begotten in the bosom of the white race by long years of contest and outrage, a bitter intensity was imparted to the feelings in this case by the murder of his father and younger brother by the Indians under trying and terrible circumstances.

Having promised this much by way of introduction, it brings us to the opening of our story. On the 21st day of August, 1779, Brady set out from Fort McIntosh to Pittsburgh. He had with him two of his trusty and well-tried followers. These were not attached to the regular army as he was, but were scouts and spies, who had been with him upon many an expedition. They were Thomas Bevington and Benjamin Biggs. Brady resolved to follow the northern bank of the Ohio. Biggs objected to this upon the ground, as Brady well knew, that the woods were swarming with savages. Brady, however, had resolved to travel by the old Indian path, and having once made up his mind no consideration could deter him from carrying out his determination. Bevington had such implicit faith in his ability to lead that he never thought of questioning his will.

Quite a discussion arose between Biggs and his captain at the mouth of Beaver river, about a mile above the fort, and where they must cross the Ohio if they continued upon the northern side. Biggs finally yielded his objections, and they crossed the Beaver, and proceeded with the usual caution of woodsmen who fully understand their business.

They had started early and by rapid traveling they had reached, ere noon came, the last piece of bottom land on the north side of the river, just below what is known as the Narrows. Upon this bottom a pioneer more daring than most others, had built a cabin and opened a small spot of cleared land. He had planted it in corn, and it gave promise of a most abundant harvest.

But as they approached the edge of the clearing, just outside of the fence, Brady discovered "Indian signs," as he called them. His companions discovered them almost as quick as he, and at once, in low tones, communicated to each other the necessity of a keen watch. They slowly trailed them along the side of the fence toward the house, whose situation they well knew, until they stood upon the brow of the bluff bank which overlooked it. A sight of the most terrible description met their eyes.

The cabin lay a mass of smouldering ruins, from whence a dull blue smoke arose in the clear August sunshine. They observed closely everything about it. Brady knew that it was customary for the Indians, after they had fired a settler's cabin, if there was no immediate danger, to retire to the woods close at hand, and watch for the approach of any member of the family who might chance to be absent when they made the descent.

Not knowing but that they were even then lying close by, he left Bevington to watch the ruins, lying under cover, while he proceeded to the northward, and Biggs to the southward to make discoveries. Both were to return to Bevington, if they found no Indians. If they came across the perpetrators, and they were too numerous to be attacked regularly, Brady declared it to be his purpose to have one fire at them, and that should be the signal for both of his followers to make the best of their way to the fort.

All this rapidly transpired, and with Brady to decide, was to act. As he strode cautiously round to the northern side of the inclosure, he heard a voice in the distance singing. He listened keenly, and soon discovered from its intonations, that it was a white man's. He passed rapidly in the direction whence the sound came.

As it approached, he concealed himself behind the trunk of a large tree. Presently a white man, riding a fine horse, came slowly down the path. The form was that of Albert Gray, the stalwart, brave, devil-may-care settler, who had built him a home miles away from the fort, where no man would dare to take a family, except himself.

Brady wore, as he almost always did, the Indian garb, and had war paint upon his face. He knew that if he showed himself upon the path, Gray would shoot, taking him to be an Indian. He therefore suffered Gray quietly to approach his lurking place. When the time came he sprang forward ere the settler could have time to prepare, drew his tomahawk, and seizing him, dragged him from his horse. As he did so, he whispered to him: "I am Captain Brady, for God's sake be quiet."

Gray, with the instinctive feelings of one who knew there was danger, and with that vivid presence of mind which characterizes those acquainted with frontier life, ceased at once to struggle. The horse had been startled by the sudden onslaught and sprang to one side. Ere he had time to leap forward, Brady had caught him by the bridle. His loud snorting threatened to arouse any one who was near. The captain soon soothed the frightened animal into quiet.

Gray now hurriedly asked Brady what the danger was. The strong vigorous spy turned away his face, unable to answer him. The settler's already excited fears were turned to realities. The manly form shook with emotion—tears fell as large as drops of water over his bronzed face. Brady permitted the indulgence for a moment, while he led the horse into a thicket close at hand and tied him.

When he returned Gray had sunk to the earth and great tremulous convulsions writhed over him. Brady touched him upon the shoulder and said "Come." He at once arose, and had gone but a few yards until every trace of emotion had vanished. He was no longer the bereaved husband and father—he was the sturdy, well trained hunter, whose ear and eye were acutely alive to every sight or sound, the waving of a leaf or the crackling of the smallest twig.

He desired to proceed directly toward the house, but Brady objected to this, and they passed down toward the river bank. As they proceeded, they saw from the tracks of horses and moccosin prints upon the places where the earth was moist, that the party was quite a numerous one. After thoroughly examining every cover and possible place of concealment, they passed on to the southward and came back in that direction to the spot where Bevington stood sentry.

*Graham's Magazine, 1857.

When they reached him they found that Biggs had not returned. In a few minutes he came. He reported that the trail was large and broad; the Indians had taken no pains to conceal their tracks—they simply had struck back into the country, so as to avoid coming in contact with the spies, whom they supposed to be lingering along the river.

The whole four now went down to the cabin and carefully examined the ruins. After a long and minute search. Brady declared in an authoritative manner, that none of the inmates had been consumed. This announcement at once dispelled the most harrowing fears of Gray. As soon as all that could be discovered had been ascertained, each one of the party proposed some course of action. One desired to go to Pittsburgh and obtain assistance. Another thought it best to return to McIntosh and get some volunteers there.

Brady listened patiently to both these propositions, but arose quickly, after talking a moment apart with Biggs, and said "Come." Gray and Bevington obeyed at once, nor did Biggs object. Brady struck the trail and began the pursuit in that tremendous rapid manner for which he was so famous. It was evident that if the savages were overtaken, it could only be done by the utmost exertion. They were some hours ahead, and from the number of their horses must be nearly all mounted. Brady felt that if they were not overtaken that night, pursuit would be utterly futile. It was evident that this band had been south of the Ohio and plundered the homes of other settlers. They had pounced upon the family of Gray upon their return.

When the pursuit began, it must have been at least two o'clock, and at least two hours had been consumed by the spies in making the necessary explorations about the house ere they approached it, and in examining the ruins. Not a word was spoken upon the route by any one. Their leader kept steadily in advance. Occasionally he would diverge from the track, but only to take it up again a mile or so in advance. The captain's intimate knowledge of the topography of the country enabled him to anticipate what points they would make. Thus he gained rapidly upon them by proceeding more nearly in a straight line toward the point at which they aimed to cross the Beaver river.

At last convinced from the general direction in which the trail led, that he could divine with absolute certainty the spot where they could ford that stream, he abandoned it and struck boldly across the country. The accuracy of his judgment was vindicated by the fact, that from an elevated crest of a long line of hills, he saw the Indians with their victims just disappearing up a ravine on the opposite side of the Beaver. He counted them as they slowly filed away under the rays of the declining sun. There were thirteen warriors, eight of whom were mounted—another woman, besides Gray's wife, was in the cavalcade, and two children beside his—in all, five children.

The odds seemed fearful to Biggs and Bevington, although Brady made no comments. The moment they passed out of sight Brady again pushed forward with unflagging energy, nor did his followers hesitate. There was not a man among them whose muscles were not tense and rigid as a whip cord, from exercise and training, from hardship and exposure. Gray's whole form seemed to dilate into twice its natural size at the sight of his wife and children. Terrible was the vengeance he swore.

Just as the sun set, the spies forded the stream and ascended the ravine. It was evident that the Indians intended to camp for the night some distance up a small creek or run, which debouches into Beaver river about three miles from the location of Fort McIntosh, and two below the ravine. The spot, owing to the peninsular form of the tongue of the land lying west of the Beaver at which they expected to encamp, was fully ten miles from that fort. Here there was a famous spring, so deftly and cunningly situated in a deep dell, and so densely inclosed with thick mountain pines, that there was little danger of discovery. They might even light a fire and it could not be seen one hundred yards.

The proceedings of their leader, which would have been totally inexplicable to all others, were partially, if not fully understood by his followers. At least they did not hesitate or question him. When dark came, Brady pushed forward with as much apparent certainty as he had done during the day. So rapid was his progress, that the Indians had but just kindled their fire and cooked their meal, when their mortal foe, whose presence they dreaded as much as the small pox, stood upon a huge rock looking down upon them.

His party had been left a short distance in the rear, at a convenient spot, while he went forward to reconnoitre. There they remained impatiently for three mortal hours. They discussed in low tones the extreme disparity of the force—the propriety of going to McIntosh to get assistance. But all agreed that if Brady ordered them to attack, success was certain. However impatient they were, he returned at last.

He described to them how the women and children lay within the centre of a crescent formed by the savages as they slept. Their guns were stacked upon the right, and most of the tomahawks. The arms were not more than fifteen feet from them. He had crawled within fifty feet of them, when the snortings of the horses, occasioned by the approach of a wild beast, had aroused a number of the savages from their light slumbers, and he had been compelled to lie quiet for more than an hour, until they slept again.

He then told them that he would attack them. It was impossible to use fire arms. They must depend solely upon the knife and tomahawk. The knife must be placed in the left hand and the tomahawk in the right. To Biggs, he assigned the duty of securing their arms. He was to begin the work of slaughter upon the right, Gray, upon the left, and Bevington, in the centre.

After each fairly understood the duty assigned, the slow, difficult, hazardous approach began. They continued upon their feet until they had gotten within one hundred yards of the foe, and then lay down upon their bellies and began the work of writhing themselves forward like a serpent approaching a victim.

They at last reached the verge of the line—each man was at his post save Biggs, who had the farthest to go. Just as he passed Brady's position, a twig cracked roughly under the weight of his body, and a huge savage, who lay within the reach of Gray's tomahawk, slowly sat up as if startled into this posture by the sound. After rolling his eyes, he again lay down and all was still.

Full fifteen minutes passed ere Biggs moved; then he slowly went on. When he reached his place, a very low, hissing sound indicated that he was ready. Brady, in return, reiterated the sound as a signal to Gray and Bevington to begin. This they did in the most deliberate manner. No nervousness was permissable then. They slowly felt for the heart of each savage they were to stab, and then plunged the knife in. The tomahawk was not to be used unless the knife proved inefficient. Not a sound broke the stillness of night as they cautiously felt and stabbed, unless it might be, that one who was feeling, would hear the stroke of the other's knife, and the groan of the victim whom the other had slain.

Thus the work proceeded. Six of the savages were slain.

One of them had not been killed outright by the stab of Gray. He sprang to his feet, but as he rose to shout his war cry, the tomahawk finished what the knife had begun. He staggered and fell heavily forward over one who had not been reached. He in turn started up, but Brady was too quick, his knife reached his heart and the tomahawk his brain almost at the same instant.

All were slain by the three spies except one. He started to flee, but a rifle shot by Biggs rang merrily out on the night air and closed his career. The women and children, alarmed by the contest, fled wildly to the woods; but when all had grown still and they were called, they returned, recognizing amid their fright, the tones of their own people. The whole party took up their march for McIntosh at once. About sunrise the next morning, the sentries of the fort were surprised to see a cavalcade of horses, men, women and children, approaching the fort. When they recognized Brady, they at once admitted him and the whole party.

In relating the circumstances afterward, Bevington claimed to have killed three and Gray three. Thus Brady, who claimed nothing, must have slain at least six, while the other two slew as many. The thirteenth Biggs shot.

From that hour to this the spring is called the "Bloody Spring," and the small run is called "Brady's Run." Few, even the most curious, of the people living in the neighborhood, know aught of the circumstances which conferred these names; names which will be preserved by tradition forever. Thus ended one of the very many hand-to-hand fights which the great spy had with the savages. His history is fuller of daring incident, sanguinary, close, hard contests, perilous explorations and adventurous escapes, than that of either of the Wetzels, of Boone, or Kenton. He saw more service than any of them, and his name was known as a by-word of terror among the Indian tribes from the Susquehanna to Lake Michigan.

OTHER ANECDOTES OF CAPTAIN SAMUEL BRADY.

Several of the exploits of Captain Samuel Brady, the captain of the spies, occurred within the limits of Armstrong county. The extract given below is from the sketches of Brady's adventures published in the Blairsville Record in 1832. These sketches were written by Mr. McCabe, and the facts were principally derived from the brother of Captain Brady, who still lives in Indiana county.

Captain Samuel Brady was born in Shippensburg, in Cumberland county, in 1758, but soon after removed with his father to the west branch of the Susquehanna, a few miles above Northumberland. Cradled amid the alarms and excitements of a frontier exposed to savage warfare, Brady's military propensities were very early developed. He eagerly sought a post in the Revolutionary army; was at the siege of Boston; a lieutenant at the massacre of the Paoli; and in 1779 was ordered to Fort Pitt with the regiment under General Broadhead. A short time previous to this, both his father and brother had fallen by the hands of Indians, and from that moment Brady took a solemn oath of vengeance against all Indians. And his future life was devoted to the fulfillment of his vow. While Gen. Broadhead held command at Fort Pitt, (1780–81,) Brady was often selected to command small scouting parties sent into the Indian country north and west of the fort, to watch the movements of the savages, a charge which Brady always fulfilled with his characteristic courage and sagacity.

Brady's success as a partisan had acquired for him its usual results—approbation with some, and envy with others. Some of his brother officers censured the commandant for affording him such frequent opportunities for honorable distinction. At length open complaint was made, accompanied by a request, in the nature of a demand, that others should be permitted to share with Brady the perils and honors of the service, abroad from the fort. The General apprised Brady of what had passed, who readily acquiesced in the propriety of the proposed arrangements; and an opportunity was not long wanting for testing its efficiency.

The Indians made an inroad into Sewickly settlement, committing the most barbarous murders, of men, women, and children; stealing such property as was portable, and destroying all else. The alarm was brought to Pittsburgh, and a party of soldiers, under the command of the emulous officers, dispatched for the protection of the settlements, and chastisement of the foe. From this expedition Brady was of course excluded; but the restraint was irksome to his feelings.

The day after the detachment had marched, Brady solicited permission from his commander to take a small party for the purpose of "catching the Indians," but was refused. By dint of importunity, however, he at length wrung from him a reluctant consent, and the command of five men; to this he added his pet Indian, and made hasty preparation.

Instead of moving towards Sewickly, as the first detachment had done, he crossed the Allegheny at Pittsburgh, and proceeded up the river. Conjecturing that the Indians had descended that stream in canoes, till near the settlement, he was careful to examine the mouths of all creeks coming into it, particularly from the southeast. At the mouth of Big Mahoning, about six miles above Kittanning, the canoes were seen drawn up to its western bank. He instantly retreated down the river, and waited for night. As soon as it was dark, he made a raft, and crossed to the Kittanning side. He then proceeded up to the creek, and found that the Indians had, in the meantime, crossed the creek, as their canoes were now drawn to its upper or northeastern bank.

The country on both sides of Mahoning, at its mouth, is rough and mountainous; and the stream, which was then high, very rapid. Several ineffectual attempts were made to wade it, which they at length succeeded in doing, three or four miles above the canoes. Next a fire was made, their clothing dried, and arms inspected; and the party moved towards the Indian camp, which was pitched on the second bank of the river. Brady placed his men at some distance, on the lower or first bank.

The Indians had brought from Sewickly a stallion, which they had fettered and turned to pasture on the lower bank. An Indian, probably the owner, under the law of arms, came frequently down to him, and occasioned the party no little trouble. The horse, too, seemed willing to keep their company, and it required considerable circumspection to avoid all intercourse with either. Brady became so provoked that he had a strong inclination to tomahawk the Indian, but his calmer judgment repudiated the act, as likely to put to hazard a more decisive and important achievement.

At length the Indians seemed quiet, and the captain determined to pay them a closer visit. He had got quite near their fires; his pet Indian had caught him by the hair and gave it a pluck, intimating the advice to retire, which he would not venture to whisper; but finding Brady regardless of it, had crawled off—when the captain, who was scanning their numbers, and the position of their guns, observed one throw off his blanket and rise to his feet. It was altogether impracticable for Brady to move without being seen. He instantly decided to remain where he was, and risk what might happen. He drew his head slowly beneath the brow of the bank, putting his forehead to the earth for concealment. His next sensation was that of warm water poured into the hollow of his neck, as from the spout of a teapot, which, trickling down his back over the chilled skin, produced a feeling that even his iron nerves could scarcely master. He felt quietly for his tomahawk, and had it been about him he probably would have used it; but he had divested himself even of that when preparing to approach the fires, lest by striking against the stones or gravel, it might give alarm. He was compelled, therefore, "nolens volens," to submit to this very unpleasant operation, until it should please his warriorship to refrain; which he soon did, and returning to his place wrapped himself up in his blanket, and composed himself for sleep as if nothing had happened.

Brady returned to and posted his men, and in the deepest silence all awaited the break of day. When it appeared, the Indians arose and stood around their fires; exulting, doubtless, in the scalps they had taken, the plunder they had acquired, and the injury they had inflicted on their enemies. Precarious joy—short-lived triumph! The avenger of blood was beside them! At a signal given, seven rifles cracked, and five Indians were dead ere they fell. Brady's well known war cry was heard, his party was among them, and their guns (mostly empty) were all secured. The remaining Indians instantly fled and disappeared. One was pursued by the trace of his blood, which he seems to have succeeded in staunching. The pet Indian then imitated the cry of a young wolf, which was answered by the wounded man, and the pursuit again renewed. A second time the wolf-cry was given and answered, and the pursuit continued into a windfall. Here he must have espied his pursuers, for he answered no more. Brady found his remains there three weeks afterwards, being led to the place by ravens that were preying on the carcass. The horse was unfettered, the plunder gathered, and the party commenced their return to Pittsburgh, most of them descending in the Indian canoes. Three days after their return, the first detachment came in. They reported that they had followed the Indians closely, but that the latter had got into their canoes and made their escape.

A mile or two above the mouth of Beaver a small run, called Brady's run, comes dashing down a wild glen on the west side: and a road which winds up a hill behind Fallstown retains the name of Brady's road. These names originated no doubt from the following adventures related by "Kiskiminetas," in the Blairsville Record:

"In 1790, General Washington wrote to General Broadhead to select a suitable officer and despatch him to Sandusky, for the purpose of examining the place and ascertaining the force of the British and Indians assembled there. General Broadhead had no hesitation in making the selection. He sent for Captain Brady, showed him Washington's letter, and a draft or map of the country he must traverse; very defective, as Brady afterwards discovered, but the best, no doubt, that could be obtained at that time. The appointment was accepted, and selecting a few soldiers, and four Chickasaw Indians as guides, he crossed the Allegheny river and was at once in the enemy's country. Brady was versed in all the wiles of Indian "strategie," and, dressed in the full war dress of an Indian warrior, and well acquainted with their languages, he led his band in safety near to the Sandusky towns, without seeing a hostile Indian. But his Chickasaws now deserted. This was alarming, for it was probable they had gone over to the enemy. However, he determined to proceed. With a full knowledge of the horrible death that awaited him if taken prisoner, he passed on, until he stood beside the town on the bank of the river. His first care was to provide a secure place of concealment for his men. When this was effected, having selected one man as the companion of his future adventures, he waded the river to an island partially covered with drift-wood, opposite the town, where he concealed himself and comrade for the night. The next morning a dense fog spread over the hill and dale, town and river. All was hid from Brady's eyes, save the logs and brush around him. About 11 o'clock it cleared off, and afforded him a view of about three thousand Indians engaged in the amusement of the race-ground. They had just returned from Virginia or Kentucky, with some very fine horses. One grey horse in particular attracted his notice. He won every race until near evening, when, as if envious of his speed, two riders were placed on him, and thus he was beaten. The starting post was only a few rods above where Brady lay, and he had a pretty fair chance of enjoying the amusement; without the risk of losing anything by betting on the race. He made such observations through the day as was in his power, waded out from the island at night, collected his men, went to the Indian camp he had seen as he came out; the squaws were still there, took them prisoners, and continued his march homeward. The map furnished by Gen. Broadhead was found to be defective. The distance was represented to be much less than it really was. The provisions and ammunition of the men were exhausted by the time they had reached the Big Beaver, on their return. Brady shot an otter, but could not eat it. The last load was in his rifle. They arrived at an old encampment, and found plenty of strawberries, which they stopped to appease their hunger with. Having discovered a deer track, Brady followed it, telling the men he would perhaps get a shot at it. He had gone but a few rods when he saw the deer standing broadside to him. He raised his rifle and attempted to fire, but it flashed in the pan, and he had not a priming of powder. He sat down, picked the touch-hole, and then started on. After going a short distance the path made a bend, and he saw before him a large Indian on horseback, with a white child before and its mother behind him on the horse, and a number of warriors marching in the rear. His first impulse was to shoot the Indian on horseback, but as he raised his rifle he observed the child's head to roll with the motion of the horse. It was fast asleep and tied to the Indian. He stepped behind the root of a tree and waited until he could shoot the Indian without danger to the child or its mother. When he considered the chance certain, he shot the Indian, who fell from the horse, and the child and its mother fell with him. Brady called to his men with a voice that made the forest ring, to surround the Indians and give them a general fire. He sprang to the fallen Indian's powder horn, but could not get it off. Being dressed like an Indian, the woman thought he was one, and said, "Why did you shoot your brother?" He caught up the child, saying, "Jenny Stupes, I am Captain Brady, follow me and I will save you and your child." He caught her hand in his, carrying the child under the other arm, and dashed into the brush. Many guns were fired at him by this time, but no ball harmed him, and the Indians dreading an ambuscade, were glad to make off. The next day he arrived at Fort McIntosh with the woman and her child. His men had got there before him. They had heard his war whoop and knew it was Indians they had encountered, but having no ammunition, they had taken to their heels and ran off. The squaws he had taken at Sandusky, availing themselves of the panic, had also made their escape.

In those days Indian fashions prevailed in some measure with the whites, at least with Rangers. Brady was desirous of seeing the Indian he had shot, and the officer in command of Fort McIntosh gave him some men in addition to his own, and he returned to search for the body. The place where he had fallen was discovered, but nothing more. They were about to quit the place, when the yell of a pet Indian that came with them from the fort, called them to a little glade, where the grave was discovered. The Indians had interred their dead brother, carefully replacing the sod in the neatest manner. They had also cut brushes and stuck them into the ground; but the brushes had withered, and instead of concealing the grave, they had led to the discovery.

He was buried about two feet deep, with all his implements of war about him. All his savage jewelry, his arms and ammunition were taken from him, and the scalp from the head, and then they left him thus stripped alone in his grave. It is painful to think of such things being done by American soldiers, but we cannot now know all the excusing circumstances that may have existed at the time. Perhaps the husband of this woman, the father of this child, was thus butchered before his wife and children; and the younger members of the family, unable to bear the fatigues of traveling, had their brains dashed out on the threshold. Such things were common, and a spirit of revenge was deeply seated in the breasts of the people of the frontiers.

This region of country, forming Clarion county, was first settled only about forty-five years ago, by two different bands of immigrants. One band came from Westmoreland county, the other from Penn's valley, Union county. They numbered in all about one hundred persons. Those from Westmoreland county came into this region under the influence and patronage of General Craig, of that county, to settle on what they supposed to be vacant land; but they were mistaken, and were afterwards compelled to purchase it of the Bingham estate. Among the early settlers were Maguire, Young, Rose, Wilson, Corbit, Philips, Clover, and others.

The adventurous Captain Brady, who was a terror to the Indians, figured in this region of country, in his day.

The incursions of the Indians had become so frequent, and their outrages so alarming, that it was thought advisable to retaliate upon them the injuries of war, and carry into the country occupied by them, the same system of destructive warfare with which they had visited the settlements. For this purpose an adequate force was provided, under the immediate command of General Broadhead, the command of the advance guard of which was confided to Captain Brady.

The troops proceeded up the Allegheny river, and had arrived at the flat of land near the mouth of Redbank creek, now known by the name of Brady's Bend, without encountering an enemy. Brady and his rangers were some distance in front of the main body, as their duty required, when they suddenly discovered a war party of Indians approaching them. Relying on the strength of the main body, and its ability to force the Indians to retreat, and anticipating, as Napoleon did in the battle with the Mamelukes, that when driven back they would return upon the same route as they had advanced on, Brady permitted them to proceed without hindrance, and hastened to seize a narrow pass, higher up the river, where the rocks, nearly perpendicular, approached the river, and where a few determined men might successfully combat superior numbers.

In a short time the Indians encountered the main body under Broadhead, and were driven back. In full and swift retreat they pressed on to gain the pass between the rocks and the river, but it was occupied by their daring and relentless foes, Brady and his rangers, who failed not to pour into their flying columns a most destructive fire.

"At once there rose so wild a yell
Within that dark and narrow dell,
As all the fiends from heaven that fell,
Had pealed the banner-cry of hell!
Forth from the pass in tumult driven,
Like chaff before the winds of heaven,
The Indians appear;
For life! for life! their flight they ply—
And shriek, and shout, and battle cry
Are maddening in the rear."

